An informed source said that the cut in the U.S. security aid to Thailand would be small in comparison with that to other recipient countries such as Morocco, Sudan, Panama. Despite the cut of security aid, the increased concessionality in the U.S. assistance package to Thailand would remain unchanged. The terms would include low interest rate of about five percent and 10-year grace and 20-year repayment period, the source added.

The Chinese group arrived here early last week for a feasibility study of establishing the center.

AFGHAN HELICOPTERS RAID PAKISTAN FRONTIER CITY

OW010820 Beijing XINHUA in English 0747 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Islamabad, February 1 (XINHUA) -- Three Pakistan women were wounded when Afghan helicopter gunships fired rockets and shells at the Parachinar area, Kurram Agency of North-West Frontier Province yesterday, PAKISTAN TIMES reported today. This was the third air raid on the Pakistan territory by the helicopters of Kabul regime in the past five days since they bombed and rocketed Parachinar earlier on January 27 and 29, inflicting losses on life and property to the local people.

Parachinar, the central city of the Kurram Agency, is situated 16 kilometers from the Pak-Afghan border. Beside striking suburban Lakmankhel, Shelazan and Kalabai Villages, the Afghan aircraft, intruding into Pakistan airspace twice in the morning and once in the afternoon, also shelled the Parachinar City and tried to attack an airbase under construction.

SAARC DELEGATES DISCUSS RURAL DEVELOPMENT

[Text] Islamabad, February 4 (XINHUA) -- Delegates from seven member countries of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation (SAARC) have met to explore ways and means to close their cooperation in rural development, the PAKISTAN TIMES reported today.

Inaugurating the four-day symposium on rural energy problems here yesterday, Anwar Aziz Chaudhury, Pakistan local government and rural development minister, said that SAARC cooperation would not only help accelerate their development pace, but would also pave the way for bringing accelerated moves towards peace and tranquility in the region. The per capita production and consumption of energy in SAARC nations, Chaudhury said, fall far below the levels of acceptable standards of the world. Energy supply to rural areas where 70 percent of the population lives is only a fraction of the national resources. Therefore, he said, a forceful and comprehensive energy policy for rural areas is imperative.

During the symposium, delegates from the seven SAARC countries -- Bangladesh, Bhutan, India, the Maldives, Nepal, Pakistan and Sri Lanka -- will discuss the need and availability of both conventional and non-conventional energy sources in rural areas of their countries. They will also study different sources of energy for irrigation, domestic lighting, cooking and agrobased industries, and evolve a strategy for planning and management of alternative sources of energy.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON BRITISH ECONOMY, 'THATCHERISM'

HK031005 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jan 86 p 4

[Article by Xu Shiquan: "'Thatcherism' and Britain's Economic Situation"]

[Text] Since Mrs Thatcher became master of 10 Downing Street in May 1979, she has carried out "drastic reform" of the United Kingdom's socioeconomic policy. The economic reform measures adopted by the British prime minister are called "Thatcherism" by some people.

Mrs Thatcher has never admitted to "Thatcherism," but she does not deny that she is a follower of monetarist theory. The main contents of her economic reform policy include monetarist macroeconomic policy, the "privatization" of nationalized enterprises, the reform of the welfare system, and the restriction of trade union power. According to the monetarist theory that socioeconomic activities are determined by the money supply, the Thatcher government takes control of the money supply as the core of its economic policy. In March 1983, it published its first 4-year "midterm monetary strategy," which included two major measures: First, to quickly lower the growth rate of money supply from 7-11 percent in 1980 to 4-8 percent in 1984; and second, to reduce public expenditure by 4 percent within 4 years and to strictly control the financial deficit.

The "strategy" pointed out that the fundamental purpose of controlling the money supply is to lower the inflation rate. The Thatcher government selected this approach to economic affairs because it involved the political issue of whether or not the voters would support the Conservative Party in the election. The approach also represents the opinion of the City of London (that is, the United Kingdom's financial and commercial circles). Only by lowering the inflation rate can a way be found to ensure economic growth in the United Kingdom, to raise the enterprises' competitiveness, and to reduce unemployment.

From the very beginning, the prime minister's monetary policy was the focus of political struggle between the ruling and opposition parties. It has also sparked heated controversies in academic circles. Practice over the past 6 years or more has lowered the inflation rate from 10.3 percent in 1979 to 5.5 percent in 1985. But the United Kingdom has also paid a high price for this.

First, serious unemployment has been caused. Since 1979, the number of unemployed has increased by nearly 2 million, and the recent figure was 3.4 million, 13.9 percent of the entire work force. That is to say, a lower inflation rate was achieved at the expense of the consumption capacity of the working masses.

Second, the United Kingdom's industrial foundations have withered. According to statistics by the Confederation of British Industries, in the period between 1979 and 1983, some 15 billion pounds of capital was abandoned as "noneconomical capital." At present, the output of manufacturing industries is 11 percent lower than in 1979. In 1983, the import of manufactured goods exceeded the export of such goods for the first time since the Industrial Revolution. According to some surveys, the competitive power of British industry has fallen to 14th place among capitalist countries.

Supporters of Thatcherism believe that excessive nationalization of British enterprises is one of the root causes of British industry's decline. The disadvantages include: 1) The enterprises merely rely on state investment and lose their enterprising spirit because they can live in ease and comfort; 2) they have become overstaffed, unwieldly, inefficient, and low in productivity; 3) their products cannot meet market needs; and 4) they "squeeze" funds out of private enterprises.

Prime Minister Thatcher once indicated that one of her tasks was to reverse the "distorted" relations between the private sector and the state and to restore the role of market forces as a motive force for the British economy.

Since 1979, the United Kingdom has successively turned 12 large companies engaged in telecommunications, harbor services, aerospace, and automobile production into private enterprises by issuing shares in these companies, contracting them to private operators, turning them into public-private joint ventures, or selling the enterprises to their managers and workers. This year, the British Government will go ahead with selling 5 billion pounds worth of government enterprises including a gas company. This practice has also caused disputes between the ruling and opposition parties. Some people say that the government just uses the money it gains from "privatizing" enterprises to make up the financial deficit and to pay unemployment benefits, and this does not create any social wealth. So it is a serious mistake. Former Conservative Prime Minister MacMillan criticized the government's practice of "selling the silver to make a living."

With the weakening of economic strength, the British Government could not make ends meet after the early 1970's and found it hard to maintain the "welfare state." In the post-war period, social welfare expenditure has increased by 400 percent, and has now reached 40 billion pounds a year, 11 percent of the country's GNP (the figure in early postwar years was a mere 4.7 percent). Supporters of Thatcherism maintain that the present welfare system covers too many items and causes serious waste and poor efficiency. According to the market theory, they maintain that social welfare undertakings should also be shifted to the private sector; that is, education, medical services, and pension funds should all be handled by private institutions.

However, social welfare is also a very sensitive political issue that concerns people's vital interests, so the Thatcher government must take it very cautiously. At present, the government has merely cut down on part of the welfare expenditure and has not begun to "privatize" social welfare undertakings on a large scale. However, the "welfare state" system of which the United Kingdom was once so proud is now in a very difficult position and can hardly move any further. So it is very likely that the British working masses will have to pay a higher cost for this system.

ISRAELI JETS INTERCEPT LIBYAN AIRCRAFT

[Text] Beijing, February 4 (XINHUA) -- Israeli jet fighters intercepted a Libyan civilian airliner and forced it to fly to an Israeli airport, Libyan state radio reported today. According to the Tripoli radio, the Libyan plane, which was on a flight from Tripoli, Libya, to Damascus, Syria, today, was intercepted by two Israeli jets and forced to fly to Israel.

Among the passengers was Abdallah al-Ahmar, assistant secretary general of the ruling Syrian Ba'th Party, it said. But the radio did not mention who the other passenger might be. The radio quoted the Libyan official news agency JANA as accusing the United States of assisting in the interception by "Jewish air pirates." JANA said that U.S. naval units, which engaged in Mediterranean exercises north of Libya recently, helped Israel with information on flight movements of the Libyan plane.

XINHUA VIEWS TALKS BETWEEN JORDAN, PLO

["News Analysis: Jordan, PLO Uphold Arab Unity After Amman Talks" (by Huang Xiaonan) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Amman, February 4 (XINHUA) -- While details of the nine-day summit talks between Jordan and the PLO have been kept secret, both sides are making efforts to refute any rumours about a rift between them.

PLO officials accompanying PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat in the recent talks with Jordan will remain in Amman for several days after 'Arafat left yesterday. Because, as the PLO leader Salah Khalaf (Abu Iyad) put it, "We don't want it to give an impression that there is a big break with Jordan." Moreover, 'Arafat himself refuted, with care of words, all claims that the PLO-Jordanian relations have been soured. "I refuse malicious attempts to upset the Jordanian-Palestinian relations. The negotiations have not failed but have stopped at this stage though contacts are still continuing", he declared.

The PLO assessment was shared by a senior Jordanian Government official who said "our talks have gone no where but Jordan and the PLO do not have any problem." He said that he believed the problem is between the PLO and the Americans, and Jordan was just trying to reconcile the PLO's and U.S.' positions during the recent talks. However, the talks made no progress because the U.S. insists that the PLO should accept U.N. resolutions 242 and 338 without granting the Palestinian people right to self-determination.

Both Jordanian and Palestinian officials agreed that the PLO's refusal to accept U.S. conditions would have no negative impact on Jordan-PLO relations. "Both sides remain committed to the Feb. 11 agreement on joint political moves towards a negotiated settlement to the Palestinian problem," the Jordanian official said. Meanwhile, Khalid al-Hasan, a close aide to the PLO chairman, said that the Jordan-PLO accord of Feb. 11 is a strategic agreement that cannot be tactically used. Despite differences of opinion on U.N. Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, both Jordan and the PLO are trying to assure each other and outsiders that both are pondering on their next step in the common cause to push the Middle East peace process forward.

U.S. REJECTS PLO PROPOSAL ON UN RESOLUTION

OW041912 Beijing XINHUA in English 1900 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Kuwait, February 4 (XINHUA) -- The United States has rejected a proposal by the Palestine Liberation Organiation (PLO) to amend the U.N. Security Council resolution 242 to include the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people, a senior Palestinian official announced.

In a statement to the daily AL-ITTIHAD of the United Arab Emirates published in Abu Dhabi today, head of the PLO political department Faruq Qaddumi said the PLO has requested that Washington issue a statement calling for an international peace conference and Palestinians right to self-determination in the frame of a Jordanian-Palestinian confederation. The request was made to the United States through King Husayn of Jordan. Qaddumi said the PLO, in return, would announce its acceptance of resolution 242 after the American statement is released. But in a message relayed through the Jordanian monarch, the U.S. turned down the PLO request.

The PLO official indicated that the PLO might accept marginal compromises for its participation in the peace talks but would not sacrifice basic Palestinian rights. The PLO believes that the Amman agreement is the maximum compromise the PLO can offer. The agreement does not refer to an independent Palestinian state, but calls for self-determination of the Palestinian people in the frame of Palestinian-Jordanian confederation, Qaddumi emphasized. He stressed that strengthening Palestinian national unity and escalating armed struggle in the occupied Arab lands remain the key Palestinian positions in the immediate future.

RENMIN RIBAO HAILS CIRCULAR ON CADRE SELECTION

[Commentator's article: "Another Important Provision on Rectifying Party Style"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee issued a "Circular on Selecting and Using Cadres Strictly According to Party Principles" on 28 January. This is another important provision formulated by the party Central Committee for improving party style, following the meetings of cadres of the central organs, and the issuance of regulations by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council against sending unnecessary delegations, groups, or personnel abroad, and on simplifying receptions for leading cadres at all levels on various tours. Implementation of this provision is of special importance for effectively improving party style.

The question of party style is ultimately a question concerning cadres. Cadres are the executors of the party's policies as well as the embodiment of the party's work style. When the masses of people view party style, they first look at the style of party cadres, leading cadres in particular. How can an unqualified cadre, selected not according to party principles but through evil practice, stand firmly, resist unhealthy tendencies, and foster a sound party style?

In selecting and using cadres, our party has adhered to the principle of appointing people according to their political integrity and ability, and has always followed a fair and honorable practice. Generally speaking, we have done a good job. That our undertaking has advanced full speed ahead and the succession of new cadres to the old and the cooperation between them have proceeded smoothly since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee suffices to prove this point. However, there are indeed a few leading cadres who have diverged from party principles in appointing people by favoritism. They paid no attention to party spirit and principles, but to blood relations and connections; they did not consider people from all corners, but only their close relatives and friends; they ignored the opinion of the masses and organizational discipline governing personnel, and only listened to individual opinions; and some of them even tried all means to promote or appoint their children, relatives, and friends through the "back door." Consequently, some people with limited ability and no political integrity or unqualified people were selected to leading bodies, and others were even promoted through evil designs and flattery. Such unhealthy tendencies in selecting and using cadres constitute a serious threat to the organism of our party, and they must be resolutely eliminated.

In rectifying unhealthy tendencies in selecting and using cadres, it is necessary to rely first on education and second on the legal system. Either one alone will not suffice. Party regulations and discipline are also laws. The "guiding principles" adopted by the 5th Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee stipulates: "No leading cadre is permitted, in violation of the party's organizational principles and criteria for the selection of cadres, to promote his family members or relatives to leading positions." In view of the new situation, the party Central Committee has summed up new experiences over recent years, formulated special provisions for selecting and using cadres, and set stricter demands on leading cadres. The "circular" also stipulates: Party committees at all levels "should establish measures for implementing the circular in the light of the reality in their areas and departments. At the same time, they should examine their work on selecting and using cadres, and they must promptly and decisively handle problems discovered in the examination." This stipulation conforms with the interests of all party members and the aspirations of people across the country. As long as we act resolutely according to the party Central Committee's provisions, we will certainly be able to rectify and stop unhealthy tendencies in selecting and using cadres.

LIAOWANG COMMENTS ON IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

HK031252 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 3, 20 Jan 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Central Organs Must Set an Example in Rectifying Party Style"]

[Text] Just as the spring of 1986 arrives, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat held a meeting of the departments directly under the party Central Committee and the State Council on 6 and 9 January. At the two meetings, Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, Tian Jiyun, Yang Shangkun, and Wang Zhaoguo delivered important speeches, calling on party members and officials of the central party, government, and military organizations to set an example for the whole nation in rectifying the work style of the party. They were also called on to raise their efficiency levels, concentrate more on their political studies, and observe discipline, all in an effort to enhance party spirit. Meanwhile, they were urged to introduce major improvements in the party's work style and in social conduct at large and to strive for greater successes in economic structural reform and all aspects of economic construction; they were urged to act with unremitting efforts and in the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains.

This is an important decision. Comrade Hu Yaobang put it well when he said: Central organizations should play a pivotal role in our whole cause. How they play this role has a vital bearing on the future of our cause. Therefore, the central organizations should set an example for the whole nation in morale and work style. This will lend great impetus to major improvements in the party's work style and in social conduct at large. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, major achievements have been scored in rectifying the work style of the party, setting things right, eliminating the influences of "leftist" ideology, drawing up regulations and rules for political life within the party, and carrying out party rectification by stages and in groups. After the National Conference of Party Delegates last September, the party Central Committee Secretariat spared no effort in promoting cultural and ideological progress while enacting the reform of the economic structure. In December last year, the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and of the State Council jointly issued a circular, calling on party and government organizations at various levels to improve their work style and fight corruption. At present, the party Central Committee is determined to rectify the party style of work and calls on the central organizations to set an example in this regard. This is, no doubt, of great significance.

The main current of work style in the central organizations is good, and the majority of officials of the central organizations work hard and conscientiously. Great successes have been achieved in creating a new situation in both domestic and foreign affairs. However, it is not secret that in some departments and units, there remain malpractices such as bureaucracy, liberalism, lack of efficiency, irksome discipline, disputes over trifles in work, abuse of power for personal gain, and the practice of not acting on principles but being guided by favoritism. Furthermore, there is corruption in some links of our work and some officials have gone so far as to become criminals. Failing to solve these problems early and allowing them to spread unchecked will severely damage the interests of the state and the people and hinder implementation of the opening up policy and progress of the current reform.

"A political campaign will come up again." Some people have said so. No, absolutely not. Experience over the past 30 years or more impressively tells the Chinese people that political campaigns can only raise a hue and cry and seem vigorous superficially but create no end of trouble for the future. Such formalistic practices should be abandoned. In the new drive to improve discipline and work style in the central organizations, we must uphold the principle "less empty rhetoric, more concrete deeds," strengthen ideological education, improve different systems, and preserve discipline.

Meanwhile, we must exhaustively investigate and deal with major and serious cases of malfeasance, improve the intra-party political life and arouse the consciousness of party members and the masses. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have launched no political campaigns as a solution to our many major problems, but we have recorded dramatic achievements, attracting worldwide attention. Under the party's leadership, the Chinese people have led a chaotic and dilapidated China onto a prosperous path after healing the wounds of the 10-year catastrophe. This shows that the body of our party is healthy, and we can expose our own problems and solve them by ourselves. This is where the strength of our party lies.

"Nonsense. It is bound to go through the motions in the end," said some people who do not have much confidence in rectifying the party work style and eliminating corruption. A good remedy for the persistent ailment of lack of confidence is to see the facts. Just after the 10-year catastrophe, China was confronted with numerous problems and difficulties for a time, but before long an entirely new situation appeared after the party Central Committee adopted a series of measures to set things right. When the party Central Committee introduced the policy of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy, this also made some people anxious. However, it did not cause any trouble; instead the Sixth 5-Year plan was successfully accomplished and many "unexpected achievements" were scored. Thinking about the past well-established facts and having a look at the effective measures taken at present, we can look forward to a bright future as long as we work together with one heart.

Some comrades hope that all negative and backward factors and corrupt practices can be eliminated overnight and will never appear again. Such thinking is unrealistic. Socialist China emerged from the womb of the old society and exists in today's complex international situation. New corrupt practices often occur after the old ones have been eliminated. For this reason, the central principle calling for firm and enduring efforts to rectify unhealthy tendencies and stem misdeeds is absolutely correct.

"China's reform effort and its opening up policy have brought on corruption and economic crimes and encountered opposition. Now China must slow its rush to reform." This is nothing but "oversensitive" conjecture made by a foreign newsman. Some foreign correspondents "are good at" standing facts on their heads and "are adept at" finding what does not exist. They can do this as much as they like. However, we must say: First, there were and are corruption and economic crimes; they probably will exist in the next 50 or 100 years. Corruption and economic crimes are not the inevitable outcome of reform and of the policy of opening up to the world. Secondly, carrying out reforms and opening up to the world are China's well-defined policies. They will neither change nor stop but will develop further. In 1986, our tasks are to absorb, consolidate, and improve all the reform measures we have adopted, develop them to a new level, make careful investigations, and accumulate strength so as to be prepared to adopt new reform measures. The reason is very simple. When we take three meals a day, we must digest before we take another meal. The appeal made by the CPC to its members and officials to rectify the party work style and eliminate corruption is just aimed at removing obstacles from the path of reform and of opening up to the outside world; we must ensure the progress of these measures.

The CPC Central Committee calls on the central party and government organizations to take the lead in improving party conduct. Through effort, central organizations will no doubt improve their work efficiency and make greater contributions to the people. This will certainly give an inestimable impetus to the fundamental improvement of the work style of the party and of social conduct at large. We are convinced that party members and officials of the central party and government organizations will certainly live up to the expectations of the entire party and the people of the whole country.

LEADERS VISIT MANY LOCALITIES, ENCOURAGE REFORM

HK030951 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 4, 27 Jan 86 pp 3-5

[Article by LIAOWANG reporter: "They Are Among the People -- Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, and Other Leaders of China Inspect Various Localities Across the Country"]

[Text] On New Year's Day 1986, the streets and lanes in Beijing were filled with a jubilant atmosphere. The sun was shining and a soft breeze was blowing despite the fact that it was mid-winter. People had put on their best clothes and were visiting relatives and friends. They were celebrating the arrival of the new year. Compared with the joyous and bustling activities in the streets, some offices inside Zhongnanhai were very quiet. Where had the masters there gone? On New Year's Day:

CPC Central Committee General Secretary Hu Yaobang was in the distant Xisha Islands in the vast ocean. He was visiting sentry posts and dormitories and, together with PLA fighters who had come from distant places on the mainland to defend the coast, was seeing out the old year and ushering in the new.

State Council Premier Zhao Ziyang was inspecting Tangshan City, Hebei Province. He was visiting people who had been crippled or disabled during the great earthquake in Tangshan in 1976.

President Li Xiannian was in Nanjing. Chairman Peng Zhen was in Wuxi. Vice Premier Wan Li was visiting the teachers and students of Beijing Normal University. Hu Qili and Li Peng were extending festival greetings to workers working on New Year's Day. Hao Jianxiu was visiting model workers in Shanghai...

If we paid attention to what happened on New Year's Day 1985, we may remeber that Zhongnanhai was also quiet on that day. Hu Yaobang was in Hebei's Wenan, Baxian, and Yongqing Counties and was discussing plans for the new year with local cadres and the masses. Zhao Ziyang was inspecting coastal cities open to the outside world.

This is by no means a coincidence. It is a true expression of the new style of China's leaders in the period of reform and construction. They not only go among the masses in grass-roots units during festivals but also try their best to do so whenever they find time. This has become one of their important work methods, an indispensable link in the course of making decisions on policies, and a frequently adopted way to maintain ties with the people.

Zhongnanhai is the nerve center of the 1 billion Chinese people and the headquarters of China's reform and construction. Each day, tens of thousands of reports, letters and telegrams bring the latest information from various fronts in various localities; and batch after batch of investigators are sent out from here or return from grass-roots units with reports on new situations and the people's demands. However, the central leaders of today are not content with all this. They value the viewpoint of practice and personally conduct investigations and study among the people, grasp firsthand materials, and strive to formulate policies, principles, instructions, and orders which conform to the national situation, public feelings, and reality. Therefore, no matter how busy they may be or what important diplomatic activities they may have to participate in, they always regard going among the masses and reality as an important thing on their agenda.

One Thousand Five Hundred Counties

China has over 2,200 counties and cities. Hu Yaobang has said that he has been to 1,500 of them. This of course includes places he had been before he took up office as general secretary. However, he has been to many, many places in the past few years! Let us take for instance the year 1985. At the beginning of that year, he visited Huabei oil field and the rural areas in Wenan, Baxian, and Yongqing in the triangle area with Beijing, Tianjin, and Tangshan as its vertexes. In February, he went to 20 counties and cities in Dehong, Honghe, and Wenshan Prefectures and the frontlines in Yunnan. In June, he went to 13 counties and cities in Shanxi's Yanbei, Linfen, and Luliang mountain areas, and to Shaanxi's Shenmu and Fugu Counties. In the summer months of July and August, he went to the northern and southern parts of Tian Shan in Xinjiang. In September, he followed the route taken by the Red Army during the Long March and inspected Qionglai, Kangding, and Ganzi in western Sichuan and Gansu. In October, he went to Yichuan, Luanzhou, Lingbao, Lushi, and Luoning in western Henan and to Shangnan, Danfeng, Shangxian, and other mountain areas in the southern party of Shaanxi. In December, he went to Ningbo, Fenghua, and Dachen Island in Zhejiang... According to these incomplete statistics alone, he has been to no less than 60 counties and cities.

Premier Zhao Ziyang: In January 1985, he went to Shanxi's Zuoyun, Hunyuan, Huairen, and Datong. In February, he went to Liaoning's Shenyang, Jilin's Changchun, and Heilongjiang's Yichun forest zone. In March, he went to Hebei's Baoding and Shijiazhuang. In April, he went to Hubei's Wuhan City. In July and August, he went to Sichuan's Chengdu City and Liaoning's Dalian Port. In November, he went to Shanghai's Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex and Zhejiang's Wenzhou City. In December, he went to Shandong's Shijiu Port and Yimeng mountain area, Henan's Xinxiang, Jiaozuo, and Kaifeng and Hebei's Zunhua, Qianxi, Qianan, and Tangshan.

Wan Li: In January, he went to Tianjin's Daqiuzhuang in Jinghai County and Guangdong's Shenzhen and Hainan Island. In February, he went to Hubei's Wuhan City. In March and April, he went to Anhui's Huai He area and Jiangsu's Nanjing, Changzhou, and Changshou. In September, he went to Tianjin New Port. In November, he went to Henan's Xinxiang and Shandong's Yimeng mountain area and Qufu. In December, he went to the Hengyang-Guangzhou railway line.

Hu Qili: In January, he went to Tianjin's Daquizhuang in Jinghai County. In April, he went to Hangzhou City. In June, he went to Guangxi's Guilin. In October, he went to Tianjin and Changchun. In December, he went to the Hengyang-Guangzhou railway line.

Li Xiannian inspected Guizhou and Jiangsu. Li Peng went to Shanxi's Shenmu and Fugu, Anhui's Yingshang, and the Tianjin New Port. Tian Jiyun went to Shandong's Jinan, Hebei's Shijiazhuang, and Liaoning's Dalian and Anshan. Hao Jianxiu went to Jiangxi's Jinggangshan area, Jiangsu's Nanjing, and Shanghai Municipality ....

If you take Zhongnanhai as the center and draw lines joining it with places they have visited, you will get a network with lines radiating out from Zhongnanhai to cities, mountain villages, coastal areas, hinterland, forest zones, pastures, deserts, and islands in all parts of the county. No wonder people say that this is the new style of Zhongnanhai today. From what the central leaders have done, people see that the fine tradition of the CPC has not only been restored but has been developed. In addition, things are now quicker. The time needed for taking actions, finding out the demands of the masses, discovering problems, pooling the wisdom of the masses, and solving problems is much shorter. This has enhanced the rapid progress of China's reform and construction.

Allowing the Water To Run

While having a heart-to-heart talk with some county party secretaries, Hu Yaobang said: Is it all right if a county party secretary has not visited all the county's villages after he has been in office for 3 years? We must frequently go into the realities of life to carry out inspections, investigation, and study. This is an idea which has all along been stressed by the Central Committee, but which has not been sufficiently implemented by the whole party. The chronic malpractice of indulging in empty talk can only be eliminated through going to realities and the masses. He said that the first step is to go to the grass roots; the second step is to listen to the reports and demands of the masses; and the third step is to study the experience of the masses and to discuss with them how to solve problems.

Chairman Deng Xiaoping once said: "Do more solid work and do not indulge in empty talk." This is also the unanimous view of central leaders.

In 1985, most of the places Hu Yaobang visited were mountain areas and poverty-stricken areas, such Yunnan's western plateaus, Shanxi's Yanbei and Luliang, Shaanxi's Fugu, Shenmu, Yichuan, and Huanglong, Sichuan's Ganzi Automonous Prefecture, western Hunan, and southern Shaanxi. In these places, there are not many people but numerous mountains, production is backward, and the people are poor. Compared with coastal areas and the hinterland, these places have progressed slowly.

Hu Yaobang has the people of mountain areas in his heart. He has inspected dozens of counties in mountain areas. As he put it, he was "visiting the poor and helping them to become well-off, visiting the rich to solicit their experience in getting rich, and looking for the able and virtuous." He has visited one county after another, thus enriching his understanding of the real situations, broadening his vision, and facilitating his work in formulating plans. He said that mountain areas are faced with the same acute contradiction: One the one hand, a great variety of natural resources above ground or underground have remained untouched over a very long period. On the other hand, tens of millions of people continue to be poor. He pointed out that wooded land and mineral deposits are the focus of labor for the people in mountain areas just as farmland is the focus of labor of the people on the plains. In the past, the fundamental cause of backwardness of mountain areas was that the labor force was divorced from the focus of labor. Once this problem is solved, mountain areas will be enlivened. He said that two obstacles must be removed before mountain areas can become prosperous: One is to have our eyes only on farmland and ignore the "black treasure house" (mineral deposits) underground and the "green treasure house" (wooded land and grassland) above ground. The other is inappropriate policies which bind the people of mountain areas hand and foot. He put forward the necessity of implementing relaxed policies and giving the masses a free hand in mining and afforestation and said that these activities must be carried out by local authorities, collectives, and individuals at the same time. He called this principle "allowing the water to run." "Water" means wealth and resources and "run" means exploration and utilization.

Once the principle "allowing the water to run" was put forward, it was supported by the people and was immediately put into effect. Large numbers of small coal mines came into existence one after another and large numbers of plots on slopes were used by the peasants for growing grass and planting trees on a contract basis. Within a very short period of time, the economy of some mountain areas began to liven up, and they were already profiting by the principle. The characters "allowing the water to run" have brought life back to mountain areas! Poverty-stricken areas are changing.

Many policies and principles have been formulated in this way by the central authorities. They came from the masses and have returned to the masses. They are full of vitality and are accepted by the people because they conform to the conditions of the people and to realities.

The Orientation of Urban Reform

In April 1985, Premier Zhao Ziyang came to Wuhan City, the thoroughfare of nine provinces. Wuhan City is marching at the head of urban reform. It was one of the earliest cities to remove restrictions on the vegetable market. Its achievements in introducing capable personnel have also attracted much attention. It has also gained new experience in establishing ties among various sectors and trades and in making the economy prosperous. Zhao Ziyang particularly praised Wuhan City for its policy of "opening wide the gates of the three cities," saying that this is a move of courage and insight, showing no fear of the inrush of commodities from other localities and of elimination of enterprises in competition. He said in Wuhan City that in developing the commodity economy, the gate must be opened wide to other localities, cities, and provinces. Only by opening the gate can there be competition, progress, and development. Many cities are willing to open up to the outside world but not to other localities of our country. This is not right. A city is the product of the development of the commodity economy. It has diversified functions. It is the center of industrial production, the center of commerce, the center of finance, and the hub of communications. Some cities are also centers of science and education. Various economic activities of a city should not serve that city alone but should serve the entire economic zone centering around it. He put forward that it is necessary to turn cities, first and foremost large cities, into open, multi-function, socialized, and modern economic centers. This conversation has become the guiding ideology for urban reform throughout the country and is yielding rich fruits.

At present, Wuhan City continues to develop in this direction. Enterprises in Wuhan City have formed 517 economic associations and cooperative organizations with its suburban counties and have signed over 300 cooperation projects with over 20 counties and cities of Hubei. It has also established economic and technological cooperation and jointly run businesses with Henan, Sichuan, Qinghai, the coastal cities of Shenzhen, Xiamen, Fuzhou, and Zhuhai, and Hainan Island. It has also established and developed trade relations with Japan, the United States, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Sweden, and Hong Kong and has run joint ventures and cooperative ventures with them.

Development of the Western Part of China

In the past few years, Hu Yaobang as been to various places in the western part of China -- Xizang, Xinjiang, Yunnan, Qinghai, and Nei Monggol. A complete set of special policies for developing the west have been formulated under the direction of the central authorities. The western region is a region where the minority nationalities live in compact communities. The prosperity of this region has a bearing on the overall situation of stability, unity, and prosperity of China.

Xizang, after the inspection of central leaders, has changed so rapidly that it is "quite beyond recognition." Provinces and cities in the coastal areas and in the hinterland have sent workers, teachers, and technical personnel to cooperate with various localities of Xizang to build factories and schools. Large numbers of key industrial buildings are rising and are changing the scenery of the roof of the world. In Xinjiang, the policy for developing the three mainstays of the local economy formulated through discussions between central leaders, local cadres, and the masses has yielded positive results. Grassland cultivation and animal husbandry are developing. The production of fruits, the technology for food preservation, the processing industry, and mining are all developing rapidly.

In 1981, Hu Yaobang visited Xishuangbanna in Yunnan. There he made friends with Zhao Cunxin, head of the Xishaungbanna Tai Autonomous Prefecture. He told him then that unity among nationalities must be strengthened in regions where minority nationalities live in compact communities. Without unity, there can be no development. In September 1985, he met Zhao Cunxin again at the National Conference of Party Delegates. Zhao Cunsin joyfully told him that in the previous few years, unity among nationalities had been greatly strengthened and production had also been greatly developed. At present, the autonomous prefecture has a population of 660,000. In 1983, the per capita income was over 160 yuan. In 1984, the per capita income reached 227 yuan and the per capita grain allocation reached over 1,100 jin. The figures were even higher in 1985. The autonomous prefecture is building hydropower stations and sugar refineries and is developing tourism. On hearing this, Hu Yaobang was very happy.

Last year, Hu Yaobang visited Yunnan again. He conducted investigation and study in Dehong and Honghe autonomous prefectures. He encouraged the local people to mine iron, gold, and coal to plant trees, to develop transportation and tourism, and to make use of various resources to increase income so that each person could increase his income by 100 yuan in one year. He urged cadres at various levels to frequently go to the masses, to discuss with them the major plan of achieving common prosperity, and to overcome difficulties together in the course of development.

Most of the places visited by General Secretary Hu Yaobang in the past few years are among the most undeveloped localities in China. Even foreigners have noticed this. At a meeting with foreign guests in Zhongnanhai in late spring 1985, a foreign friend said to him: "As far as I know, you often inspect the most undeveloped places in China and are very concerned with the development of these areas. What are China's plans for accelerating the development of these areas?" Hu Yaobang answered: "The economic development of various regions in our country is quite uneven. The eastern part along the coast is relatively more developed. The western part has many mountains and is relatively backward. Nevertheless, a favorable feature of the west is its vast territory with rich natural resources. Therefore, our policy for the western part is: First, to implement relaxed policies so that the people there can have a free hand in exploiting the resources and in bringing their favorable conditions into play. Second, to encourage them to establish ties with more developed regions and to cooperate with them on a voluntary basis for mutual benefit. Third, to reduce as much of their burden as possible by giving them appropriate financial, materials, and technological support." He predicted that large-scale development of the western part of China will be put on the agenda at the end of this century and the beginning of the next!

Expedite Reform in a Thorough Fashion

As if "making a discovery," an observant person said: "Please pay attention to where the central leaders go and when they go there. If you do, you will have some idea of the "mystery" of the strategic thoughts of the central authorities! People find that the following patterns seem to exist:

-- Going to solve problems in places where there are many difficulties;

-- Going to review the experience of the masses in places where new situations and new experience have emerged.

-- Going to open up a new situation in places where work has not been effectively carried out;

-- Going to discover the real situation and to promote the implementation of major policy decision before and after such decisions have been made....

If we recall what happened in the past, we can easily see that there are some grounds for such conjectures. Shortly before and after the 14 coastal port cities were opened to the outside world, central leaders visited these cities one after another. When town and township enterprises began to spring up in China's rural areas, central leaders shuttled into the countryside in the north and south of the country. When urban reform began, they appeared in places where industry was most developed. At the end of last year, before the national rural work conference and when the 1986 Document No 1 was being formulated and polished, many central leaders left Zhongnanhai to go to units at lower levels. At that time, Premier Zhao Ziyang had just concluded his visit to four Latin American countries, but he made a 4-day inspection tour to Wenzhou in Zhejiang Province.

In Wenzhou, one of the 14 coastal cities open to the outside world, Zhao Ziyang visited the urban area, the port, and the wharves. The "Qili" wharf at Wenzhou Port is 9 kilometers long and 20,000-ton ships can berth there. The situation of reform and opening to the outside world in Wenzhou City is inspiring. Zhao Ziyang visited plants run by peasant families. Some of them produce buttons and garments. Others produce woolen jackets and other commodities. The annual output value of Wenzhou's rural family-run industry and industry linked with large enterprises had reached over 1 billion yuan. With the development of family-run industry, Wenzhou has opened up 10 specialized markets and trade in small commodities is brisk.

Zhao Ziyang visited the Qiaotou Town button market and the trade building which was under construction, using 500,000 yuan raised by the peasants in Yongjia County. He also visited the information service agency and the night fair. He praised the Wenzhou people for their ability to develop the commodity economy, appreciated their creation in the course of reform, and encouraged them to develop the production of small commodities. The said that small commodities can not only meet the needs of the people but can also have a place in the international market.

Zhao Ziyang went around the five coastal counties of Wenzhou (Chanan, Pingyang, Leqing, Yongjia, and Ruian). Eight hundred thousand people of these five counties, which accounted for 60 percent of these counties' rural labor force, had left the farmland to take jobs in industry, commerce, and service trade. In 1984, the per capita income of these five countries reached over 500 yuan and this figure was even higher in 1985. All this greatly interested Premier Zhao. Was it not a vivid picture showing the transition of the natural economy to the commodity economy in the rural areas?

Reform has brought about tremendous changes. Reform has caused millions upon millions of people to think, resulting in a creative force with the momentum of an avalanche. China's leaders have plunged themselves into the vast sea of our 1 billion people, drawn on their unlimited wisdom and strength, and now lead them in striding toward the goal of socialist modernization.

At the beginning of 1986, frantic activities were taking place behind the scenes in Zhongnanhai. The blueprint of China's development is designed here and will then be gradually turned into reality over our territory of 9.6 million square kilometers.

ECONOMIC OFFICIAL LISTS 1985 REFORM ACHIEVEMENTS

HK031532 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Jan 86 p 2

[Article by Gao Shangquan, vice minister in charge of the State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System: "On the First Year of the First Battle"]

[Text] The year 1985 has been rung out in the course of our reforms, and we have entered the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the reforms in our country have been carried out for 7 years. In the first few years, rural reforms achieved remarkable successes attracting world attention, and useful explorations were made in urban reforms. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, under the guidance of the "CPC Central Committee's Decision on Reform of the Economic Structure," economic reforms entered a new stage and the focus was shifted to the reform of the economic structure in cities. Over the past year, comprehensive reforms have been made in an orderly way in the aspects of the planning system, the price system, the state's economic management functions, and the labor and wage system for the purpose of making the enterprises more dynamic. At the same time, reforms of the scientific research system and the educational system have also made progress. In the countryside, the farm produce purchase system has been reformed, and positive and reasonable measures have been taken to readjust the rural economic structure. This marked the second major breakthrough in rural reforms.

Although our all-round economic structural reforms have just been underway for a short time, a good situation has been created. A series of profound and revolutionary changes have occurred in the economic operational mechanisms and management system in our country, and our national economy has entered the most vigorous and dynamic period since the founding of the PRC.

The year 1985 was the first year that marked the successes in our initial reform efforts. In our counties, both the theory and practice of reform has developed. The development of the theory of the socialist commodity economy and the double-track economic operations have brought some noticeable new trends to our country: Some multitiered and manifold horizontal economic ties have been developing rapidly and have superseded the old structure, which was characterized by separate and closed vertical economic relations on the basis of a high degree of centralization. A variety of economic forms, with the socialist public ownership form as the main body, exist simultaneously and complement each other, thus forming a pluralistic pattern of socialist ownership. With the changes in external conditions, business targets, investment orientation, distribution principles, organization, and management of the enterprises have also changed correspondingly, and the enterprises have thus become more dynamic; a socialist commodity market has taken shape, and the law of value is playing an increasingly important role in regulating production relations between supply and demand. When exercising macroeconomic control and management, the state is gradually shifting from the previous pattern of relying mainly on direct administrative control to the new pattern of relying mainly on indirect control by flexibly using the economic levers of prices, taxes, interest rates, and exchange rates; the countryside in China has been advancing along the path of developing a commodity economy in a planned way, and rural production has become more market-oriented and more socialized. The scale of commodity production oriented to external markets and the scale of commodity exchanges with the outside world have been further expanded; the broad masses have experienced the temper of the commodity economy and have acquired a better understanding of reforms and shown more enthusiastic support for reforms. Practice has fully shown that our country has smoothly moved onto the new path of developing a commodity economy in a planned way, and that prospects for our reforms are bright and broad.

At present, two types of economic operational mechanisms are simultaneously functioning in our economic life; there are two pricing systems and two types of economic management. They not only exist in a parallel way, but also overlap, thus gradually bringing about a new situation. Our reforms have also encountered some problems, which can be summarized into two main points: First, reforms in the macroeconomic field lag behind the new situation in which microeconomic activities are being enlivened. Specifically, macroeconomic factors were out of control to different degrees in the fourth quarter of 1984 and the following period, and this caused partial instability in our economic life. Second, the active microeconomic factors and the positive functions of the market mechanisms cannot be brought into normal play in some areas. Many policies and regulations laid down by the State Council for expanding enterprise decision-making power and invigorating enterprises have not been put into practice. Some enterprises, especially large and medium-sized enterprises owned by the whole nation, are still subject to excessive restrictions in their production and operations. In view of these problems, some measures were taken to strengthen overall economic control last year on the basis of carrying forward the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. At present, the runaway economic growth rate has been brought down, the scale of credit has been brought under control, and the financial situation of the state is better than at any time in the past few years. However, we should still pay attention to some issues.

We should correctly look at problems appearing in the course of reform. First, there are two pattern changes in our country; that is the change in the development pattern and the change in the institutional pattern. These two types of changes are based on two sets of strategies and policies. They may promote each other but might also hold each other back. Fundamentally speaking, reform serves economic development, and the establishment of a new set of institutions will definitely lend great impetus to the development of productive forces. However, if we neglect the complexity and arduousness of the reforms and are eager to create an "overheated" economy, we will unavoidably cause tension and confusion in our economic life and will lose the benign economic environment and favorable social environment for reforms. Second, in the change of the institutional pattern, there will inevitably be conflicts and friction between the outgoing old system and the new system. These contradictions may, on the one hand, weaken the state's capacity of macroeconomic management; and on the other hand, the old financial, monetary, and pricing systems may, with their strong inertia, push the enterprises to seek partial and short-term interests. This is the reason for the "investment hunger disease" and the "remuneration competition disease," which have caused a macroeconomic dislocation characterized by a vicious swell of gross demand. The root cause of this problem remains at the old and ossified institutions.

Third, because we lack experience in making use of the economic levers, economic information, legal means, and administrative means an all-round way to regulate economic operations, and because we have made some errors in our work, we have encountered some problems and should draw lessons from all this. Over the past year, we have also accumulated some valuable experience and have deepened our understanding of the relationships between reform and construction, between macroeconomic reform and microeconomic reform, between single-item reform and comprehensive reform, and between destroying the old and establishing the new in the course of building a new socialist economic model with Chinese characteristics. We are glad to see that our reform theories are full of vitality and are enriched in practice. In order to develop the planned commodity economy, we must ensure that enterprises can really function as relatively independent commodity producers and handlers that handle business on their own and bear sole responsibility for their profits and losses, must develop the socialist planned commodity market and explore the way to establish a sound market system, and must use economic means, legal means, and necessary administrative means to control and regulate economic operations.

Our economic theory has made new breakthroughs in explaining the relationships between these three major tasks in our economic reforms and in explaining the basic characteristics of the Chinese-style socialist economic structure. Meanwhile, our economists have drawn up the blueprint for reform practice by specifying the three major tasks we will carry out in reforms during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Our future reforms of the planning, pricing, financial, monetary, labor, and wage systems will all serve the purpose of accomplishing the three major tasks. Then, we will form a whole set of mechanisms and means to organically combine plans with market forces and to ensure both dynamic microeconomic activities and effective macroeconomic management. By fulfilling those tasks, we will succeed in creating the embryonic form of the new economic structure.

According to the main reform tasks in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, our general guideline for reform in 1986 is to consolidate the achievements of reform and to make good preparations for taking a major step forward in 1987. There are two main tasks for our reform work this year:

First, we will consolidate, digest, add to, and improve the reform results that we have achieved so as to give play to the advantages, overcome the defects, settle some prominent problems, and bring about better results. In the microeconomic field, we will mainly reorganize the companies which are performing administrative functions, readjust and reduce regulatory taxes for some enterprises, lighten the social burdens on the enterprises, narrow the scope of mandatory plans so as to ensure the effective implementation of the State Council's policies and regulations on expanding the management decision-making power of the enterprises and to provide better external conditions for invigorating the enterprises, especially the large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises. Inside the enterprises, all types of economic contract responsibility systems should be further improved, and the wage system should be gradually reformed. The unreasonable distribution of incomes between different enterprises and between workers should be readjusted. Measures should be taken to prevent the swelling of consumption funds caused by enterprises' competition in raising wages. This is an important issue that must be solved in regulating the relationship between macroeconomic management and the enlivening of microeconomic activities.

It is necessary to further use the means of policies to develop horizontal combinations between enterprises on the basis of mutual benefit and voluntary participation so as to gradually form enterprise groups of different sizes with varying content on different levels. The development of horizontal economic ties will also help rationalize the organizational structure of the enterprises and the industrial structure as a whole and will thus promote economic restructuring by changing the previous structure, which was composed of separate vertical relations with set barriers between different departments and areas. In the macroeconomic field, we must strictly control the general scale of investment in fixed assets and further readjust the investment structure. Macroeconomic control must be strengthened and improved. Demand should be held down and supply should be increased. All types of economic levers should be used to carry out indirect macroeconomic management. We will further readjust and improve our financial and taxation policies. At the same time, we will correctly employ monetary policy and industrial policy to readjust the general demand structure and enterprise activities. We will actively develop the market for capital goods. The state will monopolize the transactions of some major capital goods and will control the general price level for capital goods. We will encourage the transfer of funds on the basis of mutual benefit and the compensable transfer of technologies, and will explore ways to develop multitiered financial markets, technology markets, and labor service markets. The positive role of the market mechanism should be brought into play so as to smooth out economic relations and to create some general, equal conditions for all types of enterprises to join business competition. This will promote the steady and balanced development of the economy.

Second, we will seriously study all reform schemes favorable to effective macroeconomic management and to the enlivening of microeconomic activities, favorable to the enhancement of the enterprise and social economic results, and favorable to the maintenance of the general equilibrium between supply and demand. We will actively and steadily pursue exploration and experiment and will make good preparations for taking important reform steps in the future. Feasibility studies of some reform schemes will be made, and experiments within these reform schemes will be carried out in some cities and enterprises. Through experiments, we will create and accumulate new experience for reform.

PLA DEPUTY CHIEF OF STAFF HE QIZHONG INTERVIEWED

HK031146 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0317 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Report by Li Wei: "He Comes From the Battlefields -- An Interview with He Qizhong, Deputy Chief of Staff of the PLA"]

[Text] Beijing, 28 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- "He is full of vigor and supported by the veteran comrades. Being very modest, he has quickly familiarized himself with the situation, and he has done well in his work." Han Huaizhi, assistant to the chief of staff of the PLA, who is over 60, made these remarks commending his 43-year-old colleague — the newly-appointed Deputy Chief of Staff He Qizhong, who made an even deeper impression of being straightforward, amiable, and easy to approach when interviewed by this reporter.

A native of Yingshan County, eastern Sichuan, He Qizhong is the youngest high-ranking commander in the Army. He enrolled in the Army in 1961 while studying at the Chengdu secondary technical school, realizing his dream to become a "soldier," which he began to cherish during childhood. A year later, he took part in the self-defense counterattacks in the eastern section of the Sino-Indian border (the Walong Area), acting as a bodyguard for the then divisional commander. Subsequently, he became a platoon leader and held this position for 4 years. He was a staff officer of an Army organ for 11 years. He returned to the front in 1978 and participated in the self-defense counterattacks against Vietnamese aggression on the Yunnan border the next year. At that time he was already a deputy regimental commander and chief of staff. As a regimental commander, he entered the PLA Military Academy in 1980 and studied there for 2 years. After leaving the military academy, he went back to the southwestern Army units and was appointed divisional chief of staff and divisional commander. While he was a deputy Army commander, he commanded the well-known self-defense counterattacks against Vietnamese aggression in Zheyun Shan in April 1984. Soon afterwards, he was promoted to Army commander. In March last year, he was transferred to the General Staff headquarters.

In his office, which is not big, the reporter asked him about the deepest impression he had gained in his 20-year military career. "Nothing has been more impressive than the self-defense counterattacks on the Sino-Indian border," he said, with a strong native accent. "The scenes of combat still remain fresh in my memory. The counterattacks helped me understand about conventional warefare, how to use tactics, and how to cherish love for the soldiers. They served as a basic lesson for my command work in the two self-defense counterattacks against Vietnamese aggression." It was reported that in half a day during an operation he commanded in 1979, his soldiers annihilated some 200 Vietnamese aggressors and wounded about 40 to 50 others. A breakthrough was made under his command in 9 minutes, leaving only three of his soldiers injured.

"The most prominent experience I have had since my arrival in the headquarters is the trust, help, and democratic style of the senior officers. Three days after my appointment, I took part in a Standing Committee meeting of the Central Military Commission. Vice Chairman Yang Shangkun wanted me to speak on the situation in the Army. Not long after this, Chief of Staff Yang Dezhi let me chair a meeting on Army structural reform, steamlining, and reorganization. All this made me feel that I lack knowledge and must study hard and learn from our veteran comrades so as to live up to their expectations."

During the interview, this reporter learned that reading books is an important component of He Qizhong's study. He likes to read military books, modern and ancient, Chinese and foreign. He is more interested in reading memoirs written by PLA soldiers and famous foreign generals. He enjoys reading magazines on modern military equipment and technology very much. He has read the book "Effective Administrator" writtten by a Chinese-American, three times and has found quite a number of convincing arguments in it. He has also read two books concerning experiences in the Korean war. He has studied time and again the self-defense counterattacks against Vietnamese aggression.

This reporter noticed that this high-ranking military officer referred to the word "opportunity" several times during the interview. He said that from his participation in several battles through the years of peace to his appointment as a leader in the General Staff headquarters there were opportunities. "There are many Army cadres whose qualifications are the same as or higher than mine, but I had the ooportunity."

Of the four deputy chiefs of staff, He Qizhong takes partial charge of the work concerning Army organization and equipment. He told this reporter: Last year was the first year in which the Central Military Commission's plan for Army structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization began to be implemented. The tasks of readjusting the Army's high-level leading groups, merging large military regions, and reorganizing field armies into group armies were fulfilled as scheduled, step by step, and in an appropriate manner. The work of reducing the number of soldiers by 1 million has started smoothly. The military officer service regulations, which have an important bearing on the reform of the Army cadre system, have been formulated and will be submitted to the NPC Standing Committee for examination after being discussed by the Central Military Commission. These major reforms have reduced leadership levels, strengthened the combination of various arms and services, and further improved the Army's weaponry and quick-response ability, thus enhancing its combat effectiveness under modern conditions.

Question: "What reforms will be carried out this year?"

Answer: "We will streamline and reorganize the military academies, the logistics supply system, and people's armed forces departments at the county level. It is expected that all this will be completed be the end of this year."

Question: "How do you appraise the combat effectiveness of the Chinese Army?"

Answer: "There should be a comparison. Our Army's combat effectiveness has greatly improved in comparison with that during the Korean war. If any country dares to impose an aggressive war on us, we can say that we will win the final victory."

Question: "What efforts will the Army make to speed the modernization of its equipment as soon as possible?"

He Qizhong answered frankly: "We will aim at advanced world levels and strengthen our scientific research." "Equipment and talented people are two key problems in our Army's construction during peacetime. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee in 1979, the Army has made great improvements in designing and producing weapons, and it has introduced more and more computers to the fields of calculation, control, display, radio navigation, processing, and surveying. Renewal of military equipment is gradually taking place. This is the best period since the founding of new China. As our military spending is limited, we will concentrate our material and human resources on the research and manufacture of new weapons. We are convinced that after 1990, we will make great progress in renewing the Army's weaponry."

The time for the interview passed during our free conversation and 90 minutes had gone without our knowing it.

It is little embarrassing to inquire about the personal background of a high-ranking officer. However, at the end of the interview, this reporter told He about the rumor that he was the son of He Changgong, a veteran cadre. Hearing this, He Qizhong replied, laughingly: "My father was a cook in a county before and after liberation, and my mother did laundry for others before liberation. Both of them died 10 years ago. I was the only son in the family and decided to join the Army on my own. I reported this to my parents only after I had enrolled myself in the Army."

REGULATIONS ISSUED ON SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH FUNDING

[Text] Beijing, 4 Feb (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently promulgated provisional regulations concerning supervision of scientific and technological appropriations. The purpose of the regulations is to strengthen macroscopic supervision of funds for science and technology; use scientific and technological appropriations in a rational and effective way; orient scientific and technological work to economic construction; form a rational disposition over the depth and breadth of scientific research; and ensure the implementation of state scientific and technological plans.

According to the regulations, the Finance Ministry will, beginning from the Seventh 5-Year Plan, cooperate with the State Planning Commission in arranging central financial outlays for scientific and technological funds in the three areas (funds for subsidizing intermediate tests, trial manufacture of new products, and major scientific research institutes on the basis of the principle that the growth of appropriations for scientific and technological funds is faster than the rate of increase of regular state revenue.

The regulations say: A department, province, autonomous region, or municipality in charge of a major scientific and technological project listed in the state plan will cooperate with the State Education Commission, the Chinese Academy of Sciences, and other departments concerned in sponsoring nationwide public bidding for the project. It must ensure that all units entering the bidding are given equal opportunity and that the quality of the project meets state plan requirements. A department, province, autonomous region, or municipality in charge of such projects should take immediate action to sample the bidding on selected projects in order to accumulate experience as quickly as possible. Supervision of these projects should be on a contractual basis. Funds for scientific and technological research in the three areas and other scientific and technological appropriations can be used free of charge or repaid according to the projected economic efficiency of the project and its ability to repay the funds.

The bank entrusted by the department, province, autonomous region, or municipality in charge of a project will monitor expenditures for the project and will undertake the responsibility of collecting funds according to the contract. Half of the collected funds will be delivered to the state treasury. The other half will be retained by the department, province, autonomous region, or municipality for continuing major state scientific and technological projects; it will not be subtracted from funds to be appropriated under the state plan.

The regulations clearly state: Beginning this year, funds allocated by the Finance Ministry for operating expenses of research institutes under State Council departments will be managed by the State Science and Technology Commission.

The regulations stipulate plans for managing operating expenses of various research institutes. Operating expenses will be gradually reduced, or completely or basically withdrawn, for research institutes working mainly on technological development and applied research projects with immediate foreseeable benefits during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Institutes concentrating on basic research or applied research projects with no immediate practical benefits will have to apply for grants, while the state will continue to guarantee a certain amount of funds only for those operating expenses necessary to cover regular activities and to support approved auxiliary facilities. Research institutes involved in medicine and public health, labor protection, family planning, prevention and control of disasters, environmental sciences, and other social services; or engaged in basic technical information, standardization, meteorology, and observation, as well as agricultural sciences, will continue to receive funds from the state and will be held responsible for covering operating expenses with funds appropriated by the state.

Units engaged in more than one kind of research work may obtain operating funds through more than one channel, according to specific conditions. Of the operating expenses for research work saved by a scientific research unit, two-thirds should be used by the State Council department concerned to support technological work in the respective trade and to finance major scientific research projects of the state, and one-third should be used by the State Science and Technology Commission as national science and technology credit trust funds and as funds for interest on loans for scientific and technological projects.

Where a nationally oriented technological development fund has been established for a particular trade, all operating expenses saved by units of the same trade should be submitted to the competent authorities concerned for financing that technological development fund. Expenses required by the State Education Commission and the Chinese Academy of Sciences to build laboratories open to the whole country may be met by appropriations from the one-third portion of the savings in scientific research expenses submitted to the State Science and Technology Commission.

In addition, the regulations stipulate that capital construction investment of scientific research units in various fields should be governed by state rules on control of capital construction. Separation pay and retirement pension for those who have been discharged and those who have retired from scientific research units should be disbursed from their scientific research operating funds and should not be reduced. Those units no longer receiving appropriations for scientific research operating funds should continue to give their separated employees and retirees separation pay and retirement pensions. For scientific and technological research projects undertaken by scientific research units and institutions of higher learning at the request of various enterprises, expenses should be met by the enterprises concerned.

ATTITUDES OF SANITATION WORKERS PRAISED

[Commentator's article: "The Most Honorable Quality of the Working Class"]

[Text] Money and comfortable surroundings are very tempting. However, 52 workers of the Guangzhou garbage disposal plant are not tempted. There is something more attractive than money and comfortable surroundings at their plant. The plant is responsible for arduous jobs, and these jobs are dirty, stinking, heavy, and tiring. What is more important than money and comfortable surroundings is nothing other than the people's happiness. "I am willing to do dirty work so that thousands of people can live healthily." "Work for the cleanliness of the city and work to benefit the people."

Comrades of the Guangzhou garbage disposal plant have made a correct choice between the happiness of the broad masses of people and personal comfort. This choice is a manifestation of being imbued with lofty ideals. The party organizations of this plant are firm and strong, and the leading cadres are imbued with lofty ideals. They have inspired the plant's workers with their own actions and have united them by means of good examples, education, and care in every possible way. All party organizations and leading comrades on various fronts can learn from them what we need most at present.

In the 1950's, there were a number of model workers with Shi Chuanxiang as their representative. They were "willing to do dirty work so that thousands of people could live healthily." They were respected by all the people of the country. Today, we have similar workers at the Guangzhou garbage disposal plant. Their actions show: what is most valuable and worthy of seeking in this world is not money or anything bought with money, but the interests of the people and the country. Their actions also show: so long as we are imbued with the spirit of dedicating ourselves to the people, we can make unusual accomplishments at any ordinary post.

It is matter for rejoicing that since the 1950's, what is most brilliant in the quality of the working class of our country has been passed on from generation to generation. We should value this good tradition and carry it forward under new historical conditions, love our own work, and work diligently in a down-to-earth manner for the growing prosperity of the country and for greater happiness of the people.

Comrades of the Guangzhou garbage disposal plant, the people of the whole country salute you!

FOREIGN EXCHANGE SHORTAGE SEEN LASTING LONG TIME

HK030922 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0650 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, 29 Jan (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Today a senior official of the State Administration of Exchange Control told this reporter that China's foreign exchange shortage would last for a quite long time. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the limited foreign exchange should be used in projects capable of boosting exports and increasing the ability to gain foreign exchange earnings, imports of badly needed technology and equipment, and in personnel training.

The official said: In the years ahead, China's foreign exchange will remain strained. The reason behind this state of affairs is that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the construction of energy and transportation projects, ports, and infrastructural facilities will be stepped up, and technological transformation will be carried out in old enterprises.

This requires large quantities of foreign exchange funds. In addition, although big advances have been made in China's export trade over the last few years, strenuous efforts are still needed to expand exports by a wide margin and to gain more foreign exchange earnings. Some export products are less price competitive on the international market and apt to be affected by price fluctuations on the international market and by trade protectionism.

He pointed out: Misuse of a portion of foreign exchange funds is also attributed to the country's excessive demand on foreign exchange. For some time in the past, a considerable portion of foreign exchange funds has been wasted in buying cars, durable consumer goods, and large amounts of spare parts and components, which were assembled or resold on the domestic market. Foreign exchange funds were used on a one-time consumption basis, and their use was not combined with earnings more foreign exchange. Such being the case, our foreign exchange reserves would be used up no matter how much we have. We must always bear this lesson in mind in the future.

In discussing the solutions to the foreign exchange shortage, the official said: Two things must be done with great effort. One is that efforts should be made to boost exports, to enhance the ability to earn foreign exchange through exports, and to increase the income in foreign exchange from nontrade businesses, such as tourism. The other is that it is necessary to economize on the use of foreign exchange and to reduce expenditures. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, it is still necessary to borrow an appropriate amount of foreign capital funds so as to make up for the country's shortage of foreign exchange.

PROPORTION OF URBAN POPULATION TO DOUBLE

[Text] Kunming, February 4 (XINHUA) -- The proportion of urban to total population in China is expected to double the present figure of 20.6 percent by the turn of the century, according to an academic forum which just closed in this capital of Yunnan Province. A paper contributed by the Population Research Institute of Nankai University in Tianjin said the pace of urbanization in China has speeded up since 1982. During the period from 1949 to 1982, the increase rate of urban population was lower than the average for developing countries.

To cope with the situation, the institute put forward a long-term strategy advocating strict control of the growth of large cities while developing medium-sized and small ones. At the forum, scholars from 20 research institutes contributed papers on the physical conditions of children in Shanghai and environmental factors affecting the health of workers, among others. Research into demographics began only a few years ago in China, which has a population of one billion. Now there are 38 university-run research units with more than 400 specialists.

The United Nations Fund for Population Activities gave China funds to aid research into 12 areas, including urban congestion, and studies of the aged and women and death rates. Research institutes attached to the People's University in Beijing and Nankai University and Shanghai's Fudan University have agreed to jointly study population in the country's largest cities -- Beijing, Tianjin and Shanghai.

WAN LI, OTHERS VISIT BEIJING SCHOOLS, TEACHERS

[Text] Beijing, 4 Feb (XINHUA) -- Wan Li, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, visited some university, middle, and primary schools and kindergarten teachers in Beijing on 1 and 3 February.

Comrade Wan Li hoped that the work of educational reform in the capital would be carried out successfully and expedite the training of more and still better personnel.

At Beijing Polytechnic University, Wan Li heard a detailed report on educational reform by Fan Gongxiao, president of the university, and saw some models depicting the university's development program and an exhibition showing its accomplishments in scientific research. He also inquired about the university's specialties and departments, the quality of teaching, and other subjects. When briefed on the increase in the university's income resulting from its scientific research and production work and the use of this additional income for educational reform, Wan Li said: Economically, government departments at various levels should consider ways to give more to schools rather than how to receive more from them. What government departments should receive from schools is qualified, highly competent people. Preferential treatment may be given, as appropriate, in levying tax on schools' additional income from their scientific research and production work.

Wan Li said to leading cadres of the Beijing Polytechnic University: "Now, among the schools in our country, secondary specialized schools account for only a relatively small proportion; that is, our educational structure is very irrational. You should help train teachesrs for secondary specialized schools and pay particular attention to assisting normal schools in improving teachers' quality. This is also of fundamental importance to you. If a university is to raise its educational level, it should enroll students from among outstanding middle school graduates. To provide outstanding graduates, middle schools need good teachers. The improvement of the quality of middle school teachers requires assistance from universities. Because of this, it is your duty to strive hard to help improve the quality of primary and middle school teachers." In addition, Wan Li pointed out: Beijing is the capital. It should be ahead of others in every field of work, and higher education is no exception. The establishment of specialties and departments in a university should meet societal needs and should keep up with the international level. Schools should be run with their doors open. They may take the initiative to establish connections with scientific research departments and enterprises so as to promptly absorb new research and production achievements to enrich their curricula. They should also make every effort to improve the quality of education. In reforming the systems of enrollment of new students and placement of graduates, they may make even bigger strides. Besides, connection may be established with enterprises or suburban counties so as to help train qualified personnel for them according to their specific needs. In that case, the school is not required to guarantee jobs for graduates, because they will return to their original enterprises or suburban counties.

On the morning of 1 February, Comrade Wan Li braved bitter cold to call at the homes of some teachers of primary and middle schools and kindergartens in Beijing's Chaoyang and Xicheng Districts. He chatted cordially with them and inquired in detail about their work, income, and housing.

Wan Li said: "The quality of primary and middle school teachers is a major factor determining the quality of our people. The work of bilding the two civilizations should begin with kindergarten education, and this requires good teachers." Comrade Wan Li also visited the teachers' new residences. After being briefed by a responsible comrade of the Chaoyang District government on proposal to be carried out in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period for solving the teachers' housing problem, Wan Li was very pleased. It is his hope that teachers' housing problem be solved as soon as possible. Only when teachers have a good home can they make good preparations for teaching in the classroom and keep their minds on their work, he said.

Comrade Wan Li visited 90-year-old Dong Yuzhen, a retired director of Shuguang Kindergarten in Xicheng District, and extended cordial regards to her. Wan Li said to her: "You have cultivated many, many children. This is your great contribution to the country."

Li Ximing, Chen Xitong, and other responsible comrades of Beijing Municipality accompanied Comrade Wan Li in paying visits and extending regards to the teachers of universities, middle and primary schools, and kindergartens and took part in discussions with them.

With the consolidation of political unity and stability, the national economy is undergoing a rapid, sustained, stable, and balanced growth. The achievements scored on the various fronts in our province would not have been possible without the support of our fraternal soldiers. While promoting their revolutionization, modernization, and regularization, defending the motherland, and carrying out reduction-in-force reorganization, the units stationed in Fujian have also made important contributions to vigorously aiding industrial and agricultural production in various localities, to combating natural disasters and rescuing victims, to maintaining social order, and to advancing the joint building of spiritual and material civilizations. Like the PLA, the People's Armed Police have contributed to building the two civilizations while strengthening themselves organizationally and doing a good job in maintaining social order.

Hu Ping said: This year is the first year of our Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must firmly carry out the line, principles, and policies adopted since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and, following the guidance of the party Central Committee, make further efforts to build a socialist spiritual civilization while doing a good job in building a material civilization. We will abide by the circular of the CPC Central Committee and State Council on respecting and cherishing the Army and actively supporting military reforms and Army building, extensively publicize the PLA's noble ideology and revolutonary heroism, continue to cherish and support our fraternal soldiers, and earnestly carry out the policy of giving special care to disabled servicemen and to dependents of revolutionary martyrs and servicemen and the policy of resettling demobilized soldiers. We will strive to do a better job in resettling demobilized soldiers and in supporting soldiers at the front and to do all we can to help the Army successfully carry out its task of reduction-in-force reorganization.

In conclusion, Hu Ping called on the soldiers and people throughout the province to strengthen unity, carry out the spirit of surmounting difficulties, combine their wisdom and efforts in advancing together, and strive to fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The units have also scored marked achievements in strengthening combat readiness, education and training, helping militiamen carry out their reserve duties, training personnel for both military and civilian work, and engaging in agricultural and sideline production. These achievements were closely linked to the concern and vigorous support of the party committees and governments at all levels and of the people throughout the province.

A movie was shown after the meeting.

FUJIAN LEADERS ADDRESS PARTY CADRES CONFERENCE

OW021143 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Jan 86 p 1

[Excerpts] A conference of prefectural, city, and county party secretaries, which was called by the provincial party committee, closed on 20 January. Comrade Xiang Nan made a summing-up speech and Comrade Hu Ping spoke on the current economic work at the general meeting held on the morning of 20 January.

During the 6-day conference, which was opened on 15 January, participants earnestly studied the guidelines of the central conference on rural work and the meetings of cadres of central organs, heard speeches by leading comrades of the provincial party committee, and discussed questions on improving party style and successfully carrying out party rectification in rural areas.

In his speech, Comrade Xiang Na stressed the importance of taking a firm grip on the economic work as the central task. He said: Economic work is the foundation and focus of work in all fields. Developing the socialist forces of production is our central task, and work in all other fields should be centered on this task. He said: The main objective of the current conference is to study agriculture. As Fujian has a relatively weak foundation in agriculture, we should build up our strength in this field from now on.

Comrade Xiang Nan called on leading comrades at all levels to pay particular attention to raising economic efficiency and increasing exports to earn more foreign exchange.

He said: In raising economic efficiency, it is necessary to concentrate efforts on improving product quality, lowering material consumption, shortening the period for circulating funds, and increasing profits and revenues. Comrade Xiang Nan said: In striving to earn more foreign exchange this year, it is necessary to turn out more traditional goods, new products, aquatic produce, fruits, and electrical and mechanical engineering commodities. Vigorous efforts should also be made to build a number of enterprises and centers for producing export commodities and to upgrade product quality to meet the needs of the world market.

Comrade Xiang Nan pointed out: We must combine economic work with the building of socialist spiritual civilization. He said: We must build and achieve fruitful results in both material and spiritual civilization this year. As a province open to the outside world, Fujian should attach special importance to building spiritual civilization.

In conclusion, Comrade Xiang Nan stressed: The general demand for the work of this year is to place reform above anything else; continue to persistently carry out the policies of making reforms, opening to the outside world, and enlivening the domestic economy; and pay keen attention to building the two civilizations simultaneously and achieving fruitful results in both material and spiritual aspects. He said: As our economic structural reform is still in the initial stage, problems in the course of reform are unavoidable and normal. Although great achievements have been made in restructuring the province's rural industrial facilities, we should never slacken our efforts at grain production, allocation, and transportation. Moreover, prudent and reliable measures should be taken to steadfastly restructure rural industrial facilities. Comrade Xiang Nan urged leading cadres at all levels not to become timid and overcautious or even assume a passive attitude toward everything because of problems that have cropped up in work. They should realistically summarize experiences, adopt a positive attitude in drawing lessons, enhance confidence in the reform, further emancipate their thinking, boldly explore new ways of doing things, and display the spirit of the foolish old man in order to successfully build the two civilizations in our province.

In his speech, Comrade Hu Ping pointed out: Developing the commodity economy should be the center of the many tasks of rural work. This is a long-term strategic task and the only way to achieve agricultural modernization. All work in rural areas should be focused on this task. He called on leaders at all levels to familiarize themselves with the concept of commodity production and apply it to guiding the development of the rural economy as a whole.

Comrade Hu Ping said: It is necessary to vigorously enliven circulation. Due to backward transportation, inefficient management and service, and problems in policies, circulation channels are clogged. He called on all localities to pool funds to set up a multichannel transportation system and not to rely on state appropriations alone.

Stressing the importance of increasing agricultural investment and improving agricultural production conditions for building up strength for agriculture, Hu Ping said: All trades and professions should vigorously support agriculture. Industrial enterprises using farm and subsidiary products as raw materials should make special efforts to support agriculture.

Hu Ping also stressed the importance of grain production. He said: In northern Fujian, the first-rate labor force is engaged in trading, the second-rate labor force in setting up enterprises, the third-rate labor force in contracting cash crops, and the bottom-rate labor force, including old, weak, and sick people, in growing grain. How can we allow this to happen?

It is impossible to increase grain output and speed up the pace of agricultural modernization if we have an old, weak, and sick labor force growing grain crops. Doing a good job in grain production should be the basis for developing the rural commodity economy throughout the province. Leaders at all levels should keep a cool head and should never slacken vigilance on this matter so that a bumper grain harvest may be reaped this year.

DAZHONG RIBAO COMMENTATOR ON ORGANS' WORKS STYLES

SK030210 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jan 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Conscientiously Improve the Work Styles of Organs"]

[Excerpts] In his speech at the recent rally of cadres of central organs, Comrade Hu Yaobang called on central organs to act as examples for the whole country. This is not only a demand on central organs but also one on leading organs at the provincial, prefectural, and county levels. We must earnestly study and implement his speech.

To improve the organs' way of thinking, the most important thing is to foster the idea of service. Over a long period of time, our organs have been accustomed to acting as mothers-in-law, thinking that organs are to administer others and that grass-roots units should be geared to the needs of organs. Such a self-centered idea on the part of the personnel of organs will easily lead to bureaucracy and "yamen work styles." Organs are in the category of the superstructure. According to the Marxist viewpoint, the superstructure is determined by the economic foundation and should serve the economic foundation. In the final analysis, it is because of the needs in the grass-roots work that organs should exist. Comrades working in organs should not place themselves above those working at grass-roots units, giving suggestions for grass-roots comrades to act accordingly and regarding their assistance to grass-roots units in solving problems as something bestowed. Instead, they should proceed from the needs of grass-roots units and conscientiously serve them. An important criterion for judging the work of organs is to see whether or not organs can reflect the needs of grass-roots units and the desires and requirements of the people, help grass-roots units solve some practical problems in a down-to-earth manner, and promote economic development.

Raising efficiency has always been an important issue in the work of organs, and one that has not been resolved properly for a long time. From the subjective viewpoint, low efficiency reflects low spirit, low enthusiasm, and an incorrect way of thinking on the part of some organ personnel. From the objective viewpoint, it reflects a failure to define the duties incumbent on each person and to mete out rewards and punishments strictly. The problem of the common big pot existing in production units has been solved relatively well. However, the same problem existing in organs has not been solved. There are many issues that several departments take charge of jointly. However, they actually do not care about them. They ask about the issues whenever they feel like asking, and also have reasons to give whenever they do not feel like asking. In this way, every issue can be shifted to either higher or lower levels, and on one is held responsible in the event that problems arise.

The purpose of the Communist Party is to serve the people wholeheartedly. All personnel of organs are servants of the people. They have no reason to abuse their authority for selfish gains. Comrades in charge of personnel, finance, and material supply, in particular, should all the more value their power. There were "lucrative posts" in the bureaucratic organs of the old society. This meant posts where large sums of money could be made. At present, in some of our organs a few people also take advantage of the power given them by the party and the people to grow "fat." They are precisely the people who were involved in the economic crimes exposed recently in various localities. Comrades of some grass-roots units said that what they are most afraid of are those with "real power" at higher levels with unhealthy work styles and greedy eyes at the sight of profits. Anyone who burns joss sticks for them will benefit, and any one who shows no respect for them will be blocked through all possible means. In improving the organs' way of thinking, we should also focus on solving the problem of power abuse for selfish gains. Persons blinded by greed and with corrupt ideas and no sense of law and discipline who do not use their authority to promote the two civilizations must not be given any power in personnel, finance, and material supply. With regard to the few with serious problems, we should punish them resolutely, and never tolerate them or be soft-hearted toward them.

SHANDONG FORUM ON BUILDING RURAL ORGANIZATIONS

SK030346 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] The provincial forum on building the rural grass-roots party organizations concluded in Jinan on 31 January. The forum discussed and revised the work principles for the rural party branches, discussed and studied ways to strengthen and improve the leadership work of the township and town CPC committees and the ideological construction and work style of the rural grass-roots cadres, to readjust the institutions of the rural party organizations, and to strengthen management over party members, and the building of the party organizations of the poverty-stricken villages.

The forum pointed out that strengthening the building of the rural grass-roots party organizations has become a task of top priority in the building of the two civilizations in the rural areas as well as a major task for the CPC committees at all levels. The forum decided that, at present, we should prominently grasp the following few tasks well in the course of building the rural grass-roots party organizations:

1. We should turn the rural grass-roots party organizations into strong bastions capable of contributing to the building of the two civilizations. The CPC committees at all levels should continue to grasp the readjustment of leading bodies in line with the four requirements of cadres, persist in combining ability with political integrity when selecting cadres, and pay particular attention to promoting to leading posts those outstanding party members who have a strong party spirit and good work style, who are young and educated, and who have a pioneering and creative spirit.

2. We should fully display the vanguard and exemplary role of Communist Party members in leading the masses to achieve common prosperity. In addition to taking the lead in becoming rich through hard work, the rural Communist Party members should consider the work of leading the masses to achieve common prosperity as their bounden duty.

3. We should grasp the work of improving the work style of grass-roots cadres as a major task of rectifying the rural party style. At present, we should pay great attention to helping the grass-roots cadres foster the viewpoints of seeking truth from facts, proceeding from the reality while doing everything, trusting and relying on the masses, observing policies and the legal systems, and working selflessly and honestly for the public. All cadres who have seriously violated the party discipline and state laws should be severely punished after verifying the facts.

4. We should vigorously strengthen the rural ideological and political work.

The forum stressed that strengthening the building of the rural grass-roots party organizations is a major matter for the whole party. The CPC Committees at all levels should include this work on their agenda. The propaganda, organizational, and discipline inspection departments of the CPC committees should share the work and cooperate with one another under the unified leadership of the CPC committees. They should stick to their own posts, continue to study the new situation and solve new problems, and strive to upgrade the building of the rural grass-roots party organizations.

SK031257 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 26 Jan 86 p 1

[Text] The annual municipal rural work conference was held in Miyun County from 21 to 26 January.

The main tasks of this conference were to study this year's Central Document No 1 and the important speeches of the central leading comrades at the rural conference held by the CPC Central Committee, to sum up last year's achievements and find out where we have lagged behind, and to work out plans for this year's rural work.

This year, the general demands of the Beijing municipal rural work are to continuously implement the principle of "serving the capital, making the people prosperous, and building the socialist and modernized new rural areas;" to deeply carry out reforms; to integrate the urban work with the rural work; to invigorate the circulation channels; to step up cooperation; to promote a coordinated development in all trades; and to make the rural economy in the suburban areas move toward specialization, commercialization, and modernization. This work has been specifically divided into seven aspects.

1) We should further strengthen agriculture in the suburban areas; 2) continue to develop township enterprises; 3) firmly grasp scientific, technological, and educational work; 4) further invigorate the circulation channels; 5) vigorously improve the rural cooperative system; 6) help the poor mountainous areas gradually improve their outlook; and 7) strengthen the building of the socialist spiritual civilization and achieve fundamental improvements in the party style and social conduct.

Attending this conference were the responsible comrades of the municipal CPC Committee and the relevant departments, commissions, offices and bureaus of the municipal government, secretaries of the suburban county CPC committees, district and county heads, directors of the rural work departments, chairmen of the agricultural and financial offices, and secretaries of the various township CPC committees, totaling some 600 persons. HEBEI CITY MAKES REFORMS, CORRECTS MALPRACTICES

[Text] By analyzing positive and negative typical cases and summing up the experiences and lessons gained in conducting reforms and enforcing the policy of opening to the outside, Qinhuangdao City has further improved its systems and enhanced the political consciousness of the broad masses of party members and cadres, resulting in marked progress in conducting reforms and implementing the open policy.

Although Qinhuangdao City has scored marked achievements in conducting reforms and enforcing the policy of opening to the outside it has also experienced some cases of violating the law and criminal cases.

TEXT Since July 1985 the leading comrades of the city CPC Committee and the city people's government on three occasions selected some typical cases for organizing the leading cadres of the city party and government organs and the vast number of people to analyze the causes and effects of the cases. On each occasion, the leading cadres of the city CPC Committee and the city people's government first conducted a collective analysis of the cases, and second, convened a meeting with the participation of cadres of city-level organs at or above the deputy director and manager level, at which the responsible comrades of the city CPC Committee and the city people's government took the lead in analyzing the problems cropping up in straightening out party style in line with their personal ideological reality. Third, the city had its subordinate units organize their masses to hold profound discussions by using the cases for reference in order to upgrade their understanding and to improve political work organs.

Through analyzing typical cases, they have sorted out the following causes of these cases:

1. The leading cadres of some administrative and economic departments have ignored the program of building spiritual civilization so as to enable some units to leave party work untouched and to disband or merge their political work departments.

2. The leading personnel of some units have lowered their guard ideologically, slackened their vigilance, not performed their work in line with the party's principles, and have not paid attention to political conditions in personnel employment so a number of unlawful elements have committed criminal activities and practices violating the law by taking advantage of conducting reforms and enlivening the economy.

3. Various companies emerging in the program of conducting reforms have not been well supervised by specialized organs, so the management of issuing business licenses, notarizing documents, and approving shipping lists and letters of credit has become chaotic. This has made things convenient for the criminal activities of unlawful elements.

4. The accounting personnel have been of poor quality so they did not uphold principles in work.

5. The organs in charge of storage and leasing have not been healthy, and the notarial organs have not played their role satisfactorily, which have provided many opportunities for unlawful elements.

On the basis of analyzing these typical cases, they have studied and mapped out the following measures for improvement:

1. The city Personnel Bureau should take the lead in conducting investigations on the situation of political cadres among city-level organs and their subordinate units and in adopting feasible measures to deal with the problems in which some units have many vacancies for political cadres; some cadres are no longer suitable for political work; most political work cadres have not implemented the responsibility system; and some units have no distinct duties in political work.

2. The city Industry and Commercial Bureau has been responsible for carrying out examinations and checks among the various companies throughout the city. As a result, more than 100 companies violating the business law have had their licenses revoked, more than 100 notary stamps have been withdrawn, and regulations and rules in various managerial affairs have been formulated.

3. A system governing the printing, registration, sale, utilization and management of shipping lists and letters of credit has been formulated.

4. In line with the provisions concerned, the city has established accounting managerial organs at all levels and implemented the principle that only those who have obtained a "certificate" of accounting are qualified for accounting posts.

5. The city has worked out a plan for establishing storage sections in charge of unified storage management, unified service, unified charges, unified regulations and rules, and unified development planning in order to plug loopholes.

6. The city's financial front has worked out eight measures for enhancing cash management.

7. The city has enhanced education on the legal system and the work of building notarial organs in order to resolutely do things according to law.

The work of analyzing typical cases has enabled the broad masses of party members and cadres to discern the unhealthy consequences of neglecting the program of building spiritual civiliation and the relationship between material and spiritual civilization; has straightened out the orientation of the transformation drive; has promoted the smooth progress in conducting reforms and enforcing the policy opening to the outside; and has pushed the entire party forward in straightening out party style.

Recently the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission published a circular for localities throughout the province to recommend the experiences gained by the Qinhuangdao City CPC Committee and the city people's government in this regard.

NEI MONGGOL SECRETARY ON 1986 WORK ARRANGEMENTS

SK310840 Hohhot Nei Monggol Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 30 Jan 86

[Text] After a 7-day session, the regional meeting of the banner and county CPC Committee secretaries successfully concluded on 30 January.

At the morning session on 29 January, Zhou Hui, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, made an important speech on issues concerning the current situation, the grain tasks for 1986, straightening out party style, and building the leading bodies.

Comrade Zhou Hui said: This meeting was well convened. Through this meeting, in light of the region's actual conditions, the people will furher upgrade their understanding of the line, principles, and policies of the central authorities and better understand the region's tasks. At present we must focus on grasping typical cases in a step-by-step manner. This is a job demanding solid, painstaking work and real skill. We should concentrate this year's reform on consolidating, digesting, supplementing, and improving the achievements scored in and the measures taken in the earlier reform work. The region and the responsible departments in charge of the reform work should pay special attention to work in this regard, and continue to ideologically and practically implement the work in a firm, good, and quicker manner.

Comrade Zhou Hui said: The current situation is very good, and better than expected. We must fully affirm the current excellent situation and fully estimate the significance of this success. If we do not make a full estimate of the current situation, we will make a fundamental mistake. However, we must notice the difficulties and problems existing in the current excellent situation. It is extremely harmful to be unrealistically optimistic by ignoring the existing problems and difficulties.

We must give problems more careful consideration and make a full estimate of the difficulties. By so doing, everything will proceed well and there will be no harm.

Comrade Zhou Hui pointed out: In the period when reform is carried out on a large scale, the people will certainly have more complaints because the systems are not perfect and we lack experience. We must properly solve this situation in a step-by-step manner, though it is normal.

Regarding the issue of how to solve the existing difficulties and problems, Comrade Zhou Hui said: With the assistance of the higher levels and in cooperation with relevant departments, we must rely mainly on ourselves and the masses to solve our difficulties and problems. Under the guidance of the line, principles, and policies of the central authorities, we must rely on party organizations at all levels and the cadres and the people of all nationalities in the region to solve the problems. Such a way of solving difficulties and problems should be adopted from the region to leagues and cities, banners and counties, departments, units, towns and townships, and sumu. We must constantly hold talks with grass-roots cadres and the masses and rely on their efforts to solve problems.

With regard to grain work for 1986, Comrade Zhou Hui pointed out: The success in grain work for 1986 is of important significance for judging the whole situation in the future. The party organizations and the governments at all levels should pay full attention to this work. The general fighting goal is to ensure an increase in this year's grain output based on a situation in which we will suffer even more serious natural disasters than those of last year. First, we must persistently carry out reform and adhere to the readjustment of the production setup. But, the production setup will not be readjusted on a large scale this year. The grain-growing areas of the leagues and cities are allowed to maintain the levels of last year.

Efforts must be made to further implement and perfect the system of fixed quotas for grain purchasing on a contract basis. This system is not confined to the main varieties of grains. Foodgrains other than wheat and rice produced by remote and backward areas should be purchased on the basis of signing contracts according to the marketing and production situation. Second, we must try by every possible means to increase the per-unit yield of grain. Third, it is of more important that we should handle better the relations between the state and the peasants, and focus on balancing better economic relations. Generally, we must give full consideration to the interest of the state, the collectives, and the individuals under the circumstances of protecting the enthusiasm of the peasants.

The purchases of livestock products should be based on the principle of balancing the relations between the interests of the state, the collectives, and the individuals under the circumstances of protecting the enthusiasm of the herdsmen. At present we must focus work in the circulation field in the rural and pastoral areas on reform of the system of supply and marketing cooperation in order to really bring their roles into play.

With regard to the tasks in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, Comrade Zhou Hui said that we must center on grasping the following three major tasks. First, on the premise of implementing the principle of developing a diversified economy by taking forestry and animal husbandry as the key links, we should firmly grasp grain production.

We must especially rely on the forces of the masses to attend to construction of grain production zones, including the Hetao area, Xiliao He basin, (Linnan), and (Tulechuan). Second, we must attend to transportation construction. Third, we must attach importance to education on science and technology. We should attend to the cultivation of talented persons on the basis of bringing into full play the functions of the existing talented persons. The region will gain reserve strength for development after 1990 and will be able to really turn its advantages of having natural resources into economic advantages if we achieve these three major tasks.

With regard to the issue of straightening out party style, Comrade Zhou Hui said: Straightening out party style should be carried out resolutely according to the guidelines of the directives of the central authorities, since it is a task of great importance. We must attach prime importance to strictly handling major and appalling cases. Leading organs at all levels, especially the leading organs of the region, should take the lead in handling these cases. Leading cadres should set an example for others, and the leading cadres who indulged in unhealthy practices should actively make investigations and corrections. We should also resolutely support the discipline inspection departments at all levels to firmly correct unhealthy practices. We must conduct ideological education among the broad masses of cadres and the people. Bad typical cases should be published in the papers through selection. In order to promote the four modernizations, we must attend to construction and legality for a long time to come.

Comrade Zhou Hui also talked about the issue concerning the construction of the leading bodies in his speech. He said: Over the past few years, we have extensively readjusted the leading bodies at all levels in accordance with the four requirements for cadres set forth by the central authorities. On the premise of readjusting, strengthening and stabilizing the leading bodies, achievements have been realized in cooperation between new and old cadres and replacement of the old by the new, the ranks of the cadres have become ladder-shaped in structure, and the lifetime tenure system for leading cadres has been abolished.

Comrade Zhou Hui also stressed that we should further strengthen unity. Generally speaking, the region's situation in unity has gradually gotten better and better over the past few years. The unity among the party members, between the cadres and the masses, and among the people of various nationalities has been successfully enhanced. The unity among the region, leagues and cities, banners and counties, departments, commissions, offices, and bureaus has also been strengthened. We must make further efforts to consolidate and develop unity between all fronts, especially between the people of various nationalities.

Finally, Comrade Zhou Hui emphatically pointed out: Leading cadres at all levels should enhance the study of basic Marxist theory. This is a task of important significance at present. We must study the basic principles of Marxism, including the Marxist stand, viewpoint and methods. At present we must pay special attention to studying the party's documents stipulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, including the line, principles and policies of the central authorities, and the important speeches of the principal responsible comrades of the central authorities. Cadres at all levels, particularly leading cadres at or above the banner and county level, should take the lead in studying these documents. In light of the principle of combining theory with practice, we must adopt Marxism to guide our reform and development. We must strengthen investigations and studies and make efforts to explore new ways in the course of practice. We should never work out any principles without investigation and studies. We must persistently transform our subjective world while transforming our objective world and speak and act in accordance with Marxist ideals and morality so as to maintain the purity of Communist Party members.

NI ZHIFU ADDRESSES TIANJIN RURAL WORK CONFERENCE

SK020600 Tianjin City Service in Mandarin 0030 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Excerpt] The municipal rural work conference continued its sessions on 1 February. At the conference, Ni Zhifu, secretary of the municipal CPC Committee, and Li Ruihuan, deputy secretary of the municipal CPC Committee and mayor of the municipality, delivered important speches on fostering the stragetic ideology of achieving unified development between urban and rural areas, doing a good job in integrating the transformation drive of urban areas with that of rural areas, and of upgrading to a new level the work of rendering service to urban areas and making rural areas wealthy.

In his speech, Comrade Ni Zhifu pointed out: In mapping out plans for municipal transformation and construction, efforts should be made to foster the stragetic ideology of achieving unified development between urban and rural areas. Such a strategy means, chiefly, that we should regard urban and rural areas as an entirety, or a whole. In discussing questions and making arrangements for work, efforts should be made to uphold the policy of overall consideration and all-round planning in order to achieve harmonious development and mutual prosperty between urban and rural areas and to gradually curtail the differences between urban and rural areas and between workers and peasants.

Following the ideas mentioned above, he expounded on the necessity and importance of fostering the stragetic ideology of achieving unified development between urban and rural areas by presenting four reasons and also put forward seven tasks for fulfilling the strategy of achieving unified development between urban and rural areas.

In his speech, Comrade Ni Zhifu emphatically noted the issue of straightening out party style. He stated: The municipal CPC Committee will resolutely support and implement the important policy decision and correct arrangements made by the CPC Central Committee. Through careful study, the municipal CPC Committee has formulated the following principles concerning the guiding ideology in straightening out party style:

1. Efforts should be made to earnestly study the spirit of the directives issued by the CPC Central Committee in order to deeply understand the importance of straightening out party style.

2. In conducting the work of straightening out party style, it is imperative to enhance leadership over the work, to resolutely grasp the work, and to grasp the work on a long-term basis and in a planned manner.

3. In straightening out party style, efforts should be made to proceed from investigating and dealing with concrete cases, particularly concentrating on investigating and dealing with major and serious cases.

4. Efforts should be made to correctly understand the situation by not only paying attention to the seriousness of malpractices, but also refraining from negating the main trend of development.

5. Efforts should be made to straighten out party style through studying the speeches given by the central leading comrades in order to promote or ensure the fulfillment of tasks in various fields this year.

At the conference, Comrade Li Ruihuan also delivered a speech, entitled "A Good Job Should Be Done in Integrating the Transformation Drive of Urban Areas With That of Rural Areas, and Upgrading to a New Level the Work of Rendering Service to Urban Areas and Making Rural Areas Wealthy."

HK270737 Lanzhou GANSU RIBAO in Chinese 9 Jan 86 pp 1, 3

[Text] Lanzhou (GANSU RIBAO) -- On 8 January, the principal leaders of the Gansu Provincial CPC Committee and government and the responsible persons of the relevant departments at provincial level went to Lanzhou City to work on-the-spot to help overcome the city's difficulties and solve problems in the process of reform and economic development. They have clarified the guiding thoughts and some major measures to speed up the reform.

Since late August, the province and city have established a joint investigation team to make a prolonged, large-scale, joint investigation with a wide range and rich contents. The provincial leaders who attended the on-the-spot office meeting listened to a briefing on Lanzhou City's progress during the past year in carrying out its comprehensive urban reform, and its plan for continuing and deepening the reform They contended that, as a city where experiments are carried out for the comprehensive economic structural reform of our province, Lanzhou City has made quick and sound progress; scored clear achievements; created a fine situation in its reform in the past year or more; and that people can be basically sure of victory in the initial battle. The provincial CPC Committee and government are relatively satisfied with Lanzhou City's plan for continuing and deepening the reform and call on it to steadfastly try every means possible to ensure the implementation of the plan.

The on-the-spot office meeting was presided over by Jia Zhijie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee. The plan's orientation of reform was relatively clear and specific and correctly selected the task of invigorating large and medium-sized enterprises as a point to make a breakthrough in the reform. The plan adhered to the correct principle of improving economic results and making a greater contribution.

Having fully confirmed the distinct achievements that Lanzhou City has scored in the past year or more, Li Ziqi pointed out that compared with the requirements of the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC Committee, and compared with the relatively quick progress in other city experiments, and in the light of Lanzhou City's important position as a central city for the whole province, the city's reform has still fallen short to some extent of what it is required to do.

He said that currently the economic structural reform, with urban reform as its focus, is at a critical juncture. We should sum up our experience and persist in continuing the reform. We should analyze the problems that have cropped up in our reform. Judging by the problems that have emerged in Lanzhou City's reform, most of them were caused by our lack of experience, both at upper and lower levels, concerning the question of how we were to develop the planned commodity economy on the basis of public ownership. They were also due to the fact that it was impossible for people's thoughts, habits, and work methods to be adapted in a short time to the transition from the old closed-type system to a new open-type system. Regarding these problems that were unavoidable in the process of the reforms, we can only solve them by means of the reform. We should by no means return to the old path because of these problems. There will be no way out if we do that. Our reform is a magnificent and complicated systems engineering project, and an undertaking that no one has ever tried before. Therefore, it is impractical to demand that no twist, turn, difficulty or problem will ever emerge in the process of reform. It is also impractical to demand that we will be able to make the reform benefit all the people to the same extent, and make them all favor the reform without reserve, in a short time. We must keep our minds sober, foster our confidence in a sure victory, continue to remove various interference, conscientiously solve the problems that have cropped up, and steadfastly carry on the reform. Even if we encounter various difficulties, we should think boldly, be good at exploring our way, forge ahead with a pioneering spirit, and carry out the great undertaking of reform to the bitter end.

In regard to the work of proceeding from reality in creating conditions for invigorating our large and medium-sized enterprises, Li Ziqi said that in his opinion the basic indicators for an enterprise to be regarded as being enlivened are as follows: The enterprise has to no longer be subordinate to government administrative departments; it has actually become a relatively independent socialist commodity producer and operator that is managed independently and that shoulders sole responsibility for its profits and loss; it is capable of accumulating funds for itself, transforming itself, and developing itself; under the guidance of state plans, it is able to not only obey the policies and decrees but also gives play to its advantages, develops its production and improves its economic results in accordance with its own management strategy and market demands; and that it pays taxes according to regulations, and thus makes a contribution to the state. Judging by the situation of reform in the past period, in order to actually make a breakthrough in enlivening our large and medium-sized enterprises and to satisfy the above-mentioned requirements, all the departments and sectors at all levels must make joint efforts both inside and outside our enterprises.

From the point of view of the affairs inside our enterprises: 1) We should continue to streamline our administration and decentralize our power. We should arrange a major investigation on the decentralization of power to ensure that the powers that should be transferred to our enterprises have not been taken back by the responsible departments, nor retained by intermediate links or coordinating departments. By so doing we will ensure that the power has really been transferred down to our enterprises. 2) We should weaken the intermediate tiers, reduce the social burdens on our enterprises, and exempt and reduce readjustment taxes. First we should consolidate our companies. In consolidating our companies, we should severely punish, and never indulge, those cadres who have exploited their power of office to pursue their private ends. While consolidating our companies, we should earnestly do a good job of transforming, reforming, and renting small state-owned enterprises. Second, we should reduce the social burdens on our enterprises. We must adopt resolute measures to put an end to the practice of unreasonably apportioning government expenses to our enterprises. Third, we should gradually reduce and exempt readjustment taxes.

In regard to advanced enterprises that have good economic results, make great contributions, and are heavily taxed under the readjustment tax, thus retaining a small portion of their profits, we should gradually reduce and exempt their readjustment tax in order to prevent the practice of "punishing the quick workers," and in order to create an equal environment for competition between our enterprises. 3) We should adopt preferential policies toward enterprises that we focus on to transform. We should choose a number of enterprises that produce quality products, that achieve satisfactory economic results, that are assigned with heavy tasks of transformation, and that retain a small percentage of their profits, and, under the precondition of refraining from reducing the income of the state, we should heighten the percentage of their retained profits through paying back what they paid to the state and through other methods. 4) We should perfect our market mechanism and provice services for our enterprises. We should continue to expand our consumer goods market, open up our means of production market, establish and develop our financial market, and vigorously develop various kinds of technological and information markets. In addition, our labor and personnel departments at all levels, and all units that employ people, should conscientiously encourage the reasonable movement of labor and enliven the exchanges of talented people. In short, we should strengthen and perfect our work in managing various kinds of markets, give full play to the function of our competition mechanism in eliminating poorly managed enterprises, and to the regulatory functions of various economic levers, and thus radically raise the economic results of our enterprises and our society as a whole.

We should look inside our enterprises, tap their potential, give play to their advantages, and enable them to have the strength to achieve sustained progress. This is the key to invigorating our enterprises.

In order to ensure the smooth progress of the reform, we must persist in simultaneously grasping the construction of the two civilizations. We should combine economic management with political management, and improve, through the reform, the political quality of our ranks of workers and staff as well as our economic results and social benefit. At present, we should attach particular importance to strengthening and improving our ideological and political work, deepen the education to turn our people into working people with lofty ideals, moral integrity, education and a sense of discipline, heighten our staff's and workers' awareness in adhering to the four basic principles, and enhance their ability to resist errosive capitalist and feudalist ideology.

Li Ziqi said that in the course of Lanzhou City's future reform, the provincial and city party and government organs, and the various vocational work departments, should continue to maintain and develop the spirit of vigorous cooperation with one another, adopt diverse measures and strive to chart a new path for the reform in a hinterland city. We should continue to transfer downward the power of examining and approving medium-sized and small capital construction and technological transformation projects, and reform our system of material and equipment management. We should open the city gates wide and enliven our circulation. We should open our city gates wider and make our market more enlivened and thus enable our central city to really play the role as a commodity distribution and material exchange center.

We should establish connections and provide services for the development of lateral contacts. We should gradually and satisfactorily organize the lateral economic links between the enterprises in the urban area; between the urban area and the three counties in Lanzhou City; between Lanzhou City and the prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and cities in central Gansu; between Lanzhou City and all the prefectures and cities in the province; and between Lanzhou City and other provinces. We should also develop economic and technological exchanges and cooperation with foreign countries. We should strengthen the construction of basic facilities and vigorously develop our tertiary industry.

Li Ziqi concluded by saying that the key now is to grasp the actual implementation, while the key to the actual implementation is to strengthen our leadership and transform our work style. In the course of implementing its reform plan, Lanzhou City must start to consider the issue concerning the reform of its leadership structure. As preconditions for the reform, we must consider the unity of management, the flexibility of command, and the unity between power and responsibility.

Leading groups at all levels should intensify their investigation and study, and go to the actual work sites to solve problems. They should popularize the successive experiences on the establishment of networks of contact points. Each leading comrade should have contact with an enterprise, county or district, and often go to his contact point for a few days, to listen to the voices of the cadres and masses at basic level and sum up experiences together with them. By so doing, our leading comrades will have the initiative in their hands in doing their work. They should persist in doing work on-the-spot to solve the problems right there. In regard to some major problems that have a bearing on the whole situation, the principle leading persons must personally grasp the work, unblock the channels of communication, coordinate the relations of various sectors, and make special efforts to study and solve them. The leading groups at all levels should focus on serving the basic level in transforming their work style.

He hoped that Lanzhou City would make more contributions and satisfactorily take the lead in developing the economy, reinvigorating Gansu and enabling the people to become rich.

HK310517 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] This afternoon, the provincial CPC Committee held a meeting at the hall of the provincial government, of provincial organ cadres, at which the provincial CPC Committee mobilized the participants to correct and improve party work style. It urged provincial organs to take the lead in correcting party work style, and to set examples for the province.

Li Ziqi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech on how provincial organs could take the lead in correcting party work style and setting examples for the province. Chen Guangyi, governor and deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided at the meeting and made a speech. Liu Bing, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, announced the 10 regulations of the provincial CPC Committee and government on improving the organ work style. Jia Zhijie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, made a speech on a recent resolution of the provincial CPC Committee on sending some cadres to counties and townships for extricating the poor areas on contract basis from the poverty-stricken state.

Comrade Li Ziqi said: Over the years, the province's economic and political situation has undergone great changes. At present, the province has a good situation of struggling in a united manner and making concerted efforts for the four modernizations. However, the provincial organs also have their dark side. Some departments and units still practice various unhealthy practices, which are reflected by some party member and leading cadres. In addition, some of these are very serious. Therefore, in order to fundamentally change party work style and the general mood of society for the better, we must correct party work style, strengthen the building of the organs and improve the organs work. It is also important in expediting the building of the two civilizations.

Comrade Li Ziqi urged provincial organs to raise their consciousness of correcting party work style, so as to set examples for the province. At the same time, he urged them to deal resolutely with major cases.

Comrade Li Ziqi said: Everyone is equal before party discipline. Cadres at all levels must take the lead in correcting party work style and must assume responsibility for being the leaders. Party organizations at all levels must further perfect organizational activities, welcome the criticism and supervision of the masses, overcome bureaucratism and improve efficiency.

The meeting was attended by more than 1,300 people, including leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the provincial government and the provincial CPPCC, as well as provincial organ cadres.

SHAANXI'S BAI JINIAN AT ADVISORY COMMISSION FORUM

HK270947 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 23 Jan 86

[Excerpts] Yesterday afternoon [23 January], the fifth plenary meeting of the provincial Advisory Commisstion invited veteran comrades who had withdrawn from the advisory commission to a forum. Young and veteran committee members happily gathered under the same roof and cordially held a forum. Leaders of the provincial CPC Committee, including Bai Jinian, Li Qingwei, and Mou Lingsheng, attended the forum. Chang Lifu, member of the Central Advisory Commission, attended the forum by invitation. Leaders of the provincial Advisory Commission, including Zhang Ze, Zhang Guanghai, Bai Wenhua; and Chen Yuanfang, who had retired from his leadership post on the advisory commission, also attended.

Comrade Zhang Ze spoke at the forum. He said that the provincial Advisory Commission must act well as political assistant and staff officer to the provincial CPC Committee and work in compliance with the relevant regulations of the party. 1) It is necessary to lay stress on the method of work. 2) It is essential to attach importance to the study of theory. 3) It is imperative to maintain our revolutionary integrity in our later years; to set strict demands on ourselves; to act as models in abiding by party discipline and state law; to continuously maintain revolutionary traditions and character; and to resolutely resist the corrosive influence of decadent capitalist ideology. Moreover, we must be bold in struggling against violations of law and discipline and in exposing the problems in this aspect and teach our own children and relatives to abide by discipline and law.

Comrade Bai Jinian also spoke at the forum. He said that the comrades who have withdrawn from and newly entered the advisory commission, are all veteran members of our party and veteran cadres. They have worked hard for 40 to 50 years. These comrades have devoted the energies of a lifetime to the cause of the party and people. They scored outstanding achievements in the democratic revolution, socialist revolution, and construction. They have rendered meritorious service to our country and nation and our party and people will never forget them. Proceeding from the overall situation of the four modernizations, these veteran comrades have withdrawn from their leadership posts on their own initiative, stepped down to the second or third line, and offered their positions to young comrades. With their practical actions, they have set an example in pushing forward reform of the system of cadres and in implementing our party's policy on replacement of veteran by young members of the party's leadership groups at all levels and on cooperation between them. Over the past year, the provincial Advisory Commission has done a great deal of work. This centered on reform, party rectification, and the building of the socialist spiritual and material civilizations and scored outstanding achievements. I thank the veteran comrades for the assistance and support they have given to the provincial CPC Committee's work.

Comrade Bai Jinian hoped that the veteran comrades would pay attention to rest and health and have a long live, and that they would do what they are capable of to support localities and people in their work.

WEN WEI PO ARTICLE EXAMINES PRC RECTIFICATION

HK031548 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 1 Feb 86 p 3

["Special Feature" by WEN WEI PO reporting team in Beijing: "Rectification Is Gradually Advancing in Depth"]

[Text] In Beijing, a strong political current is whirling and pounding party and government organs and various social groups. This political currently had been brewing long before it turned into a violent shock wave at a recent meeting of party, government, and Army organs directly under the central authorities in which 8,000 people participated. The meeting called for resolutely rectifying unhealthy tendencies and said that this rectification should start with the central authorities and be expanded throughout the country. This has added to the vitality of the rectification of unhealthy tendencies and brought about a new situation in eliminating vicious trends in the economic sphere.

Social Contradictions in the New Situation

To study the political background for this 8,000-strong meeting, it is necessary review the social problem that have emerged since the implementation of the policy of opening up to the world and reforms.

Facts have proven that opening up to the world has enabled China to get rid of national seclusion, that introducing foreign technology, capital, and managerial knowledge has enlightened the Chinese people and promoted China's development, and that reforms are sweeping away various shortcomings, breaking many old ideas, and bringing about a profound change in China's economic structure. A new socialist mode with Chinese characteristics is taking shape.

Unprecedentedly rapid development has been noticed in China's society and economy, and the people's livelihood, which was at a standstill for 20 to 30 years, has now greatly improved. These vivid facts have passed a fair judgment on the policy of opening up to the world and on reforms.

However, we should admit that opening up to the world and reforms are being studied and that no formula can be made at present. Moreover, old social habits and forces are still in the way, obstructing the work of opening up to the world and reforms, or even causing them to change their direction. The idea "you have your policies and I have my counterpolicies" is creating obstacles to the progress of the work of opening up to the world and reforms.

Loss of control over prices has counteracted the benefit brought about by wage readjustment. The imperfection of the wage system reform has aggravated the contradictions between the people and caused a new situation of disequilibrium.

Nothing is more serious than unhealthy tendencies, which are corrupting party and government organs and their functionaries, deepening political inequality, and worsening the irrationality in economic distribution. The vicious practice of abusing power for personal gain by some priviledged people has become the target of attack.

There is an Unsteady Undercurrent

By opening up to the world and reforms, China has found the way to revitalize the Chinese nation and improve the people's lievlihood.

Normally speaking, an atmosphere of harmony and tranquillity could have been expected in Chinese society. But the facts have proven the reverse. An unsteady undercurrent remains hidden in the course of stability and prosperity.

The student riots during the commemorations of the September 18th and December 9th Movements last year were ignited by Nakasone's visit to the Yasukuni Shrine, but the deeper social cause was the shortcomings which have emerged in the course of opening up to the world and reforms: prices have risen, distribution is irrational, and the children of some high-ranking officials have engaged in vicious practices. Although these are not the products of opening up to the world and reforms, not everyone in society can soberly understand this point. Therefore, some people have taken this opportunity to direct the spearhead at opening up to the world and reforms.

Dissatisfaction has spread to some social strata. Take drivers as an example. Taxi drivers can earn 200 to 300 yuan a month, but public bus drivers get only half that amount. So public bus drivers undertook a slow-down, coming to work late and refusing to stop their buses at bus stops.

Although the dissatisfaction did not result in violence, it has revealed current social problems, which have aroused people's attention and consideration.

Rectification, Opening Up to the World, and Reforms

How should opening up to the world and reforms be carried forward? This is a major problem being studied by the central authorities.

For a time, there was rapid progress in opening up to the world and reforms. Following the building of the four special economic zones, the 14 coastal cities, Hainan Island, and the Chang Jiang and Zhu Jiang Deltas were opened; and the reforms of the enterprise management system, the price system, the planning system, the wage system, and the taxation system were all accelerated. But before long, all these were slowed down and more cautious action was taken.

Last year, the National Conference of Party Delegates was held, at which Zhao Ziyang put forward proposals on the Seventh 5-Year Plan and arrangements were made for personnel at the central level. What merits attention is that the conference seriously pointed out the necessity for strengthening political and ideological work and rectifying unhealthy tendencies. Deng Xiaoping and Chen Yun made important speeches on this problem. The process from studying economic reforms and personnel readjustment to pointing out the necessity for rectifying unhealthy tendencies indicated new progress made by the conference. It also suggested the impact the situation in China had produced on the conference. Before and in the course of the conference, the students' feelings were unstable and they were planning to wage a September 18th Movement.

At the beginning of 1986, the central authorities announced that no new measures would be taken in reforms this year and that they would consolidate, assimilate, and perfect what has been achieved in reforms. Subsequently, an 8,000-strong meeting of party, government, and Army organs under the central authorities was held, at which mobilization was made by rectifying work style, strengthening discipline, and improving efficiency.

All this reveals the following explicit points: Opening up to the world and reforms will be carried out in a more cautious and unhurried manner, and more importance will be attached to rectifying work style to provide the necessary conditions for the work of opening up to the world and reforms.

Severely Punishing a Number of People

The vast number of cadres of organs directly under the central authorities are studying the speeches delivered at the 8,000-strong meeting, along with correcting their work style, and in particular with rectifying economic unhealthy tendencies.

Some major and important economic cases are being exposed. The gold case and the Ma Xueliang case, which have been made known to the public, are just the prelude to the struggle. Many more can be expected. It is rumored that the daughter of a general is under arrest, that the secretary of a minister is being examined, and that the children of some leaders at a higher level will be questioned.

It is said that to carry forward this struggle, Deng Xiaoping has issued instructions to punish severely those who have committed crimes, whether they are high-ranking cadres or their children, and a number of people rather than just a few individuals will be seriously dealt with.

Rich banquets, which were usually served in party and government organs and enterprises, have now been replaced by cups of tea and plates of candies. From this small action, people can easily see that the current rectification of party style is quite different from that in the past. But will all this produce effective results? The crux lies in the determination of the central authorities: Can they get rid of all types of webs of relationship without sparing personal feelings? People are focusing their attention on this.

WEN WEI PO ON CURRENT SITUATION OF INTELLECTUALS

HK030943 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 28 Jan 86 p 7

["Special Feature" by special correspondent Li Min-Hua: "The Current Situation of China's Intellectuals" -- first paragraph printed in boldface]

[Text] AT PRESENT, INTELLECTUALS HAVE COMPLETELY EXTRICATED THEMSELVES FROM THE NIGHTMARE OF THE GREAT CULTURAL REVOLUTION, AND HAVE BECOME A SOCIAL FORCE ON WHICH THE STATE RELIES. THEIR LIVING AND WORKING CONDITIONS HAVE BEEN GREATLY IMPROVED. HOWEVER, THEIR SALARIES ARE STILL A BIT TOO LOW. THE INCOME OF A MIDDLE-RANKING OR SENIOR INTELLECTUAL IS STILL LOWER THAN THAT OF A WORKER OR TYPIST AT THE SHOUDU IRON AND STEEL COMPLEX.

While attending a Spring Festival forum for the intellectual circles held by the Central United Front Work Department on 3 successive days, intellectuals, in their speeches, expressed their sentimental attachment to the motherland and the people, their deep interest in their special fields of study, and their easygoing attitude toward their present meager lives. What they said called forth in the audience feelings of profound respect. Certain problems they exposed in their candid speeches concerning the implementation of the policy toward intellectuals involved political matters, professional work, and their living conditions. All this saddened the audience. As a reporter, it is my duty to accurately reveal these problems so that the departments concerned will pay attention to them and solve them as soon as possible.

Chinese Intellectuals have completely extricated themselves from the nightmare of the Great Cultural Revolution, and are regarded as part of the working class, and as a social force on which the state relies. Such a complete change in political standing has ushered in a new era for intellectuals. With the progress of the four modernizations program of the state, all trades and services have urgently needed technical reform, and the broad masses of workers and peasants are eager to study cultural knowledge.

The importance of knowledge has been emphasized and accentuated in an unprecedented way. Knowledge has become something ardently sought by society and the individual.

Intellectuals' working and living conditions have been considerably improved. A famous sociologist, Fei Xiaotong, spent more than 100 days last year traveling from the north to the south to conduct an extensive social investigation. Xiu Ruijuan, a specialist in the study of microcirculation, has establish a first-rate microcirculation research center. The center is continuously scoring new achievements in its research projects.

The situation of people of three generations living crowded together in a small room no longer exists among teachers in universities and colleges and research workers. They generally live in apartments with two rooms and a living room. Although the study is also used as a bedroom, their living conditions are still acceptable. They may now keep their minds on reading and writing when at home.

We should admit that the living standards of the broad masses of intellectuals have been improved.

The findings of a report accurately reflect the incomes of middle-ranking and senior intellectuals. The following figures were compiled by pharmacist Mrs Huang Liang, based on an investigation made in the Institute of Pharmacology under the Chinese Academy of Medical Sciences (see appendix).

To truly understand the significance of these statistics, the figures concerned should be compared with the price index, and with the personal incomes of people in other trades and fields.

Since the price index for Beijing is not available, I can only cite the following rough prices in markets and restaurants, based on information I collected myself.

When I visited a market, I discovered the price of pork: fat meat is 1.3 - 1.7 yuan per jin, whereas lean meat is 2.5 to 2.7 yuan per jin. The price of hen's eggs is 1.3 yuan per jin. Chinese cabbage is the cheapest vegetable, and its price is less than 10 fen per jin. The most expensive vegetable is blanched garlic leaves, and its price exceeds 1 yuan per jin. In a low-grade restaurant, the price of a dinner dish is 2 to 4 yuan. In a medium-grade restaurant, the price of a dinner dish is 30 to 50 percent higher than in a low-grade restaurant. In the Overseas Chinese Hotel where I live, a person might spend 10 yuan for his dinner.

APPENDIX

		average length of service 11.3 years		percentage of increase 43 percent

			present salaries 71-73 yuan	average increase 25.6 yuan

The above figures show that the salaries of the Chinese medium-ranking and senior intellectuals have increased by 30 to 40 percent. The state has considerably increased its financial expenses in this respect.

U.S. WEIGHS RESPONSES TO GORBACHEV PROPOSAL

OW041921 Beijing XINHUA in English 1908 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 4 (XINHUA) -- The United States is weighing three responses to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's recent proposal calling for the gradual elimination of all nuclear weapons, but a final decision is yet to be made. The U.S. National Security Council considered the three approaches at a meeting Monday. Today's NEW YORK TIMES disclosed the responses as:

-- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger suggested there is no need to change the U.S. position in the arms talks with the Soviet Union because Gorbachev's proposal of January 15 is a public relations effort of little substance.

-- In contrast, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency wanted to respond positively to parts of the Soviet proposal. It called for "picking up" the Soviet suggestion to eliminate U.S. and Soviet missiles. The agency's approach also would seek a 50 percent reduction of Soviet SS-20 missiles in the Asian area of the Soviet Union.

-- The State Department offered the third response, which is similar on cutting medium-range weapons to the disarmament agency's proposal. It also suggested that the United States make moves in the area of strategic weapons and reassure the Soviet Union on U.S. intentions to honor the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty. The State Department's response favored amending the U.S. proposal to ban all mobile missiles. Instead it would seek a ban on multiple-warhead mobile missiles only. This would allow the United States and the Soviet Union each to deploy single-warhead nuclear missiles. The State Department also proposed that the U.S. take steps to shore up the 1972 anti-ballistic missiles treaty. This could include a commitment to honor the treaty for a specified period. State Department officials said Gorbachev's multipart proposal contained "some encouraging elements that require a positive U.S. response."

U.S. President Ronald Reagan is expected to respond formally to the Soviet leader's proposal in a letter. The U.S. also will seek suggestions from U.S. arms negotiators in Geneva and from European allies before issuing an official response. It is believed that the ultimate goals of the U.S. remain deep reductions in offensive arms and continued research on a space-based missile defense system, the Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as "star wars".

Gorbachev proposed that all nuclear weapons should be eliminated and that both superpowers should renounce development and deployment of "star wars" anti-missile systems. He also suggested that the two countries eliminate all of their missiles in Europe in the first part of his three-step plan. Britain and France would be allowed to keep forces during this stage but would have to agree not to enlarge them.

SOVIET MEDIA CRITICIZES REAGAN RESTATEMENT OF SDI

OW060737 Beijing XINHUA in English 0715 GMT 6 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 5 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union today attacked U.S. President Ronald Reagan's State of the Union address as an indication that Washington was pressing ahead with plans to gain a free hand for a first nuclear strike through the "star wars" program.

The official Soviet news agency TASS, in a commentary from Washington, said that Reagan's annual address contained a "simplistic but very dangerous" approach to arms control. With the help of the "star wars" project, TASS charged, the United States "would like to make its nuclear arms arsenals invulnerable and to get a free hand for a first nuclear strike."

In his traditional speech to the Congress Tuesday night, Reagan announced his plans to increase defense outlay by about 25 billion dollars for the next fiscal year beginning October. According to the budget, spending for "star wars", formally known as the Strategic Defense Initiative, would rise to 4.8 billion dollars from this year's 2.7 billion. The draft federal budget was scheduled to be presented to Congress today. The President's speech, TASS said, boiled down to "the promise to continue the old policy of militarization, escalation of the arms race and its spread into outer space, state terrorism abroad and encouragement of 'big business' and curtailment of social programs at home."

On regional conflict, TASS accused the United States of trying "to incite local conflicts and expand intervention in the affairs of other countries" and following a policy of "threats and diktat." TASS also condemned Reagan's plans to cut social programs, saying he is following a policy of "guns before butter."

TASS deplored the fact that in his address Reagan failed to mention the latest Soviet disarmament proposals announced by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev three weeks ago. So far failed to respond to the Soviet arms control offers. The Soviet Communist Party daily PRAVDA also denounced the "star wars" program. Assertions that the SDI program would go ahead despite last week's space shuttle Challenger's disaster showed the U.S. Administration's insensitivity, PRAVDA said.

EEC WILLING TO BETTER RELATIONS WITH CEMA

OW051634 Beijing XINHUA in English 1624 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Warsaw, February 5 (XINHUA) -- The European Economic Community (EEC) has officially expressed willingness to resume negotiations with the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) on the normalization of bilateral relations, a local newspaper reported today. Willy de Clercq, president of the EEC committee, said in a letter to the CMEA general secretary that the EEC is willing to resume negotiations.

The CMEA suggested four months ago that the two economic communities restore bilateral relations. At the same time, the EEC committee suggested to the CMEA that each member state of the CMEA normalize diplomatic relations with the member states of the EEC. The committee emphasized that priority should be given first to the development of bilateral relations with individual socialist state before relations are normalized between the two economic groups.

High-level contacts on cooperation between the two European blocs started in 1977 but discontinued in 1980. For a long time the Soviet Union refused to recognize the FEC, though there have been some economic and trade agreements between member states of the two international organizations. In June of last year, when the Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi visited Moscow, the Soviet Union agreed to establish economic relations between the CMEA and EEC.

XINHUA NOTES SHULTZ REMARKS ON TIES WITH USSR

OW060804 Beijing XINHUA in English 0656 GMT 6 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 5 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said today the Soviet Union "continues to pose the most profound challenges" to America but added that his country "must pursue constructive relations with the Soviets.

Speaking to the House Foreign Affairs Committee today, Shultz said U.S. security "depends on a poliy of realism, strength and a willingness to solve problems through diplomacy." He said the summit meeting between U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev last November "was a good example, teaching some fundamental lessons about the conduct of diplomacy and negotiation in the modern age." Shultz stressed that American strength and constance of purpose "are a prerequisite to successful negotiations and a more constructive relationship with the Soviet Union." He said defense preparedness and maintenance of U.S. strategic modernization program, including the MX missile program and the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program, remain "crucial."

"Now is the time to support our basic interests and our negotiating position at what could be a promising moment in the quest for a safer world," Shultz told the committee. He said the U.S. approached the Geneva summit "in a spirit of both aspiration and realism, and we will bring that spirit to our negotiations with the Soviets through the coming year." The U.S. "will pursue the Geneva negotiations with energy and good faith, and without artificial deadlines," Shultz said. He explained that the agenda for the summit planned for this year would embrace four sets of issues: arms reduction, regional conflicts, human rights and bilateral relations with the Soviet Union. However, the U.S. secretary of state did not say how Reagan would respond to Gorbachev's recent proposal for eliminating nuclear weapons in space and on earth by the end of the century. Reports said the U.S. has sent envoys to its allies for consultation, and there is word that the State Department favors some concessions while the Pentagon favors standing firm on past U.S. proposals. So far no date has been set for the summit meeting this year between Reagan and Gorbachev.

WEINBERGER SUBMITS 1987 DEFENSE BUDGET

[Text] Washington, February 5 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger today submitted to the Congress a 311.6 billion dollars defense budget for fiscal year 1987, up 33.2 billion dollars or 11.9 percent from the current fiscal year's 278.4 billion dollars.

The new defense budget, which represents 27.5 percent of the U.S. Government's total spending, projects total actual spending of 274.3 billion dollars in fiscal year 1987 starting October 1. This is an increase of 6.2 percent over the final estimated total of 258.4 billion dollars of outlays for the current fiscal year, which ends September 30. The proposed military budget would dramatically increase space defense spending and maintain virtually every other major weapon program intact. The research program of the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), known as "star wars," would grow from 2.75 billion dollars in the current fiscal year to 4.8 billion dollars in fiscal year 1987, which represents a 75 percent increase.

The budget also includes 1.4 billion dollars for development of a new, mobile missile nicknamed Midgetman and 1.8 billion dollars to buy 21 MX test missiles and conduct research on new ways to base the 10-warhead missile. It asks for 3.1 billion dollars to purchase the first 21 Trident 2 missiles and 721 million dollars to design a new attack submarine.

As for conventional forces, the new budget seeks purchases of 840 M-1 tanks, 870 Bradley fighting vehicles, 300 armed armored command post carriers, 144 AH-64 Apache attack helicopters and 78 Blackhawk troop-carrying helocopters for the Army. It requests to buy 21 new ships for the Navy, including two Aegis cruisers, three Aegis guided missile destroyers, two oilers and one fast combat support ship. Also included in the budget are 191 fighter and attack planes for the Navy and the 294 for the Air Force. The budget proposes an increase in active-duty personnel of almost 14,000 to 2.18 million and a 4 percent military pay raise effective October 1, 1987. The Reagan administration expects an 8.2 percent increase of the 1987 defense budget in real terms so as to overcome the 5.1 billion dollars in outlays cut this year under the Gramm-Rudman balanced-budget law. But the administration's military buildup has faced a strong opposition in the U.S. Congress in the recent years. Critics said the administration could expect to receive no more than 260 billion dollars for fiscal 1987 and cuts in defense authorization could range from 60 to 90 billion dollars.

ARMS SALE TO JORDAN POSTPONED INDEFINITELY

OW041957 Beijing XINHUA in English 1949 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 4 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Administration, in an apparent attempt to avoid a virtually certain veto by Congress, has decided to postpone indefinitely a 1.9 billion U.S. dollar arms sale package to Jordan, officials reported today. Secretary of State George Shultz, acting at the direction of President Ronald Reagan, informed Congress of the decision in a letter yesterday to Richard Lugar, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. In the letter, Shultz promised to give Congress 30 days' notice beofre proceeding with the Jordan arms sale.

This was the second time the U.S. Government delayed the deal. The sale was first postponed last October and had been scheduled to proceed on March 1 unless Congress blocked it. Sources said that Congress, spurred by pro-Israeli groups, had indicated it would block the sale of advanced U.S. air-defense equipment to the Mideast country unless Jordan's King Husayn agreee to enter into direct negotiations with Israel. According to administration officials, while they still hope to be able to offer the arms package, they acknowledged it was unlikely the issue will be raised again this year. Observers said that the decision to delay the sale indicated that, despite increased diplomatic efforts in recent weeks, there has not been any significant progress toward Mideast peace talks. Richard Murphy, assistant U.S. secretary of state for Mideast Affairs, went to Europe last month to confer separately with King Husayn and Prime Minister Shim'on Peres of Israel, but failed to achieve any concrete results.

XINHUA VIEWS REAGAN'S INTERNATIONAL ECONOMICS

OW010728 Beijing XINHUA in English 0710 GMT 1 Feb 86

["News Analysis: Reagan Switches His Stands on International Monetary Field" (by Zhao Zijian) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, January 31 (XINHUA) -- The Reagan administration is trying to change its free-wheeling stance in favor of certain control in international monetary field. This weekend, officials of seven industrialized nations will meet in Honolulu to seek a joint strategy for the May summit in Tokyo. U.S. officials said future

Next Tuesday, Reagan was about to direct Treasury Secretary James Baker in his State of the Union message to study ways to improve the international monetary system, or ways towards a more stable exchanges market.

Until recently, Reagan believed currencies should float freely according to market forces, with limited intervention if it is urgently justified. But now it looks that Reagan may have accepted the position of Baker and Deputy Treasury Secretary Richard Darman, who insist that there should be some target zones defining the value relationships between the world's various major currencies. What Reagan administration is doing is designed to correct the mounting trade imbalances during Reagan's terms. The huge trade deficit is politically a black mark and economically very real threatening.

Last September, the U.S. convinced Japan, Federal Germany, France and Britain to help drive down the dollar, with warnings that the U.S. Congress may pass the various protectionist trade bills if no other ways are found to resolve the deficit problem. Although the dollar has devalued about 20 percent between now and then, economists believe it should down at least another 15 percent in order to be really effective in correcting U.S. trade imbalances. However, the Reagan administration is beginning worry that the dollar may reverse its course and move upward again, which will dash the hope of seeing the result of lower dollar on U.S. trade performance. Besides, protectionism, which has not died down yet, may be reignited.

Apparently, these days are the most crucial. Last year, as Thursday's statistics showed, U.S. trade deficit hit a record high of 148.5 billion dollars, with December deficit of 17.4 billion dollars alone exceeded the deficit for the entire year of 1976 when the deficit was 17.3 billion dollars. The record should be what economists called the "bottom," because for a period of time the U.S. businessmen have to pay more for imports and earn less for exports owing to the lower dollar. Eventually, the "J" curve, that is, a short period of worsening followed by long improvement upward, would occur, perhaps after a year or 18 months of correction. Under such circumstance, the Reagan administration has to discard its arrogance of the past and humbly asked the other industrial partners to continually cooperate on keeping down the dollar, in order to realize the results of the "J" curve.

COLUMNIST CRITICIZES PRAVDA ARTICLE ON CAMBODIA

HK051027 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 4 Feb 86 p 6

["Jottings" Column by Yang Ru: "Pravda Does Not Speak the Truth:]

[Text] A few days ago, PRAVDA carried an article obstinately asserting that the Cambodian issue has been solved "thoroughly and irreversibly" and, what is more, that the issue "has been solved by the Cambodian people on their own."

What does PRAVDA mean by the so-called "thorough and irreversible solution" to the Cambodian issue? It means that there is already a puppet regime in Cambodia, a puppet republic crowned with the name of the "Cambodian people." The article said: The "Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea does not have its own territory, its own people, or its own capital." The article even said: Actually, the so-called "Cambodian issue" does not exist; it is nothing but a "sheer invention" by Democratic Kampuchea, which "is now in its death throes."

In fact, we are afraid even Moscow itself may not believe that the Cambodian issue has been "thoroughly and irreversibly solved." If what the article claimed is true, why do 160,000 Vietnamese invasion troops still remain in Cambodia and why do the Vietnamese continue to send more troops to the country?

Even more ridiculous, PRAVDA concluded: "Let the disputes be eliminated at the conference table; and let the Cambodian people solve the Cambodian issue on their own, free of external intervention, and seek a compromise on the precondition that the Pol Pot clique is eliminated. This is the practical guideline for achieving normalization of the situation in the region." The article clearly revealed Moscow's plot. We cannot help but ask the question: If the "Cambodian issue" has already been "solved thoroughly and irreversibly," then what need is there to "eliminate" the disputes "through negotiations?" If the "Cambodian people have already solved" the issue "on their own," what is the need for them to "solve the Cambodian issue under the condition of no external intervention?" Obviously the article is illogical and self-contradictory, is it not?

To be frank, this is nothing strange. PRAVDA does not speak the truth, but tells lies. Therefore, the newspaper can hardly avoid contradicting itself.

GROMYKO URGES U.S. RESPONSE TO DISARMAMENT

OW040642 Beijing XINHUA in English 0630 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 3 (XINHUA) -- Soviet President Andrey Gromyko today again urged the United States to respond to Moscow's latest disarmament proposal and its unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests, the TASS news agency reported.

In a Kremlin meeting with former U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, who is here on a private trip, Gromyko asked the U.S. Government to back up its words with deeds in an effort to eliminate nuclear weapons. "If the USA agrees to the Soviet proposals," Gromyko said, "their implementation could rid mankind forever of the nuclear threat, prevent the spread of the arms race into outer space and strengthen trust among countries and peoples," TASS said.

Last August, the Soviet Union unilaterally stopped nuclear tests and asked the United States to do the same. Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev announced on January 15 a proposal for ridding the world of all nuclear weapons by the year 2,000, and an extension of Moscow's nuclear tests freeze for another three months until March 31.

Calling for U.S. response to the tests ban, the Soviet president said a halt to the tests "could become the first and efficient step towards restricting the arms race." In a message two weeks ago, the Soviet parliament asked the U.S. Congress to use its influence with the U.S. Government to respond to the Soviet arms control offers. Gromyko said he hoped the American leadership would show political will to cooperate constructively with the Soviet Union on these issues. Vance replied that he favors an early search for accords along the road to the complete elimination of nuclear weapons, the Soviet news agency TASS said. He said the U.S. Government should "come up with a detailed point-by-point reply" to the Soviet proposals, according to TASS.

SHEVARDNADZE MEETS WITH U.S. AMBASSADOR

[Text] Moscow, February 4 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze today told U.S. Ambassador Arthur Hartman that if Washington joined Moscow in halting nuclear tests it would create a favorable backdrop for this year's summit meeting between the leaders of both their countries. The official Soviet news agency TASS quoted Shevardnadze as telling Hartman that he hopes there will be no delay by the U.S. in "answering important Soviet proposals." Observers say Shevardnadze's remarks seem to indicate that the continued failure by Washington to respond to Moscow's unilateral moratorium on nuclear testing would cast a shadow over the proposed Soviet-U.S. summit meeting, when Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev visits the United States at a date yet to be fixed. Gorbachev announced on January 15 an arms control proposal for eliminating all nuclear weapons in the world in three stages by the end of the century and an extension of the Soviet nuclear tests ban for another three months. The freeze, declared last August, was to expire after five months on January 1.

In their meeting today, which TASS said was at the request of Hartman, the two discussed "some questions of Soviet-U.S. relations," TASS said. The Soviet foreign minister said there is still time for the United States to join in "the extended Soviet moratorium." The Soviet proposals, he said, offer a way out of the nuclear talks impasse, TASS said. If the U.S. Administration stops its nuclear tests as the Soviets have done, it "will create a favorable background for the meeting of the top leaders of the two countries," Shevardnadze said.

SOVIET MEDIA ON U.S. 'INTERFERENCE' IN PHILIPPINES

[Text] Moscow, February 5 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet mass media in recent days have accused the United States of interfering in the Philippine election. The news agency TASS said today it is quite evident that the United States, by sending a delegation of observers to the Philippines, aims at "further aggravating the situation in that country." TASS charged that Washington by "bringing political, economic and military pressures to bear on the Philippines, wants to keep its position in the country."

The Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA said today it is impossible to believe that the presence of U.S. warships near the Philippines is not connected with the election in that country, though Washington has claimed that the move has nothing to do with the Philippine situation. A TASS commentary said today that both the New Society Movement headed by President Ferdinand Marcos and the United Nationalist Democratic Organization led by Corazon Aquino have avoided making definite statements on the future of U.S. military bases in their country. TASS did not indicate which side Moscow supports, but noted that Washington is in favor of Corazon Aquino because Washington is "irritated and uneasy" over Marcos's independent tendency in his foreign TEXT policies. Imelda Marcos, the first lady of the Philippines, visited Moscow twice last year on official business. Friday is election day.

DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER KORNIYENKO LEAVES IRAN

OW041541 Beijing XINHUA in English 1506 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Tehran, February 4 (XINHUA) -- Soviet First Deputy Foreign Minister Georgiy Korniyenko left here this morning after a three-day visit to Iran. According to Iran's official news agency, IRNA, he described his talks with Iranian officials as "frank, comprehensive and constructive". IRNA indicated that the relations between Iran and the Soviet Union would be improved though some differences still remained.

During his visit, Korniyenko met with Iranian Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani, president 'Ali Khamene'i, Prime Minister Hoseyn Musavi and Foreign Minister 'Ali Akbar Velayati and held talks with Oil Minister Gholam Reza Aqazadeh and Deputy Foreign Minister 'Ali Mohammad Besharati. Today, he handed over a message from Supreme Soviet President Andrey Gromyko and conveyed warm greetings of Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to President Khamene'i, IRNA reported. When he met with Foreign Minister Velayati Monday, they appointed heads of the joint economic commission which will resume its function at ministerial level in the near future. The commission has stopped work for several years.

Earlier, Iranian news papers had anticipated that Iran would resume its gas exports to the Soviet Union, which stopped in March 1980 because of disagreement on price. But this issue was not mentioned at the end of his visit. Korniyenko, who arrived here on Sunday, was the first high-ranking Soviet official to visit Tehran since 1979.

RYZHKOV SPEAKS ON SOVIET FOREIGN ECONOMIC TIES

OW060758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0710 GMT 6 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Prime Minister Nikolay Ryzhkov said today that his country will not reject any chances to develop mutually-beneficial economic cooperation with foreign countries although it will rely mainly on its own resources to boost the economy.

On a Moscow-Davos television bridge, Ryzhkov told the participants in a symposium of the World Economic Forum held in Davos, Switzerland, that prospects are good for foreign countries to develop business cooperation with the Soviet Union during the next five-year plan period which begins this year. With improvement in the Soviet economic mechanism and higher efficiency of its foreign trade, he said, new forms of economic cooperation with foreign countries will emerge in the future. He told his audience that the possibility of establishing close scientific and technological ties with companies and enterprises in capitalist countries cannot be ruled out although there have been direct links of production between the Soviet Union and its East European allies. He added that the Soviet Union will not reject the offers of Western companies to invest in this country but the financial resources for developing the Soviet economy will come primarily from within the country.

Ryzhkov also took the opportunity to lash at the United States and some other Western countries for undermining international economic cooperation by adopting discriminatory measures such as trade embargo and restrictions on financial credits. A healthy inter-state economic relationship, he noted, can only be established on the principles of total equality, mutual benefit, strict observation of existing agreements and non-interference in internal affairs.

LIAOWANG ANALYZES SHEVARDNADZE JAPAN VISIT

HK060524 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 4, 27 Jan 86 p 8

[Article by Liu Ye: "The Soviet Foreign Minister's Visit to Japan"]

[Text] Soviet Foreign Minister Shevardnadze made a 5-day official visit to Japan that began on 15 January, thereby resuming regular consultations between the foreign ministers of the two countries after an 8 year interruption. A joint communique issued at the conclusion of the visit indicated that the two countries will start afresh negotiations on a peace treaty. Japanese-Soviet relations, which have been cool for a long time, have thus begun to ease.

Since Gorbachev occupied the position of Secretary General of the CPSU Central Committee in March 1985, the Soviet Union has focused its attention on improving relations with Japan. In his personal letter to Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone last October and in his Supreme Soviet session speech last November, Gorbachev expressed a strong desire to improve Soviet-Japanese relations. This trend was embodied in the recent visit to Japan of the Soviet foreign minister.

Changes in Soviet policy toward Japan have always been linked with its strategy toward the United States. During the second session of talks between the Soviet and Japanese foreign ministers on 16 January, Shevardnadze officially proposed to convene a conference to ensure Asian security. Observers declared that this proposal was aimed at containing Japan and barring it from participating in research in the U.S. star wars program and to drive a wedge in the Japan-U.S. alliance in order to improve the Soviet Union's passive position in the Pacific region.

The Soviet Union changed its cold attitude toward Japan for political and economic reasons. After the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, the United States and Japan adopted economic sanctions against the USSR. Economic exchange between the Soviet Union and Japan is gradually narrowing and the volume of trade between the two countries is sharply decreasing.

Although the Soviet Union has strengthened its economic ties with West European countries during this period, the heavy equipment it so badly needs for the development of its resources is under U.S. control, while Japan is a leader in electronic technology. This is why, in recent years, the Soviet Union has strived so hard to cooperate with Japan.

Besides, Gorbachev recently set the task of doubling the national income and gross industrial production of the Soviet Union by the year 2000. In connection with this, during the 12th 5-Year Plan which began this year, the Soviet Union will intensify construction of fundamental branches of industry and expand enormous energy to develop its resources in Siberia. To achieve this aim, cooperation with Western countries in the economic and technical spheres is essential.

Consequently, one of the main aims of the Soviet foreign minister's visit was to strengthen economic ties with Japan. On its part, Japan also devotes serious attention to resuming regular consultations between the foreign ministers of Japan and the Soviet Union and improving relations between the two countries.

In view of the intensification of the international situation, Japan has also sought since last year ways to broaden its dialogue with the Soviet Union. In order to further enhance Japan's role as a political power, Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone perceives improvement in Japan-USSR relations as the last barrier to realizing a final solution -- in the diplomatic sense -- of the questions left over by World War II. In order to enhance Japan's position in the international arena, he considers it essential to maintain a dialogue with the other superpower.

On the other hand, the time has come for an improvement in Japan-USSR relations because of the Geneva summit meeting between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The recently announced Soviet-Japanese plan for Japanese cooperation in the construction of four major chemical combines valued at a trillion Japanese yen is extremely attractive in Japanese economic circles. Japan's periodic trade friction with the United States and Europe has also caused Japan to consider opening up an export outlet to the Soviet Union to offset the drop in exports to the United States and Europe. Everyone knows that the issue of Japan's northern territories is the major obstacle in improving Japan-USSR relations. The demand that the Soviet Union return the northern territories is Japan's invariable position, and a longstanding wish of the Japanese people.

During the talks, the foreign ministers of the two countries engaged in a heated argument on the question of the existence of a territorial issue between the two countries. The Japanese side repeatedly stressed that a solution of the territorial issue was the main topic for discussion at regular consultations between the foreign ministers, and a peace treaty could be concluded only after solving this issue.

Although at the beginning of the talks both sides stuck to their respective positions and would make no concessions to one another, they agreed after lengthy discussion to return to the basis of the joint communique of 1973, in other words, as the 19 January joint communique declared, to renew talks on concluding a Japanese-Soviet peace treaty, in the course of which issues left unresolved since World War II, which were affirmed in the 1973 joint Japanese-Soviet communique, will be discussed.

The Japanese Government considers this a Soviet concession because the territorial issue must be included in the unresolved issues. However, the Japanese public does not view this so optimistically and feels that the Soviet Union has not changed its previous position in any way and is trying to gain economic advantage in a roundabout way without striving for the superficial, to seek practical interests. This approach is far from a sincere solution of the territorial issue.

Despite the fact that many contradictions exist between Japan and the Soviet Union, both sides, in their own interests, want to normalize the climate for broadening the dialogue. Before his departure from Tokyo, Foreign Minister Shevardnadze invited Prime Minister Nakasone to visit the Soviet Union, and Nakasone invited General Secretary Gorbachev to visit Japan. Commenting on the latest consultations between the foreign ministers of Japan and the Soviet Union, KYODO NEWS AGENCY noted that, although the consultations were held in a warm atmosphere, little substantial progress was achieved. The territorial issue also remained unresolved. KYODO also stressed that, under conditions of further increases in arms in the Soviet Far East, the Soviet threat will not decrease and, in connection with this, the Japanese Government is adopting an attitude of vigilance toward the Soviet strategic design.

WORKING GROUP SEEKS HONG KONG VIEW ON BASIC LAW

[Text] Hong Kong, February 5 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese working group on Hong Kong's basic law left for Beijing today after spending a month here. The 12-strong group, led by Lu Ping, general secretary of the State Council's Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office, came to seek local opinions on the structure and content of the basic law. The law will spell out the system to operate in the Hong Kong special administrative region after China resumes sovereignty in 1997.

During their stay here, the working group met 1,100 people from various sections of society at more than 100 meetings. The group also visited government institutions, law courts, the stock market, factories, wharfs, schools, cultural centers, monasteries and the race course. They will submit the opinions they have collected to the second meeting of the Hong Kong Basic Law Drafting Committee, which will be held in Beijing in April.

CHINESE EXPLOSIVES SUCEED ON HONG KONG MARKET

HK050442 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0741 GMT 24 Jan 86

[Report by Li Xianhua: "From 0 to 40 percent -- An Account of the Process of Opening Up the Hong Kong Market to China's Explosives for Civilian Use"]

[Text] Hong Kong, 24 Jan (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong is a hilly island with little land, so in building houses and roads, blasting is often necessary to tunnel through mountains and split rocks. The demand for explosives and equipment to do this work is great, and the annual sales volume of such materials amounts to HK$25 million. At present, China holds 40 percent of the market for these products, but 4 years ago, China's explosives for civilian use had no place in the Hong Kong market. How is it possible for China's explosives to be so strong now on the Hong Kong market? We must begin with the general agent -- Lidashi [0448 6671 2514] International Development Corporation, Ltd.

The Difficulties Involved in Building the Business

When China's foreign trade department concerned was studying the market situation with some Hong Kong businessmen in 1981, they found that the market for explosives in Hong Kong was monopllized by foreign products. It was regrettable that China, which first invented explosives, did not even have a place in the market. In order to break this situation, they came together and began market research. They sent their men to large construction sites to determine the demand for explosives for civilian use and the specifications, prices, and origins of these explosives. Then they made contact with relevant departments of the Hong Kong Government and submitted their application for a license to operate. At the same time, they held several trial blasts of Chinese explosives. They invited relevant officials of the Hong Kong Government and the press, and the experiment was conducted by the "explosives kings" [pao wang 3514 3769] of Hong Kong. The result of the tests proved satisfactory. The "explosives kings" held that China's explosives were competitive with foreign products, the price was comparatively low, and they had bright prospects. At the same time, they made some suggestions on improving the quality of China's explosives.

After 9 months of preparation, "Lidashi International Development Corporation, Ltd", the sole agent for China's explosives, formally began operations on 21 July 1982 in Hong Kong, beginning a move into the Hong Kong market.

Establishing a Good Reputation

At the initial stage of setting up the business, the sale of Chinese explosives was very limited. Explosives are dangerous and they cannot be shipped with other goods, so shipping costs are especially high and often incur great losses. In order to keep the new business going, Lidashi Corporation swallowed losses for 6 months, before the situation turned. Marketing expanded to a certain degree and clients became steady. The company began to make some money.

In order to guarantee the prompt delivery of orders, Lidashi Corporation has the close cooperation of customs officials. Its trucks pass customs early in the morning every day carrying some of the goods shipped to Hong Kong from the warehouse in Shenzhen.

Another notable example of maintaining a good commercial reputation at all costs is the supply of ammonium nitrates. At the initial stage of operations, factories in the hinterland did not have ammonium nitrate products to use for explosives. They had to rely entirely on foreign products. This method continued until a businessman of a certain country, who had supplied the ammonium nitrate, suddenly broke his word and suspended the supply. However, Lidashi did not stop supplying its clients and continued delivering explosives to them. It cost them five times the price for ammonium nitrate, but they did not raise the charge to the customers. The company thus established a good reputation for keeping its word and attaching importance to contracts.

Promoting Production With Marketing

China used to produce ammonium nitrate in the past, but it was mostly used in insecticides for farming and was not suited for explosives. This is because ammonium nitrate for explosive purposes should be granular and finely porous. Having experienced the lesson of a suspension in the supply of foreign products, Lidashi contacted departments concerned in the hinterland and sent samples of foreign ammonium nitrate to factories for research and trial production. In a few months, a factory in Nanjin succeeded in trial producing finely porous, granular ammonium nitrate, and it was produced in large quantity for export. Moreover, China-made ammonium nitrate is cheap and of good quality. It was rapdily accepted by clients. Today, China-made ammonium nitrate takes up 70 percent of this category in the Hong Kong market.

Lidashi Corporation has not only opened up an overseas market for China's explosives, but has helped in importing new technological information, which stimulates the factories in the hinterland to upgrade the quality of their products. An example, is the fuse. It was originally made with cotton yarn, but this easily knotted and became damp. Later it was improved by using plastic instead of cotton yarn to suit the requirements of the overseas market. Another example is the detonator. Formerly, China-made detonators only had 19 sections to delay explosion. Today, detonators are produced that meet the international standard of 30 sections. The rate of forming a complete set of China-made explosives for civilian use has been raised, and sales abroad have been promoted as well.

Both Parties in the Joint Venture Cooperate in Sincerity

Lidashi International Development Corporation, Ltd. is a joint venture of China Beifang [Northern] Industrial Company and a Hong Kong agent for the marketing of China's explosives in Hong Kong and Southeast Asia.

Another important factor accounting for the success of Lidashi Corporation in popularizing China-made explosive products in the Hong Kong market is the sincere cooperation between the two parties. They are not preoccupied with personal gains or losses, but have worked to open up the market abroad with heart and soul. The personnel concerned of the China Beifang Company modestly listen to and respect the suggestions of their Hong Kong partners on opening up the market and improving their products. In the course of operations, they have strictly abided by the accord and taken into consideration the interests of their partner. The other party has been enthusiastic and active and brought into full play their favorable conditions. They have made use of their social connections, expanded the marketing channels, and imported advanced products and technology. They have exerted their efforts in everything, effecting a rapid change in the situation. Such spirit of cooperation has helped Lidashi Corporation to overcome difficult situations on several occasions and to continue to develop its operations.

Through 4 years of hard work, China-made explosive products have now a rather solid foundation in the Hong Kong market. To Lidashi Corporation, this is only the beginning. The corporation is now working hard to continuously improve its products in order to promote the sales of Chinese explosives in all parts of the world, with Hong Kong as a display window.

MARCOS: TREATY NEEDED ON U.S. PHILIPPINE BASES

OW051850 Beijing XINHUA in English 1839 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 5 (XINHUA) -- President Ferdinand Marcos today stressed the need for renegotiation with the United States over the agreement on the two U.S. military bases in the Philippines before the agreement expires, said a presidential press release. Replying to a query by interviewer Ted Koppel in an U.S. television program "Nightline", the president said he has always maintained that the agreement on the Subic Naval Base and the Clark Air Base are needed by both the Philippines and the United States, and probably even Asia and the whole world. Marcos said, "Certainly, we would not stop you if you want to get out of the Philippines, but you will not be able to find replacements for Subic and Clark. But you are free to get out any time you think it wise to do so."

He explained that before the bases agreement expires in 1991, there must be negotiations on the use of the military facilities to put them under a formal treaty which should spell out clearly and categorically the obligations of each government. Under the present arrangement, "we have to beg from the U.S. Congress for what we consider your obligation as compensatory military package in payment for the military facilities which you do not consider as obligations, and this is very disappointing," he said.

Marcos' only opponent in the February 7 presidential election, Corazon Aquino, stated two days ago that she does not propose to renounce the existing military bases agreement. But before the agreement expires, a process of consultation will be undertaken so that an arrangement serving the best interest of the entire free world, and especially of the Filipinos, can be reached.

PHILIPPINES' CARDINAL SIN URGES CLEAN ELECTION

[Text] Manila, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Jaime Cardinal Sin, the influential archbishop of Manila, today appealed to President Marcos to ensure a clean and honest presidential election on February 7 amid reports about possible massive cheating and fraud.

Speaking at a press conference in his residence, Cardinal Sin noted that there was indications that those who are in power were abusing their authority. The coming election would be viewed as a manifestation of democracy in action, he said, adding in his open statement "ordinarily I would welcome such an exercise. Instead, I view it with fear and trembling." If the presidential election is marred by terrorism and vote manipulation, the consequences would be "dire", he warned. He emphasized that the election will be clean, if President Marcos wants it to be clean, because "it is he who holds the reins of power."

This is the third time that the Catholic Church in the Philippines officially expressed their views on the election. On January 19, Cardinal Sin published a letter, saying that there was a very sinister plot by some people and groups to frustrate the honest expression of the people's genuine will and money has flowed freely into the hands of common people to induce them to support particular candidates. On February 2, the Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines expressed in a joint pastoral letter their apprehension of flagrant violation of the electoral process, and said vote-buying, serious lies, black propaganda and physical violence and killings were happening. The letter called for vigilance to ensure the election to be free, honest and clean.

MARCOS REFUSES TO COMMENT ON WW II ACTIVITIES

OW261918 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 26 Jan 86

[Text] Manila, January 26 (XINHUA) -- President Ferdinand Marcos today refused to comment on U.S. newspaper reports that he had worked with Japanese forces during the Second World War. He appeared before some 3,000 recruiters, overseas contract workers and their families in a basketball stadium here but declined to discuss published reports that he collaborated with occupying Japanese forces.

Marcos had claimed that he had led a guerrilla unit named "Ang Mga Maharlika" (the noblemen) in military operations against Japanese forces from 1942 to 1944. However, U.S. newspaper WASHINGTON POST earlier reported that documents culled in the U.S. Government archives suggest that Marcos did not head the guerrilla resistance unit but actually worked on behalf of Filipino politicians who collaborated with the Japanese forces. The report said Marcos promoted the cause of wartime president Jose P. Laurel, Sr., father of opposition vice-presidential candidate Salvador Laurel. The question whether Marcos was a heroic guerrilla leader has become a controversial issue during the current campaign between the president and the opposition leaders.

MILITARY ASSIGNED TO PROTECT PHILIPPINE BALLOTING

[Text] Manila, February 4 (XINHUA) -- The Philippine Armed Forces have assigned about 83,400 military men to all parts of the country to prevent violence in the coming Friday's presidential elections. This was announced here today by Lt. General Fidel Ramos, vice chief of staff and chief of the Philippine Constabulary. This does not include reserve forces for security missions against what he termed as "terrorist groups."

There are altogether some 250,000 enlisted men and officers in the Armed Forces of the Philippines. Ramos said that an average of six to seven police and constabulary special contingency teams have been created in each of the 74 provincial commands. At the same time, reserve units have been organized in all the 13 regional commands, he added.

Earlier in Davao City of the southern island of Mindanao, Ramos had expressed his confidence that the coming presidential elections could be conducted peacefully. As of February 2, however, the death toll in election-related violence has reached 40. The Catholic Bishop's Conference of the Philippines issued on January 25 a strongly-worded pastoral letter expressing "grave concern and great sadness" that electoral violence "is threatening to escalate to a level never experienced before".

MARCOS WARNS OF ARREST FOR PROTEST INSTIGATORS

[Text] Manila, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos today warned that he will order the arrests of those opposition leaders who will lead protest actions after the February 7 poll. The president made the warning in his address before some 150,000 persons who attended a grand political rally in a public square here.

He said the arrests of the opposition leaders will be his answer to the recent statement of opposition candidate Corazon Aquino that a civil war will erupt should Marcos cheat in the poll. He denied he will cheat, and promised that there will be an "honest, peaceful, and orderly" election, which he said he will surely win. He said that the government will fight the opposition with "legitimate force" if they insist on what he termed as "sowing violence, anger, hatred and civil war." He said he would order to arrest them if they don't desist from committing "acts of violence and vandalism."

There were reports of violence as followers of both camps today clashed and stoned each other in at least six Manila districts. Police said several arrests were made and an undetermined number of ruling party supporters suffered minor injuries. The watchdog commission on elections, meanwhile, announced that results of the nationwide presidential poll will be known in just 10 hours after the balloting.

TEXT JOINT OFFSHORE OIL CONTRACT SIGNED WITH UK FIRM

OW051307 Beijing XINHUA in English 1231 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 5 (XINHUA) -- China National Offshore Oil Corporation (CNOOC) and British Cluff Oil P.L.C. signed a contract here this afternoon on joint oil exploration and development in a block awarded to the British company in the southern part of the Yellow Sea.

This is the fifth contract signed in the second round of Sino-foreign joint offshore oil exploration and development, which started in November 1984, CNOOC said. The British company was awarded a block in the northern part of the Yellow Sea in the 1982—1983 first round of bidding. Now 55 percent of the participating interests for the contract block has been transferred to the Norwegian Statoil. Drilling operation there is expected to start this year. Cluff has its share in a contract block in the Beibu Gulf of the South China Sea.

UK DEFENSE SECRETARY STRESSES EUROPEAN UNITY

[Text] London, February 4 (XINHUA) -- British Defense Secretary George Younger today stressed the importance of European cooperation in the development and production of defense equipment but warned it must not be done in the spirit of anti-Americanism. Opening a conference of European NATO states' research laboratory directors in London, Younger said the intention of closer European defense research was to strengthen NATO "by strengthening the European contribution to it." It is not intended "to be anti-American or divisive within the NATO alliance," he said. The new defense secretary paid tribute to some positive results of European cooperation such as the Tornado fighter aircraft but he avoided to mention the latest project, an European battlefield helicopter, to which his predecessor Michael Heseltine had put so much significance during his campaign for a European consortium's rescue offer for the near-bankrupt British helicopter maker, Westland.

Heseltime, who resigned as defense secretary January 9 at the height of the Westland political crisis, today also talked about the importance of European defence cooperation to another audience, a group of London businessmen. According to the former defence secretary, there will be a wave of anti-American sentiments in Europe if the ailing Westland company accepts a rival rescue bid from the U.S. Sikorsky company, the world's biggest helicopter firm. The two-day London conference of national research directors, the first of its kind, is actually the brainchild of Heseltine. Its participants represent 11 European NATO countries and about 100 governmental and other research institutions.

STATUS OF U.S. BASES IN GREECE UNDER DISCUSSION

OW051930 Beijing XINHUA in English 1922 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Athens, February 5 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Rozanne Ridgway is expected to discuss the future of U.S. military bases in Greece during two days of meetings with Greek officials. In addition to preparing for U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz' visit next month, she will meet with Greek Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou, Deputy Prime Minister Ioannis Kharalambopoulos, Minister of National Economy Konstandinos Simitis and other leaders.

LAST LINE

Greece signed a military and economic agreement with the United States in 1983 to allow the four main American bases and other affiliated facilities to remain in Greece for another five years. Washington reportedly is eager to have the Greek Government clarify its position about the future of these bases after 1988. The United States wants to use the bases in exchange for their military and economic aid to Greece. But Papandreou insists his government will adhere to the "conditions and timetable" of the agreement. Observers here believe that because the United States and Greece have improved relations, an arrangement agreeable to both countries will be worked out on keeping the bases in Greece. The Greek newspaper ESTIA, said in a recent commentary that the government seemed to have given enough assurances to the United States that the future of the American bases in Greece "is not in real jeopardy." "The concessions on Greece's part will probably take the shape of amendments to the original agreement which will keep the Americans happy, while also giving the Greek Government the opportunity to declare once again that the struggle is now being vindicated," the paper said.

RIZOSPASTIS, the organ of the Communist Party of Greece, criticized the government of playing the game of "hide and seek." An editorial in its latest issue said that Ridgway "is coming to Athens primarily to secure a Greek OK to the bases." Ridgway arrived in Athens after holding talks with Turkish leaders in Ankara.

FRANCE DENOUNCES SEA TRANSPORT ACCORD WITH USSR

OW041403 Beijing XINHUA in English 1318 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Paris, February 4 (XINHUA) -- France Monday denounced an agreement on maritime transport signed between the Soviet Union and France in 1967. The French Ministry of Industrial Redeployment and Foreign Trade said that the reason for the denunciation was an "enormous imbalance" in favor of the Soviet Union in trade exchanges between the two countries.

The abolition of the agreement will not be effective until August 1, six months after the denunciation was made according to an AFP report. During the six months, while a renegotiation on the agreement will be held, France "will also take into account of the espionage activities conducted by certain Soviet vessels in French ports near a military base," said the ministry. The decision was made after France expelled four Soviet diplomats over the weekend following the discovery of a retired French Navy officer spying for Moscow. It was the most important expulsion of Soviets from France since 1983 when 47 Soviet officials were driven out of the country.

In a statement issued Monday afternoon, the Soviet Embassy in Paris said that the expulsion was an unfriendly "manifestation" and "provocation," saying that France should bear the "responsibilities of the consequences of this action." Reportedly, the Soviet Union has also expelled four French diplomats in retaliation of the French expulsion of Soviet diplomats over the weekend.

CASTRO NOTES SINO-CUBAN RELATIONS AT PARTY CONGRESS

OW051910 Beijing XINHUA in English 1854 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Text] Havana, February 4 (XINHUA) -- Cuban Communist Party [CCP] General Secretary Fidel Castro today called on the United States to hold dialogues with Cuba on the basis of equality and mutual trust. In his keynote speech to the Third CCP Congress which opened here today, Castro said Cuba is willing to normalize relations with the United States. However, this is possible only if Washington is willing to conduct serious negotiations with Cuba "in the spirit of equality and full respect for each other", he added. The Cuban leader reiterated that the Soviet Communist Party is the "closest friend and best political ally" of Cuba and that the country will accelerate the integration of its economy with Comecon, the East European economic group.

He also said that to deal with the complicated world situation today, the views of China on major international issues can not be neglected. "Sino-Cuban relations have been developing healthily," but the two countries have "disagreement on some international affairs" which impede the "genuine improvement" of bilateral relations, he said.

Castro also called for the settlement of Central American disputes through peaceful negotiations and praised the efforts of the Contadora and Lima Groups in this respect. The Contadora Group of Venezuela, Panama, Mexico and Colombia and the Lima Group of Argentina, Brazil, Peru and Uruguay have been working on a peace treaty for the region. The Latin American problems should be solved by Latin Americans themselves through peaceful means and without the interference of the United States, he said. Castro admitted that in the past five years, more than 100,000 Cubans have "undergone internationalist missions" abroad, adding that his country will give unlimited support to Nicaragua.

On domestic issues, Castro said that the Cuban economy has grown by 7.3 percent in the past five years. But he said, progress in some areas has been retarded by laziness and other irresponsible conduct.

He said that during the next five years, Cuba will maintain a 5-percent annual economic growth rate and will give special attention to the tourism industry, agriculture and animal husbandry. The country should save and utilize its own resources, reduce imports and increase and diversify exports, he said.

He stressed that the country needs to enhance the efficiency of production and government offices and displace imcompetent officials.

The Cuban party congress, attended by more than 1,700 Cuban and 186 foreign delegates, is scheduled to discuss the revision of the party's Constitution and the economic and social strategy for 1986-1990.

The congress is also expected to adopt two resolutions, one on new economic leadership and systems of economic planning and the other on separating political work from management.

The First and Second CCP Congresses were held in 1975 and 1980 respectively. The third congress was originally scheduled for last December.

LEADERS URGED TO RELY ON MASSES IN WAGE REFORM

HK050821 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jan 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Wage Reform in Enterprises Must Follow the Mass Line"]

[Text] Wage reform in enterprises is a component part of the entire economic structural reform, a matter to which the broad masses of workers and staff have paid attention and for which they have longed. Since this is a matter of primary importance concerning the situation of enterprise reform as a whole, and the direct and vital interests of all workers and staff members, we should conscientiously rely on the masses and fully follow the mass line in this regard. Only thus can we accomplish the task smoothly.

Our party has always maintained that we are at one with the masses and that what we are doing is for the masses. There is nothing we should conceal from the masses; we should fully discuss things with them. In particular, with regard to matters concerning the vital interests of the masses, under the guidance of party policy, we should give them a free hand to discuss these matters. We will derive great benefits in doing so, rather than endangering our work. Leaders of enterprises should uphold this viewpoint: Truly and wholeheartedly trust and rely on the masses. They should not trust themselves alone or make a mystery of wage reform. They should avoid making wage reform a matter involving only a small number of people and excluding participation of the masses. If they do so, they will most probably make a mess of the work.

To follow the mass line, we must give the masses all the facts about the situation and policy and our plan to deal with the situation. This is the so-called experience of "giving three facts," summed up by some enterprises currently experimenting with reform. The main purpose in reforming wages in enterprises is to gradually smooth out wage relations in the enterprises and further pursue the principle of distribution according to work, rather than implementing only a "wage increase" as some people have advocated. We should repeatedly explain this clearly to the masses. Only thus can we clear up certain unclear ideas and unify the thinking of workers and staff members so that wage reform is guided by the correct policy. The wages of workers and staff members can only be gradually increased with the development of our economy. Excessive or drastic demand will never work. Rise in consumption funds and wages of workers should not be higher than increases in national income and labor productivity. We should also explain these policies and principles to the masses so that they may truly understand and master them.

The key to success in wage reform lies in formulating a good plan for reform, according to the requirements of reform and practical conditions of the enterprises, and good for arousing the enthusiasm of the masses. Due to various historical reasons, many problems regarding enterprise wages have carried over from the past. There are many complicated, special conditions and problems difficult to fully predict. Therefore, we should follow the mass line and draw on the wisdom of the masses. Only by leaving their offices, immersing themselves among the masses, conducting careful investigation and study, listening to opinions from the masses in various quarters, and discussing matters repeatedly with them can leading cadres produce a better and more practical plan for reform.

Representative assemblies of workers and staff members are organs for the exercise of the masses' democratic rights. Trade unions represent the interests of the masses and are the working organs of workers and staff members' representative assemblies. To conduct wage reform in enterprises we should rely on representative assemblies of workers, staff members, and trade unions, lending full play to their role. Wage reform plans and policy decisions concerning the enterprises should be discussed conscientiously by representative assemblies. With regard to opinions raised by workers through their representative assemblies and trade unions, leaders of enterprises should address them seriously. Various work concerning wage reform must be placed under the supervision of representative assemblies. If we neglect the roles of representative assemblies and trade unions, it is difficult to claim reliance on the masses. Representative assemblies and trade unions should also recognize their responsibility in wage reform. They should closely cooperate with administrative departments of enterprises to properly integrate their supervisory and supporting roles, correctly representing and guiding the masses and ensuring the success of reform.

SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY RESEARCH FUNDING VIEWED

[XINHUA commentator: "Smashing the Big Rice Pot While Exploiting New Financial Resources"]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 4 Feb (XINHUA) -- The State Council has formally promulgated the "provisional regulations concerning supervision of scientific and technological appropriations." Serving as supplementary decrees for reforms in science and technology these regulations will surely promote the sound development of these reforms.

An important feature of the reforms in science and technology system is the change in the old system of appropriations. In other words, the operating mechanism of science and technology should change. Rather than disregarding the characteristics of scientific and technological activities of different categories and managing science and technology purely by administrative means, we should employ economic means in managing funds for different categories separately. The methods used in scientific research, such as the funding system, "the big rice pot," and the transfer of research achievements without compensation were variously flawed. As a result, scientific research lacked vitality and could not automatically meet the needs of economic construction. To overcome these drawbacks, we must see to it that the management of appropriated funds promotes an intensive development of scientific research, orients science and technology toward economic construction, creates a competitive atmosphere, and establishes an economic responsibility system in science and technology.

However, some comrades still worry that once the appropriation system is changed, the state will reduce appropriations for science and technology, thereby affecting scientific research. This is a misunderstanding. On the whole, funds for scientific research will increase considerably rather than decrease. The provisional regulations have made it clear that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, state appropriations for science and technology will increase more quickly than regular financial revenues. Coupled with other financial resources, there will be an overall increase in funds earmarked for scientific research. Only the method of managing the funds will change.

The science and technology front is extensive, consisting of many levels. Conditions are vastly different. In view of this, the provisional regulations have specified detailed arrangements, the general principles of which are conducive to scientific and technological progress and production and are not just a set of simple uniform requirements. In a word, reforms in the appropriations system are designed to smash the big rice pot, make scientific research more dynamic and vigorous, expolit new financial resources, and provide a solid material foundation for scientfic research. It will surely promote the development of scientific research.

CPC SETS RULES FOR ISSUING REPORTERS CREDENTIALS

[Text] Beijing, Feb (XINHUA) -- Recently the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee issued a circular setting forth explict rules for issuing reporters cards. The circular requests that all journalistic units conduct an examination of the reporters cards they have issued and straighten out any irregularities. All cards that have been issued but do not conform with the rules should be recalled or voided, and all new cards should be issued in accordance with the rules.

The circular points out: Indiscriminate issuance of reporters cards has become a rather common problem in various localities. Besides journalistic units, some publishing houses, offices of literary and art publications, and even party and government departments have printed and issued reporters cards. Some offices of newspapers and periodicals and some radio and television stations have issued reporters cards to their administrative and logistics personnel and workers. Some newspaper and periodical offices have issued reporters cards to persons belonging to other units as an amicable arrangement in order to establish underhanded relations with them. Some have issued large numbers of special reporters' cards and reporter-trainees cards. More serious is that a few newspapers and periodical offices have sold large numbers of reporters cards for profit. All of this has resulted in extremely grave consequences by damaging the reputation of journalistic units; pressuring the work of railway, civil aviation, and other transportation departments; and provided favorable conditions under which a small number of lawless people engender bluff and deceit.

To correct this problem, ensure reporters due rights and interests, and safeguard their good reputation, the following rules are established:

1. Units issuing reporters cards are limited to press agencies, newspaper offices, radio and television stations, and a few offices of publications on current events and political subjects. Ordinary publications offices, publishing houses, offices of papers and periodicals not distributed openly to society, colleges and schools of journalism (including those teaching through periodicals and correspondence), and journalistic research organizations are not allowed to issue reporters cards or reporter-trainees cards.

2. Journalistic units should issue reporters cards only to those officially employed as professional editors and reporters and to those personnel responsible for organizing information gathering and news writing. Journalistic units not employing professional journalists may issue reporters cards to those personnel actually gathering information and writing news reports. However, administrative and logistics personnel in journalistic units should be given work cards only, and no reporters cards should be issued to them. From now on, when a person no longer gathers information or writes news reports because of transfer to another job or for other reasons, his card should be promptly recalled.

TEXT 3. Out of the needs of work, a journalistic unit may issue a certain number of special reporters cards, but such cards should not exceed 10 percent of the number of its regular reporters. Special reporters should not enjoy the same treatment as regular reporters. No reporters cards should be issued to correspondents.

4. Reporters cards prove the holders identity and profession only. To cover a special event, a reporter should have a letter of introduction from his unit. Because of the urgent need to cover an event, a reporter may have priority over others in buying railway, long-distance bus, ship, or airline tickets by presenting his card according to the pertinent regulations.

The circular urges all journalistic units to conduct an examination of reporters cards they have issued in order to correct any irregularities. Cases of selling reporters cards for profit should be dealt with seriously. After the examination has been conducted and irregularities have been corrected, if any new cases of indiscriminate issuance of reporters cards are discovered, the leaders concerned will be held responsible.

TRAVEL REGULATIONS FOR HONG KONG, MACAO EXPOUNDED

HK030911 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0256 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] Beijing, 31 January (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- In Beijing, an official of the Bureau of Exit and Entrance Control under the Ministry of Public Security disclosed that the concerned State Council department is formulating regulations governing citizens traveling between the mainland and Hong Kong and Macao.

In answering a reporter's question on "why control is still very strict on citizens traveling to Hong Kong and Macao on personal business, while it is comparatively relaxed for these going abroad on personal business," the official said: Hong Kong and Macao are special regions. They are small in area but very dense in population. Their capacities are limited. However, the number of citizens in the hinterland wanting to emigrate to Hong Kong and Macao is extremely great. If their requests were all satisfied, the population of Hong Kong and Macao would grow drastically. In order to maintain favorable conditions for the economic prosperity and social stability in Hong Kong and Macao, the State Council has decided to follow a quota when examining and approving applications to settle down in Hong Kong and Macao on a one-way trip. The State Council has also decided that, in principle, the number of people approved will not be increased. Because the number of applicants is great and the quota is limited, the majority will not be approved, not even those who have parents, spouses, or children in Hong Kong and Macao. Only those who are most in need and are most pressed will be given approval.

A reporter asked: Those applying for a round trip on a short-term basis will not increase the populations of Hong Kong and Macao. Shouldn't the policy be relaxed somewhat regarding them?

The official said: Certainly. However, quite a number of people who applied for round trips to Hong Kong and Macao have, in the past, failed to return. Therefore, the method of fixing a quota is also adopted with regard to them. If those who apply for a round trip to Hong Kong and Macao conscientiously return on time, we will gradually increase the quota and relax the control. In fact, the quota for round trip travelers has doubled in recent years, but there are so many applicants, conditions are still rather strained. From now on, we will further relax control and gradually increase the quota.

JINGJI RIBAO EMPHASIZES STUDY OF MARXIST THEORY

HK031311 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 25 Jan 86 p 1

[Editorial: "Do a Good Job in Studying Marxist Theory Guiding our Party in Building Socialism"]

[Text] In a speech delivered at the National Conference of Party Delegates, Comrade Deng Xiaoping proposed a new requirement -- the study of Marxist theory -- to cadres at all levels throughout the party and leading cadres in particular. While proposing the new requirement, Comrade Deng Xiaoping stressed three points. The first point is that in implementing the four modernizations program, we should adhere to Marxism, which provides a foundation for our party's policies. The second point is that we should integrate theory with practice and use the basic principles and methodology of Marxism to devise solutions to new political, economic, social, and cultural problems. The final point is that through devising solutions to new problems, Marxist theory itself will be further developed. Conducting the study of Marxist theory well in accordance with the requirements and orientation charted by Comrade Deng Xiaoping is of great, far-reaching significance in accelerating the process of our reform and four modernizations program.

Theory stems from practice, is tested by practice, and develops in practice. One hundred and thirty-eight years have passed since the "Communist Manifesto" was published in 1848. During this historical period, the proletariat has constantly won new victories in its liberation cause although the road toward liberation is tortuous. Marxist theory is continuously developed in new practice. New principles and conclusions suited to new historical conditions are ceaselessly replacing some specific theories and conclusions which are no longer applicable.

The universal principles of Marxism are not out of fashion. Today we are still determined to uphold and defend them. We should not waver in this conviction. For example, socialism will inevitably replace capitalism, and socialist society will ultimately enter communist society. This is an inevitable trend of historical development. The universal principles clearly defined by Marx in this regard are universally applicable truths. However, it is impossible for Marx and Engels to have devised detailed solutions to all kinds of specific problems arising in the course of socialist revolution and construction, under prevailing circumstances, to build a modern and strong socialist country with a high level of both material and spiritual civilization. In a large economically backward country like ours, it is one of the most difficult and greatest creative projects ever undertaken in the history not only of the Orient but also of the whole of mankind. Some of the major problems emerging in the course of fulfilling this task are problems which Marx, Engels, Lenin, and Stalin did not encounter and thus never solved. Our ongoing comprehensive economic structural reform and four modernizations program are a new, great practice in the history of socialist revolution and construction. What is the relationship between the reform and the four modernizations program? Why should reform be conducted? What is the orientation and what are the objectives of the reform? How should we correctly view and handle problems arising in the course of the reform? All these questions should be definitely answered and thoroughly explained in theory so as to unify thought and action in the whole party and among people throughout the country, thus pushing reform ahead victoriously. This requires that we integrate the universal principles of Marxism with our country's actual political, economic, scientific, and cultural developments; study new situations; solve new problems; and achieve new experiences.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee succeeded in shifting the work focus of the whole party, our party has brought order out of chaos, reaffirmed the ideological line of seeking truth from facts, adhered to Marxist dialectical materialism and historical materialism, and solved many new problems arising in the course of implementing the four modernizations program by creatively applying universal Marxist principles. We have made achievements in all areas of reform and the four modernizations program. The principles and policies and numerous important documents formulated by our party for the reform and many important articles and speeches by central leading comrades are all products of combining univeral principles of Marxism with reality in China. These important documents are our party's scientific review of the experience in socialist revolution and construction since the founding of the People's Republic and signify the adoption and development of Marxist classical works. They are the Marxist theories guiding in building socialism with Chinese characteristics and providing additional wealth in the treasure-house of Marxist theory.

Therefore, in studying Marxist theory, we should combine the study of classical works with that of our party's present-day documents, particularly the party's important documents and central leading comrades' important articles and speeches since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and learn the Marxist stand, viewpoint, and method, and the basic knowledge about Marxism, from these works and documents, in an earnest and systematic way. Only in this way: Can we scientifically explain or elucidate the numerous new things and problems emerging in the course of reform and the four modernizations program; can we dialectically ponder the complicated social and economic phenomena, examine the essential aspects of problems with an eye on the course of their development, and avoid making mistakes and becoming rigid; can we remold our subjective world while changing the objective world and make our ways of thinkings, mental outlook, ability to work, and moral level more adaptable to the new situation in the new period; and can we achieve both liveliness and unity in thinking and adhere to both the implementation of the policies of invigorating the economy, opening up to the outside world, and observing socialist orientation.

At present some comrades isolate the practice and theory of building socialism with Chinese characteristics from the historical development of Marxism and thus fail to see that the two derive from the same origin. The manifestations of this practice are that in theoretical study, they confine the study of Marxist theory to reading some classical works and neglect the study of the party's present-day important document, in particular the numerous important documents since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. More often than not, theoretical study is separated from the realities in reform and the four modernizations program, and people do not know how to apply the theories they have learned, still less how to develop them. They fail to explain practical problems in current political and economic life although they would memorize quite a few phrases and sentences from classical works. On the other hand, on seeing some conclusions in Marxist classical works as being no longer applicable to present actual conditions, some comrades doubted the correctness and guiding role of Marxism, arguing that Marxism was already out of fashion and thus abandoned their study of Marxist classical works. All these show a separation of theory from practice and a lack of thorough understanding of the theory guiding our party in building socialism with Chinese characteristics.

To overcome this trend of separating theory from practice, we must study the history of Marxist development and further understand that the theory guiding our party in building socialism with Chinese characteristics means we have inherited and developed Marxist theory itself. Moreover, we must enhance our willingness to study present-day party documents. In theoretical study, we must uphold the Marxist basic principles and oppose the bourgeois liberalization trend that doubts the applicability of Marxism on the one hand and be bold in breaking through some specific outdated principles or conclusions in Marxist theory and opposing dogmatic deviations on the other.

While carrying out the economic structural reform and the four modernizations program, we must persist in applying the Marxist stand, viewpoint, and method in understanding and solving all practical problems so that we can forge ahead along the correct road with our cause and simultaneously advance Marxist theory. This is the attitude which we should take.

MODERNIZATION PROGRAM FOR RURAL AREAS EXPLAINED

HK050855 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jan 86 p 1

[Editorial: "An Invigorated Local Economy Dawns -- On the Need for the Entire Society To Be Concerned About Implementation of the 'Spark Program'"]

[Text] The "spark program," introduced by the State Science and Technology Commission and approved by the State Council, is enthusiastically welcomed throughout the country and, in particular, by the country's 800 million peasants. They describe this as "charcoal delivered in the middle of a snowstorm" to the rural areas and towns and township enterprises and as significant progress in the application of science and technology in economic construction. The central leading comrades have also made very favorable remarks on this matter.

In recent years, thanks to rapid rural reforms, our agricultural production has been growing at a high rate. Indeed, one cannot affort to overlook the role of town and township enterprises as a significant force in the national economy. While absorbing much of the surplus labor in rural areas, they are also profoundly restructuring the country's rural economy. Apart from this, town and township enterprises also provide great support to the modernization of rural areas and to the development of scattered tiny market towns.

However, we must be soberly aware that productivity remains low in rural areas and that most town and township enterprises are backward both technologically and in production management. In order to end this backwardness, ensure a steady growth rate for agriculture and healthy development of town and township enterprises, and to end poverty in old liberated areas, newly developed areas, border areas, and poverty-stricken areas, it is necessary to devote further attention to applying science and technology, in addition to further comprehensive implementation of the party's rural policies. Only by relying on science and technology can we help the 800 million peasants, who just have enough to wear and eat, become affluent peasants. Practice has proven that, armed with modern science and technology, the peasants can raise productivity hundreds of times as soon as they abandon the production mode characteristic of a natural economy and switch to the establishment of factories and intensive production. Wherever science, technology, and scientific management are satisfactorily applied, successful production and construction can be expected.

One of the specific objectives of the "spark program" in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is the training, for town and township enterprises, of 200,000 young intellecturals and grassroots cadres each year, or 1 million young intellectuals and grassroots cadres in 5 years. This will contribute to the organization of a "permanent" scientific and technological force in rural areas and this force, in addition to bringing scientific and technological advances to rural areas, will benefit peasants by leading them in their march toward the modernization of rural areas and the revitalization of the economy. Without adequate scientific and technological personnel, it would be difficult to satisfactorily revitalize the rural areas. Training scientific and technological personnel for rural areas is an important issue. In the future, we will rely mainly on them for the revitalization of the rural areas.

Special schools and institutions of higher learning should perform their own functions satisfactorily. They should offer various training courses, using their long vacations and favorable conditions. Scientific research units should, by combining training with the popularization of scientific and technological achievements, train "midfield players" to transfer scientific and technological achievements to rural areas. Another of these specific objectives is to initiate the mass production of 100 types of facilities and equipment suitable for rural areas. These include complete sets of facilities and equipment for factory-farm animal breeding, for the preservation of fruits and vegetables, for the deep processing of industrial crops, for the production of building materials, and so on. The purpose of all this is to raise productivity and to improve economic results and social benefits. A third objective is to help various localities establish 500 model town and township enterprises, which will play an exemplary role in applying science and technology. These enterprises will be provided with complete sets of scientific and technological facilities and equipment, management norms, product designs, and quality control systems.

The "spark program" requires the extensive application of science and technology. All those workers in the field of science and technology who aspire to contribute to the great cause of revitalizing the local economies now have a golden opportunity to realize their aspirations. At present, there are thousands of scientific and technological forces in China. They have produced many scientific and technological achievements. Given all this and China's quite well-developed industrial system, China is well qualified to help its rural areas develop and produce complete sets of facilities and equipment and establish model enterprises. In the rural areas, workers in the field of science and technology will find that there is ample scope for their abilities. This is made possible by the independence and great flexibility of rural areas and town and township enterprises and by the short cycle in their application of new technology and development of new products. Science and technology commissions, science and technology associations, institutions of higher learning, scientific research units, mines, and industrial enterprises throughout the country and all functional departments concerned should make the best use of favorable conditions and contribute to the implementation of the "spark program," local and rural economies, and improving the nation's scientific and technological knowledge. As long as we are united and bravely march ahead, we certainly will be able to achieve all the objectives of the "spark program!"

DU RUNSHENG BOOK ON RURAL CHANGES REVIEWED

HK270621 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Gao Hongfan: "A Theoretical Summation of Profound Rural Changes -- Reading 'China's Rural Economic Reforms'"]

[Text] The book "China's Rural Economic Reforms," by Comrade Du Runsheng, is published by Zhongguo Shehui Kexue [China Social Sciences] Publishing House. The book focuses on the discussion of reform of the economic structure and product mix in rural areas, and technical reform in the rural areas. These are all new issues of the new historical period. Some of the specific, historical, and dialectical analyses of the author on these issues are incisive and thorough.

First, the implementation of contracted responsibility system on a household basis inevitably involves an appraisal of the cooperative movement. Otherwise, it will be impossible to talk about the reform of the old system and the establishment of the new structure. How should the cooperative movement be evaluated?

In the book, the author affirms the necessity of the socialist reform of agriculture, and reviews accomplishments since the cooperative movement: an initial solution to the food problems of one billion people has been provided, the needs of industrial development have been ensured, polarization and the annexation of land has been avoided. These accomplishments have demonstrated that the strategic decision of implementing the cooperative movement was correct.

However, the author points out at the same time that a basic weakness of China's cooperative movement over a long period is the neglect or disregard of the restrictive function of productive forces. "Leftist" tendencies have appeared on several occasions, forcing alteration of production relations, which resulted in sabotaging productive forces. This is precisely a marked expression of that weakness. The author analyzes the social and ideological root causes of this phenomenon, revealing the injury of "leftism," to which it has given expression.

This profound analysis in the book originates from a basic concept of Marxism. In an economically backward country, the change of small private ownership into public ownership, in the final analysis, relies on the formation of new socialized material conditions, and the formation of such conditions involves a considerably long process of development. In relation to this, the cooperative movement should not be perceived as a single change and should be connected by a series of intermediate links in gradual transition. The selection of these intermediate links should be favorable to the development of the original productive forces as well as the creation of new productive forces. This means that the promotion of productive forces should be regarded as a signal on whether the form of the cooperative system has vitality.

The author holds that the key to this point is: If original family economies are merged in an oversimplified way while an overconcentrated labor system and an egalitarian distribution system are implemented, it will be very difficult to maintain intensified cultivation of small-scale peasant economy. A stagnation, or even drop, in productive forces will occur. The shortcoming of cooperative organizations lies precisely here. Therefore, it is imperative to conduct structural reform.

Second, the contracted responsibility system on a household basis adoptes the managerial way on household basis, giving rise to talk about the "individual economic enthusiasm" of the peasants. The peasants' enthusiam for production since land reform has fallen into two categories, the enthusiam for individual economy and the enthusiasm for mutual cooperation, with which we are all familiar. In order to encourage a trend of mutual cooperation, a negative attitude has been adopted toward spontaneous capitalist tendencies of enthusiasm for individual economy, which is understandable. However, whether "enthusiasm for individual economy" is entirely equal to spontaneous capitalist tendencies is a topic requiring in-depth study. The mode of individual labor and the mode of distribution in relation to it were entirely neglected in the past, thus giving rise to frenzied activities without proper long-term plans and "eating from the same big pot."

Two universally acknowledged facts have caught the attention of the author. Family plots were all high-yield plots, and peasants had on several occasions demanded farm output quotas for each household. The author believes that "these two signals gave expression to the nostalgia for management on a household basis of the peasants, which has enlightened us and made us reconsider how use the mode of management on a household basis in the cooperative system."

Here, the author differentiates "individual economy" from "management on a household basis." Individual economy as an economic form is based on small-scale private ownership. Such small-scale peasant economy falls out of place in the trends of agricultural modernization and must undergo socialist transformation.

Management on a household basis is a mode of management. It can include different types of ownership, from the feudal system, to small-scale private ownership, to capitalist ownership. Such differentiation is necessary in our correct use of the form of management on a household basis.

The author points out that, in using such a mode, joint efforts of the family, technical experience accumulated in the hands of the individual, and production means scattered in all households will be brought into full play. Under present conditions, if they are put aside without being used, it will be a waste. Hence, the trend of including management on a household basis in the cooperative economic structure, linking collective management with management on a household basis and forming a double managerial structures system recently has resulted in profound changes in rural areas. Regarding individual economy, this will reform its content of private ownership while using its mode of management. In essence, it affirms once again the peasants' enthusiasm for production of 800 million peasants will be guided on the track of developing the socialist commodity economy in a big way.

The author believes that the new system has "absorbed the advantages of advanced agricultural producers' cooperatives, corrected its shortcomings, and broken through the limitations of the family economy while retaining its merits." It has formed into a developmental phase of agricultural cooperation with Chinese characteristics. Of course, the author does not avoid the fact the management on a household basis has a certain spontaneity and blindness and holds remnants of the peasants' private economy. However, the public ownership of land, the existence of unified management, and the powerful restrictive function of socialist industry, commerce, and banking will make this mode serve the needs of socialist agriculture. He stresses that just because peasants have selected this mode does not mean they are wavering with regard to socialism, but reflects a need for more criticism of shortcomings and errors in our work.

Third, the rural economy should be developed through diversified forms. This is a very important principle which the author has stressed. China's development in economy and culture are extremely imbalanced, and the natural conditions and economic conditions are far from being unified. In developing the rural economy, it is imperative to allow diversified forms under the principle of socialism so that comparison may be made between them, advantages can be retained, shortcomings eliminated, and they can be merged, replaced, and perfected. "Only with diversified forms will it be possible to attain a high level of adaptability."

The concept of diversified forms gives expression to the structure of ownership. Under the prerequisite of persisting in the cooperative movement, diversified economic forms are allowed as a supplement to the socialist economy, in order that the labor force, funds and technology may be diversely organized. Even in the case of operating by employing workers, it is not the same as in the past with capitalism, because some measures of cooperative economy are adopted, and it is controlled by socialism. This means that some low-level forms which are transitional and suitable to the level of the masses, are not to be rejected, even if they are unstable, vague in nature and neither complete nor perfect. Giving expression to the question of ownership, the concept of diversified forms refers to public ownership in the course of the appearance of a series of intermediate links, during which many flexible forms will inevitably appear. For example, the associative coefficient between unification and separation of the contracted responsibility system will be more flexible; the public ownership of production means will have different levels; the issue of whether combination will involve ownership will be allowed greater maneuverability; enterprises with collected funds may implement the principle of mainly distributtion according to work, when bonus distribution is based on each share.

TEXT The author proposes that we should not be afraid of remnants of old social relations remaining in new production relations, when public ownership and the principle of distribution according to work "will take shape in its typical and most perfect form when social production is highly developed."

The concept of diversified forms also gives expression to the variation of the cooperative economic system. In marketing and supplying cooperatives, credit cooperatives, service organs, enterprises in towns and townships, and state farms, all systems may implement varied combinations, and unanimity is not required. In this way, a network of cooperatives of various forms and diversified structures will take shape.

The important significance of the concept of diversified forms lies in the fact that it proposes that our ideas be suited to the extremely complicated structure of the external world, so that the subjective may become one with the objective, and Marxism may be linked closely with the realities of China's rural areas. In short, we must start from practice thoroughly. Since the founding of the People's Republic, one of the greatest malpractices in China's rural areas has been the habit of implementing a single pattern and requiring unanimity in everything. The author's concept of diversified forms is the correct policy for correcting the malpractice of requiring unanimity in everything, and a good measure for rapidly developing the rural economy.

COMMODITY PRICES SOCIETY DISCUSSES PRICE THEORY

HK291009 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 18 Jan 86 p 2

[Report by Shi Xiaokang: "Roundup on Annual Meeting of China's Commodity Prices Society and on the Fourth Meeting To Discuss Price Theories"]

[Text] The annual meeting of the Chinese commodity prices society and its fourth meeting to discuss price theories were held in mid-December 1985 in Guangdong's Zhongshan City. The participants discussed theoretical problems needing immediate solution in price reform.

I. The Targeted Pattern of the Price System

Most comrades held that in the future, China should adopt a price system of a mixed pattern, in which unified state prices, prices floating within a certain range, and negotiated prices coexist. However, there were still some differences on the question of which should be the main element of this system. Many comrades held that the system of prices floating within a certain range should be taken as the main element of the price system, that is, a price control system characterized as "small at both ends and big in the middle." Their reason is that since the central price and the range within which floating prices occur are set by the state, and enterprises can decide on the prices of their products within the range set by the state, both state macromanagement and control of prices and the flexibility of the enterprises in microeconomic control can be ensured.

Some comrades held a different view, maintaining that if the role of the floating price system is overestimated, it can only result in spiraling increases in costs, prices, and money put into circulation. The characteristics of the socialized commodity economy are: the variety of commodities is increasing day by day, labor productivity is changing quickly, the life cycle of products is becoming shorter and shorter, and the socioeconomic situation regarding supply and demand often changes greatly. For many commodity prices, if the float range is narrow, they will become, in reality, fixed prices; if the range is wide, they will actually become free prices.

Along with the enlivening enterprises and opening up to the outside world, phenomena such as bargaining and the deliberate raising and lowering of prices between the enterprises and the departments in charge will become more and more serious. Thus, it is good to take the system of prices floating within a certain range as a transitional form in the reform of the old price system, which is highly centralized. But it is still not appropriate to take it as the main element of China's price system. Some comrades suggested taking the free price system as the main element. The main reasons are: 1) Free prices belong to the category of price control, but since there are fundamental differences between the state's macroeconomic policy and ownership, there are also fundamental differences between socialist free prices and capitalist free prices in both intension and extension and in the roles they play. 2) Free prices are a part, not a whole. They do not exclude the method of state interference in the prices of certain important means of production and subsistence concerning the national economy and the people's livelihood. Under special circumstances, the state can still guide, interfere in, or even freeze the prices of those commodities which have adopted the free price system. 3) With the perfection of China's socialist market system, the strengthening of the state's capability for macroregulation and control, and the standardization of the enterprises, taking the free price system as the main element may not necessarily lead to greater defects and sharp rise and fall of prices. The fundamental reason for sharp rise and fall of prices lies in the imbalance of supply and demand rather than the form of prices. To exercise indirect control over prices mainly means controlling the changes in supply and demand so that prices can be kept stable. For most products, it is still necessary to rely mainly on direct control and to set fixed prices or a range in which prices can float.

II. What Symbolizes a Rational Price System

Many comrades pointed out that it is a pressing task at present to make clear what symbolizes a rational price system. Some comrades held that what basically symbolizes a rational price system is that under normal conditions all departments and trades are able to obtain an equal profit rate. In other words, the prices of various commodities are maintained at the average level of all departments and the level of profits is determined by the average profit rate.

Other comrades held that the basic symbol of a rational price system is that under the condition that general commodity prices are relatively stable, the prices of all kinds of commodities are basically at a level of balanced supply and demand, in other words, at a level at which the commodities can be sold easily and purchasing power can be fully realized. They held that different departments and trades have different abilities to obtain profits. This is an objective condition for the development of the structure of the national economy. The state can exercise control by means of taxation and credit. As far as prices are concerned, it is not necessary to require that profit rates of all departments and trades are generally the same.

III. On Calculation of Theoretical Prices

There were two different views among the participants on the necessity of calculating theoretical prices. The main reasons of those who held it necessary to calculate theoretical prices were: The calculation of theoretical prices can provide a basis for the state in setting and readjusting prices, in setting a central price and the float range for prices, and in levying taxes in a reasonable way. Following are three suggestions on the form of theoretical prices: 1) Calculate theoretical prices according to the average profit rate of funds; 2) calculate them according to the profit rate of funds and the profit rate of wages, or through "double channels"; and 3) calculate them through "three channels," that is, according to the profit rates of funds and wages and other factors, including grade differences and land rent.

The main reasons why those comrades held that the calculation of theoretical prices is not significant are: 1) On the question of what part of production costs should be included in the total cost of the product, there are many difficult technical and theoretical problems to solve, which will naturally lead to inaccuracy in calculating the average profit-earning costs of various departments; 2) it is not a scientific method of calculating theoretical prices, which are of significance in the future, on the basis of past data for calculating profit-earning costs; 3) since the calculation of theoretical prices does not entirely reflect the role played by social supply and demand in the formation of value levels and neglects the real costs of enterprises, what it reflects is not the value mentioned by Marx, which involves the meaning of social reproduction; 4) the state should levy taxes based on the enterprises' actual costs and profits rather than on theoretical prices.

IV. Price Reform During the Seventh 5-Year Plan Period

Some participants held that at present, China's extrabudgetary investment constitutes more than 50 percent of the total investment in social fixed assets, but as a result of the irrational price system, especially the lower prices of energy resources; communications, and raw materials, the industrial and investment structures are also seriously irrational. The shortage of energy resources, communications facilities, and raw materials is obstructing the national economy from high-speed development. When price reform takes big strides, the national economy cannot bear it; but when the reform takes small steps, problems cannot be solved. Therefore, during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, it is necessary to carry out the reform with medium strides, centering on the prices of the means of production, so as to strive for a rational price system, especially a rational price system for the means of production, by the end of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Other participants held that it is right to take the reform of the production prices as the center and to combine readjustment with relaxation in the price reforms, but that this should be supplemented with reform of the prices of agricultural products and main consumer goods. Otherwise the price system as a whole will become even more irrational. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the price reform should be carried out under the condition that general commodity prices are kept basically stable. Put more concretely, this means that the rise in the general price index should not exceed the annual interest rate of fixed deposits. For this reason, the price reform, including the reform of prices of the means of production, should be carried out with small steps rather than medium strides. At the same time, it is also necessary to pay great attention to the synchronous development of the price reform and the reforms in other fields. At present, before the problem of restraining the soft budgets of state enterprises is solved and a relatively perfect and advanced market system is formed, we can only achieve very limited results either in readjusting or relaxing prices. Therefore, in the price reform during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, emphasis should be laid on improving the external conditions rather than on pricing itself; in other words, on solving the problems concerning restraining the soft budgets of enterprises and perfecting the market system so as to create necessary conditions for effectively readjusting and relaxing prices.

DEVELOPMENT OF CREDIT LEASING SUPPORTED

HK030039 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 24 Jan 86 p 2

[Article by Min Yimin and Wag Yihua: "A Brief Discussion on the Development of China's Credit Leasing Business"]

[Excerpts] The credit leasing business, aimed mainly at utilizing foreign capital and importing advanced technology, has taken shape in our country since the early 1980's.

With the progress of economic structural reform and the four modernizations program, it has achieved noticeable development. Leasing institutions have been established one after another, their market has been rapidly expanded, and their volume of business has doubled and redoubled. However, since many people are still not quite familiar with this business, it is necessary to publicize its role and prospects and adopt forceful measures to promote its further development.

Background and Reasons for the Rise of the Present Credit Leasing Business in Foreign Countries

First, we should point out that the actual significance of the currently expanding credit leasing business is completely different from that of the traditional business of leasing. Credit leasing business mainly refers to the business of providing leased equipment and facilities for enterprises for a considerable period of time. While rendering its service, a leasing company will also supply "materials" rather than providing "funds" alone. This will enable the enterprises concerned to obtain the right to use equipment and facilities, and the funds needed in business. Such a leasing business, which actually covers funds and facilities, is called "credit leasing business." Providing such facilities and funds through leasing is flexible and convenient, and can satisfy various actual demands of enterprises. Since it can provide special credit service beyond the reach of middle-term and long-term loans, in many countries it has become the most rapidly developing credit leasing business. In the meantime, many manufacturers of equipment and facilities have accordingly used credit leasing as an effective means of expanding their market. At present, credit leasing has rapidly developed not only in various countries, but also in the international market. It has been widely used to import foreign capital and technology, and promote investment and exports.

The currently developing credit leasing business results from the fast developing financial business. The rapid progress of science and technology as well as government encouragement and support are a direct motive force for its vigorous development.

Establishment, Development and Prospects of Credit Leasing in China

Credit leasing in our country is a product of "opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy." The reform of the economic management system has directly promoted its rapid development.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee abolished the policy of isolation, which had been pursued in China for a long time. To expand international economic cooperation and technical exchanges, in July 1979 our country promulgated the law on joint Chinese-foreign ventures. In October of the same year, the China International Trust and Investment Corporation (hereinafter investment corporation for short), as one of the main windows for foreign capital, was established in Beijing. Not long after that, Rong Yiren, chairman of the board of directors and general manager of the corporation, proposed the idea of carrying out an international credit leasing business in order to open up a new channel for using foreign capital, after concluding his visit to some foreign countries. In early 1980, the investment corporation introduced such business activities. CAAC [Civil Aviation Administration of China] chartered the first plane from the United States. In October 1980, the investment corporation invited a Japanese leasing company and the American Chemical Bank to jointly hold the first seminar on leading.

In June 1980, a preparatory office jointly established by the investment corporation, Japan's (Oriental) Leasing Company and Beijing's Machinery and Electric Equipment Company for China's Dongfang Leasing Company was officially set up in Beijing. In July 1981, the investment corporation and the State Bureau of Materials and Equipment jointly set up China's leasing company.

The establishment of these two leasing companies has marked the rise of the contemporary leasing business in our country. Before this, the leasing business never existed in China as an independent undertaking. Since then, and in 1984 and 1985 in particular, leasing has become increasingly active and has rapidly been popularized throughout the country. To date, there are 25 national and regional companies specifically or concurrently dealing in leasing. A network of leasing business has now been established, and a new leasing market has been developed. The volume of business has rapidly increased. Let us take the leasing department of the Investment Corporation as an example. From 1984 to 1985, its accumulated volume of business reached more than $800 million as a result of importing leased items. The volume of business in 1985 alone was more than $400 million. In the meantime, the scope of business has been increasingly expanded. The items covered by the business include not only various kinds of industrial and agricultural equipment and facilities, means of transport, medical apparatus, and so on, but also intangible assets such as technology and other things. In addition, the forms of leasing are varied, and more flexible methods of payment have been adopted. Apart from the leasing business in general, we are developing systematic leasing linked with compensation trade (cooperating with foreign trade departments to export equipment and facilities for leasing to foreign countries). In the meantime, we are also developing a leasing business aimed at earning foreign exchange for the state.

Credit Leasing Is Bound To Occur and Vigorously Develop in Our Country

Everyone knows that making use of foreign capital through various channels is an important method for speeding socialist economic construction. Since the "leasing of technology," a new item in the business of leasing equipment and facilities can play the dual role of making use of foreign capital and technology and equipment. It will inevitably be regarded as a new method for credit leasing when we have just started to open our economy to the outside world.

To create more wealth with less investment, we should rely on existing enterprises, and speed their technical reform. Due to certain defects in our old economic system, for a long time we neglected the updating of fixed assets. The equipment and facilities of our enterprises are generally obsolete. We are facing a tremendous task for reform, and need large amounts of funds for this, apart from facing various restrictions on loans provided by banks. Therefore, investment based on leasing has wide prospects in China. The reform of our country's economic structural system will forcefully promote the development of the credit leasing business.

We maintain that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, with the profound development of economic structural reform and the progress of the four modernizations program, credit leasing will be considerably developed in our country. The main reasons are: Credit leasing can be used as an effective means of solving the problem of the lack of funds at home. Promoting credit leasing in cooperation with reform will be beneficial to readjusting the investment pattern (those items covered by credit leasing are included in the state and local plans), promoting technical progress (80 percent of the items covered by credit leasing are technical items), and rationalizing the investment pattern (increasing the percentage of funds for updating and reforming technology in the investment of fixed assets). This will ensure that funds will be truly used to update and reform technical equipment and facilities, rather than being used for other purposes (the credit leasing business is reflected in the business of leasing equipment and facilities). In the meantime, conducting credit leasing will also invigorate our enterprises, improve product quality, enhance the export competitiveness of our product quality, and expedite our work of opening up the international market for our products.

Giving More Support and Strengthening Management of Credit Leasing

To enable credit leasing in our country to serve the four modernizations program more effectively, apart from readjusting it and guiding the proper use of funds thorugh various economic means, the state should improve legislation, establish policy, and provide the necessary support, and strengthen the management of the business. Leasing is a new undertaking. We believe that with the immense progress of the economic structural reform in our country, and the gradual improvement of our country's legal system and various policies, a socialist credit leasing business with Chinese characteristics will further prosper and develop.

FIVE INDUSTRIAL PROHIBITIONS TO BE IMPLEMENTED

[By staff reporter Zhu Ling]

[Text] A quality control campaign is gaining momentum in China as the nation forges ahead with its plans to stem the slide in quality of its industrial and consumer goods. Starting this year, the State will strictly observe the implementation of "five prohibitions" among all industrial businesses, CHINA DAILY was told yesterday. The prohibitions are:

Any product not up to standard must not leave the factory. Such products cannot be included in total output and production value.

-- Production of any industrial enterprise which has no quality control system or checking instruments is prohibited.

-- Use of substandard raw materials and spare parts is forbidden.

— Production and marketing of any product deemed by the state to be out of date or obsolete is strictly prohibited.

— Any sort of fraud involving the forgery of trade marks and passing off substandard products as quality goods is prohibited.

An official of the State Economic Commission said that any violation would be seriously dealt with. Investigations would be made and any manager responsible will be liable to dismissal from office or punishment through the courts. This determined move comes at a time when the whole country is basing all its economic work on improving quality and reducing costs -- two potentially fatal weak points in the nations's economy according to Premier Zhao Ziyang. The State Economic Commission stressed that all industrial enterprises must be fully responsible for the after sale services. A system must be enforced this year making all industrial enterprises totally responsible for repair, replacement or reimbursement if the products are not up to standard.

In addition to this, the commission is drafting a new set of regulations of quality control to pave the way for the country's first law on quality. The State Economic Commission is calling for a concentrated effort to speed up the state licensing system to help maintain the quality of the country's major industrial and consumer goods.

Zhang Yunxia, an official of the Bureau of State Standards, told CHINA DAILY yesterday that the system is being expanded on a nationwide basis this year after a one-year trial programme. Theemphasis of this year's licensing programme is on daily necessities and those products which are important to the national economy. This year, Zhang said, the bureau aimed to stamp out the practice by some enterprises, especially in rural areas of producing goods without even bothering to apply for licences. Enterprises which already have licences will come under regular examination. Their licences may be revoked if the quality of their products deteriorates. For the purpose of conducting regular spot checks on the country's major products, the state is setting up a national network of up to 140 quality control centers.

Zhang Guihua, a senior official of the China Quality Control Association, yesterday voiced his determination to help smooth the way for the nationwide campaign. He said that the state had chosen 1,000 larger "backbone" industrial enterprises to be first in setting off the overall quality control drive this year. "We have arranged a one-month crash course on quality control for managers of 100 representative larger enterprises in the later half of this year. Experts from the United States will be invited to Wuxi to conduct the course." Zhang revealed.

IMPORT SMOKING HALT BY LEADING COMRADES URGED

HK031408 Beijing GUANGMING RABAO in Chinese 25 Jan 86 p 1

[Article by Zi Chao: "Thoughts Related To Smoking Imported Cigarettes"]

[Excerpts] We have no idea when it suddenly became fashionable to smoke imported cigarettes. It certainly started in the south. In some cities, even taxi drivers all smoke imported cigarettes; and if you happen to present him with a China-made first-grade cigarette, you will often find yourself given the cold shoulder. It is said there that the sales volume of imported cigarettes accounts for half the total volume of the cigarette market.

Cigarettes are certainly different from opium. But is it not the case that in many foreign countries, the campaign against smoking is gaining momentum? In the United States, their law has long stipulated that a health warning, cigarette smoking is hazardous to your health, must be printed on the wrappers before cigarettes are allowed to be sold on the market.

In Singapore, if people smoke in public areas, they will be fined several hundred dollars. Smoking is gradually being regarded as uncivilized behavior. World opinion has strongly condemned some developed countries for dumping cigarettes in Third World countries. It is strange that in China, some people not only regard smoking imported cigarettes as the fashion, but have openly violated the explicit stipulations of the state that advertisements for tobacco and wine are forbidden, publicizing imported cigarettes under various pretexts such as car races. They have gone so far as to promote imported cigarette sales in half a page and even whole pages of the newspaper. How can this meet the requirement of our building socialist spiritual civilization?

Our leadership should take the lead in changing this strange phenomenon. I propose that leading comrades refrain from smoking imported cigarettes, or at least smoke fewer of them. There are three advantages in doing so: First, it would be helpful to the health of leading cadres; second, it would help raise our national dignity; and third, it would help build socialist spiritual civilization. Besides, we will reduce the waste of foreign currency which is very precious to our construction.

LI PENG CALLS FOR ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

[By reporter Ke Daxing]

[Text] Beijing, 5 Feb (XINHUA) -- The sixth meeting of the Environmental Protection Committee of the State Council, which opened today, urged all localities and departments to make continued efforts to serve the people by doing concrete environmental protection work. Li Peng, vice premier of the State Council, presided over the meeting.

According to the demands set at the meeting, during the first half of this year, people's governments at all levels should draw up their environmental protection plans for the Seventh 5-Year Plan period and incorporate them into their regional economic and social development programs. All cities, in particular those designated as key cities for environmental protection, should do something to control the discharge of waste gas, liquid, and residue and to control noise. All localities should pay close attention to the experimental work on controlling pollution caused by village and town enterprises and assign environmental protection workers to townships and towns. At the same time, they should designate some places as experimental centers for agricultural ecosystem protection and set up several different types of natural reserve zones. Investigations of industrial pollution sources in various localities should be completed this year, while a system of collecting fees for waste disposal should be put into practice on an extensive scale. In addition, the meeting set specific requirements to be met by the pertinent departments of the State Council with regard to environmental protection.

In summary Li Peng said: The past year witnessed new progress in environmental protection work in our country and completion of some concrete tasks in this regard. We should note, however, that doing good environmental protection work remains a long-term and herculean job. At present our country depends mainly on implementation of its environmental protection policy and on supervision and technology to control environmental pollution. Our country already has a policy and a series of regulations and statutes on environmental protection. We should step up the supervision of their implementation. Also, there are still considerable problems of environmental pollution, the solution to which depends mainly on our efforts to strengthen environmental control.

For this reason in doing environmental protection work now, we must emphasize strengthening environmental control, and must build a still better work force for environmental protection.

Li Peng pointed out: Although China now emphasizes urban areas in controlling environmental pollution, special attention should also be paid to solving the pollution problem caused by the large number of village and town enterprises in order for these enterprises to develop healthily. Li Peng said that the state environmental protection organizations should take the lead to do concrete work and try to achieve tangible results in protecting the environment.

Carrying on the Army's fine tradition, PLA units stationed in Jiangsu have actively supported the local people's construction, while striving to carry out the structural reform and reduction-in-strength reorganization and accelerate the regularization and modernization of the Army. They have made remarkable contributions to supporting industrial and agricultural production and capital construction, assisting the local people in dealing with natural disasters and emergencies, preventing and controlling diseases, planting trees, training militiamen, and maintaining public order, and to organizing Army-civilian joint building of spiritual civilization.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN ADDRESSES RURAL CONFERENCE

OW031156 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Excerpts] Followings are excerpts of a speech by Wan Shaofen, secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee, at the closing session of a provincial conference on rural work, entitled "Rural Reform Can Only Advance Steadily and Cannot Regress."

The speech is divided into three parts: 1) questions that need to be clearly understood or solved in rural reform; 2) further strengthening the basic position of agriculture in the national economy; and 3) improving party style and doing a good job of party rectification in rural areas.

Comrade Wan Shaofen said: In terms of the growth rate of 1985, Jiangxi ranked fourth in industry, fifth in light industry, sixth in agriculture, and seventh in financial revenues among all provinces and municipalities in the country. We have also won the first battle in the second-step rural reform, reaped bumper agricultural harvests, and taken an initial step in the construction of old revolutionary bases.

During the current conference, participants have offered many constructive suggestions, which can be summarized as the following:

First, rural reform can only advance steadily and cannot regress. The initial success achieved in the reform last year have fully proven that the arrangements made by the central authorities for the second-step reform in rural areas are entirely correct.

Second, it is necessary to retain merits and eliminate defects in the course of reform and to carry out both construction and destruction.

Third, it is necessary to coordinate the relationship of interests between various sectors. Unlike the first-step reform, the second-step rural reform -- which is being carried out at the same time as the urban economic reform -- involves more sectors and a greater scope.

Fourth, it is necessary to give priority to enlivening the circulation in carrying out the rural reform because many problems in our economic development are caused by a clogged circulation system.

In the second part of her speech, Wan Shaofen called for further strengthening the basic position of agriculture in the national economy. She said: It is an economic law, as well as a law of nature, to develop the national economy based on agriculture. It is necessary to steadfastly adhere to this law as a long-term strategic policy. Wan Shaofen put forth the following four demands as far as this question is concerned:

First, it is necessary to place agriculture and rural work in an appropriate position in the national economy as a whole. To invigorate Jiangxi's economy, it is necessary to step up the pace of agricultural development.

Second, it is necessary to strengthen the infrastructure of agriculture. We should realize that Jiangxi's material and technological foundations for agriculture are still rather weak. If we fail to pay due attention from now on, we will not be able to reserve strength for agricultural development, and to fulfill the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the goal of quadrupling the country's gross annual industrial and agricultural output value before the end of this century.

Third, all departments must strive to provide services for the peasants, and should ask themselves how many concrete measures they have taken for the grass roots.

Fourth, it is necessary to strengthen the leadership over rural work, first of all, to overcome negligence in thinking and slackening of efforts at the rural work, and, second, to replenish leadership forces over agriculture.

In the third part of the speech, Wan Shaofen touched upon the questions concerning imporvement of party style and party rectification in rural areas. She stressed the following two points:

First, leaders at all levels should take the lead in improving party style.

They should set a good example in using their powers to serve public interests and in opposing the abuse of power for selfish gains. In improving party style, it is also necessary to take into account the overall interests and strengthen the unity. It is hoped that all leading comrades and Communist Party members will play an exemplary role in using their powers to serve public interests, studying and working hard, striving for self-improvement, stressing efficiency, considering the overall situation, and struggling in unity.

Second, it is necessary to persistently conduct positive education to ensure the success of party rectification in rural areas, which will be conducive to consolidating and developing the excellent situation, facilitating deepening of the reform, enlivening the economy, boosting enthusiasm, and stimulating the forces of production.

In conclusion, Wan Shaofen said: It is the hope of the provincial party committee that the large numbers of party members, cadres, and ordinary people throughout the province will conscientiously implement the guidelines of the party Central Committee's No. 1 Document by persistently carrying out and deepening the rural reform and ensuring the success of party rectification in rural areas, and that they will work hard and struggle in unity to promote the commodity economy in rural areas and enable the 28 million peasants to embark on the road of common prosperity as quickly as possible.

SHANDONG ARTICLE ON UNHEALTHY TRENDS AMONG CADRES

SK030556 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 15 Jan 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "It Is Necessary To Have a Good Mental Attitude"]

[Excerpts] At the beginning of the new year, the CPC Central Committee paid attention first to the central organs' rectification of party style, explicitly calling on central organs to act as examples. Focusing on improving the way of thinking, the provincial CPC Committee and government proposed launching the activities of creating new attitudes, a new work style, and a new mental outlook among their organs. This important plan, which serves as an effective guarantee for promoting the overall reform and the two civilizations, sets forth a request and a call to all personnel of organs for successfully carrying out all work for the first year of the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan period with a new mental attitude.

We should say that the overwhelming majority of our office cadres are good. They strive to complete their own work conscientiously and diligently, doing a great amount of highly efficient work for the fulfillment of the party's general task for the new period. Among them, many fine party members and cadres who are hardworking and brave in creating the new have been named as model laborers and advanced workers, and praised by the masses. Old cadres have carried forward the party's fine traditions and taken the lead in rectifying party style. New cadres have set strict demands on themselves and vigorously created a new situation in their work. New atmospheres have emerged continuously in organs thanks to the mutual respect, unity, and cooperation between old and new cadres. We should also seriously point out, however, that the mental attitude of some cadres in some departments and units is very bad. The masses have many complaints about various kinds of serious unhealthy trends.

Some cadres drift along aimlessly instead of doing work. They lack dedication, vigor, initiative, and a sense of responsibility; are muddling in their work; and possess lax work styles. What is worse, they criticize reform instead of working out ways of reform, find fault with people instead of trying to improve work, and take issue with the work they refuse to do.

Some cadres are enthusiastic about political liberalism. They neither study the party's principles and policies nor conduct in-depth investigations and research. They have endless complaints and strange comments. They love to hear and pass on hearsay, find fault with everything everywhere, spread the feeling of dissatisfaction, and even fabricate vicious slander.

Some cadres are obsessed by a lust for money, and seek fame, profits, and position endlessly, vying for higher pay and posts, and for housing. They do not think of doing more work but only think of getting more money, and even abuse their authority to attend parties, accept gifts, and go sightseeing, and engage in business in violation of regulations.

Some cadres are lax in abiding by discipline; practice favoritism in disregard of principles; assume the mediocre person's philosophy that "it is better to make friends than to make enemies, and it pays to do others a favor"; pay no attention to bad persons and deeds; and let unhealthy trends to unchecked. They form small coteries and factions, impairing the unity of the cadre contingents.

In addition, there are a few cadres who indulge in embezzlement, bribery, blackmail, speculation, smuggling, and sales of smuggled goods, taking the road of crime. Of course, this is a problem of another nature.

Although these problems concerning the cadre contingents of organs are directly related to the unhealthy trends in society, they can cause greater harm and more serious consequences because they exist in leading organs. In fact, the unhealthy trends in the cadre contingents of organs not only damage the image of the party and the government, and adversely influence the flesh-and-blood relations between the party and the people, but also greatly impair the performance of organs' functions, and give some bad persons opportunities for taking advantage. To rectify party style and social conduct, leading organs and their cadres should take the lead, carry forward the good styles of thinking and working, and adopt a good mental attitude.

In order for the cadre contingents to adopt a good mental attitude, a fundamental measure is to strengthen the party's ideological and political work and intensify the education on party spirit, party style, and party discipline so that the masses of party members and cadres will raise their awareness in upholding the four basic principles and implementing the party's line, principles, and policies, and will take the overall situation into account, stress unity and actual results, and vie for more contributions at any time and at every place. Taking the overall situation into account means that we should gear our words and deeds to the long-term interests of the country and the nation, and do everything for the prosperity of the country and the people and for the sustained development of the socialist cause. Stressing unity means we should understand the importance and the significance of unity; pay attention to maintaining unity among cadres, between people in and outside the party, and between higher and lower levels; and do our work successfully with concerted efforts. Stressing actual results means we should do everything in a down-to-earth manner, seek actual results instead of undeserved reputation and flourishes, and make our work serve the grass-roots units and the people. Vying for more contributions means we should not compare our seniority, living conditions, and wages with those of others, but should understand that the value of life lies in our contributions to society and the people, not in demands from them. The more we vie for comforts, the more angry we will be, but the more we vie for contributions, the more vigorous we will be. We should firmly believe that as long as the country and the socialist cause have a bright future, our lives will become better quickly.

We are fully confident that party and government organs will take the lead in rectifying party style. The CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC Committee have a firm determination, and have set forth correct principles and corresponding arrangements for rectifying party style. As long as we follow the requirements of the CPC Central Committee and the provincial CPC Committee in a down-to-earth manner, we will certainly build our leading organs into command and advisory departments with strict discipline and high efficiency, and into organs that are politically firm and organizationally compact and can lead the masses in achieving greater victories in reform and the four modernizations with the spirit of the foolish old man.

SHANGHAI LEADERS ADDRESS RURAL WORK MEETING

OW311113 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 26 Jan 86 p 1

[Excerpts] The Shanghai municipal meeting on rural work ended victoriously yesterday in Songjiang. Comrades attending the meeting unanimously pointed out: "We now have a clear-cut guiding ideology on doing work in suburban areas, principles and policies as well as decision-making powers. We have enhanced our vitality in developing a commodity economy in urban and rural areas."

The basic task laid down at the Shanghai municipal meeting on rural work is to tackle the issue of awareness and at the same time solve some practical problems.

During the meeting, comrades who came from suburban areas earnestly studied the guidelines laid down at the national conference on rural work and listened to reports delivered by Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, and Jiang Zemin and Ye Gongqi, mayor and vice mayor of Shanghai. They also heard speeches delivered by 10 units and warmly discussed developing the economy in close connection with the actual situation in suburban areas.

In the course of discussions, comrades of the municipality's rural party committees, the municipal agricultural commission, and various counties also pointed out: In order to implement the guidelines laid down at this municipal meeting on rural work, cadres at all levels should make less empty talk, perform more actual deeds, conduct investigation and study in a down-to-earth manner, proceed from reality, and adopt measures to fulfill tasks one after another. In doing work regarding state farms and the cities and towns in suburban Shanghai, a subject not discussed in detail at this meeting, we must conduct investigation and study even more carefully and work out measures to carry out reforms and solve problems.

HENAN TAKES MEASURES TO IMPROVE PARTY CONDUCT

PK301220 Zhengzhou HENAN RIBAO in Chinese 16 Jan 86 p 1

[Report by Zhao Derun: "Henan Provincial CPC Committee Starts With Its Standing Committee in Straightening Out Party Style"]

[Text] For the past 2 days, Yang Xizong, secretary of the Henan Provincial CPC Committee, has presided over the meeting of the Standing Committee to conscientiously study the speeches made by Hu Yaobang and other central leading comrades at the cadre meeting of the departments directly under the CPC Central Committee in line with actual conditions in the province. The meeting decided that the Standing Committee members should take the lead in measuring themselves by the guideline of these speeches and improving party conduct by proceeding from actual conditions so that the departments directly under the provincial CPC Committee would play an exemplary role in improving party conduct in the province.

Comrade Yang Xizong said: With the advent of the new year, the party Central Committee has made sincere efforts to improve party conduct by starting with the departments directly under its leadership. This is an important policy decision enjoying the popular support of the party, the Army, and the people. Making the most of the favorable situation, Henan Province should make great efforts to check unsound practices in leading organs and among leading cadres, while consolidating the achievements made in party rectification and reviewing party rectification in the departments directly under the province. One of our major tasks for 1986 is to bring about a basic improvement in party conduct and general social conduct and to improve the reform of the economic structure in the urban and rural areas.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, Henan has achieved great successes in various fields of work after correcting past errors. In addition to this, organs at or above the county level have achieved good results in their party rectification. At present, the political and economic situation in the province is good, but party conduct has not yet fundamentally improved. The provincial CPC Committee is of the opinion that all the unhealthy tendencies specified by the central leading comrades can be found in Henan to a certain degree, and in particular political liberalism and individualism are quite popular among a certain number of party member cadres. Some are keen on spreading "hearsay" and making mischief through gossip, some seek personal gains by taking advantage of their power and position and openly ask for greater power and better treatment from party organizations, and others even violate discipline and law and are involved in some major criminal cases.

Members of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee hold that, in provincial terms, the key to improving party conduct lies in the organs directly under the province and in leading cadres as well. For this reason, in improving party conduct, we should on no account adopt the method of "leading cadres are taken ill but cadres at the basic level take medicine." To this end, members of the provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee and leading cadres at or above the departmental level in the organs directly under the province should take the initiative.

The provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee has decided to set up a leadership group for improving party conduct in the organs directly under the province. It has also taken the following concrete measures:

1. To conscientiously study speeches by the central leading comrades. Leading cadres at various levels of all departments and units of the organs directly under the province should conscientiously study speeches by Comrade Hu Yaobang and other central leading comrades according to the actual conditions in the province and their units and in line with what they think.

They should also thoroughly understand the necessity, significance, and importance of taking the lead in improving party conduct by leading organs and cadres.

2. To strictly measure oneself. The provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee as well as the party committees and groups of all the departments and units directly under the province should maintain the normal practice of democracy and strictly measure themselves according to the guideline of speeches by the central leading comrades, and solve their own problems. While reviewing the problems identified in the course of party rectification, they should examine whether unhealthy tendencies are checked according to the requirements set by the party Central Committee and of peoples' expectations.

3. All the departments and units of the organs directly under the province should work out plans and measures for improving party conduct. They should also establish the responsibility system and accept supervision by the masses. If party conduct does not improve for a long time in some units, their principal leaders should be held responsible for it.

4. Major and important criminal cases should be investigated and dealt with without delay. Criminal cases involving responsible cadres, especially cadres at or above the departmental level should be thoroughly investigated and dealt with according to party discipline and state laws; no lenient treatment should be accorded to any criminals, even high-ranking officials. In investigating major and important criminal cases, any cadre who retaliates against those who expose crimes, or openly shields other's mistakes should be dealt with under party discipline and state laws.

GUIYANG HOLDS RALLY, SENTENCES ECONOMIC CRIMINALS

HK030904 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 27 Jan 86

[Text] On 27 January, Guiyang held a rally on seriously hitting at economic crimes. It sentences 13 economic criminals including (Zhang Yong) in a public trial it was attended by more than 2,800 workers of provincial and city organs.

At the rally, Ding Tingmo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech. He said: At present, the mainstream of the province's economic and political situation is very good. It is one of the best periods since the founding of the state. Judging from the experience gained over recent years, we think the most important point is that we have upheld, from start to finish, the principle of simultaneously grasping two areas, which was proposed by the 12th CPC Congress. On the one hand, we upheld the policy of opening up to the outside and invigorating the domestic economy; and on the other, we resolutely hit at serious crimes in both the economic and political and cultural circles which pose a threat to socialism.

Over the years, some economic criminals flaunted the banner of reforms and invigorating the economy while committing crimes. This reflects an important feature of the current economic crimes. Not only do various kinds of outrages committed by these criminals share no common ground with reforms and opening up, but they have also seriously undermined the policy of the reforms and opening up.

Comrade Ding Tingmo said: Party and government leaders at various levels, as well as responsible comrades of all departments, must, on the basis of heightening their understanding, really include in their daily agenda the struggle of hitting at serious economic crimes. The principal responsible comrades must personally handle the work. Nobody is allowed to ignore it. In the course of struggle, departments such as the discipline inspection, political, and legal departments, and industrial and commercial departments and auditing departments must coordinate closely with each other. They must be bold in tackling tough issues, overcome the influence of relationships, have a clear idea about the focal points, and handle major cases well. They must master the policy, strictly enforce the state's laws and regulations, strictly distinguish and correctly handle the contradiction between the two different kinds of matters. They should educate the masses by citing typical examples, and seriously do well in the work in an all-round way.

At the rally, the provincial people's higher court, the Yupyan District and Nanming District People's Courts of Guiyang City sentenced 13 people including (Zhang Yong) in a public trial.

Criminal (Zhang Yong) embezzled a huge amount of money and committed grave crimes. Therefore, his case is most serious. He was sentenced to death and deprived of political rights for life. Other criminals were also sentenced to fixed-term imprisonment.

GUIZHOU STUDIES CENTRAL LEADERS' SPEECHES

HK031415 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 30 Jan 86

[Excerpts] On 29 January, the provincial CPC Committee held a conference of responsible people from the provincial CPC Committee bureau and committees, as well as organs and party organizations directly under the provincial authorities. The conference reported the situation in studying the important speeches of central leaders, and the situation in correct party work style.

The conference was presided over by Ding Tingmo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee. Hu Jintao, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, said in a speech that organs directly under the provincial authorities must set examples for the province in the area of correcting party work style.

Comrade Hu Jintao said: Organs directly under the provincial authorities must treat as important the task of building the organs to campaign in taking the lead in correcting organ and party work style and in setting examples for the province. In other words, this is first proposed after considering the state and roles of the organs in the province. Second, this is proposed after taking into consideration the present situation of party work style among the organs.

Generally speaking, party work style of organs directly under the provincial authorities has developed in the right direction over the years. Most party members and cadres are good or relatively good people. But we must also realize that some units and departments engage, to varying degrees, in the unhealthy tendencies of bureaucratic work style; liberalism in the political circle; individualism in thinking, departmental selfishness in work; the practice of focusing on relationships rather than party spirit when selecting people and are lax in discipline. These tendencies were pointed out by the central leaders. In addition, some of them are very serious and some have even reached the stage of committing serious crimes.

If we do not correct party work style, it will be difficult to shoulder our glorious historical responsibilities. It will also hinder the progress of the four modernizations. No matter what kind of viewpoint they may take, they must set examples for the province in the areas of improving organ work style and correcting party style.

On the specific requirements of correcting unhealthy tendencies and party work style among the organs, Comrade Hu Jintao said: Organs directly under the provincial authorities must pay attention to the following points:

First, they must really grasp the work firmly. Party organization and discipline inspection committees, and particularly the principal leading comrades, of various units must place the task of correcting unhealthy tendencies in an important position.

Second, they must work hard and carry out the work in a down-to-earth manner. Starting from specific problems and cases, they must solve them one by one. They must not hide the facts or not solve the cases after investigation. In addition, they are not allowed to commit new mistakes in the course of investigation.

Third, they must grasp and handle the major cases. They must act unswervingly and in a bold manner.

Fourth, the leadership must take the lead in the work. When correcting party work style, they must start with the leading cadres, and encourage them to set examples for the others.

Fifth, they must resolutely grasp two areas at the same time. That is to grasp both the building of socialist material civilization and the building of socialist spiritual civilization. In other words, they must uphold the principles of reform and opening up, and implement the tasks of promoting a fundamental turn for the better in party work style and the general mood of society. Under no circumstances must they allow their will to waver.

In his conclusion, Comrade Hu Jintao pointed out: In the course of studying and examination, as well as the process of simultaneous rectification and correction of defects, we must mobilize the masses without making a terrific din. We must perfect the party's system of democratic activities and carry out criticism and self-criticism without allowing everyone to pass the examination or lauching any movements. The CPC Central Committee is very determined in terms of correcting party work style. It has also formulated the correct principles and plans. So long as we act in accordance with the CPC Central Committee and in a down-to-earth manner, we must achieve successes. Organs will certainly set examples for the province in the course of correcting party work style.

GUIZHOU'S HU JINTAO ATTENDS ARMED FORCES MEETING

HK010337 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The People's Armed Forces Commission of the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee held its ninth meeting on 31 January. The meeting stressed stepping up militia and reserve service work while building the two civilizations, and organizing and launching the militia to make greater contributions to building up Guizhou and enriching the people.

The meeting held: Last year the province's militia and reserve service work were stepped up in the course of reforms. The militia played a backbone role in building the two civilizations. The number of militia specialized households and economic combines has grown to 245,000. There are 12,953 civilized units which the militia have played a major role in building.

In upholding public order, 2,800 full-time Armed Forces cadres and over 50,000 militiamen have cooperated with the public security departments in capturing a number of criminals and unearthing some hidden loot. Over 100,000 militia have helped in fighting natural disasters, thus making a contribution to invigorating Guizhou.

The conference held: To organize and launch the militia to take part in building the two civilizations, focused on economic construction, and to do a good job in militia and reserve service work during the building of the two civilizations is an important guiding idea on militia and reserve service work in the new period. We must properly shift the focus of militia work to be subordinate to and serve the state's economic construction.

Hu Jintao, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and chairman of the provincial People's Armed Forces Commission, spoke at the meeting. He said: In the present circumstances, when the state is concentrating forces for economic construction and the PLA units are being greatly reduced and streamlined, we must do a thoroughly sound job in firming up militia and reserve service work, and set strict demands on training.

HK030959 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Excerpt] The conference of organization department directors of the city, prefectural, and autonomous prefectural CPC committees which was convened by the provincial CPC Committee's Organization Department and lasted 5 days concluded in Chengdu yesterday afternoon [29 January]. The conference discussed the problems of how to further strengthen the building of rural grass-roots party organizations in the new situation of reform so that rural grass-roots party organizations and party members can give better play to the role of a fighting force and to the vanguard and exemplary role. It also put forward the general requirements for correctly estimating the situation of grass-roots organizations; correctly handling relations among the grass-roots organizations; doing all aspects of grass-roots work well; raising grass-roots party organizations' combat effectiveness; and promoting reform of the rural economy. Comrades Yang Rudai and Nie Ronggui spoke at the conference. (Li Hongren), deputy director of the provincial CPC Committee's Organization Department, conveyed the spirit of the national forum on the building of rural grass-roots party organizations. La Jinxiu, Organization Department director, delivered a speech entitled: "Strengthen the Building of Rural Grass-roots Party Organizations and Promote Reform and Economic Development in Rural Areas."

At present, two main problems exist in building rural grass-roots party organizations and in party members in our province: 1) The new situation in rural reform is not suited; 2) the concept of the party is weak and a small number of party members and cadres lack the lofty communist ideals and sense of responsibility for building socialism. There are many reasons for the existence of these problems. One of the important reasons is that after the focal point of the party's work was shifted, some of our comrades lacked understanding of the importance of putting rural grass-roots party organizations on a sound basis and failed to grasp it firmly. They have insufficiently studied the new situation and the new problems which they have encountered in the course of advance. They have not solved them vigorously enough.

The conference put forward the main tasks of stengthening our province's rural grass-roots party organizations in the new situation:

1. It is necessary to further readjust and reinforce village leadership groups and to seriously readjust rural grass-roots party leadership groups this year and next year in accordance with the principle of four transformations of cadres.

2. It is essential to really strengthen training district and township cadres.

3. It is imperative to vigorously grasp the development of rural party members.

4. It is necessary to seriously and correctly handle relations between township and town organizations, to establish the basic work system, and to put it on a sound basis.

The conference demanded that CPC committees at all levels must strengthen leadership over the work of rural grass-roots party organizations.

Only by doing well in grasping the building of grass-roots party organizations can we really strengthen party leadership over rural work.

PU CHAOZHU ATTENDS YUNNAN RURAL WORK CONFERENCE

HK010147 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The provincial rural work conference convened by the Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee held a full session on 31 January, at which provincial CPC Committee Secretary Pu Chaozhu made an important speech. He dealt with the following issues:

1. On the question of how to view the rural situation, he said: The situation in Yunnan, as in the whole country, is very good. There is a diversity of views within this fine situation, and these need specific analysis. These views have emerged mainly around the readjustment of the rural production structure, reform of the circulation step up, comprehensive reform in the counties, and institution of financial responsibility systems. We should therefore unify the ideological understanding of the whole party, affirm its resolve and confidence for reform, have a clear idea of the orientation of reform, consolidate the fruits of reform, and digest, firm up, and perfect the various reform policies and measures. Problems that occur in the course of reform can only be solved by perfecting the reforms; we cannot go back to the old road.

2. On the question of perfecting the grain purchase contract system Pu Chaozhu said: The base figure for grain procurement in Yunnan has been readjusted many times, and the contract responsibility base figure stipulated to be kept unchanged for 10 years has now been included in the land contracts of the peasant households. The peasants have been glad to accept this. As a result of test by practice, everyone has publicly acknowledged that this is the most reasonable figure. Hence, in perfecting the grain contract purchase system, it is necessary to base the work on this reasonable grain requirement, and refrain from throwing it out. Grain contract purchase is an economic contract that needs gradual perfection, and is also a state task whose fulfillment must be assured.

3. On the question of increasing investment in agriculture Comrade Pu Chaozhu said: On this issue, we must first stress increasing investment in popularizing and applying science and technology. First, we must step up investment in science and technology for agriculture, animal husbandry, and forestry. This is an investment item that the majority of counties are currently able to shoulder. Second, we must increase investment in water conservancy construction and in improving the basic conditions for agriculture. The focus in short-term water conservancy construction investment is on repairing facilities destroyed by the floods last year, so as to guarantee this year's production.

4. On the question of relying on science and technology to invigorate the rural economy Comrade Pu Chaozhu said: There are in fact two steps in developing the rural economy. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we relied on policies to reform the people's commune management system. To switch the rural areas to commodity production and modernization, the production level has to advance a new step. Only by relying on science and technology to improve yields and improve agricultural productivity can we achieve this switch.

5. On the question of actively supporting and developing the township enterprises Comrade Pu Chaozhu said: The township enterprises in Yunnen got off to a late start, and their base figure is low.

The problem of excessive development does not exist in this province. We must continue to adopt the guideline of actively supporting and vigorously supporting these enterprises.

6. On helping poor areas transform their appearance Pu Chaozhu said: Yunnan has about 4 million people living in particularly poor areas. We must assign responsibility to different levels, concentrate the forces of all sectors, seek truth from facts, act in light of local conditions, take advantage of local strong points and avoid weak ones, and properly solve the food and clothing problems there as soon as possible. We should gradually create the necessary basic conditions for them to develop commodity production.

7. On the question of strengthening leadership and improving work style Comrade Pu Chaozhu said: Leadership means service. The leaders at all levels must go down to the grass-roots to investigate and study, draw nourishment from the masses' practice, and do a thoroughly sound job in working to invigorate the rural economy.

[Excerpts] The Yunnan Provincial CPC Committee's 9-day rural work conference concluded in Kunming on 1 February. Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Liu Shusheng presided. Secretary Pu Chaozhu was present. Deputy Secretary and Governor He Zhiqiang delivered a summation entitled: "Do a Good Job of Providing Services, Do More Practical Deeds, and Make New Contributions To Developing the Rural Economy."

He Zhiqiang said: That all sectors and trades should serve agriculture is determined by the status and role of agriculture. This has been our consistent principle. All sectors and trades must promote service work, centering on developing rural commodity economy and stimulating the advance of agricultural modernization. The leaders at all levels, all departments, and all sectors and trades must further deepen their understanding of the importance of rural work, firmly embrace the idea of serving agriculture, and persevere in promoting service for agriculture.

Comrade He Zhiqiang said: To serve the development of rural economy, it is necessary to coordinate the efforts of various sectors and get a good grasp of the following task: 1) Put the agricultural education system on a sound basis and train talented people urgently needed in the rural areas. 2) Mobilize the forces of the whole of society to vigorously popularize the fruits of agricultural science and technology. 3) Actively promote the spark plan and vigorously support the development of township enterprises. 4) Help poor areas to identify key projects for getting rich and transforming their poverty as soon as possible.

In conclusion, Comrade He Zhiqiang gave his views on implementing the spirit of this conference. He demanded that all localities organize forces to publicize the spirit of the central and provincial rural work conferences and implement the relevant policies and regulations down to the grass-roots as soon as possible. Efforts should be made to achieve still greater success in the province's rural reforms and economic development.

SUN WEIBEN SPEAKS AT HEILONGJIANG CADRE MEETING

SK311105 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 30 Jan 86

[Text] On 30 January the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee held a meeting of cadres of the provincial-level organs to mobilize party members and cadres of the provincial-level organs to further study and implement the guidelines of the speeches of the central leading comrades at the meeting of cadres of the central organs, to take vigorous action and serve as examples for the whole province in rectifying party style, and to make new and greater contributions to achieving fundamental improvements in party style and social conduct, thereby deepening the whole economic structure reform focusing on the reform of the urban economy and fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over and addressed the meeting. Hou Jie, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech to mobilize and make arrangements for the provincial-level organs to improve party style. Chen Lei, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, also gave a speech at the meeting. The title of his speech was: "The Leading Cadres of Provincial-Level Organs Should Serve as Models in Improving Party Style."

Sun Weiben said: [Begin recording] Just now, Comrade Hou Jie made specific plans for improving the party style of the provincial-level organs on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and government. Comrade Chen Lei has also given very good suggestions. Now, let me repeat the following few issues before ending this meeting. First, we should fully understand the important significance of making the provincial-level organs play an exemplary role in improving party style. Improving the party style is the most prominent issue among the current tasks of running the party strictly and strengthening the building of the party. In the past we often said that improving party style is a major issue affecting the life or death of the party. Judging from the situation of the province, improvements in the party style of the provincial-level organs have a vital bearing on a fundamental turn for the better in the party style of the whole province. In the course of checking malpractices, it will be more convincing and appealing if the provincial-level organs have good party style and if all the key problems have been solved.

There is an old saying that if one does not behave properly, how can he expect others to behave properly? What we expect of the lower-level units and other people must be done by the provincial-level organs and the leaders of the provincial CPC Committee first. And what we do not want the lower-level units and other people to do must also not be done by the provincial CPC Committee leaders and the provincial-level organs. We should follow this rule. Judging from the current situation, our province still has many problems in its party style. Just now, Comrade Hou Jie also cited facts and manifestations in many fields in his speech. These manifestations show that we are still far from meeting the demands of achieving a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

Recently, the central authorities held a meeting of cadres of the central-level organs, calling on these organs to serve as examples for the whole country with their actual deeds. This has created a very good situation for us to strengthen the building of the party and provided very advantageous conditions for us. Such a major policy decision and move is in accord with the desires of the party and the people. It will surely play a great part in promoting a fundamental turn for the better in party style and social conduct and will exert a profound and far-reaching influence on the people. In order to create such a good situation, we should work unswervingly in line with the demands of the central authorities and should strive to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

All of you should note that this is a very urgent task for party organizations at all levels of the provincial-level organs.

All departments and units of the provincial-level organs and each and every Communist Party member should conscientiously study and understand the guidelines of the speeches of the central leading comrades concerning this work. In the course of checking malpractices, should serve as leadership cores and fighting bastions worthy of the name and should fully display our vanguard and exemplary role.

Second, we should strengthen our confidence in achieving fundamental improvements in party style. In Comrade Hou Jie's specific plans, he also mentioned this: The provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee has discussed and decided that the provincial-level organs should exert 1 year of untiring efforts and take the lead in completing the task of improving party style by the end of this year. At present, some comrades have questioned whether it is possible for them to fundamentally improve party style. In short, they are both happy and anxious. They are happy that the situation is very good and that the central authorities have paid great attention to the work. They also worry that the people will say much but do little, and will intentionally do perfunctory work and fail to really solve the problems.

Such a state of mind is not absolutely groundless. In the speeches the central leading comrades, they also mentioned that we have grasped party style problems in the past few years but the results are not ideal. Some work styles of the party-member cadres and some social habits are really very bad. Some are even very corrupt. In the discussions held at a Standing Committee meeting, the participants finally reached the conclusion that so long as we make up our minds and exert efforts to improve our work style, it is absolutely possible for us to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style. We should implement the principle of the central authorities which calls for resolute and persistent efforts in improving party style. Regardless of who is involved, we should not give consideration to personal feelings.

We should grasp the work firmly and through to the end no matter what obstacles and influence we may encounter. If we fail to do this, it will be impossible for us to check all evil trends and malpractices.

Third, the provincial-level organs should serve as examples for the whole province and make due contributions to fundamentally improving the party style. The provincial-level organs throughout the province should take the lead in this regard. The Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee should start the work first. The leading bodies of the six provincial-level departments should start the work on their own initiative. In addition to not abusing power to seek personal gain, they must also work selflessly and serve as models in observing laws and discipline. Furthermore, they must also educate their relatives and children not to engage in malpractices. However, if their children have problems, they must allow the relevant departments to handle them in line with party discipline and state laws.

As for unhealthy trends in various fields, the leading comrades should be brave in grasping, checking, and resisting them. The Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee should take the lead in doing this. They should serve as examples for others. The top leaders of the provincial-level organs, establishments, and units should also take the lead in this regard. They should let one person's examples stimulate the whole group and the examples of a whole group of persons to stimulate all the people. We should establish the responsibility system in improving party style at all levels. If a unit fails to improve its party style for a long time, then the leaders of this unit should be regarded as derelict in their duty and should be called to account. Therefore, each and every unit should firmly grasp the work and clearly understand the major problems in its unit and should find out the main direction to deal with their problems.

TEXT They should put forward measures and guarantee improvements in its party style.

In order to start the work first in the provincial CPC Committee, the Standing Committee has decided to devote several half-days to hold regular activities of organizations prior to Spring Festival, make comparisons and conduct examinations in line with their actual situations, and conduct criticism and self-criticism.

Five other major provincial-level departments have also decided to do the same. Comrade Hou Jie has made known our stands on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and government. We welcome all of you to criticize and supervise the leading bodies of the six provincial-level organs in an effort to help us do a good job in conducting rectification and making corrections.

Fourth, the whole party should grasp party style, and should improve party style in all fields. Leaders of the provincial CPC Committee should take the lead in this regard and realistically make all party members manage party affairs. The discipline inspection commissions as well as the CPC committees should grasp party style. The CPC committees should include improving party style on their agenda. All leaders should assume responsibility in the work, follow, trust, and, rely on the masses, and realistically create a political situation in which the whole party has grasped party style. If a Communist Party member fails to pay attention to party style, he cannot be called a qualified Communist Party member. All provincial-level department, after this meeting, should immediately arrange the time, at least two half-days, to study the speeches of the central leading comrades prior to the Spring Festival. They should also study the documents and regulations issued by the central authorities, the plans given by Comrade Hou Jie at this meeting on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and government, and Comrade Chen Lei's speech.

We should conscientiously study these documents and speeches in line with the situations in our units, and make corrections in the course of study. After study we should work out and implement specific measures for correction. All in all, our provincial-level organs should, on the basis of the existing party rectification achievements, consolidate and develop the party rectification achievements and comprehensively advance the work of fundamentally improving party style. To this end, we should take improving party style as a driving force to stimulate us to fulfill the various tasks put forward by the provincial CPC Committee work conference held last year.

Comrades, as long as we act firmly in accordance with the demands of the CPC Central Committee, display fully the exemplary role of the provincial-level organs, and allow the masses to give criticism and supervision, and make the leading comrades at all levels personally assume leadership over the work and grasp the work bravely, unhealthy trends surely will be checked. The fundamental improvements in the party style of provincial-level organs will surely be achieved within this year and a gratifying situation in the party style and social conduct of the whole province will surely emerge. HEILONGJIANG CPC CIRCULAR ON EXPULSION OF CADRES

SK040212 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Text] The Discipline Inspection Commission of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee has issued a circular on expelling from the party (Wang Zhengming), former member of the leading party group of the provincial Power Industry Bureau and deputy director of the bureau, and two other bureau-level cadres for extortion and accepting bribes. The circular calls on party organizaitons at all levels throughout the province to thoroughly investigate all law violators, no matter who they are, how high they rank, how long they have been in service, and how able they are. At the same time, those leading cadres who have given unprincipled protection to officials violating the law and discipline, have harbored and connived with evildoers, and have bent the law for the benefit of relatives and friends should be held to account.

At the end of 1984, asked by his relative (Gao Jude), (Wang Zhengming), former member of the leading party group of the provincial Power Industry Bureau and deputy director of the bureau, made a phoe call to the Harbin Power Industrial Equipment Plan subordinate to the provincial Power Industry Bureau. Through the phone call, (Wang Zhengming) forced this plant to sell 50 tons of rolled steel at preferential prices to the Linyi County Fuel Company in Shandong Province. For this deal, (Gao Jude) asked for 25,000 yuan in commissions from the buyer of the rolled steel. After receiving the cash, (Gao Jude) made his wife and son send 10,000 yuan of cash to (Wang Zhengming) on 30 January and 15 February 1985 respectively. In fear of the leakage of this malpractice, on 15 March 1985 (Wang Zhengming) sent (Gao Jude) to Shandong Province's Linyi County to inquire about the situation. Informed of the fact that there was no problem there, he set his mind at rest. On 24 March when the buyer of the steel sent someone to visit (Wang Zhengming) at his house, (Wang Zhengming) did not return the illicit money. Then, along with the further development of party rectification of this bureau and the investigation of the provincial integrated investigation group (Wang Zhengming) had a premonition that this illegal deal would be brought to light. Therefore, he sent the 10,000 yuan of illicit money back to the house of (Gao Jude) and made (Gao Jude) return this money to the Linyi County Fuel Company. In October when the leading party group of the provincial Power Industry Bureau talked with (Wang Zhengming) on whether there was any problem in approving the purchased of this amount of steel, (Wang Zhengming) continued to conceal this malpractice.

(Yang Cheng), former secretary of the leading party group of the Harbin City Industrial and Commercial Administration Bureau and director of the bureau, obtained personal gain on many occasions by using the opportunities of giving business licenses, and extorted and accepted more than 16,000 yuan in bribes. His other links to crimes are under investigation.

(Yi Jingshan), former secretary of the CPC Committee of the Harbin City Real Estate Bureau, shielded and supported criminals to commit crimes during the time when he was responsible for the work of this bureau. In purchasing rolled steel and locks for a subordinate unit alone, he received 20,000 yuan in cash bribes and a color television set worth 1,800 yuan from criminals. His other links to crimes are under investigation.

In its circular, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission pointed out: As high-ranking cadres of the party, (Wang Zhengming), (Yang Cheng), and (Yi Jingshan) have gone so far as taking advantage of their positions and power to seek personal gains and accept a huge sum in bribes. They have completely forfeited the character of a party member and the qualifications for serving as leading cadres, and embarked on the road of crime.

With the decision of the leading party group of the provincial Power Industry Bureau, the provincial CPC Committee approved the expulsion of (Wang Zhengming) from the party, and suggested his dismissal from all his administrative posts. With the decision of the Harbin City CPC Committee and the people's government, (Yang Cheng) and (Yi Jingshan) were dismissed from the party and all their posts. A few days ago the abovementioned three criminals were arrested by the judicial departments.

The circular states: As bureau-level cadres, failing to withstand the temptation of corrosive bourgeois ideas and money, (Wang Zhengming), (Yang Cheng), and (Yi Jingshan) fell captive to selfish desires and money, forsook the purpose of wholeheartedly serving the people, departed from the correct stand and moral character of communists, and degenerated into borers eating away at the foundations of the socialist construction cause and into criminals against the people.

It is not accidential that these three cadres embarked on the road of crime. (Wang Zhengming) committed serious mistakes early in the Cultural Revolution period. When the evil trend of issuing lavish cash prizes and materials ran rampant in society, he indulged in this trend, and became the person who received more cash prizes and materials than anyone else in the bureau. (Yang Cheng) and (Yi Jingshan) had been warned in the past by organizations against abusing their power to serve their own interests. But they did not heed the warning, and were not worried at all. In the course of party rectification they refused to correct their mistakes, straighten out their ideological style, and draw lessons from their past mistakes. On the contrary, they continued to go single-mindedly after money, and fished for a huge amount of profits. Finally, they have degenerated and embarked on the abyss of crimes.

In the circular, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission also pointed out: Although the number of persons in the party who accepted a huge sum in bribes, like (Wang Zhengming), (Yang Cheng), and (Yi Jingshan), is not large, this is not an individual case, and the cases of accepting bribes involving 10,000 yuan each have taken place here and there. Party organizations at all levels must pay serious attention to this situation; should seriously and conscientiously investigate and deal with those evil trends and specific law violations which have taken place in their subordinate localities and units; should administer the party severely; and should strictly execute party discipline and the state law. We should investigate and deal not only with law breakers, but also those leading cadres who have given unprincipled protection to law-breaking officials, harbored and connived with evildoers, and bent the law for the benefit of relatives and friends. Such leading cadres should be punished or brought to account as the case may require, and should never be treated softheartedly. Only by so doing can we effect a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

HEILONGJIANG REPORT ON OVERDUE TEACHERS' WAGES

SK020225 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Text] The general office of the provincial people's government recently relayed to various localities throughout the province the report submitted by the priovincial Educational Commission with regard to the outstanding accounts incurred by some localities with the teachers of the people-run schools and the opinions on dealing with these accounts.

In dealing with the outstanding accounts, the report puts forward the following four measures:

1. The people's governments at all levels and the departments in charge of the work should regard as a major item the wages of teachers of the people-run schools in carrying out the unified financial arrangements at the township level in order to strive to pay the teachers without delay, within the year payment is due, and to refrain from causing new debts.

2. The townships and villages that have had old debts in this regard should repay the debts annually from funds they have raised in line with their actual situation in order to thoroughly deal with the debts within 2 or 3 years.

3. Efforts should be made to conduct reasonable readjustment in the proportion between teachers of the state-run schools and those of the people-run schools in order to lighten the people's burdens.

4. A good job should be done in further carrying out the work-study program among the rural schools in order to increase their incomes and to gradually increase their proportion of funds raised through their own efforts.

'TERM RESPONSIBILITY SYSTEM' SUCCESSFUL IN SHENYANG

[Text] The "term responsibility system" for enterprise directors, under experiment for 20 months in Shenyang, Liaoning Province, has been a success. It has helped strengthen economic control, improved results and stabilized enterprises, according to Li Zhonglu vice-mayor of the city.

Under the system the term of office of a factory director is usually four to five years. When taking up a post, a director must submit a paper listing his or her targets. The paper should draw up yearly and long-term plans, and define ways to fulfill them, said Li, who used to be a machine engineer. It should also describe rewards and penalties, according to whether the goals are met or not.

The annual plans should cover quality, output, profit, technological innovation, research of new products, management, workers' training and welfare.

Experimental results in 233 Shenyang enterprises are encouraging, so the city government has decided to introduce the system to all enterprises, the vice-mayor told CHINA DAILY.

A survey of 18 enterprises using the new system shows that compared with the same period of 1984, their output value increased an average 22.8 per cent in the first 11 months of last year. Profits went up 56.6 per cent, and tax and profits turnover to the State, 25.4 per cent.

Under the system, the director and each worker have clearly defined responsibilities. Thus factories are conducted in an orderly fashion.

It helps prevent directors from concentrating mainly on current performance and neglecting the future expansion of the enterprise.

Some directors said that they used to plan production no more than one year in advance because they were eager for instant success and benefits. The new system ensures that enterprises will more wisely balance the relationship between their immediate and long-term interests.

The Shenyang Transformer Plant, for instance, is one of China's main transformer producers. But its equipment and test methods cannot meet current demands to expand production.

After the plant shifted to the new system, it concentrated labour, finances and materials on large-scale technological innovation, even though this means temporarily limiting current output. In this way, it hopes to revise all its products and double its output value in five years.

The new system makes it possible to appraise officials more effectively by using quantitative and qualitative methods.

The system also helps Party committees and workers' unions to set their work targets. For example, the Party Committee of the Shenyang Pneumatic Tools Plant has drawn up 26 goals including the political and ideological training of officials and workers. The workers' union has encouraged its members "to offer ideas to the director." Since last October, the director has received 430 suggestions on improving management and production. Two of them, helped increase profits by 420,000 yuan (about $131,000).

According to the vice-mayor, the introduction of the new system in a factory usually works as follows:

-- Based on the workers' nomination, the higher authorities choose a candidate for the director. Under the director's guidance, a set of targets are proposed by each management department and workshop.

-- The Party committee examines a draft paper of the comprehensive goals. At the same time, the factory management committee, which includes the director, the Party secretary, representatives of the workers' union, the Communist Youth League and workers, also discusses it. Then it must be approved by the workers' congress. After the higher authorities approve the paper, they officially name the director.

-- The director then releases the paper and all factory workers study it. Each management department, workshop and group is asked to plan its workload according to defined goals.

-- The higher authorities appraise the director's performance in light of the comprehensive paper each year and at the end of his or her term. The procedure is recorded and an evaluation is written. After the director reads these documents, they are put into his or her personal file.

-- Based on the director's performance, rewards and penalties are decided accordingly. Rewards include citations and promotions. Penalties include criticism, loss of bonuses, salary reduction and dismissal.

Similarly, the director appraises his or her subordinates and workers.

-- At the end of the director's term , a higher personnel department will arrange an audit. A decent record is imperative for a director seeking another term or promotion. Illegal practices will be dealt with by the law. Disciplinary measures will be meted out for minor errors.

SHAANXI LEADER ON CHECKING UNHEALTHY TENDENCIES

HK311340 Xian SHAANXI RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jan 86 pp 1, 4

[Report: "Bai Jinian Emphasizes Consolidating the Achievements of Party Rectification and Checking Unhealthy Tendencies in Leading Organs"]

[Text] To get a correct understanding of the situation of party rectification, it is necessary to both fully affirm the achivements of party rectification and notice the existing shortcomings and continue to earnestly and solidly grasp well the work of party rectification. Individualism, bureaucracy, liberalism and vestiges of factionalism as well as the phenomena of being extremely irresponsible concerning work, which exist in leading organs at or above country level, should all be conscientiously rectified as grave unhealthy tendencies. These were what Comrade Bai Jinian, the provincial CPC secretary, pointed out at a party rectification work conference of the provincial CPC committee held not long ago.

Comrade Bai Jinian said that our province's first stage of party rectification has been completed and the bulk of the second stage of party rectification will be finished around the Spring Festival. At present, some people are saying that the party rectification has not been very effective. And some even say that "carrying out party rectification and not carrying out party rectification are exactly the same" and that party rectification means "to have conscientiously gone through the formalities. These viewpoints and comments are one-sided and incorrect. Objectively speaking, both the first and second stages of party rectification have scored tremendous achievements. The party rectification has ensured the health development of our province's economic structural reform and work in various fields and the smooth readjustment of leading groups at all levels.

Comrade Bai Jinian gave a brief account of several main works grasped by the provincial CPC committee in 1985:

First, we grasped the work of eliminating "leftism" and breaking with outmoded customs, freeing ourselves from old ideas and perfecting the normal democratic life within the party. By doing so, the "Incantation of the Golden Hoop" [used by the monk in the novel "Pilgrimage to the West" to keep the monkey king under control] which has fettered our minds for so long has begun to be smashed; and we can speak more openly than before and have become invigorated. Second, we grasped reform. In addition to the reform of the cadre system, we emphatically grasped the economic structural reform centering on urban areas, whose focal point is to invigorate enterprises. We can say that the price reform is very successful. As we had adopted a series of measures and made sufficient material preparations, the price readjustment was smoothly carried out. We also enacted some relevant measures to prevent price hikes. In particular, the increase in revenue has ensured the smooth progress of the wage reform and price readjustment. Third, we grasped the work of checking the unhealthy tendencies within the party and scored tremendous achievements. These include the following: 1) We straighten out the guiding ideology for vocational work and made the work of every department obey and serve the general task of the party, and the leaders at all levels work more in line with the CPC Central Committee. 2) We have basically checked the unhealthy tendencies of indiscriminately distributing bonuses and material objects, wildly pushing up commodity prices, and allowing party and government organizations to engage in business. During the party rectification, more than 100 million yuan of illegal capital was discovered throughout the province, a number of serious criminals were punished, and a number of cadres were redeemed. 3) We conducted education to thoroughly negate the "Cultural Revolution."

The unhealthy tendencies and things left by the "Cultural Revolution" which were once reflected in the ideological and work styles in establishing personal relationships everywhere, getting in by the back door, breeding factional strife, and so on, have been corrected. During the party rectification, "the people of three categories" were basically sorted out. 4) As we conducted the education in basic knowledge of the party, the fine traditions of the party have been restored and brought into play in varying degrees, and party members' sense of organization and discipline has been strengthened.

Comrade Bai Jinian said that judging by these achievements, we have accomplished the four tasks of unifying thinking, rectifying work style, strengthening discipline and purifying organization in the party rectification well. Of course, there are still some corrupt phenomena and people in some places. However, speaking in terms of whole party, the healthy forces still enjoy immense superiority within the party and the majority of party members and cadres are good or relatively good.

While commenting on rectifying unhealthy tendencies, Comrade Bai Jinian stressed that leading organs and cadres should fight not only the unhealthy tendencies in connection with reform and the economy but also the various unhealthy tendencies relating to politics, ideology, and work style and attitude. We must not underestimate the harmfulness of these tendencies which are characterized by the following:

First, some people are apathetic, irresponsible, dilatory and seriously bureaucratic in their work and just like to occupy leading positions but not do anything. For example, not long ago when organs at the provincial level were mobilizing their personnel to work in the countryside, most comrades performed very well. However, there were actually a number of cadres who did not perform very well, including some members of the third echelon that we are training. They were so frightened of working in the countryside that they regarded it as a dangerous road to take and found various extraordinary excuses for refusing to go to the countryside. How could this worrying problem crop up? One of the very important causes is that since the "Cultural Revolution," great changes have taken place in the structure of the cadre contingent, in which many cadres are university graduates or were formerly unemployed youth. Many of them do not even know what the countryside is like and lack sympathy for the peasants. As the 800 million peasants account for the bulk of China's population, being ignorant of the countryside means being ignorant of the reality of China, which will certainly result in being divorced from reality; and being ignorant of the peasants means being ignorant of the people in China, which will certainly result in being divorced from the people.

As the fundamental aim of our Communist Party is to serve the majority of the people, if these people do not want to work in the countryside and do not want to serve the vast number of peasants, are they still communists?

Some years ago, some people worked in such a leisurely fashion that they tended "to while away half of their office hours in drinking tea, smoking cigarettes, and reading newspapers." At present, following the same work style, some youths come to work late but leave early and spend much of their time handling personal affairs. There are also some comrades who dream about being officials all day long. Some have even reached the shameless extreme of writing letters to establish personal relationships and brazenly ask for official positions. When some cadres succeed in becoming officials, be it section chief or deputy deparment chief, they put on the airs of overlords and ask their secretaries to do everything for them, even the writing of short notes. Since they just want to be officials, they are satisified to become any kind of "chief." This is utterly vulgar.

Second, acting in a seriously liberalistic fashion, some people tattle and prattle all day long and disseminate rumors. When an individual is promoted, these people go about inquiring who his "backstage boss" is and what kind of relationship they have. They simply view our party organizations, our organizational principles, and our interpersonal relationships from a feudalistic and bourgeois standpoint. How can this be tolerated? Some cadres in charge of very important affairs also make irresponsible comments. There are also cases of lodging false accusations. Some people write totally irresponsible letters to the upper levels, deliberately creating confusion. Therefore, "they spend 4 fen mailing a letter but you have to spend 6 months making investigations." This kind of evil tendency of liberalism should be checked right now.

Third, in handling relationships between individuals and organizations and between one individual and another, some people are still influenced by vestiges of factionalism. In judging people and things as well as right and wrong, some people do not proceed from the party's principles but from personal interests. As long as people are on good terms with them, they can change wrong into right; but if they are not, they can also change right into wrong or even give false testimonies. This kind of abominable behavior of making right into wrong, wrong into right, good into bad and bad into good is deviating from the party spirit and principles and is very harmful to oneself, to comrades, and to the revolutionary case.

Comrade Bai Jinian pointed out that these vestiges of individualism, bureaucracy, liberalism and factionalism as well as the phenomena of being extremely irresponsible concerning work should all be treated as serious unhealthy tendencies. We must not underestimate the harmfulness of these unhealthy tendencies. In some units, the harmfulness of these unhealthy tendencies has even surpassed the harm caused by unhealthy tendencies in the field of economies. Party and government organizations at all levels should attach importance to this problem. Whether it is in the form of making up for the missed lessons in the first stage of party rectification or putting a good end to the party rectification at the prefectural and county levels, the checking of these unhealthy tendencies should be considered an important task. Beginning with leading organs and cadres, party members and cadres should vie with each other in taking a good lead and strive to realize a fundamental improvement in the party's work style and social ethics.

BEIJING URGES TAIWAN TO END TRAVEL RESTRICTIONS

OW051309 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Station commentator's commentary: "It Is Good To Comply With the Will of the People"]

[Text] In handling the relationship between the two sides of the Strait, the Taiwan authorities have recently done a number of things that conform with the trend of the times and the will of the people. They have allowed movie star Yang Huishan and her family to visit Hong Kong to meet with their relatives from the mainland, relaxed the restrictions on off-limit areas for Taiwan seamen hired by foreign companies, and permitted a few organizations to subscribe to newspapers and periodicals published on the mainland. Although these measures by the Taiwan authorities to relax control are rather limited, it should be pointed out that they are conducive to establishing postal, transporation, and trade relations, and shortening the distance between the two sides. Also the measures represent, to a certain extent, progress by the Taiwan authorities.

Regrettably the Taiwan authorities have been unstable, and sometimes capricious, in making such progress. Recently they have issued a so-called order strictly banning visits to the mainland by the people. As is universally known, the two sides of the Strait were originally one country. Every Chinese citizen has the right to travel freely between the two sides. It is deplorable that, due to the abnormal separation caused by the unfortunate past of the nation, the people have not been able to exercise this sacred right for several decades. In order to compensate the people, the two sides should now fully cooperate with each other and make things convenient for the people.

However, the Taiwan authorities have brazenly interfered in the exercise of this right by banning people from visiting the mainland. Their reason is that they are afraid that people may be trapped, as they call it, by the united front. As is known by all, the mainland's united front work is open to everyone. A united front work department is set up within the framework of the people's government. The united front is neither a conspiracy nor a trap. The ultimate goal of united front work is to unite all forces that can be united in working together for the benefit of the country and people. This was so in the past, it is so now, it will continue to be so, and there is nothing whatsoever to be afraid of. A number of personages within the Kuomintang, deeply conscious of the righteousness of the cause, cooperated with the CPC for a long time, and knew united front work very well. Hence, the Taiwan authorities' allegation about being trapped by the united front reveals their fear of people visiting the mainland. What are they afraid of? In the past, people were afraid of the mainland because of the dreadful propaganda treatment of the mainland by Taiwan's mass media. Owing to the opening in various channels abroad over the recent years, people on Taiwan have gradually come to understand the true situation on the mainland, thus dispelling their misunderstanding and apprehension, and exposing the lies of some people. As an old saying goes, it is better to see once than hear a hundred times. With this mentality in mind, many Taiwan compatriots naturally wish to visit and tour the mainland in order to make up their own minds on right and wrong. This is only reasonable. Especially those with relatives and old friends on the mainland try by every means to seek an opportunity to return to the mainland. All of these things reflect human feelings and are beyond reproach.

In view of the situation, the Taiwan authorities should ask themselves: Why do more people want to visit the mainland at a time when the authorities are more vigorously banning visits to the mainland? What does this show? The answer is simple: It is because people have already lost faith in the authorities.

However, not knowing this situation, the authorities punish people who have visited the mainland with the so-called regulations governing exit from and entry into the Taiwan region during the period of the suppression of the rebellion. The consequences of this so-called suppression of the rebellion over the past few decades are well known to all. Today the situation has changed: The civil war has ended, and even the confrontation with artillery is a thing of past. Since January 1979, the people's government on the mainland has proposed peace talks between the Kuomintang and the CPC in order to fulfill jointly the great undertaking of the reunification of the motherland and to end the painful separation. Based on suggestions from various quarters, the mainland has successively made proposals for peaceful reunification of the motherland.

However, the Taiwan authorities have always rejected proposals for important matters concerning the future of the country and people (?in the three areas). Fearful of people's opposition to such a stubborn attitude, the Taiwan authorities have often intimidated people with the notorious banner of the so-called suppression of the rebellion. Didn't the hundreds of millions of compartriots pay a dear price for the so-called suppression of the rebellion in the past? Shouldn't the many human tragedies caused by it be ended as quickly as possible?

The Taiwan authorities so-called regulations governing exit from and entry into the Taiwan region during the period of suppression of the rebellion have long been opposed and spurned by the people on Taiwan. Parliamentarians on Taiwan have repeatedly appealed to the authorities to abolish the regulations. In short, the Taiwan authorities should learn the truth from the experience of the past decades that the will of the people cannot be ignored.

PRESIDENT CHIANG CHING-KUO REAFFIRMS POLICY

OW060139 Taipei Domestic Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] President Chiang Ching-kuo invited the presidents and vice presidents of the Executive Yuan, the Legislative Yuan, the Judicial Yuan, the Examination Yuan, and the Control Yuan to a tea party yesterday at the Presidential Palace. He praised and encouraged government departments which worked hard to serve the people in the past year. He also exchanged views with the chiefs of the five yuans on the current political situation. After being briefed on the yuans' work, President Chiang pointed out: The five yuans constitute the entire government. They are endowed with the authority to exercise power in the spirit of the Constitution. However, they are complementary to one another in pursuit of the general interests of the nation. He also made several important instructions at the tea party:

The purpose of building national defense is to consolidate the foundation of the country. Over the years substantial progress has been made in building the Army and in war preparedness. Our present task is to put extra efforts into the research and development of national defense science, technology, and national defense industry in order to accelerate modernization of the national Army and to ensure national security.

A solid foundation has been laid in economic development. At this juncture of the transitional period, the whole nation should unite to forge ahead and overcome hurdles in order to enter the ranks of developed countries. Our economy maintained proper growth last year despite the influence of an international recession. We should continue to work hard in preparation for economic recovery.

We should uphold the highest principles of the Constitution and follow the course of democracy and law and order in political and social construction. Gearing to the need of the country, we should follow the best path and act accordingly.

Local elections last year and this showed the prevailing mood of the people: They long for political stability and social peace. Government departments should take chis as a basis in implementing policy.

As for the construction of education and culture, we should aim at developing the intellectual education of our nationals. More attention should be paid to a broad, equal, and balanced development of intellectual education and its results. Today's ever-changing social situation makes it more important to foster independent thought, social ethics, a law-abiding spirit, and discipline in our citizens. We should continuously work toward strengthening that spirit so as to better contribute to the progress of the country.

Summing up the situation of the country last year, President Chiang noted that our country met with many difficulties; there were also many shortcomings in the administration of the government. However, difficulties were overcome one by one, thanks to the cooperation and close unity of the people, but more difficulties and obstacles still lie ahead. However, we should persevere and forge ahead so as to strive for bigger results.

President Chiang also stressed the need to uphold democracy and the Constitution, saying the basic national policy of anticommunism and recovery of the mainland will never be changed. The government should humbly review its policy from time to time. We should constantly seek renovation by following the route of strengthening the foundation of law and magnifying the role of the present system. He hoped that all would display the spirit of sincerity, hard work, and thrift; offer suggestions to raise the nation's standing and people's welfare; and unite as one to advance on the road to success.

CHIANG CHING-KUO URGES DILIGENCE BY KMT MEMBERS

OW060357 Taipei CNA in English 0316 GMT 6 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 5 (CNA) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo, in his capacity as chairman of the ruling political party Kuomintang, Wednesday called on party members to make more friends among the public, be humble and open-minded, in order to close all ranks of the nation to overcome any difficulties in a joint effort to build a new future.

Speaking at the Central Standing Committee meeting, Chiang said the Feb. 1 election at the local level bore great significance. He said he appreciates the general public's support to the ruling party. He also thanked election supervisers for their hard work during the past weeks.

The success of the election demonstrates the government's determination and confidence to fully implement the constitutional democracy in this country, no matter how difficult the situation would be, said the president.

The Kuomintang is a party that belongs to all the people. It is a progressive and open-minded party, he said. The KMT always stands with the republic, and abides by the basic principle of giving first and foremost consideration to serving national interest, he added.

The party should absolutely not be complacent with the success of the election in which the KMT won the majority of the seats, he said. On the contrary, he added: "We should humbly look into areas where improvement can be made, and continue our efforts to struggle further for the nation and the people.

President Chiang called on all KMT party workers to look upon themselves as "public servants," and to be diligent and sincere. Party workers should make more friends among the people and listen to the opinions of the people with an open mind, so as to unite national strength to create a new future for the nation, he urged.

President Chiang made the remarks after hearing reports on the local elections from Sung Shih-hsuan, director of the Department of Organizational Affairs; Kuan Chung, chairman of the KMT Taiwan Provincial Commission; and Chiu Chuang-huan, chairman of the Taiwan Provincial Election Commission.

MINISTRY WARNS TRADERS AGAINST PRC INTRIGUES

OW041001 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] The Ministry of Economic Affairs [MOEA] of the Republic of China warned local businessmen who engage in trade transactions with their counterparts in Hong Kong against possible Chinese Communist political intrigues. The Ministry of Economic Affairs reported the Republic of China's trade with Hong Kong showed drastic ups and downs last year and suggested that local traders be on alert of Peking's united front tactics.

MOEA figures show trade with Hong Kong in the first 4 months last year registered a wide growth, ranging between 46 percent and 54.7 percent. However, Peking narrowed down its imports because of foreign exchange shortage after last May. Consequently, the Republic of China's export growth with Hong Kong dropped to 18.6 percent in May.

ZHU HOUZE ON CASE INVOLVING GENERALS' CHILDREN

[Report by staff correspondent Cheng Hsiang: "Zhu Houze Confirms That Children of Generals Will Be Put on Trial"]

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb -- Today Zhu Houze, director of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, said: Everyone is equal before the law. This is more true of high-ranking cadres because they are more influential. Zhu Houze made these remarks when he answered questions raised by this reporter at a Spring Festival evening party held by the All-China Journalists Association.

When asked by a foreign reporter if the issue of two children of generals being jailed as reported by this newspaper will be made public, he said: "Our judicial organs are studying and handling the case. You may wait and read our newspapers."

He stressed that the central authorities were firmly determined to curb the unhealthy practices prevailing among high-ranking cadres. He did not rule out the possibility of making the details of related cases public.

FIRMS DENY BLAME FOR RADIOACTIVE CARGO INCIDENT

HK050711 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 5 Feb 86 p 1

[By Albert Chan]

[Text] The mystery of how an unlabelled cargo of radioactive material came to spend a month on a Hong Kong dock deepened yesterday -- with none of the firms involved ready to shoulder the blame. Indian Rare Earth Co which sold radioactive monazite sand to an American company last year and ended up with the cargo stranded in Hong Kong, said the blame for the whole incident should be put on the American firm.

Derby and Co of London which is a division of Pilipp Brothers, a US firm in New York, bought 500 tons of monazite sand from the Indian comapny last summer and shipped it to Shanghai via Hong Kong. The cargo did not carry a label stating that it was radioactive as required by law and it was refused entry by Shanghai port authorities when the Chinese discovered the cargo was radioactive.

The shipment was sent back to Hong Kong and stayed here for a month while negotiations proceeded with Chinese customs authorities.

A spokesman for the Indian company said from his Bombay office yesterday it was not the responsibility of his company to put labels on the cargo indicating it was radioactive. "We had not been instructed by Derby and Co to do so," he said. In London, Mr D. Hirsch of Derby and Co refused to comment on the case. He said enquiries should be directed to the press officer of the parent company in New York. The press officer was not available for comment yesterday at his New York office.

UN ENVOY CALLS ISRAELI ACTION 'DESPICABLE'

[Text] United Nations, February 6 (XINHUA) -- Chinese permanent representative to the United Nations Li Luye said here today that the nature of the Israeli interception of a Libyan civilian airliner "is indeed despicable." In a speech at the Security Council, Li said, "The interception grossly trampled underfoot the norms of international law and violated the provisions pertaining to international civil aviation, jeopardizing the safety of the life of the innocent people and the freedom and safety of civil aviation, and constitutes a new threat to the peace and security in the Middle East."

Israeli Air Forces Tuesday intercepted a Libyan jet airliner, on which Israel alleged there were "persons suspected of involvement in the preparation of anti-Israeli terrorist attacks." "The incident of February 4 shows that the Israeli authorities are bent on deliberate violations in total disregard of the resolutions and authority of the Security Council, which should never be countenanced," said the Chinese representative. The U.N. Security Council solemnly warned Israel, after the interception of August 10, 1973 over the airspace of Lebanon, to desist from repeating such acts.

Li said: "The Chinese delegation holds that the Israeli authorities' acts of hegemonism conducted under the pretext of retaliation against terrorism must be resolutely stopped and strongly condemned. Otherwise, the sovereignty and security of the Middle East countries will be subjected to a grave threat, and the world shall be deprived of tranquility." He called upon the Security Council to "adopt forceful measures to effectively prevent any recurrence of interception of hijacking of civilian airplanes."

UK DEMONSTRATORS PROTEST AT U.S. MISSILE BASE

[Text] London, February 6 (XINHUA) -- About 5,000 anti-nuclear campaigners today blockaded the proposed second U.S. cruise missile base at Molesworth, 95 kilometers northwest of London. The one-day demonstration started early in the morning. People of all ages, men and women, arrived there in shifts from all over the country, braving the unusually heavy snowfall, to obstruct the construction work of the base. Despite the bitter cold and icy weather, they sat in the four-inch (10 cm) deep snow for hours, kept their spirit up by dancing and singing at the four gates of the base and stopped vehicles getting in or out of it.

The Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (CND), the main peace movement in Britain which organized today's demonstration, criticized the British Government for letting more nuclear missiles be deployed in this country and at the same time they underlined that they were opposed to nuclear arms race by the United States and the Soviet Union. Since the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) decided in 1979 to deploy U.S. cruise missiles in Europe, opinion polls in Britain have consistently shown that the majority of the public are against the deployment in the country. Of the 160 U.S. cruise missiles to be deployed in Britain, 64 are due to be sited at Molesworth by 1988. Reportedly, 32, or possibly 48, are already deployed at Greenham Common, the first cruise base. On February 6 last year, 1,500 troops and the same number of police, led by the then Defense Secretary Michael Heseltine, moved in Molesworth during the middle of the night to evict forcibly the peace campers and start construction work. At the end of today's non-violent blockade marking the first anniversary of the eviction, five people were arrested by police for allegedly trying to damage the 10-foot high perimeter fence.

GORBACHEV URGES 'PRACTICAL RESULTS' AT SUMMIT

[Text] Moscow, February 6 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev said today that the next Soviet-U.S. summit, due later this year but the specific date is yet to be agreed upon, should produce practical results, or it would have no meaning.

Meeting U.S. Senator Edward Kennedy, who arrived here Tuesday for a visit at the invitation of the Soviet parliament, Gorbachev said his Geneva summit last November with U.S. President Ronald Reagan created conditions for rectifying relations between their two countries, the Soviet news agency TASS reported. "But verbal tribute alone to the understanding of the danger of the present-day situation is no longer enough," Gorbachev was quoted as saying. The Soviet leader stressed that the next superpower summit "should yield practical results, produce serious shifts in the directions that are of greatest importance for the cause of peace." Otherwise, he added, such a meeting would be senseless.

Gorbachev said the Soviet Union is doing everything to ensure a fruitful summit. He cited his latest disarmament proposal as a proof for that. The proposal he announced three weeks ago calls for eliminating all nuclear weapons in the world in three stages by the year 2000. The Soviet arms control plan, Gorbachev claimed, offers a "unique chance" to improve radically the Soviet-U.S. relations and "realize the most cherished dream of peoples about durable peace," TASS said. This chance should not be lost, he added.

At today's meeting, TASS said, Gorbachev and Kennedy also discussed the Soviet proposal for eliminating all Soviet and American medium-range missiles in Europe. Like the proposal to halt nuclear tests, Gorbachev said, no strings are attached to this proposal, barring the pledge by Britain and France "not to build up their respective nuclear arms and not to transfer such weapons to other countries," TASS said. At the talks, Kennedy put forward a number of ideas which he said might contribute to arms reductions, TASS said. They also discussed the need for better mutual understanding based on non-interference in each other's internal affairs, the Soviet news agency said.

Money and goods confiscated from members of the gang totaled 700,000 rubles (about 875,000 U.S. dollars). One of the ringleaders of the gang, Bobrov, was the commerce bureau chief of Rostov, who was sentened to death.

KOREAN COMMITTEE OPPOSES 'TEAM SPIRIT' EXERCISES

OW070856 Beijing XINHUA in English 0819 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 7 (XINHUA) -- The United States should immediately cancel its plan to hold a joint military exercise with South Korea, a memorandum issued here yesterday said. The memorandum, released by the Pyongyang-based Korean Committee for Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland, also urged the United States to withdraw its troops and all nuclear weapons from the Southern part of Korea and stop interfering in Korean affairs.

The United States and South Korean authorities announced on January 18 that they would hold joint military exercises, code-named "Team Spirit-86" from February 10 to late April, with 200,000 troops participating. The memorandum denounced the joint military war games as preparations for both conventional and nuclear war against the Northern part of Korea, as some nuclear weapons and electronic technology are believed to be part of the upcoming exercises. The exercises, the memorandum pointed out, is completely contrary to the spirit of 1986 as the "International Peace Year" and poses a serious challenge to the North-South dialogue and the peaceful reunification of Korea.

The memorandum called on governments, communities and peoples all over the world to back the call for a halt to the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercises' which will disrupt once again the North-South dialogue and create (?tension) on the Korean peninsula.

S.KOREAN UNIVERSITY STUDENTS STAGE DEMONSTRATIONS

[Text] Pyongyang, February 5 (XINHUA) -- About 2,000 police were called out to the campus of Seoul National University yesterday to disperse 1,000 students demonstrating against the South Korean authorities, according to the Korea national news agency. The news agency quoted a Seoul radio report as saying the students retaliated with petrol bombs and stones. The demonstration, the largest so far this year, lasted for more than four hours.

The students, from nine different universities in Seoul, held a meeting on the campus to form an inter-college body, the report said. In a statement issued yesterday, the Pyongyang-based Korean Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland condemned the South Korean authorities for suppressing the student movement. It said the movement is not a crime but a patriotic struggle. The statement urged the south Korean authorities to release the 19 students arrested during a three-day occupation of the U.S. Information Service Center in Seoul last May.

FIGHTERS REPULSE 10 SRV ATTACKS ON YUNNAN FRONT

[By reporter Li Shiyuan]

[Text] Kunming, 7 Feb (XINHUA) -- On the eve of the Spring Festival, the Vietnamese Army continuously launched armed provocations against our Army in the Yunnan border area. The 4th company of a certain regiment of Yunnan's border defense force firmly held their position and was commended in a circular issued by the leading organ at the higher level for having bravely repulsed 10 Vietnamese Army offensives in a day.

On an early morning a few days ago, clouds and fog curled up and wound around a nameless highland. The Vietnamese Army fiercely bombarded our border area. As a result, the nameless highland was enveloped in gunsmoke. The Vietnamese Army then divided its force into three parts and launched an offensive against our Army. Immediately, gunshots, cannon report, and grenade explosions filled the air. Qiang Jun, deputy leader of our 4th company, led a squad to firmly hold the highland's most forward position. He ordered his fighters to take cover well and stop shooting until the enemy was near. Fifty meters, 40 meters, 30 meters...the enemy was getting closer and closer. As soon as Qiang Jun gave his order, fighters' submachineguns and light and heavy machineguns cracked and the enemy fell.

Our Army's sentry post No 5 stood on a commanding height, which the enemy rabidly attempted to seize. Wei Xuedang, leader of the 3d platoon, let four fighters in firmly holding that position. He was wounded three times, but he insisted on fighting. He encouraged the fighters by saying: "The Spring Festival is coming soon. All people in the country are watching us. We must hold our position and defend the people of our motherland who are enjoying the Spring Festival." Li Yicheng, a veteran fighter hailing from the Yimeng mountain region, was urged by his home to return and get married during the Spring Festival period. He said: Without state security, nobody can enjoy happiness. My aspiration is to have all families united. While in combat, he was wounded in the belly and could not stand. He crawled into a trench and used a machinegun to strafe the enemy.

AUSTRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ON VISIT TO SRV

[Text] Hanoi, February 6 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Austrian Foreign Minister Leopold Gratz said here Thursday that Vietnam, after a long war, should now work towards peaceful reconstruction. The foreign minister told a press conference after a three-hour talk with his Vietnamese counterpart Nguyen Co Thach and a meeting with Chairman Pham Van Dong of the Council of Ministers that he and the Vietnamese leaders had discussed various regional issues including a peaceful solution to the Kampuchean problem. Gratz described the discussions as "useful," and said that his trip to Hanoi is mainly to establish contact with all the parties involved in the Kampuchean issue and to get acquainted with their positions. The foreign minister said, however, that he is not acting as a mediator in his capacity as chairman of the United Nations-sponsored International Conference on Kampuchea.

The Austrian diplomat, who arrived here Wednesday for a two-day official visit to Vietnam, declined to comment on the attitudes taken by different sides concerned, but suggested that the Vietnamese military presence in Kampuchea and the so-called "outside forces" backing the different parties in the country be regarded as obstacles to resolving the problem. Gratz said that all the forces should negotiate without insisting on "pre-conditions" to peaceful negotiation. Observers here noted that the foreign minister still holds his position as chairman of the U.N. International Conference on Kampuchea, a title that Vietnam has been reluctant to acknowledge. Hanoi stressed when it announced Gratz' arrival that he has come to Vietnam only as Austrian foreign minister.

PHILIPPINES REPORTS 51 KILLED IN ELECTION VIOLENCE

[Text] Manila, February 6 (XINHUA) -- At least 51 people have been killed and many others wounded throughout the Philippines in violence related to the presidential election to be held tomorrow. This was disclosed by Constabulary Chief Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos here today, the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reported.

Ramos appealed for calm and sobriety in the face of what he called a "rising crescendo" of politically-triggered violence all over the country. He described as "unusually intense" the political rivalry between leaders and followers of the opposing candidates, namely President Ferdinand Marcos and opposition aspirant Corazon Aquino, even at the grass-roots, municipal and city level. He said about 40 people were hurt here yesterday when alleged opposition supporters stoned and shot at people going to attend a ruling party rally. However, he assured the nation of "a generally peaceful election."

About 80,000 constabulary and police personnel have been directly engaged and 5,500 others from the regional unified commands have been in place of augmentation troops. The rest were also alerted and placed on reserve, Ramos said.

SPANISH PARLIAMENT APPROVES REFERENDUM ON NATO

[Text] Madrid, February 5 (XINHUA) -- The Spanish Parliament today voted to hold a referendum on March 12 on Spain's continued membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

The approval came after two days of heated debates on the country's policy on peace and security. The vote was 207 in favor, 103 against and 20 abstentions. Socialist and Communist Members of Parliament supported the government proposal while the conservative opposition Popular Coalition Party opposed it. Small centrist parties abstained.

During the debate, Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez reiterated his position that Spain should stay in NATO without joining the organization's military structure. He said Spain should not permit nuclear weapons on Spanish soil and that it should gradually reduce U.S. military presence in Spain. Spain joined NATO in 1982.

UK GOVERNMENT FINANCES SPACE PLANE STUDIES

[Text] London, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Britain will provide up to three million pounds sterling (4.2 million U.S. dollars) over the next two years for studies into the "aerospace plane" known as the horizontal take-off and landing aircraft, or "Hotol" for short. The Department of Trade and Industry, which is to finance the "proof-of-concept" studies, said today the funding will initially cover a six-month period, upon which a review of progress will be made.

The idea, put forward by British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce, is for an eventual manned "transatmospheric" vehicle that would land and take off like a conventional aircraft but soar into near-earth orbit to perform tasks in space, such as satellite launching and repair, and eventually commercial transport. The U.K.'s Hotol scheme was unveiled at the Farnborough Air Show in 1984. Subsequent work to refine the concept has been conducted as a private venture by the two companies. A department spokesman stressed today that initially only "proof-of-concept" studies to determine the feasibility of the idea are being undertaken, and if progress was considered satisfactory the studies would continue for the full two-year period.

The cost for the first six months will be about 750,000 pounds (1.03 million dollars), shared by the British National Space Committee and the companies involved. Comparable research into similar "aerospace planes" or "transatmospheric vehicles" is under way in the United States, where a number of similar studies are underway. Both the U.K. and the U.S. have said that development of Hotols will take a long time, and it will be at least 15 years before a viable vehicle emerges. Scientists and engineers of both countries believe that such vehicles will initially be used for military or purely space-research purposes. It would take much longer, probably not until the next century before they are used for commercial purposes.

XINHUA INTERVIEWS WANG YAOTING ON TRADE WITH GULF

[Text] Beijing, February 6 (XINHUA) -- Excellent prospects exist for economic relations and trade between China and the Gulf countries. Wang Yaoting who visited the United Arab Emirates (UAE) last month made this observation in an interview with XINHUA here today. Wang has just retired from his post as chairman of the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade.

Describing his visit to the UAE as successful, Wang said that during his visit he had signed an agreement on friendly cooperation between the China Council and the Chamber of Commerce of Abu Dhabi with chairman of the chamber, Al-'Utaybah. He also presided over a ceremony in the capital of the UAE for establishing a China Center for the Promotion of Trade, the first people-to-people organization to be set up by China in the Gulf region. Wang noted that his visit was followed by Chinese Vice-Premier Yao Yilin's trip to the UAE, Oman and Kuwait last November and State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian's visit to the UAE last December.

An agreement on investment protection between China and Kuwait, and an agreement on economic and technological cooperation and trade between China and the UAE were signed during Yao Yilin's visit to these two countries. These have laid a very good foundation for further expansion of economic relations and trade between China and the Gulf countries and also show that both the Chinese Government and people-to-people organizations attach great importance to developing such relations.

With the strengthening of political relations between China and the Gulf region, economic relations and trade have developed rapidly. The volume of trade has reached several hundred million U.S. dollars. In recent years, Wang said, there has also been cooperation on labor services. China has set up ten or more companies to contract for work on construction, civil engineering, nonferrous metals, metallurgy and aviation technology in Kuwait and the UAE.

Wang said there exist many favourable conditions for developing economic relations and trade in the Gulf region. One of the reasons is that most of the Gulf countries follow free trade policies and do not place restrictions on imports. So this provides China with a vast potential market. The Gulf countries are rich in petroleum resources and have abundant foreign exchange reserves. Their consumer goods are mostly imported. China's traditional exports such as textiles, light industrial products, foodstuffs, and carpets are welcomed in Gulf markets.

In recent years, Wang said, China's annual export volume to these countries has been less than one per cent of the Gulf countries' total import volume of 100 billion U.S. dollars. Wang urged trading departments to improve commodity and packaging quality and increase varieties of export goods so as to meet the needs of the people of the Gulf countries. He hoped for more efficiency especially in transportation so that delivery times could be shortened.

XINHUA INTERVIEWS PERUVIAN ENVOY ON TRADE

[Text] Beijing, February 5 (XINHUA) -- Peru hopes to achieve a remarkable trade growth with China this year, Peru's ambassador to China, Roberto Villaran Koechlin, said here in an interview today. Speaking with XINHUA reporters, Villaran expressed the hope that trade volume between the two countries, which amounted to about 60 million U.S. dollars last year, would greatly increase in 1986. "China's open policy has made it possible for our two countries to broaden cooperation and augment the volume of trade," the Ambassador said. He disclosed that China and Peru have signed a trade agreement and that Chinese specialists are at present in Peru helping to dig wells and build small hydroelectric power stations. Peru is interested in agricultural technology and in afforestation. Peru also has deserts and the two countries could cooperate in this field, he added.

Villaran, who assumed his post last December as Peru's sixth ambassador to China, described diplomatic ties between the two countries, which were established in 1971, as very good. "There have never been any problems," he said. He added that both China and Peru are Third World countries and their governments share many views on international issues. Both countries observe the principles of non-interference in each other's internal affairs, independence and non-discrimination. He also expressed the hope for further exchange of personnel and political contacts between the two countries in the future.

CADRES, ORGANS BANNED FROM ENGAGING IN BUSINESS

HK060854 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1036 GMT 5 Feb 86

["The CPC Central Committee and the State Council Promulgate Regulations on Further Prohibiting Party and Government Organs and Cadres From Engaging in Business and Running Enterprises" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, 5 Feb (XINHUA) -- On 4 February, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council promulgated regulations on further prohibiting party and government organs and cadres from engaging in business and running enterprises.

The regulations of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council point out: Since the CPC Central Committee and the State Council issued, in December 1984, the decision on strictly prohibiting party and government organs and cadres from engaging in business and running enterprises, most enterprises run by party and government organs have either suspended operations or severed their links with the party and government organs, and most party and government cadres engaging in business or running enterprises have either returned to their units or given up their party or government posts. However, this unhealthy tendency has not been completely curbed. Some party and government organs and cadres still adopt various tricks to continuously engage in business and run enterprises; some party and government leading cadres still concurrently hold posts in enterprises; some relatives take advantage of the relationships and influence of leading cadres to engage in business or run enterprises; and some serious irregularities in commercial dealings and the running of enterprises, particularly those involving certain leading cadres, have not been properly dealt with. It can be very harmful if party and government organs and cadres engage in business, run enterprises, take advantage of their positions and powers to seek private gain, and feather their nests at public expense.

In an effort to resolutely curb this unhealthy tendency, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have made further stipulations on some relevant issues:

1. No party or government organs, including organs of party committees, organs of state power, administrative organs, judicial organs, and procuratorial organs at all levels, or their subordinate institutions, are allowed to engage in business or to run enterprises. All enterprises that are still operating in violation of the stipulations, including those which have not severed their links with the organs concerned, as they should have done, or which have overtly severed their links but covertly not done so, must immediately suspend operations or thoroughly sever their links with the organs concerned, no matter which authorities have previously approved their operations.

2. With the exception of the special cases approved by the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, no cadres, workers, or staff members of the above-mentioned organs, including those cadres who have withdrawn to the second line, are allowed to hold posts in various enterprises. Those who hold posts in enterprises must immediately resign from the enterprises or give up their posts in the party or government organs.

No in-service cadres, workers, or staff members are allowed to engage in business or to run enterprises by taking leave without pay. They should either give up their posts in the enterprises and resume their work in the original units or relinquish their public office.

3. With the exception of those approved by the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, no retired cadres of the above-mentioned organs are allowed to hold posts in state-run enterprises. They are allowed to hold posts in non-state-run enterprises only after they have been retired for 2 years, but they are still not allowed to hold posts in enterprises under the jurisdiction of the organs where they formerly worked. After the retired cadres hold posts in enterprises, they will no longer be eligible for the treatment accorded to retired cadres according to the state regulations.

4. Those cadres, workers, and staff members who participate in illegal business activities or afford other people the opportunity of carrying out illegal business activities should be punished according to party and administrative discipline, and the leading cadres concerned should be severely dealt with. Those violating the criminal laws should be punished according to the law.

5. No child or spouse of a leading cadre who works at party and government organs or at their subordinate institutions is allowed to temporarily leave a post to engage in business or to run an enterprise. Those who do not work at party and government organs or at their subordinate institutions are not allowed to take advantage of the influence and relationships of leading cadres to engage in business, to run an enterprise, or to seek profit illegally. Those violating the stipulations should be seriously dealt with. All their ill-gotten gains should be confiscated.

6. After the enterprises run by party and government organs, or their subordinate institutions, or their cadres suspend operations, the departments in charge of professional work directly responsible for giving approval should be responsible for winding up the work. Both the departments in charge of professional work directly responsible for giving approval and the enterprises concerned should jointly assume economic and legal responsibilities for any losses, bankruptcies, inabilities to pay debts, or other serious consequences caused by illegal business dealings. Moreover, it is also necessary to investigate and determine the responsibility of personnel concerned.

7. With regard to applications for the establishment of enterprises, the industrial and commercial administrative organs should examine and approve them in strict accordance with the relevant state regulations. They should adhere to principle and act according to the law. Actions will be taken against those who neglect their duties. Leading cadres at all levels are not allowed to interfere with industrial and commercial administrative organs in exercising their functions and powers according to the law.

8. These regulations are applicable to mass organizations such as the CYL, women's federations, federations of literature and art circles, associations for science and technology, and various associations and societies, as well as the cadres, workers, and staff members of these organizations. If special cases make it necessary for these organizations to set up noncommercial enterprises, they should report to the State Council or the provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal people's governments for approval.

9. Problems in labor service companies set up with the purpose of providing employment to youths and in enterprises set up by town or township authorities or neighborhood committees will be investigated and studied by the departments concerned and separate regulations will be made.

10. The question of Army organs and cadres running enterprises should be dealt with according to the "provisional regulations on armed forces engaging in production, business, and foreign trade", approved and issued by the State Council and the Central Military Commission in May 1985. The State Council and the Central Military Commission will make separate regulations on specific issues.

The CPC Central Committee and the State Council call on party committees and governments at all levels to resolutely implement these regulations and to strictly enforce orders and prohibitions. Those refusing to implement the regulations will be seriously dealt with; actions will also be taken against the leaders concerned. The discipline inspection commissions and the industrial and commercial administrative organs at all levels should supervise the implementation of the regulations in close coordination with the organization, personnel, auditing, tax, banking, judiciary, and other departments. The CPC Central Committee and the State Council also pointed out that if previous relevant regulations do not conform to these regulations, the new regulations will supersede all others.

QIAO SHI, BO YIBO AT PARTY RECTIFICATION MEETING

[Text] Beijing, 6 Feb (XINHUA) -- After completing their scheduled tasks, the second-stage party rectification inspectors' groups sent to various localities by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification have recently been recalled. The General Office of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification held a party rectification inspectors work report meeting in Beijing recently. Comrades attending the meeting extensively exchanged reports on the situation, reviewed experiences, evaluated their performance and problems in party rectification work at the prefectural and county levels on the basis of seeking truth from facts, analyzed trends in rural party rectification work, and presented positive proposals on the task of correcting the whole party's work style.

Qiao Shi, member of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau and head of the leading group for correcting the party's work style in the central organizations; Bo Yibo, permanent vice chairman of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification; and other leading comrades of the central authorities and the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification met with the comrades attending the meeting and delivered speeches. Qiao Shi pointed out that the central party, government, and Army organizations must strive to score marked achievements in correcting the party's work style before the end of this year. Bo Yibo called on the General Office of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification to firmly grasp two things before the end of this year: One is to strive to firmly grasp party rectification work in units at and below county level, mainly rural townships and villages, as well as city neighborhoods, in cooperation with the party committees of the various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities under the central government. The other is to assist in firmly grasping the work of correcting the party's work style in central organizations, organizations in various provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities under the central government, and other units which have implemented party rectification; and to assist in consolidating and developing achievements in party rectification.

At the beginning of the second-stage party rectification in March last year, the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification sent seven party rectification inspectors groups to northeastern, northern, northwestern, southwestern, central-south, and eastern China. Within a year, with the warm support and assistance of party committees in the various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities under the central government, the various party rectification inspectors groups had accomplished a great deal and familiarized themselves with the situation, discovering problems, reviewed experience, made proposals; in other aspects of work, they centered on party rectification at the prefectural and county levels. They have made positive contributions to the promotion of second-stage party rectification work.

The comrades of the inspectors groups attending the meeting unanimously maintained that, generally speaking, under the leadership of the party committees of the central authorities, provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities under the central government, prefectural and county-level party rectification has developed healthily with marked achievements.

In some aspects, it has made new progress and development, compared with first-stage party rectification. It was manifested mainly in the following facts: 1) Relatively more systematic education in party spirit, ideals, party discipline, and party purpose was effected among the broad masses of party members and cadres who are party members, resulting in some enhancement of the party members' political and ideological qualities; 2) the work of correcting the party's work style was relatively more firmly grasped, and a number of people with serious problems were sternly investigated and handled, thereby stopping unhealthy tendencies; 3) widespread understanding by party members and cadres who are party members with respect to the policies of opening up to the outside world, enlivening the domestic economy: reform was further enhanced, thus lending impetus to the economy and reform work; and 4) in connection with the inspection of party rectification, a number of leading bodies were readjusted. The work of purifying organizations was also meritorious. All this has created good conditions for strengthening party building in the new period, and for promoting socialist material and spiritual civilizations. The major problem existing in prefectural and county-level party rectification was that development was very uneven, with a considerable number of units carrying out party rectification work in a generalized way, while a small number of other units were doing a relatively poor job. It is necessary for party committees at higher levels to adopt powerful measures to guide, supervise, and help those units continue to solve the existing problems on the basis of conscientious inspection.

When talking about rural party rectification, the comrades of the inspectors groups pointed out: Since the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification issued the circular on the planning of the rural party rectification work, the various localities have, in accordance with the demand of the circular, carried out concrete planning of rural party rectification work in their respective localities in light of present realities. Currently, most of the township-level party rectification is being systematically implemented and is developing favorably. The crux is to continue to firmly grasp the models and to strengthen the work of providing concrete and classified guidance. At the same time, it is necessary to further study and solve important issues of policy and limitations in rural party rectification.

During the meeting, the comrades studied important speeches and instructions recently made by Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Chen Yun, and other central leading comrades concerning improvement of party style. The consensus is that, since the meetings of cadres of the central organs, an excellent situation has emerged in party rectification and improvement of party style, and that, as long as leaders at all levels enhance their understanding, achieve unity of thought, refrain from empty talk, do more solid work, eradicate bureaucratism and the unhealthy practice of shielding one another, and earnestly take the lead in improving party style, we shall certainly be able to achieve greater results than we have already achieved in improving party style among all party members, in line with the requirements set by the party Central Committee.

On the afternoon of 1 February, Qiao Shi, Bo Yibo, and other leading comrades of the party Central Committee and the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification met with the members of the inspectors groups at Huairentang Hall in Zhongnanhai. Comrades Qiao Shi and Bo Yibo praised the inspectors for having done a tremendous job, and thanked them on behalf of the party Central Committee and the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification.

After the meeting, Bo Yibo made a speech. He pointed out: In order to successfully carry out party rectification and improve party style, it is necessary to focus attention on the following three aspects: First, it is necessary to carefully study the central authorities documents and grasp the ideological weapon and material dialectics; second, it is necessary to increase investigation and study to obtain first-hand information; and third, it is necessary to uphold the principle of party spirit in boldly struggling against unhealthy tendencies.

He said: We should study the basic principles of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, as well as resolutions by the party Central Committee and speeches by the leading comrades of the Standing Committee of the Central Political Bureau since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The series of important documents adopted by the party Central Committee, and important speeches by the leading comrades of the Standing Committee of the Central Political Bureau, which have integrated Marxism with China's practical experience in socialist construction, provide guidance in successfully instigating reform and the modernization drive. We should diligently, meticulously, and repeatedly study these documents and speeches, and insightfully understand their spiritual essence in order to follow correct guidelines in our work, and correct orientation in our advance. He said: Conducting in-depth investigations to obtain first-hand information is the premise and foundation for effectively carrying out our work, and there should be no exception as far as the work of party rectification and improvement in party style is concerned. Currently, there are some people, or should we say a handful of people, who, divorced from the ideological line of seeking truth from facts, do not tell the truth, adopt an ostentatious style, and evey play tricks to deceive higher authorities. It is not an easy job to conduct investigations to obtain first-hand information under such circumstances. Therefore, it is necessary to effectively remove obstacles, including all sorts of connections and networks, and master the skill and methods for conducting investigation and study under the new situation, so as to realistically, accurately, and thoroughly familiarize ourselves with the situation, learn how things stand, and do our work well.

Bo Yibo added: It has been 2 years and 2 months since party rectification was initiated, and work at prefectural and country levels will soon be completed. It is necessary to make conscientious efforts and to guard against perfunctoriness in carrying our party rectification at units under country level.

In his speech, Qiao Shi said: Large numbers of people inside and outside the party have been greatly inspired by the party Central Committee's determination to improve party style, as reflected in the meetings of cadres of the central organs called by the central Secretariat, and the establishment of a leading group to improve party style among the central organs. It should be noted that, in the course of party rectification over the past 2 years, the majority of units engaged in party rectification have solved quite a few problems about party style. On the basis of their achievements, we are fully confident that we shall certainly be able to bring about a fundamental improvement in party style by continuing to make solid efforts for 1 or 2 years in accordance with the party Central Committee's instructions on improving party style. Of course, we must demonstrate our determination and confidence with concrete actions. He said: The leading group on improving party style among the central organs is stepping up its efforts to, first of all, tackle a number of major cases. It will investigate each case and mete out punishment according to party discipline or the law without sparing anyone's sensibilities. It will ignore connections and stress only party discipline and state laws. Central party, government, and Army organs should strive to achieve marked results in improving party style this year. With the central organs truly playing an exemplary role, the work of improving party style among all party members should not be difficult.

'BRIGHT PROSPECTS' FOR TIGHTENING DISCIPLINE SEEN

[Commentator's article: "There Are Bright Prospects for Really Tightening Party Discipline"]

[Text] The Seventh Plenary Session of the Central Discipline Inspection Committee, which recently concluded, stressed further enhancing party spirit, improving party style, and tightening party discipline under the new situation.

This meeting was another important meeting following that of the central organ cadres. It once more demonstrated our party's determination to improve party style.

The broad masses of people have for some time strongly reacted to two aspects of political life in our society. One is that the party's line and policies are good, prompting an improved economic situation and higher living standards for the people year after year. This is obvious to all and has won universal praise. The second is that the style of some party members and cadres is very bad, affecting general practices in society and not corrected in good time. The masses of people have a deep hatred for this and some people even for some time doubted whether it was possible to effect a fundamental change for the better in party style and society's general practices. The issue of party style is matter of life and death for the party. The masses of people have their eyes on our party and the whole country is looking at Beijing. In the beginning of January of this year, the party Central Committee and the State Council expressed their views at the meeting of central organ cadres held by the CPC Central Committee Secretariat. Now the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, in charge of discipline inspection work, has again held a plenary session to implement the policy decision of the party Central Committee. The party Central Committee's attitude is resolute and its measures are effective. The broad masses of party members and people have been greatly encouraged and their hopes and confidence greatly reinforced.

We should never be softhearted in stopping unhealthy trends. Some cases are very clear and yet they have been read and commented on by one person after another without being properly handled. Comment after comment is made before and after investigating these cases; there has been procrastination. At present, those who enforce party discipline and state laws are often softhearted and overly lenient. Why are they softhearted? Are they trying to spare somebody's feelings? Can they not afford to offend somebody? Are they bound hand and foot by a "network of connections?" Or are they themselves involved in some problems? It is worthwhile for leading organs and leading cadres encumbered with these problems to think clearly. It is not difficult to get tough either. Leading organs and leading cadres simply take the lead and set a good example. Leading bodies at a higher level must first do what they demand of their subordinate organs and must refrain from doing what is forbidden to subordinate organs', leading cadres must first practice what they demand of ordinary cadres. If the party's leading cadres, senior cadres in particular, are "ill," they should welcome others "diagnosis and treatment" and should "take the medicine" on their own initiative. "Improve oneself to govern the people." If leaders are not involved in any problems, they will have no worries, will have strong backing, and will dare to, and can, handle difficult problems.

A most important sign of overcoming softheartedness is to impartially enforce the law and to ensure equality for everybody before state laws and party discipline. If discipline is enforced among some people and not enforced among others, how can it still be called discipline? How can our orders and prohibitions be effective then? In our country, we do not allow the existence of "special citizens" on whom laws have no binding force. In our organs and organizations, we do not allow "special cadres" on whom administrative discipline has no binding force. Inside out party, we do not allow "special party members" on whom party discipline has no binding force. Anyone who has violated the law or discipline shall be sternly punished no matter if he is a senior cadre, the child of a senior cadre, or a well-known or public figure. If these people have violated the law, they will do greater harm and their punishment will enhance better results by enforcing the law. Therefore, we should make a point of not letting them go unpunished. Senior cadres must adopt a resolute, clear, and unequivocal attitude toward their children or dependents who have committed crimes. They should firmly support concerned departments meting out punishment according to the law. Otherwise, they will be held directly or indirectly responsible for the crimes.

Straightening out party style has long been a practical problem and not a theoretical one. In judging rights and wrongs, people usually "listen to what a person says and watch what he does." In some localities and departments, many slogans on stopping unhealthy trends have been shouted and many meetings held and yet the results are not satisfactory. The reason is very simple: They talk much but do little, make great efforts in the beginning but slacken toward the end, or even give up halfway. In order to stop unhealthy trends, we must share the persevering spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains and set a style of doing things with the power of a thunderbolt and the speed of lightning. We must also be tough about enforcing the law impartially. The remarks about our party made by the masses of people have always been fair: Once it has made up its mind, the Communist Party will certainly achieve what it intends to do. The masses have put it correctly; what we are going to do remains to be seen. Therefore, we say that there are bright prospects for really tightening party discipline.

'FIRST PHASE' OF ARMY REORGANIZATION ENDS

[Text] Beijing, 6 Feb (XINHUA) -- Support-the-Army activities across China have taken on a new look as all localities are actively supporting the Army in reorganization.

The new year and Spring Festival of 1986 mark the successful conclusion of the first phase of the Army's reorganization [jun dui di yi jie duan zheng bian 6511 7130 4574 0001 7132 3008 2419 4882] and the beginning of a new phase. In carrying out the Spring Festival support-the-Army activities, all local governments and departments concerned are acting in response to the circular of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council which called on them to respect and love the Army and actively support the Army's reform and Army-building efforts. They are seriously summing up and reviewing the work they have done in the past year in support of Army reforms and Army building to see how well they have done in those matters concerning the Army's structural reform and reorganization that must be handled by the localities, whether there is anything that has not been done very well, and what steps should be taken to improve their work. The various localities have all taken concrete measures to support PLA units in solving actual problems. They are striving to do an even better job in support-the-Army work by keeping in mind what is urgently needed, desired, and required by the PLA units.

The first batch of Army cadres transferred to civilian work because of the Army's streamlining reorganization have already assumed work posts in the localities. Since making arrangements for the transferred Army cadres involves many quarters and entails meticulous and complicated work, it is personally handled by the principal responsible comrades in all provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities. Concrete efforts are made to solve problems with respect to making job placements for the transferred Army cadres, their salaries and living quarters, employment for their dependents and schooling for their children. They have thus been fairly successful in satisfying all three groups -- the PLA units, the transferred cadres themselves, and the units that accept them. Last year, the transfer of division level cadres in large numbers was, for the first time, incorporated into the state plan. These cadres have served for a long time in the Army and made great contributions in Army building. The local governments have therefore taken some measures to see that appropriate arrangements are made for them where possible and paid attention to giving full play to their role. By the end of last year, the number of division level transferred Army cadres received in various localities reached 97.3 percent of the total number targeted in the plan.

Many provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities have laid down rules that call for favored consideration to a proper extent when making arrangements for those transferred Army cadres who have performed exploits in combat, been models, or served a long time at border and coastal defense posts. Jilin Province has received 17 transferred Army cadres who have had the honor of winning a second class or higher merit. All of them have been given job placements in the organs directly under the province or in the prefecture or city level units. Shanghai Municipality has set up a development and service center for dual-purpose qualified personnel among retired Armymen to help transferred Army cadres improve their qualifications. Similar organizations have been set up in all of its districts and counties. This has opened channels for job placement. Among the first batch of more than 14,000 transferred Army technician cadres coming into Hebei Province, more than 98 percent have landed jobs similar to the ones they had in the Army.

As scheduled in the Central Military Commission's reduction-in-strength reorganization plan, county-level People's Armed Forces departments will be transferred to the localities as part of the local government establishment this year. In combination with their new year and Spring Festival support-the-Army activities, local governmental departments at various levels have assisted the Army in making many preparations for this change. Many northwest China localities are carrying out activities to "urge People's Armed Forces departments' cadres to stay" in the localities. In some prefectures and counties, the party and government leading comrades have paid house visits to their People's Armed Forces department's cadres to explain achievements in local economic construction and long term development planned; they have earnestly urged these cadres to remain in their localities and continue to make contributions there. The party and government organs and people in Yanan, carrying forward the tradition of "supporting the Army and giving preferential treatment to the families of Armymen," have actively solved problems and difficulties for the cadres of the local People's Armed Forces departments, enabling them to keep their minds on their work after their departments have been incorporated into the local establishment.

On new year's eve, the party and government leading comrades of Chengde Prefecture and Chengde City, Hebei Province, traveled over 1,000 kilometers to four counties, where they solicited opinions from the PLA units stationed there, publicized and popularized Luanping County's experience in supporting the PLA units to carry out reduction in strength reorganization, and studied the method to help the deactivated PLA units manage their Army property and various military facilities. The people on an island off the coast of Zhejiang, after a tearful send-off for the men of a deactivated PLA unit, divided the military facilities on the entire island into 17 separate entities and assigned specially-appointed personnel to take charge of each of them in an effort to help the PLA unit manage the facilities well. The fishermen say: Now that the Army has moved away from the island, the actual support-the-Army deed is to help the PLA manage the military facilities well.

[Text] A few days ago, China's most advanced airborne electronic countermeasure system passed its technical certification by concerned state organs at an Air Force unit in the Nanjing Military Region.

The electronic countermeasures system is a major weapon in modern warfare used to disrupt and destroy radar, communications, and command-and-control systems and to mask aircraft in surprise attacks on the enemy. As such, it plays a decisive role in the course and outcome of modern battles. This new electronic countermeasures system is mounted on fighter aircraft and was certified after a test period of 6 months. It is capable of detecting enemy radar and disrupting its operation, depriving the enemy of control over his weapons and paralyzing his command system.

[Text] Beijing, 5 Feb (XINHUA) -- Yu Qiuli and Qin Jiwei today visited a unit of the tank force under a group army of the Beijing Military Region. Yu Qiuli is a member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and director of the PLA General Political Department, while Qin Jiwei is an alternate member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and commander of the Beijing Military Region. On behalf of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission, they extended Spring Festival greetings to the commanders and fighters.

At the drill ground of the tank unit in a Beijing suburb, Yu Qiuli and Qin Jiwei, braving cold weather, watched the tank crew's basic training on tank operation, communications and firing, and their gymnastic performance. Beside the tanks, Yu Qiuli and Qin Jiwei carefully inspected equipment made by the tank unit in the course of training and reform and asked the fighters about their training. Then, they visited the barracks and asked the fighters about their barracks life. Yu Qiuli felt the fighters' mattresses and bedding. The fighters told him: "They are very warm." Yu Qiuli said happily: "Good."

In the barracks, Yu Qiuli and Qin Jiwei sat with the fighters and chatted with them. They asked the fighters about their study, life, and work, and encouraged them to learn and help one another and make progress together in the glorious PLA. Yu Qiuli urged the cadres and party members in PLA companies to display further their exemplary role in the course of Army building, put other people's interests ahead of their own, srictly enforce discipline, participate in party activities, and practice democratic centralism well. He said: If cadres and party members of the PLA companies do this, the companies will have a new outlook.

Yang Baibing, political commissar of the Beijing Military Region, accompanied Yu Qiuli and Qin Jiwei on the visit.

ZHAO ZIYANG, OTHERS INSPECT SHANTOU, CHAOZHOU

[By reporter Cai Dongshi]

[Excerpts] Guangzhou, 6 Feb (XINHUA) -- Comrades Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun inspected the Chaozhou and Shantou areas and the Shantou Special Economic Zone 2-5 February, praising the fine situation and correct methods adopted there after the policy of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy was implemented. They encouraged the cadres and masses to make the best use of favorable conditions and avoid the unfavorable ones in developing economic construction and to accumulate new experiences in rejuvenating the economy in coastal areas.

After arriving in Shantou, Comrade Zhao Ziyang and his entourage took a station wagon to the Chaozhou City eel farm, the radio porcelain plant, the electric flocking plant, the Fengzi Pottery Research Institute, the Shantou City textile mill, the Gongyuan photo-sensitive chemicals factory, the Supersonic Instruments Research Institute and several other joint ventures in the special economic zone. They also visited peasants, workers, and primary school teachers in the Fengzi No 1 Township of Chaozhou City and the new residential area in Shantou City. In the evening, they also toured a business center composed of several hundred individual commercial households and vendors.

Comrade Zhao Ziyang said: In both rural and urban areas, the situation in the Chaozhou and Shantou areas is fine, and such areas have taken a correct path. Comrades Hu Qili and Tian Jiyun also pointed out: From the urban area to the countryside, Shantou flourishes and its people lead a good life. From here, we feel the tempo of our nation forging ahead.

Comrade Zhao Ziyang pointed out: The Chaozhou and Shantou areas have local advantages such as the coastal location, a warm climate, fertile land, the hometowns of many Overseas Chinese, and fairly high educational standards and managerial expertise. However, there are also some disadvantages, such as limited land. The average acreage of land is only slightly over 4 fen per person. The areas also lack natural resources. Efforts must be made to exploit advantages and avoid drawbacks, and fully utilize our favorable conditions so that all qualified people and available land are put to best use. Carrying out reforms and opening up to the outside world has provided the Chaozhou and Shantou areas with favorable conditions in fostering strengths and circumventing weaknesses. It is necessary to actively develop and strengthen economic ties between foreign and domestic trade, adjust our economy to boost foreign trade and improve our capabilities in earning more foreign exchange. By earning more foreign exchange, we will be able to procure more grain, further readjust the production mix in agricultural production, and establish a brand new production system with emphasis on the manufacture of products to earn more foreign exchange.

During their inspection tour, Comrades Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun were extremely concerned over the work of introducing advanced foreign technology and improving it. They carefully listened to a Shantou City Supersonic Instruments Research Institute report on importing technology on a large scale and speeding the propagation of new technology and products. They unanimously believed that the path taken by this institute is correct.

While actively building material civilization, the Chaozhou and Shantou areas also pay full attention to developing spiritual civilization. In the past 2 years, the pace in promoting economic developments has quickened and the general mood in society has improved in these areas. Comrade Hu Qili held a special forum for briefings on various departments concerned.

He pointed out: The experience in the Chaozhou and Shantou areas indicates that the policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy does not contradict the practice of rectifying party style and improving the general mood in society. It is entirely possible to achieve the goal in developing material and spiritual civilization simultaneously as put forward by Comrade Deng Xiaoping. This precisely reflects China's characteristics in developing socialist modernization. He called on party organizations at all levels to strengthen themselves organizationally, develop ideological and political work with definite objects in mind, strive to help cadres improve their qualities, and make improving party style and the policy of invigorating the economy supplement and promote each other.

During their tour, Zhao Ziyang and his entourage witnessed some cases involving the unauthorized use of land to build houses. They showed great concern in this regard, repeatedly pointing out: The illegal use of large tracts of arable land will give us endless trouble in the future. Land is extremely valuable in the Chaozhou and Shantou areas. We must double our efforts in cherishing and saving land. The leadership at all levels should adopt effective economic and legal measures to halt unauthorized use of land for housing and guide rural areas in developing high-rise buildings.

She came to the Tianjin branch office of the People's Bank of China on the morning of 6 February to visit the presidents of various specialized banks in the municipality, extend Spring Festival greetings to them, and ask them to convey her Spring Festival greetings to all workers and staff members in banking circles.

She also delivered a speech on her investigations conducted in the municipality over the past few days. In her speech Comrade Chen Muhua stressed: Banks should improve their work style and service, and should guard against situations where people find it difficult to enter banks and handle affairs and where customers are served with impolite remarks and faces. The credit cooperatives should delve into the rural areas, and the industrial and commercial banks should delve into the enterprises and neighborhoods. Support should be given to post offices to run the deposit business. Along with the constant development of the banking business, we must pay attention to training the cadres of various banks. The existing cadres should study, and new cadres should be trained. If possible, some specialized schools and temporary training classes should be opened.

Comrade Chen Muhua arrived in Tianjin on 1 February and returned to Beijing on the afternoon of 6 February.

OVERHAUL OF FOREIGN TRADE COMPANIES VIEWED

HK060101 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese No 81, 16 Jan 86 p 2

[Report: "Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Decides To Further Overhaul and Rectify All Kinds of Foreign Trade Companies"]

[Text] Our writer reports from relevant sources that in order to carry out the spirit and requirement of the State Council's "notice on further overhauling and rectifying companies." The Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade has decided to improve and rectify all kinds of foreign trade companies in China.

The following are the main points of ministry's notice on further overhauling and rectifying all kinds of foreign trade companies:

A. The Scope of the Overhaul and Rectification

The target of the overhaul and rectification is the various foreign trade companies established before the end of 1985, including all the general import and export companies of various specialities under the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, branch import and export companies in various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government; local trade companies in various provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government and cities instituting separate listing in the state plans; trade companies in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces and in Shenzhen, Shantou, Zhuhai, and Xiamen Special Economic Zones; foreign economic and technological trade companies in 14 coastal open cities; and productive enterprises or enterprise combines directly engaged in foreign economic relations and trade. The enterprises which have already been overhauled and rectified should be further overhauled and rectified if necessary.

B. Contents and Requirements for Overhaul and Rectification

1. All the trade companies must economically separate themselves from the party and government organs according to the relevant document of the State Council on separating the functions of the government from those of the enterprises, implement independent business accounting systems and independent management systems, and be responsible for their own profits and losses. The party and government cadres can either work for the trade companies or work for the party and government institutions, but cannot work for both of them at the same time. This means that if they want to work for the trade companies, they must resign from their party or government posts.

2. All kinds of trade companies must do business on a scale approved by the state. Except for companies approved to conduct import trade, all foreign trade companies must fulfill the foreign exchange earning quota set by the state. Newly-established trade companies must have an export volume of $5 million after 3 years of foreign trade. Those trade companies which only import and only spend foreign exchange but cannot earn foreign exchange for the state or cannot fulfill the foreign exchange earning quota set by the state, those companies which do not have a stable source of goods, or "briefcase companies" which vie with one another for a source of goods, must be overhauled and rectified. The range of business of some of these companies should be readjusted, while some of them should be merged and some should be cancelled.

We must organize a force to examine the facts and strictly punish or cancel according to the law and relevant regulations those trading companies engaged in illegal operations, such as illegally buying up essential production means and commodities badly needed on the market, engaging in reselling commodities at a profit, in speculation, profiteering and swindling, illegally reselling foreign exchange at a profit, and forcing prices up, as well as availing themselves of loopholes in the reform of the economic structure.

3. The establishment of all foreign trade companies must be officially approved by the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade or by the foreign economic relations and trade department (or commission, or bureau) of the relevant province, autonomous region, municipality directly under the central government and city instituting separate listing in the state plans. These trade companies must have clear rules and regulations, business scopes as well as catalogues of the goods to be imported and exported, and must register with relevant industrial and commercial administrative departments by presenting an official document of approval.

The import and export trade companies whose operations have not been approved by the above mentioned state organs must be strictly dealt with and even cancelled. According to the present regulations, companies below the provincial level are not allowed to conduct import and export trade. Companies engaged in international financial business, international contracting business, and consultative services are not allowed to import and export. Generally speaking, local companies are not allowed to establish their general companies, and are not allowed to establish branch companies in other provinces and cities, either, but are allowed to establish offices in other provinces and cities to deal with the relevant business contacts. However, they should not be allowed to carry out foreign trade. The productive enterprises and enterprise combines directly engaged in foreign trade can only engage in import and export trade on their own or with their affiliated productive enterprises, but cannot act as agents charging commissions to other units.

4. The companies established in the economic development zones in the 14 coastal open cities can only serve the construction of the economic development zones, export the products of the open cities and import the products needed by the open cities, but cannot carry out foreign trade for other areas.

5. All kinds of foreign trade companies must have funds which conform with their business scope (including registered funds and self-owned funds), facilities and staff. They must have clearly-defined authorities and subordinates, complete financial systems, organizational institutions, and leading bodies.

6. At present, only the state enterprises can carry out foreign trade. Collective enterprises and individuals are not allowed to engage in foreign trade.

After overhaul and rectification, we should totally rationalize the structure of the enterprises and clearly define the division of labor, which will be beneficial to the increase of the economic results and the implementation of the various state policies concerning our country's foreign economic relations and trade. All kinds of foreign trade companies must meet the following requirements:

1. When separating the functions of the government from those of the enterprises, all kinds of foreign trade companies must become economic entities which have independent business accounting systems and self-management systems and are responsible for their own profits and losses.

2. Foreign trade companies must conscientiously carry out the state's general and specific policies, observe the state's laws, rules and regulations, and do business strictly according to the business outlines approved by the relevant authorities. The import and export companies must have stable sources of goods which can find a good market and reliable import channels. Companies engaged in economic and technological trade or consultative services must be equipped with a professional staff and adopt necessary work measures.

3. Foreign trade companies must fulfill the various state plans for foreign trade. All foreign trade companies must be subordinate to the unified administration of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade and the foreign economic relations and trade department (commission or bureau) of the relevant province, city and autonomous region, and according to the relevant regulations, submit business reports and documents concerned to the departments responsible for the work of foreign economic relations and trade at various levels.

4. After the overhaul and rectification, the responsible departments should strengthen their guidance and assistance to the foreign trade companies under their control. The separation of the functions of the government from those of enterprises does not mean that the administrative departments will not administer the enterprises. On the contrary, the administrative departments should strengthen their leadership and administration. If the enterprises make mistakes in their operations or carry out illegal operations, the administrative departments should be held responsible for that.

C. Methods of Overhaul and Rectification

The method of "respective responsibilities, and respective examinations and approvals" will be adopted in their overhaul and rectification.

1. All foreign trade general companies should make their own plans of overhaul and rectification, and then submit them to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for examination and approval;

2. Foreign trade companies under the various ministries and committees of the State Council will be overhauled and rectified by their own responsible departments. Their plans for overhaul and rectification should be submitted according to their respective specialities to the relevant departments of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for examination and approval;

3. The branch companies under the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade and the branch companies of the various ministries and committees of the State Council in various provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government and cities instituting separate listing in the state plans, will be overhauled and rectified under the leadership of their respective general companies. The respective general companies should submit their plans for overhaul and rectification to the relevant local foreign economic relations and trade department (commission or bureau) for examination and approval, and then report to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for the record;

4. The local foreign trade companies in various provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities directly under the central government and cities instituting separate listing in the state plans will be overhauled and rectified by local administrative departments responsible for foreign economic relations and trade. The overhaul and rectification plan made by the local administrative department should be submitted to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for Examination and approval. If local foreign trade companies which have already been overhauled and rectified need to be further overhauled and rectified, this method can also be applied;

5. Foreign trade companies in Guangdong and Fujian Provinces will be overhauled and rectified under the leadership of the departments responsible for foreign trade in both provinces according to the above method. After the overhaul and rectification, these foreign trade companies should report the situation tc the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for the record;

6. Overhauling and rectifying the foreign trade companies in Shenzhen, Shantou, Zhuhai, and Xiamen Special Economic Zones and in Hainan Special Administrative Region will be the responsibility of the economic and trade administrative departments in those areas. Their plans for overhaul and rectification should be submitted to the provincial economic and trade department for examination and approval, and then submitted to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for the record.

7. Overhauling and rectifying the economic, technological, and trade companies in 14 coastal open cities will be the responsibility of the responsible departments of the local people's governments in those areas, which will, after the overhaul and rectification, report the situation to the economic relations and trade department (commission or bureau) of the relevant provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government for examination and approval, and to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade for the record;

All kinds of foreign trade companies must also submit the following documents:

1. The document issued by the higher authorities to approve the establishment of the company;

2. The business license issued by the industrial and commercial administrative department;

3. The company's rules and regulations and business scope foreign trade companies must also submit catalogues of imported and exported goods;

4. The certificate of funds (including registered funds and actual funds) issued either by the bank with which the company has opened its account or by the responsible financial department of the higher authorities;

5. The company's legal address, telephone and telex numbers, its number of employees, and the names and education backgrounds of the leading cadres of the company;

6. A report on the business scope and operation of the company dating back from the time the company was established.

In the overhaul and rectification, all responsible units and departments in charge of the examination and approval must conscientiously do this work. If there are serious consequences because of their carelessness in the work, they will be responsible both legally and economically.

The names of the companies which have been examined and approved will be published in GUOJI SHANGBAO; the companies which have not been examined and approved are banned from carrying out foreign trade, and the customs areas and banks must refuse to let these companies go through formalities.

D. Time Limits for Overhaul and Rectification

From the day this notice is received, all the responsible departments must immediately organize a force to carry out the investigations and examinations of the foreign trade companies administered by them and put forward suggestions on overhauling and rectifying these companies to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. This work must be finished within 3 months. As soon as the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade receives the reports, it will carefully discuss and examine them with the responsible departments. The time for the discussion and examination will not exceed 3 months. Overall overhaul and rectification will most probably be finished by the end of the 3d quarter of 1986.

This time, overhaul and rectification will deal with many things. The situation is complicated. We must strictly carry out the relevant state policies in accomplishing this arduous task. All the departments and localities must strengthen their leadership over this work, set up a special department to take charge of this work, and cooperate with the industrial and commercial administrative departments, customs areas and banks in this matter.

GUANGMING RIBAO ON THEORIES OF ECONOMIC LEVERS

HK030035 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 18 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Bai Shui and Yu Zhongyi: "Make Use of Economic Levers, Strengthen Macrocontrol: Roundup on the First National Symposium on the Theory of Economic Levers"]

[Text] The first national symposium on the theory of economic levers was held in Leshan City, Sichuan Province, last November. The symposium discussed certain problems in the theory and application of economic levers. Now let us summarize the main problems and views discussed at the symposium.

I. The Concept of Economic Levers

The views on the concept of economic levers can be summed up as follows:

The first view held that economic levers are methods socialist countries use to regulate economic relationships between immediate and long-term interests and between partial and overall interests. They include legal, administrative, educational and economic methods.

The second view held that economic levers refer to economic methods people use to guide social life to a fixed target by observing the law governing material benefit and by means of material inducement. Economic levers consist of the following four factors: 1) The main body, which is composed of the state, enterprises, and institutions; 2) the object to be regulated by economic levers, that is, social reproduction; 3) the driving force, that is, material inducement, which is the nucleus and soul of economic levers; and 4) the purpose, which is to guide microeconomic activities with macroeconomic plans.

The third view held that economic levers make an impact on people's interests through the distribution of social products and national revenue and therefore indirectly regulate the social economy. Participants with this view maintained that only the method of distribution could be taken as an economic lever. More accurately, only the method of distribution that affects partial and individual interests through its regulation of the social economy can be referred to as an economic lever.

The fourth view held that the concept of economic levers can be interpreted as the ratio between dependent variability and independent variability. In other words, economic levers display their regulatory role by changing the numerical value of their independent variability so as to affect their dependent variability. People's frequent reference to taxation, price, and credit levers is only a way of saying things accepted through common practice; strictly speaking, this is not scientific.

II. The Functions and Role of Economic Levers

The participants had the following views with regard to the functions and role of economic levers:

Some participants remarked that economic levers have only one function, that is, a regulatory function regulating the relationship between different economic forms, economic activities in the key links of social reproduction, and the distribution and redistribution of national revenue.

Others maintained that economic levers have various functions, five of which can be listed as follows: 1) distributing and redistributing national revenue; 2) encouraging production and operational units to improve management, save natural and labor resources, and achieve better economic results; 3) regulating both the microeconomy and the macroeconomy; 4) controlling major economic activities within the scope of coordinated national economic development; and 5) obtaining reliable economic information for economic forecast, policymaking, and the formulation of plans.

Still others held that economic levers have an "incentive" function according to the law governing material benefit.

III. The Conditions for Applying Economic Levers Well

Some participants were of the opinion that the following four conditions are necessary for applying economic levers well: 1) It is necessary to understand the necessity for the existence and development of economic levers in the present stage and that economic levers have different roles and characteristics as compared with other economic regulatory methods; 2) it is necessary to thoroughly smash the two "big pots" in terms of economic management, in order to change the situation in which enterprises only care about making profit but are not responsible for their losses; 3) it is necessary to work out a correct medium- and long-term plan for national economic development so as to set an explicit target for the application of economic levers; and 4) it is necessary to perfect the information network and the information feedback system.

Other participants held that the prerequisite for bringing the role of economic levers into play is to establish and perfect various types of economic regulatory systems, which include a flexible price regulatory system, a credit regulatory system beneficial to macroeconomic management, a taxation regulatory system, and an export policy suited to opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy.

Still others said that to bring into play the positive role of economic levers, it is necessary to set up a perfect authoritative organ in charge of the application of economic levers and to form an economic legal system

The participants remarked that to bring into play the positive role of economic levers in macroeconomic management, it is necessary to observe the following principles:

1. The principle of comprehensive application. There are many types of economic levers, and they are related to each other and restrict each other. Therefore, it is necessary to persist in the principle of comprehensive application of economic levers.

2. The principle of applying economic levers with a fixed purpose in mind. The purpose of applying economic levers in our country is to enable the national economy to develop in proportion and coordination.

3. The principle of applying economic levers in a selective way. In the same economic activity, different economic levers are sometimes used for the same purpose. In such cases, it is necessary to select good economic levers.

4. The principle of applying economic levers according to different economic spheres. Not only do economic levers have different objects to regulate, but they also have different spheres to display their regulatory role. Therefore, it is necessary to observe the principle of applying economic levers according to different economic spheres. For example, some economic levers are used to regulate the first stratum -- the macroeconomy, and others are used to regulate the second stratum -- the microeconomy.

Some participants maintained that economic levers should be classified into two types to facilitate their use. The first type is classifying economic levers into four sectors such as prices, financial taxation, loans and interest, and wages and bonuses. This classification is beneficial to the comprehensive application of economic levers. The second type is classifying economic levers according to their functions and the objects directly regulated in the distribution of national revenue. To make this more specific, we can list several systems (categories) as follows: The profit regulatory system, which involves prices and sales tax; the profit-retention regulatory system, which involves income tax, regulatory tax, and interest; the investment regulatory system, which involves finance, credit, depreciation, and taxation; and the consumption regulatory system, which involves wages, bonuses, taxation, and interest. This classification is good for both the division and coordination of economic levers.

LI XIANNIAN URGES CARE FOR OLD, SUPPORT FOR YOUNG

HK050955 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Jan 86 p 4

[Article by Li Xiannian, originally carried by ZHONGGUO LAONIAN [CHINA'S ELDERLY] No 1, 1986: "Support the Young People, Show Concern for the Old Comrades and Take Care of the Old People"]

[Text] The spring of 1986 has arrived. At the invitation of the editorial department of the magazine ZHONGGUO LAONIAN, I hereby wish to say Happy New Year and extend my best regards to all the old cadres, workers, peasants and intellectuals of our country as well as to all elderly Overseas Chinese living abroad.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the political stability and unity of our country has become stronger and stronger. To cement unity, it is very important to render support to the young cadres in their work. In the course of readjusting leading bodies at various levels, some old comrades have withdrawn from the "frontline" and a large number of young people have been promoted to leading bodies at various levels. This is necessary for the development of our party's cause. In terms of the young cadres, they are actually not too young, they are generally in their 40's or 50's. Some of them have worked for decades and some for more than 10 years. The old comrades who remain in working posts or who have vacated their "frontline" leading posts should all bestow warm and sincere support upon these young people so that they can make decisions on problems without hesitation, work on their own initiative and give full play to their creativeness. In particular the old comrades who remain in working posts should make things convenient for the young cadres and must not create difficulties for them, and should give them real support, not false support.

When the old comrades retire from their leading posts, this does not mean that they have come to the end of their career for the realization of communism. There is no such thing as retirement when it comes to fighting for communism. The old comrades should still act as advisers in finding out about the situation, identifying and tackling problems, suggesting ways and means for improving work, passing on experience, and drawing historical lessons. We must especially explain to the young the setbacks we met with so that they will not make the mistakes we made and particularly will not make serious mistakes under the new situation. This is also a way of supporting newly-promoted cadres.

Newly-appointed cadres must be given time to become acquainted with their work. When they are confornted with difficulties or when they make mistakes, it is imperative for the old comrades to show them loving care and give them support. Dare the old comrades say that they have not made any mistakes? Regardless of the seriousness and nature of the mistakes they made, they must conscientously draw lessons from these mistakes and help young people to make fewer mistakes or less serious mistakes.

Respecting the old and the worthy is a traditional virtue of our nation and party. Leading comrades and organizations at various levels should show concern for the retired old comrades. Particularly in the old revolutionary bases, the majority of the old revolutionary bases, the majority of the old cadres have retired. They have made no small contribution to the revolution and socialist construction, but many of them are suffering from diseases and deformity. Meanwhile, in the vast rural areas and numerous factories, there are hundreds of thousands of retired workers and staff members and millions of old men who have also rendered service to the revolution. According to relevant regulations adopted by the central authorities, we must take good care of them show concern for them, and help them contribute their remaining vigor to the four modernizations. We must ensure that they enjoy a peaceful old age.

It is my hope that the magazine ZHONGGUO LAONIAN will become more popular among the old and provide them with more and better nourishment for the mind.

FOREIGN FIRMS OPEN MORE REPRESENTATIVE OFFICES

OW061715 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 6 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 6 (XINHUA) -- More than 520 enterpises from 34 countries and regions set up representative offices in China last year, according to the State Administration for Industry and Commerce. This brought the total number of representative offices in the country to 1,446.

An administration official said enterprises owned by foreigners, Overseas Chinese and compatriots in Hong Kong and Macao had been eager to set up resident offices in China since the country started pursuing its open policy seven years ago. This enabled them to increase their contacts with Chinese counterparts. The past two years had seen a big increase in the trend. More than 900 offices had been set up during the period.

According to the China Enterprise Registration Yearbook, compiled and published by the administration, Japanese companies set up the most resident offices (360), followed by Hong Kong and Macao firms (230) and United States enterprises (120). The official said the number of resident offices set up by the United States and West European countries had grown quickly over the past two years.

Representative organizations were spread across the country. Beijing housed 537, Guangzhou 140, Shanghai 120 and Shenzhen 47. Others were based mainly in coastal cities, such as Tianjin, Dalian, Qingdao and Xiamen. Some foreign enterprises had also set up representative offices in inland cities, such as Chengdu in Sichuan Province, Lanzhou in Gansu Province and Harbin in Heilongjiang Province.

Up to the end of last year, more than 2,300 Sino-foreign equity joint ventures, over 3,700 contractual joint ventures and 120 wholly-foreign enterprises had been set up throughout the country, according to the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade.

FUJIAN CPC CIRCULAR ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW051255 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 26 Jan 86 pp 1,2

[Excerpts] The Fujian Provincial CPC Committee on 20 January issued an "Opinion on How To Implement the 'Circular' of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification and Seriously Do Good Party Rectification Work in Townships and Towns," and thus made arrangements for rural party rectification.

The provincial party committee decided that party rectification would be carried out in townships and towns (including their party and government leading bodies and organs, enterprises and institutions directly under them, and county organizations there) from the beginning of this year until summer harvest. Village party organizations will be rectified after the summer harvest. Because most of the members of township and town party organizations are either state cadres or workers in state enterprises, higher demands are set for township and town party rectification then for village party rectification during rural party rectification.

1. Fully understand the importance of successful party rectification in townships and towns.

2. Seriously implement the four demands set by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification for rural party rectification work, and create a new situation in township and town work.

In the course of rectification, township and town party organizations should perform the four tasks -- achieving ideological unity, rectifying party style, strengthening discipline, and purifying party organizations -- put forward in the party Central Committee's decision on party rectification; and strive to meet the four demands set by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification -- namely, to strive to heighten party members' understanding of the party's fundamental purpose, to make further efforts to correctly understand the party's policies concerning rural reforms and economic development, to deal seriously with the small number of party members who have committed severe mistakes, and to ensure success in building leading bodies.

In the course of carrying out education in the party's fundamental purpose, it is particularly necessary to pay attention to solving such problems as some party members and cadres with party membership being reluctant to work in rural areas, poor in work style, and divorced from the masses, and some taking advantage of membership of the ruling party to seek special privileges and private interests in violation of those of the masses.

In the course of carrying out education in the party's existing policies, it is necessary to attach importance to solving such problems as some party members, especially cadres with party membership, having confused ideas and misgivings about the party's policy of making the people well-to-do and building a new, socialist countryside with Chinese characteristics, not daring to go all out to lead the masses in becoming well-off by working hard, and lacking a pioneering spirit, being content with things as they are, and being in a state of inertia.

In the course of building leading bodies, it is necessary to seriously solve such problems as some grass-roots leading bodies creating disunity and violating democratic centralism. It is necessary to correct weak, lax, or even paralyzed leading bodies not daring to handle problems.

3. The methods, steps and timetable for township and town party rectification.

Generally speaking, a township or town should rectify party organizations in one group at a time. A township or town in a special situation may rectify party organizations in various groups.

Each group should complete party rectification in approximately 3 or 4 months. Party organizations with comparatively more problems or in a comparatively more complex situation may be appropriately given more time.

4. Firmly strengthen leadership over township and town party rectification work.

In township and town party rectification, it is essential to adhere to the principle of solving problems without creating chaos," pay attention to conducting investigation and study, resolutely implement the party's rural policies, and ensure sound development in party rectification work. It is necessary to draw a lesson from the leftist practices, which were repeatedly carried out in rural areas in the past. It is necessary to ensure the "four don'ts" -- namely, do not obtain confessions by force and give them credence, do not hold public criticism meetings, do not exaggerate other's mistakes, and do not overextend the scope of attack.

Township and town party rectification work must adhere to the principle of promoting and ensuring reform and economic development. Party rectification work must be comprehensively and scientifically arranged in conjunction with rural reforms. It should be conducive to further development of rural reforms, further enhancement of rural productive forces, further invigoration of rural economy, and to bringing further into play the enthusiasm of rural cadres and peasants for production, so that it will truly promote reform and further enhance the excellent situation in rural areas.

FUJIAN ISSUES EMERGENCY CIRCULAR ON LAND MISUSE

OW051155 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] The provincial Discipline Inspection Commission recently issued an emergency circular calling on party organizations at all levels in the province to sternly investigate and deal with those cadres who are party members and who build houses on arable land without authorization.

The circular pointed out: The problem of misuse of arable land in Fujian is very serious. The area of arable land decreases by 111,600 mu annually on the average. If we do not take any measure to solve this problem, we are committing a crime against the people.

The 17th session of the Standing Committee of the 6th provincial People's Congress conducted a special study on strengthening the management of cultivated land, calling on leaders at all levels to earnestly investigate and deal with cases of misuse of cultivated land, and to improve local regulations on land management as soon as possible. Members of party committees and discipline inspection commissions at all levels should pay close attention to implementing the relevant regulations, supervise all the departments concerned to strengthen management, and stop the misuse of cultivated land and illegal land transactions while rectifying party style and improving social conduct. Leading cadres who illegally occupy land to build houses should be sternly investigated and dealt with. If cases of illegal occupation of cultivated land to build houses and of land transactions are not investigated, the leading cadres should be held accountable.

DAZHONG RIBAO ON IMPROVING OFFICE WORK STYLE

[Commentator's article: "Leading Cadres Should Set an Example for Others"]

[Text] The rectification of party style should proceed from the party organs. This is an important plan set forth by the CPC Central Committee for the work in 1986.

After the central meeting of office cadres, the provincial CPC Committee has issued a circular in a timely manner calling on the party organs at various levels and the broad masses of party members and cadres throughout the province to actually improve their office work style in line with the demands of the CPC Central Committee. During the past few days, the provincial-level organs have rapidly gone into action, and have conducted studies, investigations, and corrections simultaneously in order to set an example in rectifying party style and the social conduct at large. We can believe that the improvement in the office work style will certainly promote the fundamental improvements in party style and the social conduct at large, and will certainly bring about a strong impetus to reform and to the building of socialist spiritual and material civilizations.

Our party has a fine tradition, namely what is required of lower levels must first be done by higher levels; what is required of the masses must first be done by cadres; and what is required of the ordinary cadres must first be done by the leading cadres. In doing the routine work, we should proceed in this manner, and in rectifying party style and improving the office work style, we should all the more do like this. The matter concerning the office work style is, first of all, and the mental outlook, work attitude, and ideological style of office functionaries. If leading comrades take the lead in rectifying their ideological style, there will be a reliable condition and foundation for effecting an improvement in the office work style. There is an old saying: "If one teaches others by his own example, he will be followed by others, but if one teaches others by precepts, he will encounter disputes." Leading comrades at all levels should always bear this truth in mind, and remember that their examples will affect the lower levels and the masses. The leading comrades should fully understand the important significance of improving the office work style, actually place the improvement of the office work style on their agenda, and adopt effective measures to conscientiously solve the problems regarding the office work style. Meanwhile, while investigating the problems regarding the office work style, leading comrades should regard themselves as the targets of investigation, conscientiously check their own problems, and take the lead in correcting their mistakes. Only when the leaders first correct their own mistakes can they justly and forcefully investigate and correct the problems at lower levels. At present some organs face quite a few problems, but these organs act slowly and even remain indifferent to improving the office work style. Why? Except for the problems in ideology, an important reason is that some leading comrades themselves are not clean and honest enough, and have given others leverage against themselves. Therefore, such leading comrades cannot utter just and forceful words. So far as such leading comrades are concerned, they should lay down their loads and start up the machinery. Otherwise, with the loads on their minds, how can they support the right and suppress the evil, and judge what is right and what is wrong before others?

Leading comrades at various levels, the principal responsible comrades in particular, should delve into the grass-roots units to extensively solicit opinions from the masses at the grass-roots level and from the office cadres and party members so that they can discover the problems regarding the ideological style of their own units with the concerted efforts of higher and lower levels. They should also differentiate what is primary from what is secondary, and solve their problems one by one in the right order of seriousness. In particular, those units whose work is passive and arouses more complaints among the masses should do their work more pentratingly and meticulously, and should try their best to encourage the masses to give voice to all their feelings. By so doing, we will be able not only to promote the improvement of the office work style, but also improve the relationship between the higher and lower levels and strengthen the mutual understanding among the leaders, the masses, and the office workers. Thus far, in line with the arrangements of the provincial CPC Committee, most provincial-level organs have gone into action, have investigated their problems on the basis of studies, and have collected many opinions from various fields through various channels. All these opinions should be treated conscientiously and be sorted out expeditiously. The reasonable opinions must be accepted; with regard to the unreasonable ones, a sincere explanation should be given. Improving the office work style is a

It is only one side of the matter for the leaders to set examples in improving the office work style. All office functionaries should exert themselves in the work with a high degree of responsibility. They should also positively express their opinions, offer suggestions, consciously investigate their own problems in ideological style, and actually solve their problems. No one has reason to stay aloof from the work. We should all attend to our work with a new work style, attitude, and outlook. As long as the leaders are sincere, the masses are enthusiastic, and the higher and lower levels make concerted efforts with one heart and one mind, our office work style will certainly be improved in a short period of time and the work of the organs will certainly be strengthened further.

ZHEJIANG MEETING VIEWS PARTY RECTIFICATION WORK

OW031448 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Text] The Zhejiang Provincial CPC committee held a forum on party rectification work from 29 to 31 January to sum up and exchange experiences on party rectification at the village and town level. The meeting studied ways to correct unhealthy tendencies, tackle other problems involving violations of laws and discipline, and make arrangements for party members to make examinations and comparisons in the next phase.

After affirming the achievements of units at the village and town level in training party members and in correcting mistakes in the course of party rectification and after summing up and exchanging experiences in party rectification work, the forum emphatically pointed out that examinations and comparisons by party members constituted a very important phase of party rectification at the village and town level. Whether party members have strengthened their sense of party spirit and improved their party work style must be clearly noticeable at this phase. Therefore, party committees at all levels -- especially county party committees -- must conduct ideological education among party members in order to make them understand the tremendous importance of improving party work style, of becoming a qualified party member, and of strictly observing party requirements. Next, examinations and comparisons should emphasize enhancing revolutionary spirit, improving party work style, working in the interest of the public, and promoting unity within the party. Third, it is necessary to strictly adhere to policy and carry out rectification and correction measures. Fourth, to achieve success in examinations and comparisons by party members, it is imperative to use the method of criticism and self-criticism, not to evade contradictions, and not to cover up mistakes.

The forum noted: To do a good job in party rectification at this phase, leaders at all levels should regard it as a means of improving work style and ideological and organizational work at basic-level units. At the same time, it is necessary to link party rectification with reforms and economic work and to use party rectification to ensure success in reforms and promote the building of the two civilizations. In party rectification attention should be paid to quality. Party rectification should not become a mere formality by being rushed through.

Attending the forum were responsible persons of the various prefectural and city party rectification offices, prefectural and city discipline inspection commissions and some county party committees.

FORMER GUANGXI VICE CHAIRMAN REHABILITATED

HK031012 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jan 86 p 4

[Report: "Guangxi Regional Party Committee Redresses Unjust Verdict on Li Renren, Former Vice Chairman of the Regional People's Government"]

[Text] The Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee recently decided to officially rehabilitate Li Renren, former Standing Committee member of the KMT Revolutionary Committee Central Committee, former Standing Committee member of the Guangxi Regional KMT Revolutionary Committee, and former vice chairman of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Regional People's Committee.

Li Renren joined Tong Meng Hui when he was young and supported the "three cardinal policies" advanced by Dr Sun Yat-sen. In 1927 after the "April 12th Incident," he rose in opposition to Chiang Kai-shek, who betrayed the revolution. During the period of the second cooperation between the KMT and the CPC, he supported the CPC's policy on the anti-Japanese national united front. After the "southern Anhui incident" in 1941, he shielded CPC members and progressive patriotic personages and helped them to retreat safely. After the victory in the anti-Japanese war, he, together with Chen Shaoxian and others, initiated the establishment of the "Chinese KMT Association for Promoting Democracy" in Guilin, advocating the introduction of democratic reform and opposing the civil war. When the Chinese KMT Revolutionary Committee was founded in Hong Kong in January 1948, he was elected a Central Committee member. After the foundating of the PRC, Li Renren was elected a member of the CPPCC National Committee, a deputy to the First, Second, and Third NPC, a member of the Central Political and Legal Committee, a vice chairman of the Central Overseas Chinese Affairs Committee, a vice chairman of the Guangxi Provincial People's Government, a vice chairman of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Regional People's Committee, and so on; and he made valuable contributions to the reconstruction of the country. However, during the "Great Cultural Revolution," Li Renren was cruelly persecuted, vilified as an "arch villain of the reactionary Guangxi faction" and "evil elements of the KMT." He passed away in August 1968 when his house was flooded.

The Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Regional CPC Committee is taking action to totally reverse the unjust verdict against Li Renren, fully rehabilitate him, and negate all slander and untrue accusations against him. At the same time, all unjust verdicts against all his family, relatives, friends, and other people who were involved in his case are also going to be reversed.

GUANGXI BANK PUNISHED FOR LOAN GRANTING MALPRACTICE

HK050845 Nanning Guangxi Regional Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Excerpts] According to GUANGXI RIBAO, in the course of party rectification and correcting new malpractices, the Nanning central branch of the Construction Bank failed to execute prohibitions, sought private interest in granting loans, and arbitrarily issued money and material objects. Due to the above mentioned serious mistakes, the bank has been investigated and punished.

The regional Discipline Inspection Commission issued a notice to the region on this matter, demanding that party organizations and party-member cadres at all levels in the region draw a bitter lesson from it, and resolutely curb the unhealthy tendency of failing to enforce orders and prohibitions.

The central branch set up the Nanning Investment and Trade Consultation Service Company in January 1985, and changed the name to the Nanning Investment Consultation Service Company in March 1985. (Li Guoxiao), CPC group secretary and head of the central branch, assumed the post of managing director of the company. (Zhou Daji), CPC group member and deputy head of the central branch, assumed the post of manager of the company. By taking advantage of their power in granting loans, they violated state financial regulations and transferred 15.31 million yuan of interest-free or low-interest state funds to the company's account and then lent the money to others for profit, during the period January to September 1985. By using such methods as arbitrarily raising interest rates, charging clients a penalty interest, and engaging in joint operations with others to share profits, they, in the name of the company, illegally granted 113 loans totalling 22.69 million yuan to industrial and commercial enterprises and individual operators.

Worse, after the central Discipline Inspection Commission issued Document No 7 of 1985 on correcting new malpractices, and the General Office of the State Construction Bank issued the circular on stopping the granting of loans and recovering various unreasonable loans in violation of policies, the Nanning central branch continued to grant 13.28 million yuan of loans and arbitrarily issued money and materials totalling 46,326 yuan to its staff and workers. By early December 1985, 6.01 million yuan of loans had not yet been recovered.

The Nanning central branch of the Construction Bank engaged in new malpractices in the course of correcting party style. (Li Guoxiao), head of the central branch, should bear the main responsibility and (Zhou Daji), deputy head of the central branch, should bear direct responsibility for the mistakes. In order to enforce party discipline and correct party style, the Nanning City Discipline Inspection Commission decided, with the approval of the city CPC committee, to remove (Li Guoxiao) from the post of CPC group secretary of the central branch and suggested that he be removed from the post of head of the central branch. It also decided to give a serious inner-party disciplinary warning to (Zhou Daji) and instructed the central branch to take effective measures to recover all loans and submit all wantonly issued money and material objects to the state treasury.

The document states: The arbitrary issuance of journalist certificates not only denigrates the prestige of the press units and adds pressure to transport and traffic departments, but also provides conditions for a few lawless persons to swindle and bluff others and create harmful consequences for society.

The document stipulates: Only newspaper agencies and radio and television broadcasting stations will be allowed to issue journalist certificates. Those ordinary periodical organs and publishing houses which openly publish books and magazies but not newspapers will not be allowed to issue journalist certificates or certificates for journalists in training. The document points out: Various press units may not issue certificates to journalists without the appraisal and approval of the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee. HEILONGJIANG: REGULAR CONTACTS WITH EXPERTS APPROVED

[Text] On the afternoon of 31 January, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, and the provincial people's government accepted a proposal put forward by experts of the provincial Scientific, Technological and Economic Advisory Commission with regard to establishing a system of regular contacts and consultations or discussions between leading personnel and experts in order to bring into better play the brain-trust role of advisers in formulating macroeconomic strategy and important economic policy decisions.

The proposal was made at a tea party held by the provincial Scientific, Technological and and Economic Advisory Commission on the occasion of Spring Festival. At the party, the participating experts stated: In the more than 2 years since the founding the provincial Scientific Advisory Commission, it has fulfilled the tasks of appraising more than 80 projects concerning important and major developments. Some of them have resulted in considerable economic results. However, they stated that they know so little about the province's programs for the macroeconomy and long-term development and that they wish to have contacts with the provincial leading personnel to exchange viewpoints in order to bring their role into better play and to enable them to be good advisers.

At the party the leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, and the provincial people's government readily agreed to the proposal.

Chen Lei proposed that we should begin exchanging viewpoints this year and that the leading personnel should take the lead in introducing the situation to the experts. Hou Jie stated: Efforts should be made to systematize consultations and discussions and to have the experts first provide the topics for consultations or discussions. Sun Weiben also proposed that the form of contacts between the leading personnel and experts can be multiple, such as viewpoint exchanges during lunch after meetings, opinion exchanges over the telephone, and through informal notes in order to enable the experts to understand in a timely manner the central tasks of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government as well as problems that need to be solved.

It was also decided that this year, the theoretical study central group of the provincial CPC Committee will stess the study of three special topics: 1) The issue of grasping the study of basic Marxist theory in light of the new reality; 2) the issue of building the socialist spiritual civilization and party style; and 3) the issues of socialist modernization and economic structural reform.

The circular calls on CPC committees at all levels to strengthen leadership over the regular theoretical study of in-service cadres, to guard against and overcome the phenomenon of letting things drift, and to promote the theoretical study of the broad masses of cadres throughout the province through strengthening the study of the theoretical study central groups at all levels.

JILIN SECRETARY'S ARTICLE IN MEMORY OF ZHOU ENLAI

SK010142 Changchun JILIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Gao Di, secretary of the Jilin Provincial CPC Committee, carried in the first issue of JILIN DANGSHI ZHILIAO: "A Nobel Model Who Wholeheartedly Served the People"]

[Text] History as well as the people who create history are the most unbiased. If someone asks who the greatest person of the present age is, I think the majority of the people will answer that the esteemed Comrade Zhou Enlai is the greatest.

People respected Comrade Zhou Enlai not only because he was a great proletarian revolutionary, an outstanding communist fighter, and a long-tempered brilliant party and state leader of the Chinese people who made indelible contributions to the party, the people, and the communist cause. What is more important is that he was an outstanding Communist Party member and a model of the communists.

Comrade Mao Zedong once said that every person has either great or small abilities. However, as long as he has the spirit of absolute selflessness, he can be called a noble, pure, and moral person; a person who has severed himself from vulgar interests; and a person who is of value to the people. The esteemed Premier Zhou was exactly a person of this kind.

Let us hear the reminiscences of Comrade Zhou Enlai's guard.

Comrade Zhou Enlai, "when he went out, did not want too many guards. He particularly opposed the practice of having many attendants crowding around because he thought that this would be disadvantageous for him to maintain links with the masses.

"When he made an inspection tour in other parts of the country, in order to maintain more contacts with the masses, he often asked to stay in a hostel and refused to live in a high-class guesthouse.

"In the winter of 1954, when Premier Zhou learned that the traffic in Beijing was very congested and the broad masses of staff and workers found it very inconvenient during the rush hour, he wanted us to follow him, and took a bus in front of the Beijing Library after work one evening in order to personally experience the traffic situation. After that, he took a streetcar to tour part of Beijing Municipality. At that time, the bus was very crowded. The passengers were very excited when they saw that Premier Zhou was riding the bus with them. They became excited and all of them stood up to offer their seats to Premier Zhou. The premier politely declined their offers and let them sit down. He stood all the way instead and talked cordially with the staff members and workers around him. Afterward, Premier Zhou immediately instructed the various relevant departments to study and solve the problem of traffic congestion.

"On 17 July 1958, the Huang He iron bridge was damaged by flooding and the Beijing-Guangzhou Railway was interrupted, affecting freight transport and the livelihood of the people. When Premier Zhou learned about this, he rused to Zhengzhou the next day and went to the worksite by train as soon as he alighted from the plane. When he got off the train, it was already nighttime, and a fine drizzle was falling. It was about 2 li from the railway station to the worksite. Braving the rain and dampness, Premier Zhou walked to the worksite. Soon after he arrived at the worksite, Premier Zhou went to the workers' dormitory to ask after their health, with deep concern, and dined at the big mess hall with them.

"When he was in Chongqing, Vice Chairman Zhou always came into contact with high officials of the Kuomintang and foreign friends. He wore old clothing only. One of the Western-style garments that he wore abroad was faded and there was many patches on the trousers. With the consent of the leading comrades, the office comrades quietly made a pair of new trousers for him. Fearing that he would not wear them, the comrades urged Sister Deng to do something. When Vice Chairman Zhou learned about this, he refused to wear the trousers, no matter what Sister Deng said. He said: Plain living is the true quality of our Communist Party members. It does not matter if we wear mended clothes.

"At that time, Vice Chairman Zhou ate the same meals as we did, but his work was much more complicated.

"After the founding of the PRC, Vice Chairman Zhou served as the government premier. He still maintained his true qualities of hard work and plain living, as he had done during the war years. He still lived a simple life.

"Premier Zhou and Sister Deng made it a rule that at least one-third of their staple food was coarse grain. Around 1960, at the time when our country was experiencing temporary difficulty, Premier Zhou's family did not eat meat and eggs.

"His pajamas were purchased in 1950, when he accompanied Chairman Mao abroad. The pajamas were faded, and had many patches and mended spots. However, he still wore them until his death.

"One pair of his shoes had been worn down three times. He still wore them after repairs.

"His towel was worn out and had holes, but he still mended it for reuse.

"After Premier Zhou came to the city, he lived in an old-style single-story house. Some of the beams and pillars had already rotted and most of the paint on the surface had peeled off. The windows were broken and had large cracks. During the winter, he had to block the cracks with pieces of newspaper. The floor was surfaced with large square bricks which were very damp. In consideration of the fact that Premier Zhou had to work deep into the night, and it was felt that he would be liable to contract arthritis after a long period of time, we intended to repair his house on several occasions. However, he firmly refused the offer.

"Premier Zhou made a clear distinction between public and private interest even when taking a drive. He considered going to the barber shops, cinemas, and hospitals as his private business and he paid for them at his own expense and told his driver to keep the accounts.

"Premier Zhou resolutely opposed the practice of sending gifts; he returned all gifts without exception. If some gifts could not be returned, he paid for them and then turned them over to the relevant departments for further handling.

"Premier Zhou and Sister Deng set very strict demands on their relatives. In 1960, one of Premier Zhou's relatives from Huaian wanted to stay in his school as a teacher after he had graduated from the Beijing Steel and Iron Institute. His wife was working in Huaian. In consideration of the fact that they were husband and wife, the organization decided to transfer his wife to work in Beijing. When Premier Zhou learned about this, he disagreed with such a way of doing things. He personally persuaded the couple to work together in Huaian, and said to them: At any time, you must guard against seeking special privilege. You may also bring back what you have learned from school to your hometown and may display your knowledge there. The couple happily returned to Huaian County."

A comrade working for Premier Zhou said: "After the founding of the PRC, some comrades suggested that efforts be made to build a government building, and made a model of such a building. Premier Zhou resolutely opposed this. He said: 'We should implement Chairman Mao's directive of building the country industriously and thriftily. During my term of office, I will not build a government building.'"

This was our esteemed Premier Zhou. From these specific, lively, and touching facts, we can see the brilliant image of a true communist.

The proletariat has considered the liberation of mankind as its own duty. This has determined the fundamental purpose of the Communist Party as being to serve the people. Comrade Zhou Enlai was a noble model who wholeheartedly served the people.

Selflessness and selfishness are two diametrically opposed world outlooks and outlooks on life. To serve the people, we should sacrifice ourselves for the sake of others and should work selflessly for the public interest. Those persons who have fussed about personal gains or losses and refused to sacrifice their own interests for the sake of the party and the people and those who have abused their power to seek personal gains cannot be called qualified Communist Party members. These comrades, as long as they still retain some consciousness of being Communist Party members, and retain the spirit of self-criticism, should feel ashamed upon viewing Comrade Zhou Enlai's model acts and thinking about what they have done.

At present, we are engaging in the great cause of building our country into a socialist modernized strong state. To speed up the construction pace, we should open to the outside world and invigorate the domestic economy. Under such circumstances, we should all the more continue to promote our party's fine traditions of working hard and building the country industriously, and foster a good party style and social habit. The premier has been dead for 10 years. The best act to commemorate the 10th anniversary of his death is to learn from the brilliant examples which he fostered for us and to rectify the party s e. The party is the leading force of the communist cause. The masses will judge party by viewing our party style and the ideology and work style of the party members and cadres, particularly the leading cadres. As long as we have a correct party style, we are capable of exerting influence on the broad masses of people, uniting with nd guiding them, and successfully fulfilling all our undertakings.

SHAANXI CONCLUDES PARTY WORK CONFERENCE

HK020704 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 29 Jan 86

[Text] Between 25 and 29 January, the Shaanxi CPC Committee held a work conference in Xian. The conference was attended by 316 people, including responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, the provincial People's Congress, the provincial government, the provincial CPPCC, and the provincial Military District; secretaries of various prefectural, city, county, and district CPC committees; responsible people of various provincial offices, departments, and bureaus; colleges and universities; and responsible people of some large and medium-sized enterprises.

At the conference, Comrade Bai Jinian made a report entitled: Grasp the Two Civilizations Simultaneously and Create a New Situation in the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

In the report Comrade Bai Jinian reviewed the work in 1985. He said: The provincial CPC Committee holds that in 1985, there were four points concerning our guiding ideology which are worth our attention:

First, we should eliminate leftist thinking, destroy the old, and emancipate our minds. This slogan was raised by the provincial CPC Committee in connection with the spirit of Comrade Yaobang's instruction and by proceeding from the province's actual conditions. Our experience in the past year has shown that it is necessary and correct that we emphatically stress the work of eliminating leftist thinking and destroying the old.

Second, we should greatly strengthen the building of the grass roots. Our work should be implemented in a down-to-earth manner. We must grasp the work at the grass-roots level. In June 1985, the provincial CPC Committee raised the issue of strengthening the work at the grass-roots level. Then it trained urban and rural cadres at the grass-roots level by stages and in groups. It also sent a large number of cadres to the grass roots in the rural areas to help the work there. Over the past 6 months, party committees at various levels have done a lot in this respect. They adopted a series of practical measures for strengthening the ideological and political work and the work at the grass-roots level. At present there are more than 8,000 cadres at the grass-roots level in the rural areas. This is supported by both cadres and the masses.

Third, in the course of reform and economic construction, we should uphold the principle of being eager to make steady progress. We should stress the practice of opening up in a bold way and making progress in an innovative way, while emphasizing investigation in a truth-seeking way.

Fourth, we should take a correct attitude toward and firmly grasp our shortcomings.

In regard to this year's work, Comrade Bai Jinian first talked about the issue of reforms. He said: The general principle of this year's economic structurual reform is, on the one hand, to consolidate, assimilate, augment, and perfect our present reform achievements and to exert great efforts on solving prominent problems so that our reforms will bring about better results. On the other hand, we should conduct in-depth investigations and probe the experimental units, so as to prepare for making new achievements in the next stage of reforms.

A point worth emphasizing is that we must further strengthen the vitality of large and medium-sized enterprises owned by the whole people. We must expedite the development of the tertiary industry, give play to the role of key cities, and greatly develop extensive economic and technological cooperation and links within the province and with other areas.

On further invigorating the rural commodity economy, Comrade Bai Jinian pointed out: The rural areas are still the pillar of the economy. Under no circumstances must we neglect this. At present, both the rural productive force and the peasants' living standard are at a low level. If we do not solve this uneven situation, it will inevitably affect the province's economic development as a whole and the realization of the goal of reaching the comparatively well-off level by the turn of this century. The basic way to invigorate the rural commodity economy is to readjust the rural industrial structure. Once we have grasped this point, we can handle our work like leading an ox by the halter. At present we must also place the development of marketable grain in an important position. When developing rural commodity production, we must unswervingly depend on science and technology. All comrades of party committees at various levels who are in charge of the rural work must understand this point sober-mindedly. At the same time, they must also really extricate the poor from the poverty-stricken state.

Comrade Bai Jinian urged the whole party to strengthen ideological and political work. He urged party committees at all levels to include the work on their daily agenda. The propaganda and education departments and various mass organizations are departments in charge of ideological and political work. They must help the party committees do well in their supervisory work. He urged them to really improve ideological and political work, to differentiate the present work from the past work which was influenced by leftist thinking, and to probe a new way.

He also said: We must justly and forcefully educate cadres and the masses on the present situation, tasks, and policies. The provincial CPC Committee has decided that in the first half of this year, the province's prefectures, cities, and counties, and various departments, enterprises, schools, and organs, proceeding from their actual conditions, must concentrate their efforts in a systematic way on conducting education about the present situation, tasks, and policies. They must strive to seek a common understanding, heighten our understanding, promote unity, and achieve our lofty goal. In addition, they must do well in building the ideological and political departments themselves.

On party rectification and building the cadre contingent, Comrade Bai Jinian said: We must really do well in party rectification at the grass roots in both urban and rural areas. We must greatly strengthen the building at the grass-roots level. In this regard, we must grasp two points: first, the cadres' education; and second, the consolidation of organizations. We must consolidate and develop the achievements made at the first and second stages of party rectification and strive to fundamentally change for the better the party work style of leading organs at provincial, prefectural, and county levels. Issues that are most complained about are cases of abusing power and irresponsible bureaucratic practices. When handling these kinds of cases, some people take a lenient attitude toward them. We must integrate party rectification with the strengthening of the party's building of ideology and organizational discipline. We must also integrate it with the improvement of organs' efficiency and cadres' quality. In the wake of completion of this party rectification, the focal point of the work concerning organizations and cadres should be gradually switched to the strengthening of the building of ideology and organizational discipline and the improvement of cadres' quality.

In conclusion, Comrade Bai Jinian talked about the issue of leadership. He stressed two points: First, we should improve the leaders' work style and implement the work down to the grass-roots level. He said: Leadership means service, that is, to serve the grass roots and masses. The cadres, particularly leading cadres at all levels, must not be lazy or carry out work perfunctorily. Rather, they must act in a down-to-earth manner. Second, we should improve the skill of leadership, implement the party's principles and policies and work, in an innovative way. Comrade Bai Jinian said: The criterion for judging innovation in one's work is the party's ideological line. Anyone who really upholds the practice of seeking truth from facts and who really implements the CPC Central Committee's principles and policies should be the one who is bold in proposing suggestions, in offering practical measures for solving problems, and in making innovations. It can be said that whether or not a cadre carries out work in an innovative way under the conditions of upholding the four basic principles reflects the ideology, policy, professional skill, and sense of political responsibility of the cadre. This is particularly true for leading cadres. In order to further promote the province's work, we need a large number of innovative cadres.

At the provincial CPC Committee conference on party work, Vice Governor Xu Shanlin made a speech entitled: Act in the Spirit of the Central Meeting on Rural Work and Promote Constant Development of the Province's Rural Economy. Focusing on the 1986 general principle and general task proposed by the provincial meeting of party delegates, the participants discussed the report of Comrade Bai Jinian, the speech of Comrade Xu Shanlin, the issue of strengthening ideological and political work,and the work concerning party rectification in rural areas.

The participants expressed their views freely at the conference. They unanimously held: In 1985, the province's cadres and party members greatly emancipated their minds. It was also a year in which reforms were carried out in an all-round and in-depth way and in which the province made headway in both economic construction and other tasks. The province's economic and political situation was really very good.

The noted that 1986 is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. To do well in this year's work and to have a good start for the Seventh 5-Year Plan are of significance in terms of the in-depth economic structural reform, the further promotion of the national economy and other undertakings, and the promotion of building of socialist spiritual and material civilizations.

Through discussion, the participants gained firm faith in doing well in their year's work. They are determined to carry out work in an innovative way in accordance with the requirements of the provincial CPC Committee so that their work will be marked by special features, vitality and practical and fruitful results. Therefore, they can create a new situation in the task of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and make 1986 into a year in which the leaders'work style will be improved, the work will be comprehensively implemented, and the construction at the grass-roots level will be greatly strengthened.

XINJIANG CONCLUDES RURAL WORK CONFERENCE

HK020333 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Excerpts] A 10-day rural work conference convened by the regional CPC Committee concluded today. The conference said that the general demand on rural work in the region this year is to seriously implement the spirit of the central rural work conference, implement the policies well, carry out reforms in depth, continue to make readjustments, improve conditions for agricultural production, organize pre- and post-production services, promote commodity circulation, and fulfill all the economic targets.

The focus is on production of grain, animal husbandry, cotton, and cucurbit and fruit.

In grain production, the region should get a vigorous grasp of conversion work. In animal husbandry, a number of livestock in the pastoral areas should be transferred to the agricultural areas, and integration of agriculture and animal husbandry should be promoted. In cotton production, it is essential to improve quality. In cucurbit and fruit production, it is essential to do a good job in transportation.

Regional CPC Committee Secretary Song Hanliang presided at the conference. Deputy Secretary Zhang Sixue conveyed the spirit of the central rural work conference. Deputy Secretary and regional government Chairman Tomur Dawamat delivered a report entitled "Further Implement the Policies, Carry Out Reforms In Depth, and Spur Sustained, Steady, and Coordinated Development of the Rural Economy" Comrade Song Hanliang delivered a speech entitled "Straighten Out Thinking, Grasp the Focal Points, and Strive for a Bumper Harvest for the Ninth Successive Year." Regional Advisory Commission Chairman Wang Enmao made a speech. Regional CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Li Shoushan delivered a summation.

The conference pointed out that the past few years have been the best period for the entire rural economy situation in the region. The region's grain situation is currently good, but we cannot overestimate this, become blindly optimistic, and view the issue lightly. Although we are now self-sufficient in grain, with a surplus, the average amount of grain available per person is below the record figure for the region and also below the national average. There are also problems of too much emphasis on wheat and too little on rice, miscellaneous grains, and maize. We must therefore continue to implement the principle of developing diversified undertakings without any slackening of grain production.

This year we must stabilize the grain area, readjust the grain crop variety, increase income, raise yields, and ensure the fulfillment of the target for total output. We must appropriately reduce the area sown to wheat and increase the area sown to maize and other crops. We should base our efforts on grain conversion within the region and on the spot. We must continue to perfect the contract purchase system and alter the duration of unchanged quotas from 1 to 3 years. We should expand the varieties covered by contract purchasing by including barley, sorghum, mung beans, and broad beans.

The conference stressed: Giving animal husbandry a still more conspicuous position represents a major change in the region's rural economic structure and strategic planning. The key to making a success of this change lies in enhancing understanding of animal husbandry and strengthening leadership over it and over work in the pastoral areas. To speed up the development of animal husbandry, we must grasp animal husbandry on pastureland and also vigorously develop it in agricultural areas and pay attention to it in city outskirts, organinally integrating these three developments.

The focal point in animal husbandry work this year is to grasp conversion, develop animal husbandry in the agricultural areas, and transfer some livestock in the pastoral areas to the agricultural areas. This must be done in a planned and organized way under leadership. There are great potentials for developing animal husbandry in the agricultural areas.

The conference proposed further relaxing animal husbandry policies, making concessions to the interests of the herdsmen, and invigorating the economy in the pastoral areas, and formulated corresponding policies.

Discussing the development of commodity production in the region, the conference proposed vigorous development of the region's strong-point products and striving to turn the region's natural strong points into economic and commodity strong points. Cotton is a big strong point in Xinjiang. The key to taking advantage of it lies in improving quality and paying top prices for top quality. Speeding up the improvement of strains is an important way to improve cotton quality.

Cucurbit and fruit production is also a big strong point in Xinjiang. We must regard the development of cucurbit and fruit cultivation as a major pillar of the rural economy and get a thoroughly good grasp of it.

Discussing the readjustment of the rural production structure, the participants pointed out that township enterprises, forestry, and fisheries are weak links in the region's rural economy. Regarding the township enterprises, we should uphold the principle of pooling the efforts of townships, villages, combinations of households, and individuals. The enterprises should be based on and serve agriculture. The focus should be on developing agricultural and animal product processing industries, mining, building materials, light, textile, and chemical industries, and tertiary industry. We must further relax the policies and make concessions to the interests of the township enterprises.

The key to developing forestry lies in better implementing forestry policies. In fisheries, we must make full use of our waters and launch large numbers of people to breed fish. We should gradually establish some marketable fish bases in city outskirts.

The conference proposed the region's agricultural development targets for 1986. Total output value should be 5 billion yuan. Total grain output should be 10 billion jin, cotton 4.5 million dan, oil-bearing crops 6 million dan, and sugarbeet 13 million dan. The peak number of livestock should be 40 million, and meat output should reach 2.15 million tons. The region should carry out afforestation and tree planting on 1.2 million mu, and strive to plant grass and improve pastureland on 5 million mu. Total income of the township enterprises should be 1.2 billion yuan.

The conference held: To attain these targets, we must persevere in reform and carry out reform in depth. We must increase input, to improve the production conditions. We must rely on science and do a good job in organizing agroscientific and technological services. We must step up work in poor areas, and lighten the peasants' burden. We must bring into full play the backbone role of the production and construction corps in modernizing Xinjiang's agriculture. We must pay attention to building spiritual civilization in the rural areas and strengthen leadership over rural work.

The focal points in rural reforms this year are to further perfect the dual-level operational system combining unified and separate efforts and bring into full play the initiative of both unified and household operations. Starting with providing services, we must perfect the cooperative economy. In accordance with the demands of the peasants and herdsmen, we must provide comprehensive and systematic service in fine strains, technology, processing, storage, and so on.

The meeting stressed that leadership is service. The main duty of leaders in rural work is to serve the grass roots and the peasants and herdsmen.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR'S ARTICLE ON REUNIFICATION

OW061430 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0732 GMT 6 Feb 86

[XINHUA commentator's article: "Both Sides of the Strait Work Together To Invigorate China"]

[Text] Beijing, 6 Feb (XINHUA) -- With the approach of the Spring Festival of 1986, the sons and daughters of the Chinese nation throughout the world are jubilantly celebrating this traditional holiday. On this auspicious and happy occasion, we would like, in accordance with tradition, to extend festival greetings to our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong and Macao, and to Chinese nationals residing abroad. We wish you good health and happiness, and domestic bliss.

It is known to all that in reality the recent situation on both sides of the Taiwan Strait has, as can be seen from various considerations openly stated or covertly conveyed by public figures as well as private individuals, been moving nearer to the eventual peaceful reunification of the motherland. It is patently obvious that this is the general trend of events and meets the demands of the times and the people. Even those who are desperately opposed to this have to yield their ground bit by bit, glancing right and left but unable to directly admit the facts. We welcome the way things are moving, and understand the fix in which some people find themselves for the time being. Nevertheless, like our compatriots in Taiwan and elsewhere, we really hope to see events develop a bit faster and shape up more definitely. In any case, "the need for China to reunify peacefully at an earlier date" has become the strong demand of all Chinese compatriots and a major topic of discussion in China and abroad. People of all circles on Taiwan and Chinese nationals residing abroad, even numerous top civilian and military persons within the Kuomintang, are dissatisfied with the rigid stand taken by the Taiwan authorities in opposing the Communist Party and rejecting proposals of the mainland for peace negotiations; they are critical of the unreasonable rejection of the call to resume posts and telecommunications, navigation and trade links between the mainland and Taiwan; and they call for the restoration of normal contacts between kith and kin now separated by the Strait between them. Defying bans, they have held various discussions of questions relating to China's reunification and Taiwan's future, making oblique hints to ways of achieving China's peaceful reunification. Meanwhile, indirect trade and exchanges of visit to relatives and friends, as well as academic, cultural and sports exchanges, are steadily increasing. Is there any one who can step forth and challenge these facts? Along with the increase in exchanges, naturally, Taiwan compatriots and Overseas Chinese who judge things objectively find that the political situation on the mainland has been stable in recent years, that its international position is steadily becoming more important, that the Hong Kong question has been resolved to the unanimous approval of the people of China and the rest of the world, and that the economic development and improvement of both urban and rural living standards on the mainland have become the focus of world attention. It is of course natural that people of various circles who are concerned about the mainland are not satisfied with everything that has taken place on the mainland. As a matter of fact, the government and public on the mainland have never claimed that all is right with us. Moreover, different people have different views and are all free to hold them. There is no need to impose a consensus. But the truly important thing is that the mainland of our motherland is making steady progress. The National Conference of the Chinese Communist Party held last September successfully completed the replacement of old leaders of the central institutions with younger ones, thus ensuring the stability of the nation's fundamental strategies and principles and policies for a long time to come. The concept of "one country, two systems" raised by the Chinese Communist Party is being gradually understood by compatriots on Taiwan, Overseas Chinese throughout the world and other people who care about China's future. In the changing situation in Hong Kong, the concept has proved itself entirely feasible. A growing number of people are coming to realize that reunification of the motherland on the principle of "one country, two systems" suits the need of the nation's long-term stability and is also a guarantee for maintaining the present way of life and interests of our Taiwan compatriots; and that it greatly favors the long-term prospects of Taiwan's economic growth and makes it possible for our Taiwan compatriots to play their role in the four-modernization drive of the mainland. When this is one, it will indeed be a situation in which "four beauties become available and two disagreeing things join." [si mei ju er nan bing 0934 5019 0215 0059 7181 1629] (The original verse is from "Tengwang Pavilion," an article by Wang Bo of the Tang Dynasty. Here, four beauties mean allegorically the four benefits described in the preceding sentence, and two disagreeing things mean the KMT and the CPC) The deeds of merit of all those who contribute to this will surely go down in historical records, and is something their descendants will be proud of. Since we are all human, how could any one of us far-sighted Chinese be unmoved by the prospect or unawakened to his responsibility for the rise or fall of the nation?

The year 1986 is sure to be one of furthering the process of the peaceful reunification of the motherland. We sincerely hope that in this year, our compatriots of all nationalities and in all walks of life on Taiwan will continue to demonstrate their patriotic spirit, synchronize their efforts of seeking democracy and prosperity on the island with those of promoting peaceful reunification of the motherland, each person using his or her ability and through diverse channels to work for the reunification, and join us in the concerted effort to attend to state affairs; and that they urge the Kuomintang authorities to remove artifical barriers and change the policy of "no contact, no negotiation and no compromise". We hope at the same time that Hong Kong and Macao compatriots and Overseas Chinese will continue to serve as a bridge for exchanges in all fields on both sides of the Strait, and contribute their wisdom and efforts for reunification of the motherland.

We have noted that the Taiwan Kuomintang authorities always maintain the one-China stand and oppose schemes known as "two Chinas" and "independence of Taiwan"; and we are happy to find that the authorities in Taiwan have, after all, taken a few steps toward easing the tension between both sides of the Strait. Developments on the mainland at present are at the important point of invigoration and take-off, while Taiwan has the task of extricating itself from a predicament for reinvigoration. The world is changing rapidly, and people should make careful plans. It is better to help yourself than to have others help you. Friend or foe, we both spring from the same roots. Dilatoriness is fraught with dangers, present obstinacy spells future ruin. We must change with rapidly changing circumstances; and is not reunification but a return to the normal and original order of thing? Events develop according to their inherent laws, and honor and duty permit no turning back. The country should be reunified at an earlier date so that the people on both sides of the Strait can live in peace and prosperity forever and the entire Chinese nation advance in step with the developed countries of the world. On your decision hinges success or failure, honor or discredit. It is our sincere hope that the Kuomintang authorities understand their position and role in history well and, balancing advantages and disadvantages and considering their own future, do things that suit the development of events and meet popular demand. Dr Sun Yat-sen declared 70 years ago: "Persons with foresight always do things that accord with heavenly principles, popular will, the trend of world events and the need of the masses; hence their success in whatever they try to accomplish. This is how all revolutions and reforms and exploits to build up a nation have been carried out since ancient times." ("The Complete Works of Sun Yat-sen" Vol VI, p 228) How finely said! One can certainly put into practice what one truly knows, and the Kuomintang gentlemen now in power should think this over and over again. In the final analysis, their pressing task today is to make determined efforts to cast aside all unnecessary doubts and stop all empty talk, and take a bold step in the new year by blazing a new trail for the reunification of the motherland. That will certainly be a blessing for the entire Chinese people and nation, and it is the only way to ensure the well-being of the Kuomintang authorities.

U.S. POLITICAL ASYLUM FOR MAINLAND CHINESE URGED

OW070115 Taipei CHINA POST in English 4 Feb 86 p 4

[Editorial: "U.S. Grants of Political Asylum to Mainland Chinese"]

[Text] According to an analysis by the Chinese language newspaper, WORLD JOURNAL, the U.S. Government granted between Oct. 1, 1984 to Sept. 30, 1985, political asylum to only 44 persons out of 171 applicants from Red China.

Although the number is three times more than that of the preceding year, it represents, nevertheless, only one-fourth of the total applicants. The statistics also show that in fiscal 1984, a total of 318 applied for political asylum but only 15 were granted it and 192 were rejected. In fiscal 1985, 63 were rejected, 34 were still under consideration and 30 others withdrew their applications or were requested to submit additional information.

As the Chinese mainland is undergoing another phase of arbitrary persecution of dissidents in its current anti-corruption campaign the Tengists have launched another wave of wanton executions of defenseless people. Most of the applicants for political asylum in the United States will be in mortal danger upon returning to the Chinese mainland. Rejection of their applications would inevitably endanger their safety when they return to the Chinese mainland.

On humanitarian grounds, the U.S. immigration authorities should reconsider those rejections or offer an alternative of permitting them to continue to reside and work in the United States until they can find an alternative country to go to. But they should not be repatriated to the Chinese mainland as it would mean for them certain punishment by the Chinese Communist authorities.

PLANS TO BUILD UP INDIGENOUS DEFENSE INDUSTRY

OW011445 Taipei CNA in English 1421 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 1 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan said Saturday that in fiscal 1987 the government will strengthen cooperation with the private sector in order to build up an indigenous defense industry at an early date.

In a report to the Legislative Yuan on its administrative guideline for fiscal 1987, the yuan said the priority of its efforts in this respect will be placed on the research and development of advanced fighters, naval vessels and armored vehicles.

In the meantime, the government will improve its security equipment and mobilization ability in order to prevent unlawful elements from undermining the social stability.

In addition to training more scientists and engineers for the defense industry and introducing into this nation more advanced technologies, the government will accelerate its pace in setting up an automatic defense command system, updating electronic equipment of the Navy and Air Force, and enhancing the combat ability of coastal artillery and missile units in order to maintain air and sea supremecy in the Taiwan Strait.

CHENG MING VIEWS HU QIAOMU'S RECENT ACTIONS

HK060125 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 100, 1 Feb 86 pp 12, 85

["Notes on a Northern Journey" by Luo Ping: "Hu Qiaomu's Recent Performance"]

[Text] The Essential Victory of Justice

Recently, there have been many changes in China's idelogical field. This suggests that the struggle at the supreme level of the CPC is very complicated. The "tightening of control" in the ideological field has met with strong resistance and opposition.

After the transient "golden time" during the meeting of the writers' association in early 1985, Hu Yaobang made two speeches (the February speech to the press and the April speech to literature and art circles) under pressure, setting the tone for tightening control in the ideological field. These two speeches have brought China's cultural activities to a low ebb. Originally, Hu Jiwei was supposed to be in charge of drafting the press law, which was to be completed by the end of last year and submitted to the NPC for examination early this year, but nothing has come out so far; and the proposal on "freedom of creation" in literature and art has been replaced by "writers' sense of responsibility for society" and "social benefit."

On the other hand, however, the suppressed group of people took silent action in lieu of resistance and scored a series of essential victories in 1985: Liu Binyan, who was to be "expelled" from the press, was allowed to remain in RENMIN RIBAO as a senior reporter; a group of "rebellious" youths in literature and art circles were finally recognized by the authorities; seven members of the Chinese Writers Association started their activities; some old and modern poets were allowed to go abroad for a visit; and as a result of the efforts made by the committee for protecting the rights and welfare of writers. Xu Jingya, who had been relieved of his post for examination in Shenzhen, was permitted to return to work, and Qu Youyuan, a democratic poet in the northeast who had been arrested on a "fabricated" charge as a counterrevolutionary, was finally released....

There was no one in cultural circles in Beijing who did not exclaim with happiness at the mention of all this. They remarked that the waves of reforms and democracy were irresistable and that if the fifth literature and art congress could be opened soon, there would be another "literature and art spring."

Hu Qiaomu "Offers a Humble Apology"

The victory of the open-minded faction in literature and art circles has made Hu Qiaomu, leader of the conservatives, feel that the situation is unfavorable to him. Intentionally or unintentionally, Hu Qiaomu has been "abnormal" recently.

At the fourth writers' congress, some participants boldly criticized Hu Qiaomu, Deng Liqun, and He Jingzhi for their "leftist ways of doing things. The bravest in counter-attacking the "leftist kings" in literature and art circles was playwright Wu Zhuguang, who accused He Jingzhi and the like of persecuting him and claimed that he would never knuckle under. Taking account of the "overall" situation, Hu Qiaomu treated Wu Zhuguang with increased respect and took the initiative in "uniting" with this much-respected writer. Not long ago, Hu Qiaomu went in a Hongqi car to an apartment building near the Beijing workers' stadium and paid Wu Zhuguang a "special visit." Wu Zhuguang lives on the eighth floor but there is no elevator in the building. As Hu Qiaomu was not strong enough to go up to the eighth floor, he has two assistants help him up.

A friend of mine who knows Hu Qiaomu and Wu Zhuguang told me that the purpose of Hu's visit was to make an apology to Wu -- to admit that what he did in the past hurt the feelings of some comrades. People in literature and art circles in Beijing described this as "offering a humble apology," but they did not know whether the apology was sincere.

"Dear Shu Ting"

Hu Qiaomu never forgets to make contact with young writers who have exceptional talent. Shu Ting, a female a little over 30 who was elected a member of the board of the Chinese Writers' Association at its fourth congress, was listed among the 10 young poets selected by LHASA WANBAO [LHASA EVENING NEWS] readers last year. Subsequently, she was elected vice chairman of the Fujian Writers' Association. In autumn last year, Hu Qiaomu made a special trip to Gulangyu, Xiamen, to "visit" this female poet of the "obscure faction." There Hu Qiaomu expressed his objection to criticism of the "obscure faction."

It was said that they talked for as long as half a day and that Hu Qiaomu spoke highly of Shu Ting's poetic style and asserted that there would be no more criticism of the "obscure faction."

Not long after this, Hu Qiaomu, full of sentiment for this female poet, wrote her a letter addressing her as "Dear Shu Ting." A week later, Hu Qiaomu wrote her another letter saying that the word "dear"was not appropriate and should be "corrected" to "comrade." Some people praised Hu Qiaomu, saying that he had the style of a superior.

Leniency Toward Liu Binyan

Hu Qiaomu has always looked upon Liu Binyan as "one who holds different political views." Although Liu Binyan is a "comrade" in the party, he usually fails to "keep abreast of the CPC Central Committee." Therefore, Hu Qiaomu does not have a good opinion of him. But as Hu Yaobang holds a different view on Lou Binyan and public opinion at home and abroad is in Liu Binyan's favor, Hu Qiaomu can do nothing to him. Recently, some people suggested that Liu Binyan leave RENMIN RIBAO, but Hu Qiaomu showed his generosity, saying that "it would be better for Liu Binyan to retain his position at RENMIN RIBAO." Since these remarks have saved Liu Binyan's life, should he not be deeply grateful to Hu Qiaomu?

However, Hu Qiaomu adopts a different attitude toward "comrades in the party who can keep abreast of the CPC Central Committee."

Wang Meng's fate is different from that of Liu Binyan or Wang Ruowang. Wang Meng has experienced gradual promotions in recent years, and he was elected member of the CPC Central Committee at the National Conference of Party Delegates last year. Although Wang Meng is not the first leader of the cultural federation or the writers' association, he is actually the No 1 person in literature and art circles. In balancing the relationship between the writers contingent and the CPC, no one can substitute for him. The writers call him the "literature and art viceroy."

A "Verbal Battle" Between Wang Meng and Hu Qiaomu

Since Wang Meng became chief editor of RENMIN WENXUE, he has hoped to make some prominent achievements. Over the past year, RENMIN WENXUE has carried a number of significant articles that have aroused certain arguments among readers, such as "You Should Make a Choice" by Liu Suola (in the March 1985 issue), "Flowers Which Are Not Flowers" by Wu Liwei (in the April issue) "Father, Father, Father" by Han Shaogon (in the June issue), "May 19th Telephoto Lens" by Liu Xinwu (in the July issue), and "Mr Hei" by Jia Pingau (in the October Issue). The emergence of these works has injected vitality into literature and art circles, given readers fresh feelings, and aroused arguments among critics.

The majority of readers speak highly of these works, but some people assert that they reflect "empty inspiration," "Laozi and Zhuangzi philosophy," "decadent ideology," and "unhealthy feelings."

Not long ago, taking the opportunity of "tightening control" in literature and art circles, Hu Qiaomu went looking for Wang Meng to lecture him on morals. Hu Qiaomu asked Wang Meng why RENMIN WENXUE had carried so many "unhealthy works," and demanded that Wang Meng explain. Unexpectedly, Wang Meng said: "You have read all these works, haven't you?" Hu Qiaomu replied that he had read only some of them. Wang Meng told him to come back again after he had read all those works. In the end, Hu Qiaomu himself was in for trouble.

The "Prescription Study" of RENMIN WENXUE

Naturally, this does not mean that Wang Meng does not have any misgivings whatsoever. However, since he has taken over as aditor in chief of RENMIN WENXUE, he has been forced to do something desperate. He does not necessarily like those works but he can put up with them. Particularly when the sales volume of RENMIN WENXUE had dropped from more than 1 million copies at its height to a couple of hundred thousand copies, there is indeed a need for different styles of works in order to win over different readers.

In Chinese literary circles there has always been a "prescription study." This "theory" of prescription, characterized by "70 percent achievements and 30 percent mistakes" or "80 percent achievements and 20 percent mistakes," was reportedly derived from the dangerous political situation. As a "governor general of literature and art," Wang Meng is naturally familiar with this. Therefore, he will never act indiscriminately regarding the lists and cintents of RENMIN WENXUE articles lest Hu Qiaomu seize on his mistakes. That is precisely why he asked Hu to "discuss the articles after he read all of them."

Wang Meng knows that Hu Qiaomu can do nothing to him, but he should not behave in an unbridled manner either because the situation is tense. For this reason, at the work conference of the Chinese Writers Association, he vigorously stressed the need to strengthen the writers "sense of social responsibility" and denounced some unhealthy trends in literary creation.

RENMIN WENXUE was reported to have cnaceled at the last moment the typesetting of some articles regarded as "problematic." The authors of these articles were previously notified that their works would be published. Calculating the RENMIN WENXUE would not dare to publish many of the good works sent to the Editorial Department in the near future, the authors recently sent them out of the capital. Some have been sent to Shanghai, where some magazines are getting ready to publish them.

Was Hu Qiaomu's Recent Performance Abnormal?

After reading the reports on Hu Qiaomu's recent behavior, the readers will probably ask: Is Hu Qiaomu acting a little oddly these days? No. As far as Hu Qiaomu is concerned, the contradictions between the present and the past and between words and deeds are normal. In recent years he said that the formulation that literature and art should serve politics is not good. However, when the literature and art circles asked his to write articles according to this viewpoint, he procrastinated. To go back a little farther, Hu made some erroneous remarks about Deng Xiaoping during the "Cultural Revolution." However, the "Resolution of Certain Questions in the History of the Party Since the Founding of the PRC," which Deng Xiaoping wanted approved at the party meeting, was chiefly written by Hu. Some people asked: Why was the "Resolution" so lenient toward Mao Zedong? Hu Qiaomu said: The original manuscript included the historic and class reasons behind Mao Zedong's mistakes.

However, due to the principle that it "should be in rough outline and not go into so much detail" (it was Deng's instruction -- author), they were deleted. He also said: "You should not oppose this or that; it is not easy even to attain such a result (referring to the "Resolution")." We can thus see that Li Qiaomu is the same as he was before.

What is he like?

You can draw your own conclusion, can't you?

HONG KONG POLICE ARREST 5 BAMBOO UNION MEMBERS

HK060408 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 6 Feb 86 p 3

[Text] Five senior members of the Taiwanese Bamboo Union in Hong Kong have been arrested in swoops throughout the territory on Tuesday, police reported yesterday. The "top secret" joint operation by officers of the Organised and Serious Crime Bureau and the Commerical Crime Bureau followed lengthy investigations into the activities of Taiwan's Chuk Luen Bong (Bamboo Union) members here.

In the operation, detectives working under instructions from Detective Senior Superintendent Peter Lee Lan-chuen raided nine premises throughout the territory believed to be the frequent haunts for members of the Taiwanese triads. Police declined to give more information on the raids but said they were carrying out follow-up investigations into a triad society in Hong Kong. However, police said the arrested men have been charged with offences relating to assisting in the management of a triad society and being office-bearers of the Taiwan-based Chuk Luen Bong (Bamboo Union) gang.

The Chuk Luen Bong members are known to have been involved in the murder of journalist Henry Liu in Daly City, California, last year.

XU JIATUN DENIES RUMORS OF PENDING RETIREMENT

HK060410 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 6 Feb 86 p 3

[Text] China's top official in Hong Kong denied yesterday he is to retire this year. Mr Xu Jiatun, director of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY in Hong Kong, said an earlier report about his immediate retirement is a totally groundless rumour. Mr Xu told the press yesterday he personally would like to retire this year because he is well above the age of retirement. But he quickly added that the matter is not up to him to decide. It will be decided by Beijing. He declined to speculate on a date for his retirement.

The question of his retirement arose when a report was published in CHENG MING, an authoritative magazine on China, saying Beijing had decided to replace Mr Xu this year. Mr Xu was in China at the time. A few weeks later, Mr Qiao Zonghui, deputy secretary-general of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY, told the press during a social function that Mr Xu was only on vacation in China. It was not until yesterday that Mr Xu appeared publicly to deny the rumour.

ELEMENTARY READER GARNERS UNESCO AWARD

[Text] Lanzhou, February 8 (XINHUA) -- An elementary reading book to teach illiterate peasants in Cansu Province has been awarded a prize by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). The Nessim Habif Prize is awarded for outstanding work in the international fight against illiteracy.

The book was compiled by the Gansu Provincial Education Department to meet the needs of this north west China province's rural dwellers. Gansu has a total rural population of more than 16 million. About 37 percent of those aged from 12 to 40 are illiterate, and education officials plan to teach all the illiterate people aged between 12 and 25 to read and write over the next five years. The reading book contains 2,000 commonly-used words in 68 texts. The first half concentrates on teaching slow-learning adults by a fast-learning method stressing words with similar sounds. The second half consists of reading practices. Most students are able to master the texts in their spare time within 12 months, education officials here said, adding that more than 300,000 copies have been printed since early last year.

AL-JUMAYYIL APPEALS TO UN ON ISRAELI ANNEXATION

[Text] Beirut, February 7 (XINHUA) -- Lebanese President Amin al-Jumayyil today urged the accredited representatives of the permanent members of the Security Council to enlist their governments' help in forcing Israel to abandon its gradual annexation of Lebanese land. Referring to the report which was released, along with maps, by the international commission set up to investigate Israeli annexation of Lebanese territory at the United Nations Headquarters, the president said it indicated that between 50 and 70 square kilometers of Lebanese land were being grabbed by the Israeli occupation authority.

Meeting the ambassadors form the United States, Britain, France, China and the Soviet Union, Al-Jumayyil said that Israel's gradual annexation of Lebanese land was a flagrant violation of the U.N. Charter and even more serious than outright occupation. He informed the envoys that the U.N. secretary general had been asked to set up a fact-finding committee. He noted that Israel was seeking to take over wider areas of the south, extending its occupation north to the town of Kafr Killa and the Al-Wazzani and some upstreams of the Wazzani River. He pointed out that Israel was trying to take over the pipelines which deliver Saudi oil to the Zahrani refinery near Sayda in the south, and to use the pipeline to divert waters of the Wazzani River and ultimately of the Litani River, thus not only stealing Lebanese land, but also plundering Lebanese water resources.

LI PENG MEETS U.S. UNDER SECRETARY SCHNEIDER

OW081116 Beijing XINHUA in English 1056 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Vice-Premier Li Peng met with William R. Schneider, under secretary of state of the United States, and his party, here this afternoon. Li briefed Schneider on China's industrial and agricultural production, economic restructuring and its policy of opening to the outside world. He said that the crackdown on economic crimes will help rather than affect China's opening to the outside world. China "will continue to develop economic and technological cooperation with foreign countries," he emphasized.

Schneider, who is on a private visit to China, said China has benefited much from its economic reform. Earlier today, Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Zhu Qizhen met and feted Schneider and his party.

QIAN QICHEN MEETS U.S. PRESIDENTIAL ADVISER

OW081138 Beijing XINHUA in English 0831 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Qian Qichen, vice-minister of foreign affairs, exchanged views on disarmament with Edward Rowny, U.S. special advisor to the President and secretary of state for arms control matters, here this morning. Rowny arrived here on February 7 as guest of the American Embassy in China, and left this afternoon.

REAGAN SUGGESTS NEW NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT PLAN

OW071943 Beijing XINHUA in English 1932 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 7 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan has suggested a plan calling for the elimination of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles from Europe and for cutting the Soviet SS-20 missile force in Asia by 50 percent, it was disclosed here today. Press reports quoted administration officials as saying that Reagan proposed the plan in response to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's Jan. 15 proposal to eliminate nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

The U.S. proposal, masterminded by the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, is contained in a confidential directive from the President. It was one of three possible approaches considered at a White House meeting Monday. The two other proposals were made by Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and by Secretary of State George Shultz. The Reagan plan apparently runs counter to the opinion of Weinberger, who reportedly claimed that no change in the American position was needed. It also differs from the position adopted by Shultz, who proposed that the U.S. respond the Soviet proposal by offering measures on medium-range weapons in Europe and by modifying its proposal to ban mobile missiles.

Reagan's plan accepts the Soviet suggestion that U.S. and Soviet missiles be eliminated from Europe, but rejects the idea that Britain and France freeze their nuclear forces. It also rebuffs the suggestion that the U.S. pledge not to transfer missiles to other countries. U.S. officials said a final decision on the adoption of the plan will be made only after consultations with its allies. Paul Nitze, adviser to Secretary of State Shultz, has been sent to discuss the plan with European allies, and Edward Rowny, a former arms negotiator, has been dispatched to consult with Asian and Pacific nations. Meanwhile, U.S. House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Dante Fascell yesterday called on the Reagan administration to "take a more aggressive and assertive posture" in the Geneva arms negotiations and urged a high-priority effort to work out a comprehensive U.S.-Soviet ban on nuclear testing.

GORBACHEV INTERVIEWED ON SOVIET-U.S. RELATIONS

[Text] Moscow, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev stressed today that progress thus far in Soviet-U.S. relations have been "too limited, peripheral, and has no bearing on the vital issues." In an interview released today in advance by the official news agency TASS, Gorbachev said: "In my opinion, one has to be cautious in one's assessments" on signs of a revival of detente after the Geneva summit.

In the interview with the French newspaper L'HUMANITE, Gorbachev reiterated that the U.S. "star wars" program "enhances the threat of war, and may, at a certain stage, make it probable." He said implementation of the "star wars" program "is deliberately aimed at thwarting the current talks and erasing all the existing arms control agreements." Asked about the likelihood of a quick end to the war in Afghanistan and the withdrawal of Soviet troops, Gorbachev said: "We would want (to do) that very much and will, within our capabilities, work toward that." Yet he accused the Governments of the United States and Pakistan of "interference in the conflict." On Soviet-French relations, Gorbachev said the Soviet Union advocates a broad cooperation with France, and the differences between the two countries should not become obstacles to concord and cooperation between them.

Criticizes SDI Program

[Text] Paris, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has said that by adopting the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) program, the United States "deliberately tries to discourage the on-going negotiations" and to turn the existing agreements on arms limitation into waste paper.

In an interview with L'HUMANITE, an organ of the French Communist Party Central Committee recently, Gorbachev said that the Soviet Union is considering a shorter and more direct approach without causing any difficulties and dangers to the elimination of nuclear weapons. But, he said, the U.S. method in this regard provides no way out (for the world). The interview was published today. Referring to his new proposals on arms reduction, Gorbachev said that the Soviet Union wants to eliminate nuclear weapons not for leading the arms race into another field that may also prove dangerous." [sentence and quotation marks as received] He said that signs of relaxation have emerged since the Geneva summit last November, but they "do not touch the essential problem."

Holds 'No Political Prisoners'

OW081743 Beijing XINHUA in English 1511 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 8 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union has "no political prisoners" just because there is no persecution of people "for their convictions," said Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev in an interview with the French communist newspaper L'HUMANITE which was released by TASS today. But, he said: "Spying for foreign intelligence services and agitation for undermining our destroying the state are qualified by our law as crime against the state. In the recent period, a little more than 200 people have been serving sentences for all crimes of such a kind."

As to the Soviet physicist Sakharov, Gorbachev said that Sakharov has committed "actions punishable by law." He continued Sakharov is still an academician of the Soviet Academy of Sciences and lives in the Gorkiy city, engaging in scientific research work. He added: "Sakharov is still in knowledge of secrets of special importance to the state and for this reason cannot go abroad."

COMMENTARY URGES 'TEAM SPIRIT' CANCELLATION

OW081124 Beijing XINHUA in English 1030 GMT 8 Feb 86

["Commentary: Military Exercises Reverse Tide (by Guo Quanyou)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Last year's tiny beacon of hope for peace on the Korean peninsula was overshadowed in the glare of the new year announcement that the U.S. and South Korean troops will hold joint military exercises "Team Spirit-86" beginning on February 10. The chilling announcement not only negated the progress of the last year, but it also renewed the concerns of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) and the international community.

On January 10, the Foreign Ministry of the DPRK announced a suspension of major military exercises to create a favorable environment for the economic, parliamentary and Red Cross talks scheduled for January and February this year. The ministry called upon the U.S.-South Korean side to reciprocate its good will gesture. To the disappointment of the Korean people on both sides of the demarcation line and peace-loving people of the world, however, the U.S.-South Korean side announced eight days later that it would go ahead with its "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercises involving more than 200,000 troops. Expressing disappointment at U.S.-South Korean lack of historical responsibility and sincerity for peace, the DPRK announced a postponement of the talks.

The United States and South Korea have claimed that "Team Spirit-86" merely follows "convention" and is aimed at "self-defense." Anyone watching the situation on the peninsula knows that since 1976, the scale of the annual U.S.-South Korean military exercises has been growing, the troops involved have increased from the original 90,000 to this year's 200,000; the area covered has also expanded ominously northward; and the weapons and equipment used are increasingly advanced. Is the escalating nature of the military exercise "convention"? And if this "convention" continues can there ever be peace and national reunification?

The "self-defense" claim is even less plausible. First, nobody can seriously believe that the DPRK troops are preparing to attack the beaches of Hawaii and even if they were, there is little need for U.S. warships to come all the way across the Pacific to conduct a joint exercise. Second, the DPRK Government has frequently reiterated that it has no intention to "drive southward," as alleged by the South Korean authorities. On the contrary, the DPRK has initiated a number of proposals for national reconciliation and has taken several steps to bring about early national reunification and peace on the peninsula.

Obviously, "to follow convention", means only the ever upgrading show of military power, and "self-defense" is merely a camouflaged military threat. However, the past 40 years have made it clear that military buildups cannot solve the Korean problem. Rather, they aggravate tension on the peninsula and endanger peace in Asia and the rest of the world. It would be wise for the United States and South Korea to respond to the DPRK's call by cancelling the pending joint exercises and thereby pave the way for tripartite talks and a summit meeting between the North and South of Korea.

DPRK CALLS FOR BOYCOTT OF 'WAR GAMES' IN SOUTH

OW081938 Beijing XINHUA in English 1848 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 8 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea today called on the people of South Korea and America to boycott the upcoming joint U.S.-Seoul military exercises code-named "Team Spirit-86".

A letter containing the appeal was adopted today at an emergency meeting held by the Central Committee of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland. The letter said the danger of war in the region would be increasing with the "Team Spirit-86" mock warfare scheduled for February 10. The hard-won dialogue between the two parts of Korea would be disrupted because of the military exercises, it added. It called on all people and all parties and social organizations in South Korea in particular to boycott the war games. It also urged them to strive for turning the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone, forcing the U.S. to withdraw its troops and nuclear weapons from South Korea and creating a climate for resumption of the North-South dialogue.

NODONG SINMUN CONDEMNS U.S. REFUSAL ON TROOPS

[Text] Pyongyang, February 9 (XINHUA) -- The Korean paper NODONG SINMUN in a commentary today condemned the United States for refusing to withdraw its troops from South Korea in order to prevent its alleged "threat of intruding into the South." The commentary was in response to U.S. Secretary Caspar W. Weinbergers recent speech in the Congress. Weinberger said that U.S. troops would continue to stay in South Korea which is a key area vital to American interests and that there exists the danger of a sudden attack by the North on the South.

The alleged "threat," the commentary noted, is used as a pretext by the United States to perpetuate its occupation of South Korea and legalize the U.S.-South Korea joint military exercises dubbed "Team Spirit-86". The commentary urged the United States to withdraw all its troops and nuclear weapons from the Southern part of Korea to facilitate the realization of a nuclear free and peaceful zone in the Korean peninsula.

KCNA REPORTS U.S. SR-71 OVERFLIGHT 6, 7 FEB

[Text] Pyongyang. February 7 (XINHUA) -- A U.S. high-altitude reconnaissance plane violated the airspace of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today, the KOREAN CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY reported. The "SR-71" plane went into the airspace over the waters east of Kosong, in the eastern coastal province of Kangwon around noon and then flew to the airspace above the waters off Sonbong County, North Hamgyong Province.

Yesterday, two U.S. reconnaissance flights were made over the east and west waters of the country U.S. planes had increased reconnaissance missions on the Korean peninsula since the announcement in mid last month of staging the "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercise by the U.S. and South Korea. During the latest month, over 19 activities of such a kind were registered.

JAPAN DEBATES SUPPLYING DEFENSE DATA TO U.S.

OW071131 Beijing XINHUA in English 1041 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Tokyo, February 7 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Defense Agency Director General Koichi Kato said in a debate yesterday that Japan may provide military information to the United States in the event of a war involving the U.S. in the Far East, according to press reports today. The debate was held in the Japanese lower house on whether or not supplying military information gathered by Japan's over-the-horizon radars to the United States violates Japan's Constitution.

In the debate, the opposition Komeito Party questioner Junya Yano said that because military information plays a vital role in modern warfare, the supplying of such information to U.S. forces would be tantamount to a "collective security" action which is banned under the constitution. Countering Yano's viewpoint, Kato said that it is possible for Japan to provide military information to the United States in the case of a military conflict involving the United States in the Far East even if Japan's national security is not immediately at stake. He said this would not fall into the definition of "collective security".

NAKASONE DEMANDS RETURN OF NORTHERN ISLANDS

OW071542 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Tokyo, February 7 (XINHUA) -- Japan marked its 6th "Northern Territories Day" Friday with country-wide rallies and a statement by Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone demanding the return of the country's northern islands held by the Soviets since 1945.

Speaking to a 13,000-strong gathering in Tokyo including representatives of local governments, cabinet ministers and former inhabitants of the northern territories, the prime minister said that he felt regret at the fact that the four major northern islands, seized by the Soviet troops at the end of World War II, "have not been returned and remain under Soviet occupation." "This is an important issue touching the basic principles of the state," he said, adding that his government will try to resolve the problem, bearing in mind the will of the whole nation. "The reopening of negotiations to conclude a peace treaty (with the Soviet Union) is a step forward, but we are still on the starting line and there are many obstacles ahead," the prime minister said.

Nakasone, who tackled the territorial dispute with visiting Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze last month, outlined again his government's positions concerning Tokyo-Moscow peace treaty negoaitions: to resolve the territorial issue, to complete the Japanese-Soviet peace treaty and to establish stable relations with the Soviet Union. Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe at the big gathering made his first "Northern Territories Day" speech after briefing on the recent consultations with his Soviet counterpart. The foreign minister also called for promotion of the movement for return of the northern territories. Similar rallies sponsored by local governments were held in all of the country's 47 prefectures to mark Friday's observation, designated by the cabinet in 1981 as "Northern Territories Day" to voice Japan's unswerving will for an early return of its northern islands.

DK ENVOY EVALUATES SIHANOUK'S GUANGDONG VISIT

BK070325 Beijing in Cambodian to Cambodia 1030 GMT 6 Feb 86

[Station correspondent's 5 February interview with Chan Youran, Democratic Kampuchean ambassador to the PRC, on 15-30 January visit to Guangdong Province by DK President Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and wife -- recorded]

[Text] [Chan Youran] First of all, allow me to thank you for coming here today to interview me on the recent visit to Guangdong Province by the samdech and his wife at the invitation of the PRC Government. This was an official friendly visit during which His Excellency Deputy Foreign Minister Liu Shuqing and his wife, myself and my wife, and many other Chinese and Cambodian friends accompanied the samdech.

I would like to inform you about this visit as follows:

Everywhere that the samdech president of Democratic Kampuchea and his wife visited, such as Guangzhou, Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Zhongshan, and Shude Cities, large numbers of Chinese people and the Chinese authorities at all levels gave them and their entourage a warm welcome. They joyfully and cordially welcomed the samdech president of Democratic Kampuchea, an old and great friend of the Chinese people and leaders -- former Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhou Enlai and presently His Excellency Chairman Deng Xiaoping, His Excellency General Secretary Hu Yaobang, His Excellency President Li Xiannian, His Excellency Premier Zhou Ziyang, and Mrs Deng Yingchao. The Chinese friends welcomed the samdech sincerely and with a spirit of respect and love as their great friend and a brother from the same family. They particularly welcomed the samdech in his capacity as the president of Democratic Kampuchea and an outstanding and most valiant patriot who is leading the CGDK and our Cambodian people in their fight against the Vietnamese aggressors, expansionists, annexationists, and race exterminators. The party and state leaders in Guangdong Province praised the samdech for his patriotism and for conducting activities in the international arena in defending our nation against the Vietnamese aggressors. They expressed great joy at the victories scored successively by our people and National Army under the leadership of the CGDK, especially during the current 8th dry season at home and in the international arena. They regarded these victories as the victories of the Chinese people because the just struggle waged by the Cambodian people for defending their national independence and race is an important contribution to defending peace and stability in Southeast Asia and in the world.

The Chinese party and state leaders in Guangdong Province also stressed the resolute and unswerving support of the 60 million people in Guangdong Province as well as of the Chinese people throughout the country for the heroic struggle of our Cambodian people. Even if this struggle lasts for 10 or 100 years, this support will continue until the Cambodian people win total victory. The samdech and all members of the Democratic Kampuchean delegation were very moved by this statement. They will always be grateful to the Chinese people and the esteemed Chinese leaders.

Concerning the program of the visit, the Chinese friends arranged the program very well. The samdech and his wife visited various places and saw various new achievements, such as the modern agricultural industrial sites, kindergartens, [words indistinct], tourist centers, and beautiful places, as well as many trade and industrial exhibitions. The samdech and his wife also visited the film studios in Guangzhou and the South China Botanical Garden. The samdech and the Cambodian guests were very impressed by the talent and performance of the famous acrobatic group in Guangzhou.

In many places, Chinese friends organized performances by beautiful children and Chinese dancers for the samdech and his wife. The Democratic Kampuchean delegation led by the samdech was very happy to hear a song dedicated to the Chinese people and China composed by the samdech out of his love and friendly feelings toward the Chinese people and China.

In Zhongshan, the samdech and his wife visited the birthplace of President Sun Yat-sen who was one of the outstanding heroes of the Chinese people.

The visit was totally successful from beginning to end. The samdech, his wife, and all Cambodian guests were very impressed by the wonderful all-round progress in Guangdong Province, particularly in Shenzhen, Zhuhai, and Zhongshan Cities and Shunde County. I was very happy to see with my own eyes the great changes in all aspects in the Shenzhen and Zhuhai Special Economic Zones. In only 4 to 5 years, these economic zones and cities have become modern cities with advanced agriculture and industry, greatly improving the livelihood of the Chinese people in these areas. Before, the people in these areas were poor. Now, they are enjoying a better life, have proper housing and all household appliances, such as television, radio, sewing machines, washing machines, refrigerators, and even pianos in some houses. Workers, peasants, and fishermen in these areas enjoy a better life in general. They are very happy and satisfied with the new open door policy set forth by the 11th session of the third party congress in 1979. They are very proud of the socialist construction in accordance with China's special conditions being implemented by the Chinese party and government. This policy is bringing rapid changes to China, particularly in the agricultural, industrial, national defense, scientific, and technological fields.

In his own name and on behalf of the CGDK and Democratic Kampuchean delegation, everywhere he went, the samdech expressed the Cambodian people's praise and respect for this new policy and the great achievements made by the Chinese people in implementing this clear-sighted policy. This policy has enhanced the prestige and influence of the fraternal Chinese people and China in the international arena. China is the peace-loving force which defends peace in the world and opposes the aggressive and expansionist policy of the Vietnamese enemies and their boss -- the Soviet clique.

We are convinced that under the leadership of the Chinese party and government, China will progress more rapidly and the Chinese people will enjoy more happiness and prosperity. The samdech regarded these achievements of the Chinese people as the achievements of the valiant Cambodian people who are struggling for national liberation and the defense of the Cambodian race against the Vietnamese aggressors.

The samdech added that after liberation, the Cambodian people will certainly learn from the new policy and achievements made by the Chinese people.

I would like to inform you that Vice President Khieu Samphan sent a message to the samdech following this visit. In his message, the vice president expressed great joy at the success of the visit and the achievements made by the Chinese people and government in modernizing China and in this open-door policy of the PRC.

On this occasion, I would like to extend best wishes to all Chinese people on the Chinese new year. May all of you enjoy good health and success in every way. Thank you.

THAILAND PROTESTS LAO INTRUSIONS, KILLINGS

OW071538 Beijing XINHUA in English 1445 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 7 (XINHUA) -- Thailand today lodged a strong protest with Laos against the recent killing of five Thai villagers by Lao intruders. The protest was contained in an aide-memoire of the Foreign Ministry to Lao Ambassador Khamphan Simmalavong. The ambassador said he would pass it to his government.

The memorandum condemned the invasion of Lao soldiers on February 2 across the Mekong River into Ban Na Muang of Nam Yuen District, Ubon Ratchathani Province. The intruders fired at villagers there, killing five of them and wounding five others and damaging a number of houses. The latest action was contrary to the persistent statements by the Lao Government that it wanted to solve the Thai-Lao conflicts through peaceful means, said the Thai Foreign Ministry. Thailand recently took measures to improve its relations with Laos such as opening more border passes and relaxing restrictions on Thai goods sold to Laos.

THAILAND-LAOS BORDER SITUATION SAID 'TENSE'

[Text] Bangkok, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Tension has built up on the Thai-Lao border as Vietnam attempts to establish an Indo-China federation and lord it over Laos, Bamrung Khaorat, Thai commander of the Navy's Mekong River patrol unit said today. At the headquarters of the patrol unit in Nakhon Phanom Province opposite Laos, Bamrung said the Vietnamese have deployed a division of troops together with tank units in the border area along the Mekong River.

The Thai patrol unit is responsible for the defense of the 857-kilometer long border from Chiang Khan District Loei Province to Khong Chiam District, Ubon Ratchathani along the Mekong River. The Vietnamese troops frequently sent scouts across the border to carry out reconnaissance and sabotage activities. In early January this year, the commander said, Vietnam despatched some 30 men to do intelligence work in Thailand. The Soviet military aid to Laos is on the increase, Bamrung said. The Soviets have so far supplied Laos with 27 MiG fighters. They have recently decided to further provide Laos with 40 patrol boats, eight of them had already been delivered.

REPORTAGE ON PHILIPPINE ELECTIONS, RETURNS

Marcos Denies Manipulation

OW081909 Beijing XINHUA in English 1858 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 8 (XINHUA) -- President Ferdinand Marcos today denied charges that he would alter election results by delaying the counting of votes. His denial was in response to a statement of U.S. Senator Richard Lugar, head of the 20-member U.S. official observer team monitoring the poll, who said that election officials were "managing" or "manipulating" poll results by delaying their counting.

Marcos told a press conference here this evening that the ruling New Society Movement had no "malicious" or "mischievous" intention to delay the counting of votes. He said he may declare the election "invalid" should foreign observers perceive it to be fraudulent and he may either continue in office until his term expires in 1987 or call another election. He said he was unhappy with Senator Lugar's statement. Marcos said the returns sent by his partymen showed he was well ahead of his opponent Mrs. Corazon Aquino. He claimed if he lost, though it was "unthinkable", he would ensure to work for a peaceful transition.

Vote Counting 'Academic'

[Text] Manila, February 9 (XINHUA) -- Philippine Justice Minister Estelito Mendoza today said the individual tabulation of votes conducted by the Commission on elections (Comelec) and the National Movement for Free Elections (Namfrel) is already "academic" and "no longer needed", the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reported. He said the National Assembly has the sole authority to canvass the votes.

Mendoza who is also solicitor general said that for the Comelec and Namfrel to proceed tabulating would only tend to "mislead the people." Namfrel, a citizens' independent electoral watchdog group, has been publishing election returns which show the opposition candidate Corazon Aquino is leading Marcos while the Comelec returns indicate Marcos is seizing the lead. According to Mendoza, the official canvassing by the National Assembly will be bases in [as received] the proclamation of winners in the February 7 presidential election. At the same time, majority floor leader Jose Rono said the Legislative Assembly which is scheduled to conduct an official canvass of election certificates tomorrow afternoon can finish the job within 48 hours. Rono said in an interview with newsmen that the assembly would form a bi-partisan committee to take charge in the official canvass of election certificates. The committee will be composed of members of the ruling New Society Movement and the opposition United Nationalist Democratic Organization.

Serious 'Anomalies' Noted

[Text] Manila, February 9 (XINHUA) -- A group of international observers today said that the electoral anomalies in the February 7 polls in the Philippines were "serious" and "could have an impact upon the final result." The international observer delegation composed of 44 members from 19 countries made these remarks at a press conference this evening at the Manila Hotel.

In a written statement, the mission said it had seen some instances of "abuses" including vote buying, intimidation, snatching of ballot boxes, etc. "Of great concern are reports that thousands of voters -- particularly in the Manila area -- were not able to vote because their names were not on the registration list," it said. The statement also referred to the delay in dissemination of the election results and said the delegation would continue to study this problem and look for patterns to see "whether these delays result in shift of votes." A spokesman of the delegation said the members of the mission, who have a wide range of political and ideological viewpoints, had reached a "remarkable consensus" in evaluating the election in the country's 15 provinces they visited.

The delegation has come here to observe the election at the invitation of the Philippine ruling party and the opposition United Nationalist Democratic Organization. Co-leaders of the international observer delegation are Dr. Misael Pastrana, former president of Colombia, and John Hume, member of the British and European Parliaments representing the Social Democratic Party and the Labor Party. According to Mr. Hume, some members of the delegation will remain in the country until the counting phase is complete.

U.S. Observers Urge Fast Count

[Text] Manila, February 10 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. official delegation observing the Philippine presidential elections urged today the Commission on Elections (Comelec) and the National Movement for Free Election (Namfrel) to bring their electoral counts to a rapid and credible uniform conclusion. The U.S. delegation left here for home this morning and is to deliver an interim report to U.S. President Ronald Reagan.

In a written statement read at a press conference at Manila Hotel, Richard Lugar, chairman of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relation Committee and head of the delegation, said that during the processes of voting and vote counting they witnessed and heard disturbing reports about efforts to undermine the integrity of the election. "Even within the last twenty-four hours, serious charges have been made in regard to the tabulation system," it noted. The delegation also deplored all incidents of election related violence and intimidation. The delegation's mission as observers, the statement said, is by no means completed. They have directed teams from the U.S. Embassy, congressional staff and the Center for Democracy to monitor closely the efforts by Comelec and Namfrel to bring their electoral counts to a rapid and credible conclusion. They hope the current divergence between the count tallies by Comelec, an organ set up by the government, and Namfrel, an independent citizens' electoral watchdog group, will give way to a uniform electoral result that is broadly accepted by the Philippine people, the statement concluded. Namfrel has temporary recorded a lead of opposition candidate Corazon Aquino over President Marcos, while Comelec registered the opposite tally. Tallies of both Comelec and Namfrel, however, are not official. According to an announcement by Marcos, only the National Assembly is authorized to declare the final official count.

The U.S. delegation sent by President Reagan arrived here on February 5 at the invitation of Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos. It is composed of congressional leaders and private citizens. It was reported that the snap presidential election was held according to a proposal made by President Reagan to Marcos last year.

Marcos To Abide by Decision

[Text] Washington, February 9 (XINHUA) -- Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos said today that he had no intention of nullifying the results of the Friday election and that he would abide by the decision of the people.

Speaking in interviews with NBC and ABC televisions from Manila, Marcos said, "I have no intention of using my powers to win the election." He repeatedly denied allegations of vote rigging and said there was no "evil or malicious intent" on the part of the government. "I would not want to be returned to power by fraud," he added. According to earlier reports from Manila, Marcos said at a press conference late last night that he could nullify the results of the election, as the fraud charges continued to pour in.

Opposition candidate Corazon Aquino has claimed victory in Friday's hotly contested election in which both sides have accused the other of widespread cheating. Marcos, who is fighting for a fourth term, refused to acknowledge Aquino's claim. He said he is leading in the vote count, but that he will wait until the Parliament has officially tallied the results before making a declaration.

[Text] London, February 8 (XINHUA) -- A two-week festival of Chinese arts is started here today as a colourful event to promote understanding among Londoners of current cultural and artistic movements in China as well as of the Chinese communities within their midst.

To celebrate the Chinese Spring Festival, the beginning of the Year of the Tiger, an exhibition of Chinese paintings, calligraphy and photographs is opened today at Smith's Galleries, near Covent Garden, with Chinese music and lion dance performance outside of it. Over the two week period from February 8 to 23, about 90 events, including exhibitions of toys and paintings, book display, first public showing of Chinese feature film "Wreaths at the Foot of the Mountain", as well as other feature and cartoon films, paper cutting, story telling, martial arts and cookery demonstration, have been organised in the City of London and eight London boroughs.

It has got support from the Chinese Embassy in London and a numbers of cultural and commercial institutions as well.

FRG'S GENSCHER ON U.S., USSR N-ARMS CURBS

OW090907 Beijing XINHUA in English 0705 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Text] Bonn, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Federal German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher told Der Sueddeutsche Rundfunk (radio) today that the United States and the Soviet Union might reach a temporary agreement on the elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe. Genscher spoke about the possibility after meeting Paul Nitze, special envoy to U.S. President Ronald Reagan. Nitze was sent to Europe yesterday to discuss the the U.S. European allies on how to respond to the latest Soviet proposal to eliminate nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

The reduction of medium-range missiles is reportedly considered as the key issue of the West's counterproposal. Genscher said that nobody else is more concerned over this U.S.-Soviet temporary agreement than West Germany, which is not only under the threat of the Soviet SS-20 missiles but also a country where U.S. missiles have been deployed. He had repeated the concern on several occasions, stressing the significance of eliminating Soviet and U.S. missiles in Europe to his country.

U.S. President Reagan yesterday suggested a plan calling for the elimination of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe and for cutting the Soviet SS-20 missile force in Asia by 50 percent. The plan accepts the Soviet proposal on the elimination of U.S. and Soviet missiles in Europe but fails to mention the U.S. commitment to the "star war" programs.

SPAIN TO PUT NATO MEMBERSHIP TO REFERENDUM

[Text] Madrid, February 6 (XINHUA) -- After a two-day heated debate on peace and security, the Spanish parliament passed a government motion to hold a referendum on March 12 on Spain's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO), which it joined in 1981.

When Spain decided to enter NATO five years ago, the then opposition Socialist Worker's Party opposed Spain's entry into NATO. When the party won the national elections in 1982, it announced that the new government would freeze spain's entry into NATO military organizations and promised to hold a referendum to decide on Spain's continued membership in NATO. Because Spain has close political, military and economic relations with its NATO partners, it is easier for it to enter NATO than to quit it. But, with the national elections due this year, the ruling party wanted to demonstrate that it keeps its promises and proposed the promised referendum. The referendum will ask voters to decide whether Spain should remain in NATO provided it does not join NATO military organizations, prohibits nuclear weapons and reduces the number of U.S. troops stationed in the country.

During the parliamentary debate, Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez supported Spain's continuation in NATO. He explained that he changed his opposition to Spain's entry into NATO after it had entered the organization and the European Economic Community. Now, he said, remaining in NATO is the most practical, geographical, political, economic and strategic choice for Spain. However, he vowed to quit NATO if his government lost the referendum. Spain would then keep its relations with the Western alliance through the Spanish-American agreement. The major opposition party Popular Alliance's stands for Spain's unreserved entry into NATO, including all its military organizations. It opposed the holding of a referendum and said it would refrain from voting. The right-wing opposition believes if it votes for the government's stand, it would imply agreement with all its foreign policies and thereby weaken its own strength in the general elections. The Spanish Communist Party and other left-wing parties are critical of Gonzalez's change of heart. Communist Party General Secretary Gerardo Iglesias told a press conference that Gonzalez was trying to threat on the electorate by suggesting that Spain's withdrawal from NATO would bring unpredictable dangers to the country. The press in general found Gonzalez's speech unconvincing, saying that it would not win over the electorate.

Despite the heat, Spain is likely to remain in NATO. According to recent polls, nearly half of the electorate agrees that Spain should remain in the organization. If, however, the electorate votes against Spain's continuation in NATO, Spain may begin the process which is likely to take a whole year. Observers believe that whether the general elections will be held earlier than scheduled or held as scheduled, the Socialist Workers' Party is likely to win on a platform of keeping Spain in NATO. Even if the opposition Popular Alliance wins, it will also support Spain's continuation of its NATO membership.

RENMIN RIBAO CONDEMNS ISRAELI INTERCEPTION

HK081202 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 6

[Short commentary: "Strongly Condemn Israel's Terrorist Move"]

[Text] On 4 February, four Israeli fighters unscrupulously intercepted and forced down a Libyan aircraft. The aircraft was detained and searched for 5 hours. This was another of Israel's brutal moves, wantonly trampling on the basic principles of international law and undermining the safety of international civil aviation services.

Israel carried out these illegal activities of intercepting and detaining the aircraft under the pretext of "opposing terrorist activities." Actually, under such a pretext, Israel has always used force to brazenly infringe upon the sovereignty and territorial integrity of other nations. In the past, it bombed the nuclear facilities of Iraq. On 1 October last year, taking the opportunity provided by an assassination in Cyprus, it launched a long-distance sneak attack on PLO headquarters in Tunis, killing and wounding many people. Less than 5 months after that, Israel intercepted a Libyan aircraft. All this only shows that Israel, which poses as a champion of "opposing terrorism," is provoking military terrorism in the Middle East. Those in power in Israel intend to take advantage of the struggle of various countries in the world against terrorism to conceal their brutal move. But their efforts are in vain.

The truculent and tyrannic acts of Israel have aroused public indignation all over the world. International public opinion, various countries in the Arab world in particular have strongly condemned Israel for committing such a crime. UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said that it was a "very serious incident." He condemned Israel for "severely violating the freedom of civil aviation." It is very clear that if the international community fails to stop such provocative acts by Israel, it will be impossible to ensure the order of international aviation communications.

Not long ago, Israel clamored to take revenge on Libya under the pretext of the airport attacks in Rome and Vienna. Obviously, Israel has ulterior motives for the most recent provocative move. Israel is currently facing severe domestic political and economic difficulties. It is trying to create international incidents to divert the attention of the people at home, hinder the easing of tension in the Mediterranean, and obstruct efforts to solve Middle East problems peacefully. All this cannot be tolerated by the international community.

NEW ECONOMIC ORDER URGED AT TANZANIA MEETING

OW070928 Beijing XINHUA in English 0837 GMT 7 Jan 86

[Text] Dar es Salaam, February 6 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese delegate to the 25th Asian-African Legal Consultative Committee (AALCC) Ouyang Chuping said today that the only way to alleviate the developing countries' debt is to "restructure the irrational international monetary system and to establish the new economic order." Ouyang, who is also deputy director of the Department of Treaty and Law in the Chinese Foreign Ministry, told the 4th day session of the annual conference in Arusha, northern Tanzania that the debt problem is a critical issue in North-South relations.

According to statistics of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund, the total external debts of developing countries increased from 610 billion dollars at the end of 1980 to 895 billion by the end of 1984 and are estimated to reach 970 billion by the end of 1985. Ouyang said that the creditor nations, commercial banks and the International Monetary Fund should help debtor nations service their debts through their economic development, instead of asking them to curtail outlays to repay their debts. The Chinese delegate urged the United States in particular to take effective measures to promote the development of debtor nations and to search for positive longterm solutions for the developing countries. He also asked developed countries to take into account the special needs and difficulties of the least developed countries, fulfill the targets for official development aid set by the U.N. and provide them with preferential trade terms to help improve their economic situation.

The week-long AALCC meeting opened on February 3 to discuss various international issues, including state jurisdictional immunity, the law of the sea and the status and treatment of refugees. The AALCC, a New Delhi based inter-government legal body for Asia and Africa, was formed in 1956.

LI XIANNIAN ADDRESSES SPRING FESTIVAL GATHERING

[Speech by Li Xiannian on 9 February at Spring Festival gathering]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Feb (XINHUA) -- Comrades and friends: Today is a traditional Chinese festival day. Gathering together here, with just a cup of tea, we ring out the old year and ring in the new. We hope that in the new year people of all walks of life across the nation will carry forward the spirit of hard work, will build the country through thrift and hard work, will take our overall national situation into account, and will be of one heart and one mind, continuing to push work forward on all fronts.

We made tremendous achievements in the past year. Reforms were carried out faster than we originally estimated, and results were better than we expected. We strengthened macroeconomic control over economic development and gradually eliminated or curbed some factors causing instability. As a result, economic development has gradually normalized. The total national industrial output value increased 18 percent and, despite relatively frequent natural disasters, total agricultural output value increased 13 percent. Government revenues also grew 12 percent. Revenues and expenditures were balanced, and currency issued was less than planned at the beginning of the year. Last year's markets were prosperous, employment increased, and the people's living standards improved further. New improvements were also made in science, education, culture, public health, sports, and national defense. These are the results of hard work of people of all nationalities under the guidance of the party's correct policies; they are a new victory in the course of building socialism with Chinese characteristics.

The National Conference of Party Delegates, held by the CPC in September of last year, approved the "proposal of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party for the Seventh 5-Year Plan for national economic and social development" and continued to replace old members of central leading organs. It was a meeting of historical significance. Comrades Hu Yaobang, Deng Xiaoping, Zhao Ziyang, and Chen Yun, all members of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau, made important speeches at the meeting. In order to implement the spirit of the meeting, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat first asked the central and Beijing municipal organs to set an example by holding a meeting in January, attended by 8,000 cadres. Comrades on all fronts must conscientiously study the documents of the two meetings, unify their understanding, and devise effective courses of action for individual departments, localities, and units to solidly implement guidelines laid down by these meetings, thus faithfully carrying out the spirit of the meetings.

This year is the first of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The Seventh 5-Year Plan and the 1986 annual plan will be submitted in March to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC for examination and approval. People of all nationalities must increase their enthusiasm and make concrete efforts to readjust investment patterns while strictly controlling the scale of fixed-asset investments, to further invigorate production work, to satisfy the needs of domestic markets and exports, to ensure good work in foreign trade and export, and to increase foreign exchange earnings. In addition, we must encourage people in urban and rural areas to increase savings and make concerted efforts to contribute to the four modernizations, so that we may ensure the fulfillment of this year's plan and make a good beginning in the pursuit of the entire Seventh 5-Year Plan. Regarding reform of the economic system, on the basis of the major advancements achieved last year, all sectors must coordinate with and take care of one another in striving to mend and reinforce weak links, in line with the principle of consolidation, assimilation, supplementation, and improvement. We must work meticulously for a year in order to make the best possible preparations for the next stage of reform.

All departments, all regions, and all units must strive to build both socialist spiritual civilization and socialist material civilization, shouldering these two burdens, and must achieve results in both of them. It is not the party's policy, nor the policy of building socialism, to grasp one and neglect the other. As a whole, economic achievements attained in the past few years have been outstanding. We have also improved party style and social conduct and strictly enforced the socialist legal system, but the progress has not been very satisfactory. We must on no account be totally absorbed in vocational work while neglecting politics. We must never tolerate corrosion by and spreading of decadent capitalist ideas, bourgeois liberalization ideas, and the residual poison of feudalism. Corrosion by these ideas and the remnants of feudalist poison have created grave consequences in some areas and units, interfering with construction, stability, reform, and opening up to the outside world. All fronts and organizations, and cadres at all levels, must pay special attention to these problems, and adopt effective measures to solve them. Party committees at all levels must improve ideological and political work through organizational means, strengthen education on the situation and on ideals, morals, culture, and discipline; strengthen education on the policy of carrying out reform and opening up to the outside world; strengthen education on state discipline and on discipline concerning external affairs; strengthen education on collectivism, patriotism, and socialist and communist ideas; and strengthen education on revolutionary traditions. We are fully convinced that the bright prospect of China's material and spiritual civilizations making progress and promoting each other will be realized so long as the whole party, governments at all levels, the PLA leading organs of all enterprises and institutions, all democratic parties and groups, all people's organizations, all workers and peasants in towns and in the countryside, teachers and students, and people of all nationalities throughout the country join in the effort.

Improving party style is key to improving general social conduct. In his speech at a meeting attended by 8,000 people, Comrade Hu Yaobang proposed that the central organs set good examples for the whole country. This actually means that he was calling on party cadres of the central organs, especially leading party cadres, to serve as good examples. Article 2 of the Constitution of the Communist Party of China says: "Members of the Communist Party of China are at all times ordinary members of the working people. Communist Party members must not seek personal gain or privileges, although they are allowed personal benefits and job functions and powers as provided for by the relevant regulations and policies." This must be observed unconditionally by every party member, whether he holds a high position or occupies a low one. Otherwise, he will fail to meet the requirements as a party member.

On this point, party cadres, especially leading cadres, must serve as a good example for the people of the whole country. The overwhelming majority of party cadres is good. A large number of model party members and model cadres emerged on all fronts; they are loyal to the socialist cause, work hard and responsibly, lead a plain life, are good at blazing new trails, and dare to struggle and make sacrifices, thus winning the confidence and respect of the people. These model party members and cadres, together with advanced personages outside the party, form the pillar of our style, ensuring steady progress in all fields of work including socialist construction, reform, national defense, foreign affairs, and social security.

However, in the past few years a few party cadres, including a few leading cadres, have been struck by the sugar-coated bullets of the bourgeoisie. These few have trampled on party discipline and violated the law, damaged the image of the party, and aroused the indignation and condemnation of the majority of party members, cadres, and patriotic people throughout the country. These black sheep must be dealt with promptly and severely, in line with party discipline and the law.

Communist party members, the masses of people, and, of course, members of democratic parties, and all patriots must exercise impartial supervision to make sure that party cadres abide by party discipline and the laws of the country. We must continue to strengthen socialist democracy and the socialist legal system. We must unfailingly abide by the law, enforce the law very strictly, punish lawbreakers without exception, and be perfectly impartial and selfless. This is very important to the smooth progress of socialist modernization and the successful building of the two civilizations.

Our country's economy has achieved rapid growth in the past few years, and the people's standard of living has improved in varying degrees. This is an objective fact known to the people of the world and brooks no doubts. However, China is still a developing country. Its economic system is not yet sufficiently strong; it will take more than 10 years of unrelenting efforts to achieve a relatively comfortably standard of living in this country. We must be united as one, be of one heart and one mind, and adhere to the policy of building the country through protracted hard work and thrift, attaching importance to both feeding the people and carrying out construction. Everyone must subordinate himself to the overall situation, give top priority to the interests of the state, and serve the people wholeheartedly. We must put an end to unlawful activities of transforming public property into that of a small group, of appropriating public property by graft and bribery, and of damaging the interests of the state and people. In doing anything, we must do it with great care and according to our capabilities; liberal budgeting and spending, and waste and extravagance are not permitted. We must oppose the idea and act of giving top priority to personal interests and money, of worshipping foreign things, of pursuing Westernization in everything, of seeking pleasure, and of consuming and eating up all we have. Criminal offenses such as corruption, theft, blackmail, extortion, speculation, bribery, smuggling, and swindling must be severely dealt with according to law. All party cadres must set a good example, work hard for the state and people without complaint, devote themselves entirely to serving the people, refrain from seeking personal gain and interests, and consistently carry forward the revolutionary and pioneering spirit of the Chinese nation of daring to surmount difficulties.

Internationally, we will continue our independent foreign policy of peace, further promote our friendly relations with other countries on the basis of the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence, expand our cooperation with all nations who work with China on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, strengthen our unity with all peace-loving people of the world, and strive to safeguard world peace.

We will also continue our efforts to promote the great cause of reunification of the mainland and Taiwan in whatever ways acceptable to both sides under the concept of "one country, two systems."

On behalf of the CPC Central Committee, the NPC Standing Committee, the State Council, the CPPCC National Committee, the Central Military Commission, the Central Advisory Commission, the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, the Supreme People's Court, and the Supreme People's Procuratorate, I herewith extend my warm festive greetings and cordial regards to workers, peasants, intellecturals, the vast numbers of cadres, and people of all circles of all nationalities; to the PLA commanders and fighters safeguarding our great motherland and the public security cadres and policemen maintaining social order; to all retired old comrades; to the young people and children on whom we pin our hopes for a glorious future of our motherland; to the compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macao, and various foreign countries, and to the experts from various countries and foreign friends in China who have helped China develop its socialist modernization program. I wish you all a happy Spring Festival.

Chen Yun, Li Peng With Teachers

[By reporter Zou Aiguo, Yu Jiafu]

[Text] Beijing, 9 Feb (XINHUA) -- Extending his festive greetings to a group of kindergarten, secondary, and primary school teachers, Chen Yun, member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, said today that making primary and secondary education a success is a cardinal project having an important bearing on improving the quality of the Chinese people. He said: "The responsibilities on the shoulders of kindergarten, secondary, and primary school teachers are heavy, their profession is noble, and they should have the people's respect."

Comrade Chen Yun cordially met with nine representatives of Beijing's primary and secondary schools and kindergartens at his residence at 1000 this morning. He said: "Today is the Spring Festival. I am very glad to be able to spend this traditional festival with you, representatives of outstanding teachers. Allow me to extend my festive regards to you and all other teachers and personnel working on the nation's educational front!" Also present at the meeting was Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, vice premier of the State Council and concurrently minister in charge of the State Education Commission. The cordial talks with the teachers' representatives were often interrupted by laughter and warm applause.

The nine teachers were: Tao Xiping, principal of Beijing Middle School No 12; Wang Bilin, a teacher of the teaching research office of Beijing's Chongwen District Education Bureau; Ning Hongbin, a teacher of Beijing Middle School No 80; Wang Qixian, vice principal of Beijing Experimental Primary School No 1; Zhou Sujun, a teacher of Beijing's Tongzhen Jinjia Lane Primary School; Wang Jifen, head of Beijing's Dongcheng District Donghuamen Kindergarten; Tang Shaozhen, a lecturer of Beijing Teacher Training School No 3; Wei Xiaolong, a teacher of Beijing Middle School No 41; and Qian Yao, acting principal of Beijing's Huangzhuang Vocational Middle School.

Wang Qixian, an 80-year-old special classification teacher who has been teaching for 60 years, was the first to speak at the meeting. He said: All social quarters care for teachers of the people. As teachers, we should respect and care for ourselves, make ourselves more proficient, and prove ourselves with actual deeds. Tao Xiping, a Beijing special class model worker for 1985 and a winner of Beijing's Teacher's Award, reported on his school's educational reform and its work-study program. He said: The four modernizations are in need of proficient personnel, who must be trained, and training requires teachers. As teachers, we must work hard to shoulder the responsibilities of the day.

While listening to their speeches, Comrade Chen Yun frequently expressed his approval by saying: "You are right!" He said: "Primary and secondary school teachers and kindergarten teachers are hard-working 'gardeners' on the educational front. You have been working diligently without complaints for decades, and you have trained large numbers of personnel for our country's socialist construction. The people, as well as the party and the state, are thankful for your contributions, which are closely related to our great country's prosperity."

Comrade Chen Yun said: "The Spring Festival symbolizes the beginning of spring. 'When a new cycle begins, everything looks fresh and gay.' During the new year, we must, while consolidating and developing achievements in our material construction, work hard to intensify our socialist spiritual construction. Our schools are important places for imparting cultural, scientific, and technical knowledge, as well as places for training people needed in building a socialist society. They are also important bastions for socialist spiritual construction. Primary and secondary education, as well as kindergarten education, is basic education. We must not fail in making it a success."

Wang Jifen, a special classification teacher, and Ning Hongbin, winner of Beijing's Teacher's Award in 1985, pointed out at the meeting that the improvement of teaching quality consists in educating students as well as making teaching more effective, and that the proportion of students entering higher level schools should not be regarded as a substitute for the proportion of students becoming useful. Comrade Chen Yun praised their good ideas.

Comrade Chen Yun said: "The students of secondary and primary schools today will become successors to our magnificent socialist modernization drive. Their thinking, and whether or not they can shoulder the historical burden in the future, has a close relationship with the education they receive in primary and secondary schools. This is to say that, to a certain degree, the performance of our country's kindergarten, secondary, and primary school teachers will determine China's situation in the 21st century."

The more they talked, the more excited the teachers became; and since everyone wanted an opportunity to speak, the meeting proceeded in a very lively manner. When 29-year-old Wei Xiaolong, the youngest of the nine teachers, presented a glittering medal which he won for being a model worker in Beijing to Comrade Chen Yun, Comrade Chen Yun received it with a smile of satisfaction.

Comrade Chen Yun then urged everybody to do his job well. He said: "During the new year, I hope every kindergarten, secondary and primary school teacher will continue to display the spirit of working without regard for fame or benefit, love their work, love the students, strive to heighten their political consciousness, make themselves more competent, be worthy of the name of teacher, do what is right, work in a down-to-earth manner, and be dedicated to the great socialist educational cause."

During the conversations, the teachers also presented their opinions regarding restructuring the educational system and solving the problems of schools and teachers. Comrade Chen Yun said: "Party and government organizations at all levels must care for teachers, help them solve some real problems, and create even more favorable working and living conditions for teachers." Comrade Li Peng indicated that the State Education Commission would seriously study the teachers' opinions. Toward the end of the meeting, Comrades Chen Yun and Li Peng posed for a picture with the teachers.

[Excerpts] Beijing, 8 Feb (XINHUA) -- Chen Muhua, alternate member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and state councillor, and Wang Bingqian, state councillor, visited the Zhaonei food market in Beijing. Following the jostling crowd, they walked to various counters to convey their regards and extend their Spring Festival greetings to sales clerks.

The Zhaonei food market was packed with nonstaple food from over 10 provinces and cities. There were 800,000 jin of vegetables alone. For the past few days, workers and staff of the food market have worked over 10 hours a day busily selling food for the Spring Festival. Comrade Chen Muhua spoke to the manager of the food market. She said: Sales clerks work very hard. The party Central Committee and State Council are concerned about you. They have asked us to convey their greetings. Food marketing is a major trade of tertiary industry. It is indispensable to everyone. It is hoped that you will give even better service in the new year.

Wang Bingqian suggested that a bulletin board be put up in the food market to regularly propagate the state commercial and price policies and to explain why some commodities are in short supply or in surplus and why the prices of some commodities fluctuate so much. All this should be considered fine ideological work.

After visiting the food market, Chen Muhua and Wang Bingqian went to the Dongsi branch of the Beijing Municipal Bank of Industry and Commerce to greet the bank clerks and staff who were working hard there. Chen Muhua spoke to a responsible person of the bank branch. She said: The workers and staff in the field of finance made remarkable contributions to promoting stability and developing the favorable situation in 1985. During this year, we must continue to strengthen and improve the control of macroeconomic activities while invigorating microeconomic activities. It is necessary to improve services aimed at increasing the amount of savings deposits, to make rational use of funds in carrying out reforms, and to turn the bank into an effective lever in readjusting the national economy. She also suggested that more deposit boxes be set up so that the people can make deposits more conveniently.

CIRCULAR OUTLINES TRANSFER OF ARMED FORCES

[Text] Beijing, 8 Feb (XINHUA) -- The work of transferring county (city) people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system will begin soon in line with the plan of Army structural reform, administrative streamlining, and reorganization. The CPC Central Committee, State Council, and Central Military Commission recently issued a circular urging local party committees, governments, and military districts at all levels to exercise effective leadership in successfully carrying out the task of transferring people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system.

To ensure that the work of transferring county (city) people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system will be carried out smoothly, the CPC Central Committee, State Council, and Central Military Commission drew up "regulations concerning questions related to the transfer of county (city) people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system."

The document points out: After county (city) people's armed forces departments are transferred to the local organizational system, working personnel of these departments, while their responsibilities remain unchanged, will become local staff, subject to the dual leadership of local and military authorities. This is a correct policy decision based on the overall interests of national economic construction and military building and is conducive to the plan of relying on local party committees and governments for carrying out militia and reserve service work well. The document provides explicit stipulations on the organizational setup; leadership relations; work responsibilities; selection, allocation, and training of cadres; their wages, benefits, and uniforms; and the source and management of people's armed forces departments funds affiliated with the local organizational system. This fully shows that the CPC Central Committee, State Council, and Central Military Commission are concerned with and take people's armed forces work seriously.

The documents points out: After transfer into the local organizational system, cadres of the people's armed forces departments should become officers of the reserve service. The wages and benefits of cadres, workers, and other employees should be based on the standards and regulations for the cadres, police, and other employees of local public security departments. Beginning 1 January 1987, funds for these departments as local administrative expenses for state-set administrative establishments. As people's armed forces departments are military units, they should be managed in accordance with the regulations and ordinances of the People's Liberation Army.

The circular issued by the CPC Central Committee, State Council, and Central Military Commission on questions related to the work of transferring county (city) people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system calls on all localities to earnestly implement the "regulations concerning questions related to the transfer of county (city) people's armed force departments to the local organizational system" and to readjust and allocate personnel for the establishment of people's armed forces departments. Cadres designated for transfer to other local units or to civilian work should be handled in accordance with regulations governing military cadres retiring from active service. Efforts should be made to do a good job in checking on weapons, equipment, funds, and all kinds of materials. Inland people's armed forces departments should complete the transfer by June 1986. Except for those not being transferred for the time being, county people's armed forces departments on the coastal and border frontier line should complete the transfer by the end of 1986.

The circular points out that the transfer of county (city) people's armed forces departments to the local organizational system covers wide-raning areas in fundamental policy decisions. The various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities, as well as prefectures and cities, should set up leading groups composed of principal responsible comrades of local and military authorities to work out details and implement transfer work. Cadres of the people's armed forces departments should submit themselves to the arrangements of their organizations, abide by discipline, and stand fast at their posts to ensure normal operation of their units. It is necessary to strictly enforce all rules and regulations as well as financial discipline to avert unhealthy tendencies and other accidents.

PLA LOGISTICS DIRECTOR VIEWS MILITARY SPENDING

HK100854 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0236 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Report by Li Wei: "Hong Xuezhi on Chinese Army's Logistics Work"]

[Text] Beijing, 7 Feb (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- When interviewed by this reporter, Hong Xuezhi, director of the PLA General Logistics Department, recently said: China has reduced military spending in recent years in order to contribute more to peaceful construction.

He revealed that China's military spending in 1981 was 2 billion yuan less than the year before. The budget for military spending for 1985 was 18 billion yuan or so, which has not yet been reduced to the level of 1980.

Hong Xuezhi added: Although military spending has been reduced, things have been carried out well. Last year, the whole Army accomplished various tasks aimed at ensuring the completion of training and operations and satisfying the demand of daily necessities. The situation of implementing the budgetary plan for military spending is basically good.

Hong Xuezhi stated: The Chinese Army has established a comprehensive logistics system characterized by complete range of categories, numerous special lines, and complicated technology. In accordance with different strategic, operational, and tactical requirements, and the characteristics of the armed services, a three-level -- general headquarters, military regions (armed services), and group army -- logistics supply and administrative system has been set up, which covers material supply, equipment and facilities repair, medical and sanitary services, communications and transportation, and production of military supplies. This system can satisfy the demand of the building of various armed services and joint operations. In recent years, in the course of carrying out our military struggle against Vietnam along the border of Guangxi and Yunnan, our logistics work has constantly improved, and our troops are comparatively satisfied with it.

Last year was a year in which the Chinese Army achieved fruitful results in its structural reform. Hong Xuezhi also told this reporter: As far as logistics reform is concerned, apart from ensuring smooth progress in the reform of uniforms and wages, the work of streamlining the administrative structure and reorganization in various large logistics units under the General Logistics Department, military regions, and armed services has also been basically completed. The administrative system of strategic warehouses has been readjusted. A base command headquarters under the General Logistics Department has also been established.

He repeatedly stressed that the Army's logistics work should conform with the demands of the building of the Army and modern warfare. In the meantime, it should submit itself to and serve the general situation of the economic construction of the state and the building of the troops.

With regard to the progress made in recent years in the modernization of logistics work and the efforts to be exerted in the future, Hong Xuezhi said: The modernization of logistics work is mainly reflected in the renewal of the logistics technology and facilities, the improvement of supplies, and the enhancement of the level of vocational management. At present, advanced technology such as computers and others have been widely applied to logistics work. We are also firmly grasping the automation of the command system and administrative network of logistics work. It is expected that we will achieve results in this regard this year. As far as efforts to be exerted in the future, our main efforts will be placed on establishing a more efficient and rational and highly effective organizational system, building systematized logistics bases, and providing facilities so that we can readily deal with all possible emergencies. We should also further improve logistics facilities and equipment so that they will become more mobile with the mobility of our troops. Systematic, rapid, and uninterrupted supplies should be ensured.

Hong Xuezhi is a senior revolutionary of the older generation. He is also an expert in logistics work, who has real knowledge and deep insight. He was once deputy commander of the Chinese People's Volunteers, and commander of the logistics headquarters of the volunteers. After that, he was appointed deputy director and director of the PLA General Logistics Department.

The so-called movement of opposing the "right" deviation in 1959 brought calamity to this old general who is highly principled, outspoken, and straightforward, and handles matters impartially. After the movement, he was sent to a lower level and worked as director of certain bureaus and sections in Jilin Province for about 20 years. In 1977, he was transferred by Beijing and appointed director of office of National Defense Industry. He has been working as director of the General Logistics Deparment since 1980. He has been working hard over the past 5 years, and has made outstanding achievement. He is widely praised as a "red manager."

DEVELOPMENT OF RURAL CYL ORGANIZATIONS EXAMINED

OW071435 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0820 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 2 Feb (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification recently transmitted the"report on strengthening the building of CYL organizations in the course of rural party recitification" by the Secretariat of the CYL Central Committee, and issued a circular. The circular said: The CYL is an assistant and a reserve force of the party. Rural CYL organizations are the main party force in uniting and educating youth in rural areas. In the new situation of rural economic reform, the sound development of rural CYL organization in conjunction with party rectification, has great significnace in fully arousing the enthusiasm and creativity of the vast number of rural youth on further implementing the party's various principle and policies in rural areas, on promoting ideological and political work in those areas, and on enhancing the development of socialist spiritual civilization. The circular pointed out: The report put forward some feasible opinions and measures on strengthening CYL organizations in rural party rectification. It is hoped that all party organizations will attach great importance to these opinions and measures, and, proceeding from the actual situation in individual localities, take the work of strengthening the building of rural CYL organizations as part of the party rectification drive and ensure the proper implementation of the work.

The report by the CYL Central Committee pointed out: CYL organizations in rural areas are the party's bridges and ties for linking vast numbers of rural youths. Attaching importance to, and ensuring, the proper development of CYL organizations and giving full play to their function as the party's assistant and reserve forces in the course of rural party rectification are extremely necessary. The report gave instructions in four respects on strengthening the building of CYL organizations:

1. To conduct education on the current situation, party and government policies, and current tasks among CYL members in the stage of party rectification and study, enabling the vast numbers of CYL members to understand the great achievements brought by reform of the rural economic system, and the far-reaching effects of that reform; to enable them to fully understand the guiding ideologies and basic substance of the party's policy in rural areas; to enable them to realize the historical responsibilities they are shouldering; and to propel them into making positive contributions in promoting material and spiritual civilizations in rural areas.

2. To pay attention to selecting and assigned CYL organizations' full-time cadres in the course of party rectification at district and township level. We should discover and select young party and CYL members, who are ideologically sound and keen on CYL work, and who have an honest work style, a relatively good educational background, and a fairly good working ability to fill the leading posts of CYL organizations at district and township level.

3. To establish and improve CYL grass-roots organizations. We should, through party rectification, set up CYL organizations in villages with a party branch, and in village and town enterprises of a considerable size. In places where there are many young people and no CYL members, party organizations may recruit members and set up CYL branches on behalf of the CYL.

4. To pay attention to recruiting party members from among outstanding CYL personnel in various trades in rural areas, particularly from among CYL cadres; and to make positive efforts to absorb advanced rural youths into the CYL. We should also pay attention to recruiting CYL members from among rural secondary school students and teenagers.

The report called on CYL leading organs at various levels to take the strengthening of CYL organizations in the course of rural party rectification as the central task for rural CYL organizations in this year and the next, change their work style, and conscientiously carry out work to CYL branch level.

RENMIN RIBAO DISCUSSES 7 YEARS OF PRICE REFORM

HK310610 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 17 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Yan Jia: "Probing the Price Reform in Our Country"]

[Text] Price Reform Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee

The 7 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee have witnessed the introduction of an all-round price reform with the aim of bringing the market mechanism into fuller play. The 7-year-old price reform covers a wide range of fields, has been carried out on a large scale, and has presented many new methods and rich experiences. Its extent has been far beyond all changes effected in the 30 years prior to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, China began to introduce an all-round reform of the pricing system and of the price control structure; as a starting point, the purchase prices of major agricultural products were raised substantially. With regard to the planned readjustment of the pricing system, the state implemented seven major successive readjustments and some small-scale readjustments to cope with the problems actually existing in prices and with the need for economic development. These readjustments, which involved the prices of agricultural products, industrial consumer goods, and industrial production means (including transportation expenses), have belied the erroneous concept that "planned prices mean fixed prices." Meanwhile, along with reform of the economic structure as a whole, considerable progress has been made in upgrading the role of the market mechanism in regulating the pricing system through reform of the price control structure. Apart from grain, cotton, and other major agricultural products purchased by the state according to contracts, restrictions imposed on the prices of other agricultural products have basically been lifted. Among industrial consumer goods, price restrictions on all small commodities have been lifted. Many textiles are being sold at floating prices, while electromechanical products, among other industrial production means, are also basically subject to the floating price system.

Before 1983, the planned readjustmet of the pricing system (hereinafter referred to as "readjustment") and the readjustment effected mainly through regulation by the market mechanism (hereinafter referred to as "relaxation") were carried out separately on a product basis.

After 1984, with the introduction of the state-approved "double-track system" regarding prices of production means as a starting pint, a new mode featuring the coexistence of the "readjustment" and "relaxation" of the price of similar products began to emerge. Such a "double-track system" regarding prices is new and was unexpected at the beginning of the price reform. Many ownership systems have long coexisted in our country; even under the system of ownership by all the people, different areas have different interests. Moreover, many products are in short supply. As the state plan cannot cover all products, the phenomenon of coexistence of two or multiple prices for a same product has long been a common practice between state-owned enterprises on the one hand and collective, town and township enterprises on the other hand, as well as between enterprises directly subordinate to the central authorities and local enterprises. Under the condition that an overall readjustment of the pricing system is impossible, the practice of lifting restrictions on the prices of production means not covered by the state plan and of encouraging large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises to take part in market regulation are an original attempt, although it seems a little bit passive.

By and large, and 7-year-old price reform has been successful so far. The readjustment of prices for agricultural products has lent great impetus to the development of agricultural production. China, which used to import part of the staple agricultural products it needed, can now be self-sufficient in grain and has a surplus of cotton. The reform of prices for industrial consumer goods has resulted in a rise in the output of these goods and an increase in the variety of different designs. The supply of many of the most important products can now basically meet the people's evergrowing demands. The coal price reform has eased contradictions between supply and demand. Other reform measures regarding prices have also played their due roles in improving economic relations.

Some Experience Gained From the 7-Year Price Reform

First, price reform must be conditional on the reform of the microeconomic operational mechanism. The pricing system is the signal system for the economic operating mechanism. This signal system can only play its due role when microeconomic organizations are sensitive to the price signal. The conspicuous result of agricultural price reform in our country is closely related to the introduction of the contract system linking remuneration to work in rural areas. The reform currently underway in cities, featuring the expansion of enterprise decision-making power, has fully displayed all correct reform measures regarding prices and unreasonable functions of prices, and has thus helped to push, price reform ahead.

Second, rationalization of prices must be conditional on the exercise of effective control over demand. The reason for reform in agricultural prices and industrial consumer goods prices in China is that reasonable prices have given rise to growth in supply; effective control over demand has also been an important factor. Take the case of grain, where the average annual growth in the sale of trade grain in China between 1979 and 1984 was 6.474 million tons. In the same period, average annual growth in grain output was 17.09 million tons, and the average annual growth in the procurement volume was 11.087 million tons. The fact that the growth in supply was far higher than the growth in demand has been the main cause of stable grain prices. In the same period, growth in rolled steel output exceeded growth in grain output. However, since demand grew more rapidly the price of steel products not covered by the state plan has soared and remained high.

From the microeconomic point of view, the exercise of effective control over demand requires that all economic organizations exercise more rigid budget control. In the macroeconomic point of view, it requires a strict comprehensive balance between financial credit and the supply of materials, strict control over the issuance of currency, and in particular, control over the total value of capital construction investment and consumption funds. The reform introduced since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee still has not achieved complete success in this respect.

Third, the combination of "readjustment" and "relaxation" is an effective way to gradually streamline the pricing system. Practice has shown that planned readjustment of prices by the state is, after all, a good way of straightening up the pricing system. This is because supply and demand of many products are relatively stable, and price problems can be seen quite clearly. Consequently, planned readjustment of prices can basically be done conforming to objective economic laws and market demand. Although there are always some difficulties in coordinating the interests of different sectors prior to the introduction of a planned readjustment of prices, various measures can be taken to assist the operation before it is initiated. In addition, we have a contingent of cadres familiar with the process of price readjustment and able to keep the fluctuation of prices well under control after the process is initiated. Convincing evidence of this can be seen by the results of the seven major readjustments, including reductions in the price of cotton cloth, chemical fiber fabric, tobacco and alcohol, watches, and so on, and an increase in railway and water transport fees.

The means of relaxation plays an irreplaceable role in rectifying the pricing system. Such a role is particularly obvious in those cases where prices of finished products have great flexibility regarding supply and demand, especially certain important products. There are a great many designs of such products, and substitutes for them can easily be found. The supply of and demand for these products can easily be affected by conditions in different places at different times, and a change in their prices has slight impact on economic activities. Under such circumstances, a planned readjustment cannot score reasonable results. A readjustment through market mechanism is more convenient.

Experience over the past 7 years has shown that both "readjustment" and "relaxation" are indispensable. Under certain conditions, the two processes can help each other advance; they are interchangeable. Practice has shown that a sound macroeconomic balancing power is necessary to price stabilization of some production means if they have a relatively wide influence and if it takes time to expand their supply. When the above condition is not available and the state does not have effective means and experience to exercise indirect control over commodity prices, lifting restriction on the prices of certain commodities, to be sure, can be very useful, but it will be relatively difficult to keep the consequent changes in prices under control. The price level may be raised too high, and thus may have an adverse influence on the macroeconomic balance and stability. Therefore, while continuing to lift restrictions appropriately on the prices of some of these products, we must step up the process of planned readjustment on a larger scale.

Fourth, in the course of price reform it is necessary to attach importance to the division of the price controlling power and, in particular, to strengthen the functions of the local and departmental organs in charge of pricing. After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the state readjusted the division of the power of setting prices, and a diversified price setting system began to emerge. However, the role of local authorities and departments has been overlooked to a certain extent regarding the division of the price controlling power. Consequently, as far as specific price control work is concerned, there are many "loopholes" which nobody wants to take care of or which cause ambiguity. This has given rise to some chaos.

During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, it is necessary to strengthen guidance, properly delegate price controlling power, revise the product control catalogue, urge all areas and all departments to share the risk of price reform, turn "tremendous shocks" into "slight shocks," and thus ensure the smooth progress of price reform as a whole.

Fifth, it is necessary to seize the opportune time to carry out price reform and to take supporting measures. Experience has shown that whether we have seized the opportune time and taken supporting measures is of great importance in easing the shock arising from price reform.

We have launched four reforms regarding the price of consumer goods, of which two were related to industrial consumer goods. The latter two reforms have scored good results because, as the process went on the prices of some products were raised and others reduced, the margins of price increases and reductions were in the main equal, and those commodities, the prices of which were raised, were not irreplaceable daily necessities. Meanwhile, the two price rises in agricultural and sideline products have aroused strong reaction in society. This was because, on the one hand, these two price rises took place immediately after abrupt increases in social consumption funds, which gave rise to a macroeconomic effect of inflation due to expanding demand. On the other hand, other supporting measures and specific schedules were not well arranged. Last year, after restrictions on vegetable prices were lifted, prices soared for a while in some places. This could also be attributed to the same causes.

Wages have an important bearing on commodity prices. The joint introduction of the readjustment of prices of important consumer goods and reform of the wage system will help to effectively mitigate the impact of the price readjustment.

The Guiding Ideology for Further Reform

After 7 years of reform, the price-setting mechanism of our country has been substantially improved, and great progress has been made in straightening out the pricing system. However, this still cannot meet the needs of the development of a planned commodity economy. Our country's price-setting mechanism is still rather imperfect, and the price system is still faced with some serious inconsistencies between price and value. These inconsistencies will inevitably lead to a conflict between microeconomic targets and macroeconomic goals, as well as failure to fulfill the requirements for the operation of the new economic structure. Further resolution of this contradiction is a task to be dealt with by price reform during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The general guiding ideology for price reform in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan should be: In order to meet the needs of the program of building socialism with Chinese characteristics and a planned commodity economy, and to fulfill the goal of "quadrupling output value" by the year 2,000, readjustment of the pricing system must be carried out along with reform of the price control structure. It is also necessary to do a good job of giving correct guidance to investments, invigorating large-sized enterprises, and improving economic results, as well as devoting every effort to making great progress in price reform regarding major projects and establishment of the price-setting mechanism for the planned commodity economy.

First, it is necessary to basically build a relatively rational pricing system of production structure and to effect a more reasonable investment composition. After reform of the economic structure, the proportion of the state financial investment to the total investment has substantially decreased, while the proportion of funds not covered by the state budget has increased by a wide margin.

The latter is much more sensitive to the price signal than the former. However, our country's existing pricing system fails to reflect the demand of economic development on the readjustment of the production structure; it plans instead a role of "adverse adjustment" harmful to investment and leading to enormous waste of precious resources. It is necessary to concentrate our attention on solving this problem in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Second, price reform must prepare conditions for a structural improvement regarding the scale of basic industrial enterprises. As the backbone of the national economy, large and medium-sized enterprises enjoy the advantages of large-scale economy in terms of the infrastructure and the supply of energy, basic raw materials, and important mechanical products. On the other hand, small enterprises are best mainly in the manufacture of finished products, retail commerce, and service trades. During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan it is necessary to make further efforts to solve the problem of high-quality products manufactured by large and medium-sized enterprises and sold at low prices, while similar products of poorer quality are manufactured by certain small-sized enterprises and sold at higher prices. The aim is to give fuller play to the role of large and medium-sized enterprises and encourage small enterprises to practice economically rational management.

Third, it is necessary to restrain demand for products in short supply which give poor economic returns and to rationally use limited resources. At present, a serious shortage of many basic products has become the major obstacle to the country's economic development. Supply of these products is unlikely to increase dramatically in the near future. Therefore, one major step in easing the contradiction between supply and demand is to use price reform to restrict demand for products with poor economic returns and to rationally use limited resources.

Fourth, it is necessary to rationalize the composition of costs. Production costs are the basis of prices, reflecting economic relations between the enterprise and the state and between different enterprises. Without a scientific cost composition, there will be no reasonable prices; nor will there be normal operational conditions. A very unreasonable cost composition is a major hidden obstacle to the establishment of a market system. Although an examination of costs will not result in noticeable economic results in the near term, it will be an indispensable factor in achieving normal economic operations in the 1990's and beyond. We must make substantial progress in reform regarding cost composition in the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

Fifth, apart from the prices of a few consumer goods, prices of other goods must be basically altered. Prices of goods, the demand for which exceeds their supply, should be made higher than the average price level; the supply of those which exceeds their demand should be made lower than the average price level. This would achieve a balance between supply and demand.

Sixth, it is necessary to establish a basic price control structure which fits the planned commodity economy. This structure must be able to quickly regulate the price system, respond to needs arising from changes in the market and the economic structure, and constantly maintain the rationality of the price system.

Seventh, price reform during the Seventh 5-Year Plan must be implemented within the proper scope under state control. No matter what form, "readjustment" or "relaxation," price reform during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan is going to assume, it will involve a readjustment of price structure and affect prices. Each change inevitably will cause a redistribution of interests between the state, enterprises, and the individual.

In order to ensure that the whole transition process is completed smoothly, we must strive to fulfill the following requirements: 1) The readjustment of prices will not add excessively to the economic burden. 2) When there are changes in the cost of energy, basic raw materials, and transportation, we must make every effort to avoid or minimize the fluctuation of the prices of processed products and reduce the impact through internal reform of enterprises and a profits tax readjustment. 3) It is necessary to insure that the growth margin of the masses' personal income slightly exceeds the rising index of commodity prices. This year's price reform will be mainly aimed at consolidating the promulgated measures and maintaining a basically stable general level of commodity prices.

LIAOWANG DISCUSSES NEW ECONOMIC REFORM LAWS

HK050939 Hong Kong LIOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 4, 27 Jan 86 pp 8, 9

[Article by Zhang Xuixian: "China's Economic Laws Being Formulated in the Course of Reform"]

[Text] Over the last few years, China has made important headway in economic legislation and judicature and the research and teaching of economic laws. As the rapid pace, enormous quantity, and significant content of legislation have all been unprecedented, a system of economic laws and regulations has been gradually taking shape and has effectively protected and promoted the smooth progress of China's socialist modernization construction.

This was said by Gu Ming, leading member of the Economic Legislation Research Center of the State Council and president of the Society of Economic Laws of China, at the second national work conference on economic law theories held at the end of 1985. He disclosed that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, China will formulate more economic laws and regulations and actively plan to draft a scientific "program for economic laws," conforming with realities in China.

A few days ago, this reporter interviewed Professor Sun Yaming, advisor to the Economic Legislation Research Center of the State Council and vice president of the Society of Economic Laws of China, on the role of China's economic laws in protecting and promoting the economic structural reform and opening up to the outside world. From the founding of New China to 1976, China' supreme state power organs and administrative organs promulgated over 800 economic laws and regulations. Over the last few years, China also formulated over 300 economic laws and regulations, covering planning law, economic law, environmental protection law, civil law focusing on contracts, labor law, economic law concerning foreign economic relations and trade, and so on. Professor Sun belives that these laws and regulations have fully reflected China's principle of invigorating the domestic economcy and opening up to the outside world and are the detailed and standard documents of China's economic principles and policies.

Considering that China's economic structural reform is carried out in close coordination with economic legislation and active promotion of various laws and regulations, Professor Sun first gave a briefing on the birth of China's foreign-related economic legislation as well as the roles it displayed in opening up to the outside world. In the light of the policy of opening up to the outside world, China enacted and promulgated over 50 foreign-related economic laws and regulations, such as the "law of the People's Republic of China on Chinese-foreign joint ventures," the "law of the People's Republic of China on economic contracts concerning foreign economic relations and trade," and so on, to encourage and attract foreign businessmen to make investments and set up joint ventures in China. From 1979 to September 1985, China already had over 1,800 Chinese-foreign joint ventures, 3,308 enterprises jointly run by China and foreign businessmen and 109 enterprises solely owned by foreign businessmen, gathering about $20 billion in foreign capital through various patterns.

China's existing important economic laws and regulations were mostly formulated during the economic structural reform over the last few years. Professor Sun Yaming gave a more detailed explanation:

First, China began its economic structural reform with agriculture, as the old economic structure in the rural areas seriously fettered the development of rural commodity economy and productive forces. Successively, the CPC Central Committee issued several documents regarding developing agriculture and further relaxing rural policies, which mainly included the notice issued by the State Council through the State Economic Commission "regarding the report on actively developing diversified economy," as well as some economic laws and regulations promulgated by the State Council on developing enterprises run by communes and production brigades, extending the channels for circulating urban and rural commodities, allowing individual peasants or teams of peasant households to purchase motor vehicles and ships to engage in transportation, and so on. These and some other economic laws and regulations have greatly promoted the division of labor within agriculture and the development of commodity production and exchange, energetically propelled the development of town and township enterprises, strengthened the circulation of urban and rural commodities and ensured the entrance of peasants into the realm of circulation. Therefore, in only 3 to 5 years, we have succeeded to some extent in putting China onto the track of commodity economy from the state of self-sustaining and semi-self-sustaining rural economy in a planned way and quickened the transformation of rural economy into specialized and modernized commodity production.

Second, the initial reform of China's urban economic structure began with restructuring industrial management. Starting in July 1979, the State Council successively promulgated several economic laws and regulations regarding the extension of the decision-making powers of state-run industrial enterprises. In May 1984, the State Council explicitly stipulated in the "provisional regulations on further extending the decision-making power of the state industrial enterprises" that under the condition of ensuring the completion of state plans and contracts for supplying goods to the state, enterprises are allowed to independently increase the output of products needed by the state construction and the market and sell on their own products belonging to their part of profit retention, products in excess of state production targets, new trial-produced products, stockpiled products, and so on. These and other relevant economic laws and regulations have created important conditions for enterprises to truly become relatively independent economic entities and socialist commodity producers and managers who run their own enterprises and assume sole responsibility for their profits or losses. Meanwhile, under the guidance of the Sixth 5-Year Plan as well as annual plans, through the promulgation and implementation of the economic laws and regulations concerning the administration of finance and taxation, structural reform, reform of price systems, reform of commercial systems, reform of planning systems, reform of foreign trade systems, and so on, we have introduced the method of effecting a switch from profit delivery to tax payments. We have tried the principle of fixing prices according to the quality of goods and charging higher prices for better quality, broken the commercial monopoly of the state, and implemented the principle of the state, collectives, and individuals in all trades working together. We have also reduced the scope of mandatory planning and expanded the scope of guidance planning and regulation by market mechanism. Coupled with the quickened development of energy resources, communications, and transportation, we have shattered the old ossified and closed economic structure focusing on production, gradually set up a new economic structure, and contributed to the sharp increase in social productive forces.

Third, in order to expedite the scientific and technological structural reform, the educational structural reform has been closely integrated with the economic structural reform so that scientific and technological achievements can be rapidly and extensively used in production and scientific and technological personnel can be fully exploited.

In April 1985, China began to put into effect the "patent law of the People's Republic of China" and promulgated the "provisional regulations regarding technology transfers" in January 1985. With a view to further expanding economic and technological cooperation with foreign countries and raising China's scientific and technological levels, in May 1985 the State Council also promulgated "procedures of the People's Republic of China for the introduction of technology and administration of contracts." Meanwhile, the state set up an educational commission which is now strengthening the work of educational legislation.

Fourth, in order to separate government from enterprise responsibilities, appropriately separate ownership from right of management, and further expand enterprises' decision-making power, in April 1985 the State Council promulgated the "interim regulations on depreciation of fixed assets of state-run enterprises" and will soon promulgate the "law on state-run industrial enterprises" and the revised "regulations of the work of factory directors of state-run industrial enterprises." The main content of the "law on state-run industrial enterprises" mainly includes: 1) definition of the legal status of state-run industrial enterprises and affirmation of state-run industrial enterprises as legal entities; 2) stipulation of the implementation of the factory director responsibility system and affirmation of factory directors as representatives of legal entities; 3) strengthening the democratic management of enterprises by staff and workers; and so on. The revised "regulations on the work of factory directors of state-run industrial enterprises" define the qualifications, appointment, removal, and responsibilities of factory directors, as well as supervision, reward, and punishment for them. This is quite different from the previous factory director responsibility system which demanded that factory directors should work under the leadership of CPC committees. These "regulations" stipulate that factory directors (or managers) must determine enterprises' operational objectives and development orientations under the guidance of state plans. These economic laws and regulations will play an active role in invigorating enterprises, promoting technical transformation, improving business management, raising economic effectiveness and accelerating commodity production.

Fifth, with a view to strengthening horizontal economic ties between urban and rural areas, between regions and among enterprises, extensively organizing various economic combinations and vigorously developing socialized production and specialized coordination, at present China is stepping up the formulation of relevant general rules of civil law, regulations on contracts for railroad, highway, waterway, and air freight transportation as well as company law and regulations on joint ventures in China. The main content of company regulations includes the definitions of companies, liability patterns of companies, which stipulates two patterns: 1) the limited liability company, 2) the joint-stock limited liability company, and provisions for companies' dissolution, consolidation, bankruptcy, and so on.

Sixth, in order to open up an overall unified market, rapidly eliminate barriers and fetters between departments and regions at different levels and between the Army and the people, and make all the markets extend in all directions and reach all parts of the country and to boost the socialist commodity economy, China needs not only to extensively open up consumer goods, production means, technological information, labor services and construction markets, and so on, but also to cultivate a capital market to make it display the role of raising and accommodating capital under the state's macroeconomic control, so as to contribute to diverting idle capital to production and construction. Meanwhile, it is also necessary to energetically develop international markets. Therefore, we need to enact some relevant economic regulations and laws, such as the law against illegal deals, product liability law, the law for ensuring commodity quality, the law of bills, market management law, and so on.

Seventh, in order to accelerate the development of tertiary industry and promote the coordinated development of the primary and secondary industries, departments concerned of the State Council are now enacting relevant economic laws and regulations, such as railroad law, highway law, postal law, tourism law, the law on town and township enterprises, and so on.

Eighth, in order to better incorporate the administrative and supervisory functions of banks in national financial administration, namely, in the fields of credit, settlement, foreign exchange, wages and bonuses, floating capital and investment in capital construction, the "interim provisions for bank management" were promulgated and put into effect during the middle of January.

Ninth, the law of commerce, now being vigorously enacted, is for fully displaying state-run commercial departments' roles as main channels in commodity circulation and making them actively participate in regulation by market mechanism, readjust commodity prices, promote production and stabilize market under the guidance of state plans.

Tenth, the regulations on contracts for military industrial products now being drafted will shift the focus on scientific research and production departments of national defense onto serving the national economy and the people's livelihood under the condition of giving priority to ensuring military supply. Therefore, it is imperative to readjust military industry into industry which serves both military and civil uses.

JIANGSU: FOREIGN EXCHANGE-EARNING AGRICULTURE DEVELOPS

[Report by Zheng Taibai: "Suzhou City Develops Agriculture To Earn Foreign Exchange"]

[Excerpts] In developing the rural economy, Suzhou City, located in the Chang Jiang Delta in Jiangsu Province, has conscientiously implemented the principle of integration of "trade, industry, and agriculture," and actively readjusted the production structure, thus speeding up the construction of the production base of agricultural and sideline products and commodities for export. Last year, the total volume of agricultural and sideline products and primary processed products procured for export amounted to more than 200 million yuan, an increase of 30 percent over the previous year. These exported products resulted in foreign exchange revenue totaling $65 million; and taking into account the value arising from the export of fine processed products with agricultural and sideline products as raw material, the total is more than $150 million.

Suzhou City has actively readjusted the production structure in rural areas, supporting the peasants by means of policies and in the form of material supplies and services, thus giving full play to the peasants in developing the production of agricultural and sideline products for export.

So far, around 70-80 plants processing agricultural and sideline products for export have been set up in Suzhou, of which more than half are run by townships. Wujiang County has set up three knitting mills to produce bright and beautiful knitwear made of rabbit hair. Their products are well received in the Shanghai and Nanjing markets. By implementing the principle of integration of domestic marketing and export, they have managed to double their profits.

Suzhou City has attached importance to scientific and technological development as well as to the improvement of the quality of agricultural and sideline products, and has encouraged the peasants to develop new export products. A few townships in western Wuxian County have been well-known for growing flowers and plants for centuries past.

At present, there are more than 100 specialized gardeners throughout the country, and dozens of kinds of flowers and plants have been marketed in Hong Kong and Macao. Meanwhile, a series of storage, refrigeration, and processing facilities is under construction.

[Commentator's article: "There are Bright Prospects for Agriculture To Earn Foreign Exchange"]

[Text] Suzhou City has implemented the principle of integration of "trade, industry, and agriculture" in readjusting the production structure in rural areas, and the progress the city made last year in earning foreign exchange by exporting agricultural and sideline products, as well as processed products, shows that there are bright prospects for the development of foreign exchange-earning agriculture in economically developed coastal areas.

Foreign exchange-earning agriculture is mainly aimed at export. China's coastal areas enjoy various historical and geographical advantages regarding their overseas ties and produce many agricultural and sideline products which are traditionally famous abroad. However, due to the fetters of the self-supporting or semi-self-supporting economy over the years, the commodity rate regarding these products was low, the export volume was limited, and some products had even never been exported. Such circumstances have been serious obstacles to the further transition from agriculture to commodity production and have affected the further prosperity of rural economy in these areas.

Some people say: Now that agriculture is rather developed in the coastal areas, especially the Chang Jiang Delta, the Zhu Jiang Delta, and the southern Fujian triangular zone, development of agriculture is not likely to bring about any new breakthrough in the rural economy. Facts have shown that these areas are more developed than other parts of the country in agriculture, but are backward in many fields as compared with economically developed countries in the world, and there is still much room for development. One of the fields to be explored is the international market, with the focal point being the development of foreign exchange-earning agriculture, which will, in turn, give an impetus to the development of the processing industry for agriculture and sideline products, the communications and transportation industry, and commodity circulation, thus bringing about the prosperity of the economy as a whole. This has been proved by the case of the Suzhou area, where the establishment and development of a number of town and township enterprises with a fair ability to earn foreign exchange have given rise to a preliminarily connected circulation and service network. The foreign exchange-earning agriculture can serve as a new starting point and new motive force for the economically developed coastal areas in their efforts to develop agriculture. Agriculture will continue to boom there on the existing basis.

Of course, the foreign exchange-earning agriculture is not something to be achieved in one move. In the case of some products with fair basic conditions for production, it will be easier to promote them in the international market as long as their quality is further improved, the scale of production is expanded, the processing capacity is increased through technical transformation, and the packing is improved. For some other products, it is necessary to devote our efforts to a series of basic tasks. For example, the production of some name-brand and high-quality agricultural and sideline products has almost ceased; promoting these products needs to start from crop-breeding, as well as planting experiments and popularization. There are more products to be developed and created.

Suzhou City has achieved prompt success by building up the production base, concentrating financial and material resources in the manner of fighting a "battle of annihilation." The city's experience merits popularization.

The development of foreign exchange-earning agriculture needs the concerted efforts of various sectors, including agriculture, foreign trade, commerce, and industry. It is necessary to rationally coordinate economic interests between different sectors. While taking the interests of one's own unit into account, one must attach importance to the interests of the state as a whole regarding foreign exchange revenue, and the interests of the peasants as well. So long as we stick to a definite goal and make persistent efforts to effect a shift to foreign exchange-earning agriculture, the developed coastal areas are bound to succeed in building up the country's first new open-type agricultural zone.

SHANDONG SECRETARY VISITS HEZE PERFECTURE

SK092322 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Prior to the Spring Festival, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC committee, went to Heze Prefecture to visit the retired veteran cadres of the former old Hebei, Shandong, and Henan revolutionary bases, stressing that the new and old cadres should support one another and jointly contribute to the great cause of the four modernizations.

During his 3-day visit to Heze Prefecture, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, visited the retired veteran cadres of the former Hebei, Shandong and Henan old revolutionary bases in the company of (Yu Bohai), secretary of the Heze Prefectural CPC Committee.

He made two special visits to (Li Jizhao), a 94-year-old veteran cadre who had been recruited into the party in 1933, and (Li Yuzhi), former deputy secretary of the Heze Prefectural CPC Committee, who is having difficulty in getting around. Wherever he went Comrade Liang Buting asked in detail about the living and health conditions of the veteran cadres and held cordial talks with them.

Comrade Liang Buting said: The new and old cadres should support one another, and respect and defend one another in three ways. Now is an important time for replacing old cadres with new cadres. There will be more and more retired veteran comrades in the future. And more and more new comrades will assume leading posts. Therefore, how to correctly handle the relationships between the comrades on the first line and those on the second and third lines has become an important issue in present party life. Comrades working on the first line should care for and respect the veteran comrades. Respecting veteran comrades means respecting history, traditions, and experiences. Those veteran comrades who have retreated to the second or third lines should support and defend the in-service comrades. Defending the comrades on the first line means safeguarding the public interest, stability, and unity. All in all, both parties should continue mutual support.

Gives Directives

SK100129 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 6 February, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, visited Heze Prefecture and, accompanied by the responsible comrades of the Yuncheng County CPC Committee, visited the five households engaged in raising rabbits in (Wuzhaung) village of (Shuangqiao) township to extend his cordial regard and festive greetings. He also heard the briefing given by the secretary of the village party branch and held discussions with them on the plan for making the village as a whole mutually become wealthy.

In holding talks with the responsible comrades of the prefectural and county party committees, Comrade Liang Buting emphatically stated: We should by no means slacken our efforts to engage in grain production, because it is the basic factor of having the people dress warmly and eat their fill. There will be no development in animal husbandry, processing industry, and other undertakings without grains. Therefore, we should maintain a stable sowed acreage of grains and increase the per-unit yield. Efforts should be made to actively develop a diversified economy and to pay attention to processing grains intensively and turning grains into other foodstuffs.

Comrade Liang Buting stated: Over the past few years, Heze Prefecture has firmly grasped this work and done a good job in this regard. It has also scored marked achievements in dealing with the leftover problems, implementing the policies, and in solving the major and serious cases. The spirit displayed by the prefecture in daring to grasp knotty problems has been praised by the masses. To date, however, some comrades have obstinately stuck to their wrong courses. He urged the responsible comrades to remove all interferences in order to resolutely and continuously implement the policies issued by the CPC Central Committee.

Comrade Liang Buting stated: The economic fundation of Heze Prefecture is poor and weak, but the prefecture is strong in latent power. Therefore, it is also able to and should accelerate its pace of developing industrial production. In line with the policy, the provincial authorities will actively support the prefecture in the fields of material sources and funds in order to enable it to achieve development as soon as possible. The "three, four, five" project put forward by the prefecture with regard to bringing into play the strong points of the three bases of grains-cotton, animal husbandry, and paulownia; developing the markets of the four major commodities including foodstuffs, wool textile products, leader products, and wood furniture; and following the five principles set for developing industries in the prefecture, is made by proceeding from the prefecture's reality, is suitable to the prefecture's conditions, is formulated by exploiting the prefecture's strong points to make up for its shortcomings; thus fully embodying the guideline on agricultural production issued by the central authorities. The project constitutes a favorable way for the localities that have a poor economic foundation, but are strong in latent power, to change their backward outlook.

The prefecture's work of fostering lateral cooperation and developing economic and technical coordination represents a great breakthrough in work, not only of the economy, but also of ideology. The experience gained by the prefecture in promoting the development of the economy, by removing the longstanding traditional idea of small-scale peasant economy and the out-dated habit in which both small and large localities should have all kinds of supplies in order to refrain from asking others for help, is worth summing up or popularizing. On the other hand, the eastern areas that have achieved rapid economic development should actively transfer their scientific and technological results to the areas that have poor economic foundations in order to successfully foster cooperation and coordination.

HUNAN LOCAL NOTARY OFFICE UNCOVERS FRAUD

OW041129 Beijing XINHUA in English 1044 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 4 (XINHUA) -- The handling of a notarial document uncovered a fraud in central China's Hunan Province, and saved a township government from a loss of one million yuan.

Last April, a young person named Pan, who styled himself the general manager of a development company with more than one million yuan in private assets, bid for a contract to manage a six-story commercial building and sell the half a million yuan's worth of goods already stored in the building. But the staff of the local notary office became suspicious over the details in the registered contract document and did some investigation into Pan's background. It turned out that he was a convict on the run and had no connection whatsoever with the construction business. As a result, Pan was handed over to the police and the township recovered its money.

This was only one of 7,000 economic crimes which turned up in the handling of notarized documents, an official from the notary public and lawyers department of the Ministry of Justice told XINHUA in a recent interview. Of the more than two million notarized documents registered last year, about 80 percent concerned economic contracts, whereas, before 1978, they were mainly connected with marriage, property, schooling and identification.

In the past five years, more than 590,000 Chinese notarized documents have been sent to scores of countries, the official said. China now has more than 2,600 notarial offices with nearly 10,000 staff members.

XIZANG PREFECTURE RETURNS CONFISCATED PROPERTY

HK060743 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 1 Feb 86

[Text] The Nagpu Prefectural CPC Committee United Front Work Department has regarded returning an article, handling a leftover problem, and implementing a policy toward a person as a specific action to bring order out of chaos, eliminate leftist influence, and totally negate the Great Cultural Revolution. It has strengthened leadership and taken measures to score achievements in a short period.

With a view to speeding up the implementation of the policies of united front work and strengthening leadership over this work, the United Front Work Department of the prefectural CPC Committee has specially set up a prefectural leadership group to implement the policies of united front work. They have seriously dealt with the problems of confiscating patriotic personages' property in the Great Cultural Revolution, the problems of confiscating pearls, jewels, and agates belonging to temples in the Great Cultural Revolution, and those problems of wrongful confiscation in the course of democratic reform which have been left over, and have returned the property.

Since the beginning of last year, they have successively received 121 appeals for the implementation of policies which were lodged by patriotic personages and personages of religious circles. They have carried out all-round analysis of and dealt with these appeals and some matters for which appeals have not been lodged but which should be dealt with in accordance with requirements of the policies, in order of importance and urgency. In accordance with the principle of first solving the easy problems and later the difficult ones and with the method of solving the problems in groups, the more numerous problems and those which produced great effect, whose circumstances were clear, and which were easily investigated and verified, were classified as the first group of handling. After penetrating investigation and repeated verification, the first group determined had 88 persons and households and the amount of money defrayed was some 340,000 yuan. The following several problems were specifically solved:

1. In accordance with the spirit of the regional forum on the implementation of the policies of united front work and with the requirements for implementing policies in one's own unit first, at the end of September last year, the united front work system listed articles and asked people to claim them. It returned 85 articles, including coupboards, [words indistinct], high-grade china pots, china bowls, and ivory chopsticks, to (Xiaodong) temple and CPPCC Committee members on its own initiative. At the same time, it returned 54 houses, including temples and living Buddhas' private houses, about some 1,800 square meters in size.

2. In accordance with the policies, damages were paid to 51 persons for some 965 articles which had been confiscated in the Great Cultural Revolution. Regarding gold, silver, and products made by them which had been confiscated, damages were paid in renminbi. Compensation was paid to 31 persons for their gold and silver ornaments and the savings deposited with banks and cash which had been confiscated, were returned to 10 persons.

3. The wages of nine CPPCC Committee members which had been withheld in the Great Cultural Revolution, were paid.

4. The problems of wrongful confiscation of the property of seven CPPCC Committee members in democratic reform was properly solved and a suitable lump sum was paid by way of compensation.

5. The livestock and other means of livestock production owned by 11 households and 10 temples, which had been confiscated before trial in the period of socialist transformation, were returned and damages of some 144,000 yuan were paid.

After the policies toward these people were implemented, personages of various circles and the masses gave them their support and the people and their family members and children whose articles had been returned and to whom damages were paid, all felt satisfied. They said with deep feeling: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party has reversed verdicts on us and rehabilitated our reputation. It has now implemented economic policies toward us, resulting in solving the problems which have been left over for many years. This has made us personally feel that the party's traditions of seeking truth from facts and sharing weal and woe with the people have been really restored. This has fully embodied the CPC Central Committee's great daring to totally negate the Great Cultural Revolution and to bring order out of chaos and its spirit of being extremely responsible to the people. We must forever work with the party and build two civilizations for Nagqu with all our heart and all our might to repay the party's kindness.

Attending the rally were leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial Advisory Commission; responsible comrades of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, the provincial government and the provincial CPPCC Committee's party leading group; and party-member cadres at and above the section level of the provincial organs.

Gao Zhanxiang, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, presided over the rally. Responsible persons of the CPC Committee of the provincial academy of sciences and of the party leading groups of the provincial animal husbandry and marine product bureau introduced their situations and experiences in reviewing party rectification and improving party style.

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee, Comrade Xing Chongzhi gave three opinions: 1) conscientiously studying an profoundly understanding the guidelines of the speeches of central leading comrades given at the rally of central organ cadres; 2) conducting "four checks" from the higher level downward, and further uncovering and solving the problems in party style; and 3) strengthening leadership over and paying ceaseless attention to the work of improving party style.

After Xing Chongzhi gave his speech, Comrade Gao Zhanxiang spoke. He said: All units should set forth their fighting goals for the improvement of party style, and improve party stule through the "inspiration of goals." We should pay attention to ideological work, educate party members and cadres with both positive and negative examples, lead them in conducting the "four checks," and encourage them to supervise and help each other. Those who still commit mistakes while conducting checkups should be dealt with strictly. Party leading groups of all offices and bureaus should submit brief, realistic, and to-the-point reports on their improvement of party style to the provincial CPC Committee before 1 July.

Xing's Speech

SK100156 Shijazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 24 Jan 86 pp 1, 2

[Speech by Xing Chongzhi, Hebei provincial CPC committee secretary, at 23 January rally of provincial organ cadres in Shijazhuang City]

[Text] Today's rally is a mobilization rally for implementing the guidelines of the speeches by the central leading comrades and for rapidly effecting a fundamental improvement in party style. At this time, I would like to speak on three subjects:

1. We Should Conscientiously Study and Profundly Comprehend the Guidelines of the Speeches by the Central Leading Comrades.

The important speeches made by Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, and other central leading comrades at the meeting of cadres of the central organs have correctly analyzed our country's political and economic situations since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, have profoundly expounded the extreme importance of strengthening the building of party style, and have definitely put forward the tasks, principles, and measures for rectifying party style, thus constituting an important weapon for strengthening the building of party style under the new historical conditions. All units should organize the broad masses of party members and cadres, leading cadres of various levels throughout the province in particular, to conscientiously study the speeches by the central leading comrades, and to profoundly comprehend the essence of the guidelines. Through study, we should unify our understanding of the current situation, further implement the strategic principle of simultaneously grasping the building of the "two civilizations," clearly understand the position, role, and important political tasks of the leading organs, and take the lead in rectifying party style. We should also attend to building the party ideology and work style, with the emphasis on raising efficiency, exerting ourselves in study, rigorously enforcing discipline, and intensifying the party spirit. We should carry forward the spirit of the "foolish old man," and work firmly, tenaciously, and conscientiously in order to ensure that the provincial-level organs will effect a fundamental improvement in party style within this year.

We should repeatedly and penetratingly study the speeches by the central leading comrades, rather than only reading them once or twice, and should solve our problems in close combination with the practical situations. On the basis of studying the documents well and enhancing understanding, all units should investigate and revise their plans and measures for fundamentally improving party style in line with the demands of the CPC Central Committee and through the method of combining the efforts of higher levles with those of lower levels. All units should also conscientiously rectify their party style, correct their unhealthy trends, and actually implement all measures in this regard.

2. We should Conduct "Four Checks" From the Top Downward, and Further Reveal and Solve Problems

To implement the guidelines of the speeches by the central leading comrades and to successfully build party style, we must conscientiously reveal and solve the major problems regarding party style. All units should spend a fixed period of time on conducting the "four checks" from the top downward. The "four checks" are as follows:

First, we should check the corruption. In line with the demands of the circulars issued by the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council, we should check and correct such serious problems as purchasing imported cars and replacing older cars with deluxe limousines; arbitrarily sending persons for travel abroad, using a huge sum of public funds; indulging in extravagance and waste while giving banquets and gifts; seeking illegal incomes; and taking advantage of one's position and power to provide conveniences for one's children and relatives to engage in business. We should also eliminate all corrosive phenomena, and such evil trends as abusing power for personal gain and seeking the interests of individuals and small groups at the expense of the overall interests, disregarding the basic purpose of wholeheartedly serving the people.

Second, we should check bureaucracy. All units should emphatically check themselves to see whether they have indulged in such serious bureaucratic styles as being irresponsible for the party and the people and neglecting one's duty; whether they have been devoted to holding "excessive meetings" and issuing "excessive documents," to the neglect of delving into the realities of life to conduct investigations and studies; whether they have issued more general calls but given less specific guidance; whether they have indulged themselves in empty rhetoric, while performing no concrete deeds; whether they have had such a listless work style as "not blushing with shame while being criticized, not worrying about backwardness in work, and refusing to find a solution for failure to accomplish tasks"; whether they have handled affairs in a dilatory and ineffective manner; whether they have rendered good services; and whether they have indulged in the Yamen work style, such that people "seldom can enter the doors, see smiling faces, and get business done at organizations."

Third, we should check liberalism. We should chiefly check the phenomena of disregarding organization and discipline and "enforcing neither orders nor prohibitions"; the practice of seeking good relations with all and sundry at the expense of principle, neither resisting nor struggling against unhealthy trends, and allowing them go rampant; the trend of conducting neither criticism nor self-criticism for fear of losing the "black gauze cap" in the case of criticizing higher levels, for fear of losing the "ballot" in the case of criticizing lower levels, and for fear of affecting unity and work performance in the case of criticizing those at the same levels; and the tendency of creating, believing in, and passing on hearsay, and even spreading rumors and slanders against other comrades. Political liberalism is, in essence, individualism. It weakens our party's combat strength; interferes with and hinders the implementation of the party's line, principles, and policies; and causes great harm. We should resolutely resist and correct it.

Fourth, we should check the sense of party spirit. We should chiefly check whether we are just and fair, and uphold party spirit and the principle of appointing people on their merits in conducting personnel affairs; whether we have the problem of stressing personal relations at the expense of party spirit and principle; whether we have established a "network of personal relations" and small coteries; and whether we have pleaded for those who committed mistakes or crimes. In the meantime, we should approach the problems of power abuse for selfish gains, serious bureaucracy, and political liberalism from the perspective of party spirit. We should examine ourselves to see whether we have a strong sense of party spirit, a firmly-fostered idea of serving the people wholeheartedly, and good performance with regard to Communist Party members' exemplary and vanguard role. Only by so doing can we distinguish right from wrong, enhance our awareness, and solve our problems once and for all.

In conducting the "four checks," we should not allow a small number of persons to check behind closed doors, but should rely on the masses and follow the mass line. Leading cadres should go deep among the masses of their own units, the subordinate units under their leadership, and the people whom they are to serve, and widely give heed to their opinions through forums, heart-to-heart talks, or visits. They should have the courage to face up to the problems their units or they themselves have, and refrain from shielding shortcomings or unhealthy trends on any pretexts. We should neither put ourselves under the patronage of higher levels nor compete with lower levels, but should examine ourselves in a down-to-earth manner. Leading persons at all levels should take the lead and promote the work of the next lower levels. If they take the initiative in checking and correcting their serious unhealthy trends committee since 1985 and return or compensate for their illegal gains, more lenient organizational measures may be adopted in handling their cases. They may be exempted from punishments or be given lenient punishments instead of severe ones. Problems arising after the promulgation of the provincial CPC Committee's "10 prohibitions" should be dealt with more sternly.

We should both extensively check and uncover problems and thoroughly analyze typical cases and hold discussions concerning them. We should hold discussions on the four topics of enhancing party spirit, strengthening discipline, raising efficiency, and changing work styles one by one, and solve the problems, clarify the right and wrong, and sum up the experiences and lessons in each of them one by one.

Leading bodies should hold the discussions separately and also together with the masses of party members in order for them to promote each other.

3. We Should Strengthen Leadership, and Pay Attention to It Ceaselessly

The provincial CPC Committee demanded that party and government leading organs at the provincial, prefectural (city), county, and township levels basically achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style within this year. The provincial organs should take the lead in this work. Therefore, the provincial CPC Committee decided to establish a leading group for improving the party style of provincial organs, with Comrade Gao Zhanxiang as its leader, and Comrades Bai Shi and Lu Chuanzan as deputy leaders. The party leading groups and party committees of various offices and bureaus should put the work of improving party style high on their agenda, their secretaries should attend to it personally, and they should each assign a major leading comrade to grasp it in a concentrated manner. The provincial Discipline Inspection Commission should put more efforts, and the CPC committees of the provincial organs should put their major efforts, on improving the party style of provincial organs.

Party style must be grasped in both a resolute and sustained manner. The improvement of party style must not be carried out in such a way that it is sometimes tight and sometimes relaxed, and sometimes firm and sometimes tentative. Party style must be grasped in a step-by-step manner. We will never stop until we achieve this goal. We must further perfect and implement the system of grasping party style on a responsibility basis. We should regularly analyze the situation regarding the party style of all units in order to clearly understand which units have realized a fundamental turn for the better in party style and what measures they should take to further strengthen the improvement of party style; which units have realized a basic turn for the better in party style, what problems they still have, and what measures they should take to solve the existing problems; and which units have more problems, and why these problems exist. After knowing the situation, we should give instructions, in accordance with different conditions, to help these units solve problems. We must not demand uniformity for all the units in realizing a fundamental turn for the better in party style at the same time because of their different actual conditions. Leaders at all levels should concentrate efforts on helping the units with more problems change their outlook within a definite period of time. While attending to the improvement of party style, all departments and units should bring their functions into full play and focus on checking and handling major and appalling cases to consolidate the established practices, particularly to solve the prominent problems concerning which the people have many complaints, such as "electricity despots," "road despots," "grain and edible oil embezzlers," and people who seek private gains by granting loans to others. Efforts must be made to eliminate these unhealthy practices and to foster a healthy atmosphere. We must closely combine the straightening out of party style with reform and the current work. Along with the realization of a fundamental turn for the better in party style, we should better achieve the work in all fields and ceaselessly make new achievements. The provincial CPC Committee planned to organize forces to comprehensively inspect the situation regarding the straightening out of party style among all departments and bureaus before "1 July."

We should enhance the construction of leading bodies in grasping party style. The leading cadres who persistently do not correct their serious problems in work style or who fail to effectively correct the unhealthy practices should be readjusted and replaced. Simultaneously, we should vigorously commend the comrades with lofty mental outlook and fine work style and the comrades adhering to principles and bravely resisting unhealthy practices.

It is of great importance that leading cadres and leading organs should set an example and the broad masses of the party members should play an exemplary vanguard role in straightening out party style and correcting unhealthy practices. By responding to the call of the CPC Central Committee, all party members must, from now on, take the initiative and go into action and stand in the forefront of the work of straightening out party style. All party members should abide by the party constitution and the guiding principle for inner-party political life in an exemplary manner. Party members must not indulge in unhealthy practices. The party members involved in the nuhealthy practices should actively make corrections, and bravely wage struggle against all unhealthy practices. We should bravely expose the unhealthy practices involving leading cadres, particularly leaders of the provincial CPC Committee. We must eliminate some party members' negative attitudes, such as drifting with the tide, waiting and watching, blaming everyone and everything but themselves, and talking a lot but doing nothing. It is completely possible to accelerate the pace of the realization of a fundamental turn for the better in party style as long as all the party members of the provincial-level organs go into action.

To promote a fundamental turn for the better in social order with the realization of achievements in effecting a fundamental turn for the better in party style is an unshakable task of great importance in the political field. Time is pressing. The broad masses of party members and cadres of the provincial-level organs must further go into action, make concerted efforts to conscientiously implement the directives of the central authorities and the plans of the provincial CPC Committee, work solidly, and take the initiative in making contributions to straightening out party style, so that the provincial-level organs will really set an example for the entire province in this regard.

SK092358 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Spring Festival speech by Sun Weiben, secretary of the Provincial CPC Committee, carried on provincial radio and television networks -- recorded]

[Text] Comrades, friends: The Spring Festival, the traditional festival of the Chinese nation, has come. On the occasion when the people are seeing off the old year and greeting the new, please allow me to extend cordial regards and heartfelt thanks on behalf of the Heilongjiang Provincial CPC Committee and the provincial People's Government, to comrades on all fronts who have worked diligently and stuck to their work posts during the festival days and to send festive greetings to the broad masses of workers, peasants, intellectuals, cadres, PLA soldiers and commanders and fighters of the armed police force and the people of various nationalities and from all walks of life who have been working hard on all fronts in vitalizing Heilongjiang.

In the past year our province scored new achievements in economic construction and all other undertakings. Like other places in China, our province's economic and political situation the past year were one of the best since the founding of the People's Republic. We should attribute this success to the line, principles, and policies of the CPC Central Committee and to the concerted efforts of the people throughout the province in scaling heights and working in unity. At the time when spring has come on earth and everything looks fresh and gay, our people throughout the province should jointly share such happiness and success. This is the first year for implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The tasks facing us are very arduous and complicated. Therefore, we must exert more conscientious efforts and take the initiative in implementing the guidelines of the National Conference of Party Delegates; persist in grasping the two civilization simultaneously; adhere to the strategic policy of reforming systems, carrying out technical transformation, opening the province to other provinces and foreign countries and developing resources; enhance our spirit, work hard quietly, and make a good beginning for successfully accomplishing the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

This year we should strive to make steady progress in building the socialist material civilization, enable the province's economic and social development to attain a new level, continue to speed the progress in reform of the economic structure focusing on reform of the urban economy with untiring efforts, and ensure a sustained, steady, and coordinated development in the province's various undertakings. We should act resolutely in accordance with the CPC Central Committee's principle of consolidation, digestion, supplementing, and upgrading, conscientiously review the province's reform experiences in the previous stage, consolidate reform achievments, and strive to solve all problems in the previous stage of reforms within a short time in order to make various reforms yield better results and to make preparations for achieving important steps in the coming 2 years.

During this year, we should prominently stress the rectification of party style and improvements in social habits in the course of building the socialist spiritual civilization, exert great efforts, and achieve actual results. Party organizations at all levels throughout the province should resolutely study a series important speeches of the central leading comrades and the guidelines of their directives, foster healthy trends and check malpractices with an attitude of earnestness, conscientiousness, and responsibility, and successfully rectify party style. The leading organs and cadres at all levels should play an exemplary role. They should first do what they want lower levels and other people to do and not do what they forbid the lower levels and other people to do.

A good party style will not only produce an impact on social habits and promote improvements in the general mood of society, but will also greatly promote the building of material civilization and stimulate a rapid development in various construction undertakings.

Trying our utmost to make the richly endowed and beautiful Heilongjiang into a more prosperous province, and making the urban and rural people become wealthy within a short time are the common desire and responsibility of the 33 million people of the province. The provincial CPC Committee and government are convinced that in the new year, the people throughout the province will surely take the whole situation and public interests into account with an attitude of being masters of the state, exert all-out efforts, make new progress, work with one heart and one soul, work painstakingly, do a good job in all fields of work in a down-to-earth manner, contribute their wisdom and intelligence to vitalizing Heilongjiang, and create new achievements in Heilongjaing's development and leap forward with hard work and sweat.

Finally, I wish you all joy and happiness in the Spring Festival and much happiness for your families.

XINJIANG'S SONG HANLIANG ON AGRICULTURAL ISSUES

HK030215 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Excerpts] Regional CPC Committee Secretary Song Hanliang pointed out in his speech at the recent regional conference on rural work that the region's rural and pastoral areas are now at the historical stage of switching from self-sufficient and semi-self-sufficient economy to commodity economy. To suit this new situation, the thinking of the cadres at all levels must undergo a great change.

Comrade Song Hanliang said: To achieve a change in thinking, it is first necessary to enhance understanding of commodity economy. The full development of commodity economy is an essential condition for the attainment of agricultural modernization in Xinjiang. The previous idea of setting socialist economy against commodity economy was an erroneous leftist way of thinking that does not accord with the laws of socialist development. Such an idea is extremely harmful for the development of socialist economy.

Second, we must establish the concept of commodity economy. Song Hanliang pointed out: Many places shout about developing commodity production, but in fact they only bother about production and fail to get a proper grasp of circulation. They are only concerned about producing so many things, without actively taking steps to turn them into commodities by organizing their transport and sales. In fact, the development of commodity production has not yet been placed, or completely placed, in an important position on the agenda of the party committees.

Everybody often thinks about the rich resources of Xinjiang. It is true that our resources are rich. But unless we develop commodity production, there is no way of turning strong points in resources into commodity and economic strong points, and it is very hard to invigorate our economy. Due to restriction by the management setup and the influence of traditional habits, the agricultural departments in Xinjiang have for a long time only bothered about production without grasping sales. Since this is the case in the upper levels, how can the development of rural economy be promoted?

Comrade Song Hanliang stressed: Beginning this year, the party committees, government, and agricultural departments at all levels must apply the concept of commodity economy to guide and organize agricultural production. The agricultural departments must concern themselves with circulation and sales as well as production. Apart from increasing production, they must also improve economic results and ensure that the peasants enjoy tangible benefits.

It is certain that the agricultural departments will encounter many difficulties in acting in this way. There are problems in the system, and there are problems in relations between different departments. When encountering problems, we must solve them, based on the spirit of reform.

FEDERATION URGES REUNION OF SEPARATED FAMILIES

OW081817 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 0400 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Undated letter of Spring Festival greetings from the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots to all people in Taiwan]

[Text] Dear Taiwan kinfolk: Firecrackers have sent off the old year and red scrolls ushered in the new one. On the occasion of the Spring Festival, we Taiwan natives residing on the motherland's mainland hereby extend our Spring Festival greetings to our people back home. We wish you a happy Chinese New Year, good health, and satisfaction in everything. On this festival of the Chinese nation, with its traditional happy family reunions, we are particularly longing for our native province and our relatives. We think that you too are longing for your relatives on the mainland.

It is gratifying that in recent years there has been a new development of the trend for a peaceful reunification of the motherland, thanks to the joint efforts by personalities of various circles and Taiwan compatriots at home and abroad. Many family members separated by the Taiwan Strait have heard from each other again. Taiwan fishing boats constantly visit the mainland. The entrepot trade between Taiwan and the mainland is now on the rise. The number of people from Taiwan who come to visit their relatives or seek their roots on the mainland has been increasing year after year. At international meetings, Chinese from both sides of the Taiwan Strait chat with each other cordially.

Students from the mainland and students from Taiwan studying in foreign schools are living harmoniously together. A national sentiment that blood is thicker than water has closely bound together the hearts of all Chinese. The concept of one country, two systems for peaceful reunification of the motherland advocated by the Chinese Communist Party and the people's government and the truth about the reforms, opening to the outside world, and the building of the two civlizations on the mainland have been known to our kinfolk in Taiwan. Breaking through all kinds of obstructions, many people in Taiwan are openly discussing the issue of reunification of the motherland and the future of Taiwan. Our compatriots residing abroad, deeply concerned about the cause of the motherland's reunfication, are pooling their wisdom and efforts to play the role of a bridge. The rapid development of exchanges and dialogue between the people's across the Strait shows bright prospects for the motherland's peaceful reunification.

Dear Kinfolk: The unfortunate split has separated several million family members across the Strait for 37 years. Year after year, they have reunited with their relatives only in their dreams. On the occasion of this festival, many old people are in tears, longing for a reunion with their loved ones back home. Many young people who have never seen their parents' hometowns yearn to go there to visit many of their relatives whom they have never met.

In today's world, it takes only a short time to cross an ocean. However, the 100-mile Taiwan Strait has become an impassable moat, making people unable to see their relatives in the same country for the rest of their lives. Such a tragedy is unreasonable and against the people's aspirations, and we should not let it continue any longer. For this reason, we earnestly propose that visiting groups be organized as soon as possible on both sides of the Strait to let people visit their relatives across the Strait and let long separated family members reunite with each other and share family happiness together in their remaining years. We appeal to all associations of fellow townsmen in Taiwan to support our proposal. We also hope that all Taiwan compatriots residing abroad will continue to serve as a bridge and make joint efforts to urge the Taiwan authorities to respect the people's wishes and facilitate visits and reunions between relatives across the Taiwan Strait. We cordially hope that normal exchanges between the people across the Strait will be restored at an early date, and that the long-cherished wish of the nation for a peaceful reunification of the motherland will come true soon. Let us, the 1 billion Chinese people unite, join hands to revitalize China, and make our country, including Taiwan, even more prosperous. Let us work hard together to usher in the day of reunion between family members across the Strait.

Zhu Tianshun, vice-chairman of the All-China Federation of Taiwan Compatriots, had been away from Taiwan for more than 40 years. WANG BINGNAN DISCUSSES WORLD FORCE FOR PEACE

OW101027 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 0200 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Radioscript by Wang Bingnan, chairman of the Organizing Committee for the International Year of Peace of China and adviser to the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries: "Strive for Lasting Peace, Promote Common Prosperity" -- read by announcer]

[Excerpts] We have sent off 1985, a year significant to the people in the world, and we have also joyfully ushered in the year 1986. Chinese, like other people in the world, earnestly hope that 1986 will bring peace, prosperity, and happiness to the people of all countries. The Chinese Government and people attach great importance to and actively support the United Nations decision on designating 1986 as the International Year of Peace. In May 1985 we set up the Organizing Committee for the International Year of Peace of China.

The international situation remained turbulent in 1985. Some countries in Southwest and Southeast Asia, the Middle East and Central and South America were occupied by force. Their people were massacred, their sovereignty was infringed upon, and their internal affairs were interfered with. They were the hot spots of contention of power politics.

The two superpowers -- the United States and the Soviet Union -- are extending their nuclear arms race from land, sea, and air to outer space, and the threat of war is everywhere. While the force of war is constantly increasing, more and more countries are striving for international peace, and more and more people are participating in peace movements. An unprecedented number of people, under the banner of peace, are working hard together to oppose hegemonism and defend peace. The unprecedented development of the world peace force is playing a great role in containing the force of war. This is where the strength and hope for the prevention of a world war lie.

Merely wishing for peace is not enough to win it. All the people in the world must work together to ensure that the superpowers, who possess 95 percent of the world's nuclear arsenal, stop the arms race, particularly the nuclear arms race, and take the lead in drastically reducing their nuclear and conventional armaments. The people of the world must prevent the superpowers from conducting their arms race in outer space, and take further action to bring about a complete prohibition and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons in order to eliminate the danger of a new world war. China does not take part in the arms race and is opposed to it. In international affairs, China always strives for disarmament. The Chinese Government has decided to reduce the strength of the PLA by 1 million troops in 1985 and 1986.

In the present world, only the United States and the Soviet Union have the capability to fight a world war. However, this does not mean that they dare to start one. Under the current international situation, neither the White House nor the Kremlin will find it easy to make such a decision. As the force of peace in the world grows day by day, whoever dares to start a world war against the will of the people will surely come to a disgraceful end, as have all aggressors in the past.

Neither the United States nor the Soviet Union dares to start a world war rashly, for they know that in the nuclear age neither will gain in a war between them. For this reason, they are maintaining a peace under a nuclear deterrent. For a period in the future, the trend of U.S.-Soviet relations will be the coexistence of confrontation, dialogue, and compromise. They will contend with each other without losing self-restraint, and will conduct dialogue without relaxing contention.

Moreover, constant escalation of the arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union has sharply increased their military spending and aggravated their economic difficulties, causing stronger and stronger complaints and objection among their people. If they start a world war, the people will complain and object even more. At present, more and more Americans are dedicated to the cause of peace, and the peace movement has extended from Washington to all large and medium-sized cities, college campuses, farms and ranches, with its spearhead pointing at the ruling clique's expansionist and arms expansion policies. The Soviet people, who suffered greatly from the disaster of war, particularly treasure peace, repudiate war, and are working for peace. Therefore, American and Soviet efforts and their struggle are also an important part of the force defending world peace.

Japan and other developed countries in Europe and Oceania and their people are also taking positive steps to defend world peace in accordance with their own situation and conditions. They represent another important force restricting the activities of the superpowers.

In short, Chinese people need peace, and so do people in other parts of the world. Peace and development are the two major tasks of the present world. Development must have peace. Defense of world peace relies on economic development and common prosperity of all countries in the world. Peace and development are closely related. They affect and help each other. We should seek development in peace, and make developments to promote peace. A Third World with a constantly developing economy will be a powerful force in promoting world economic prosperity and defending world peace. Therefore, China resolutely advocates strengthening South-South cooperation, promoting North-South dialogue, and reforming the old, unreasonable international economic order through global negotiation in order to achieve a common prosperity and defend world peace.

The people of all countries who suffered a great deal during the two world wars are active in the international arena and are determined to keep their destiny in their own hands. The billions of people in the world -- regardless of nationality, color, occupation, life style, religion, and ideology -- are appealing, working, and struggling for a common goal -- world peace. This is a truly powerful deterrent force. In essence, the deterrent force of the peace-loving countries and people is far greater than the superpowers' nuclear and conventional deterrent force. We may say that the possibility of preventing a world war and defending world peace is greater today than at any other time before.

We are convinced that the prospects for peace are good and the future of mankind is bright.

U.S. CARRIERS TO CONDUCT EXERCISES OFF LIBYA

OW110318 Beijing XINHUA in English 0242 GMT 11 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 10 (XINHUA) -- Two U.S. 6th Fleet aircraft carriers, the USS Coral Sea and the USS Saratoga, will conduct four days of air and sea maneuvers off the Libyan coast in the central Mediterranean starting Tuesday night, the U.S. Defense Department announced today. This is the second U.S. aircraft carriers exercise in the same zone in less than one month. Late last month, the two carriers were in that area for one week of flight operations, which Washington called "a war of nerves against Libya."

The decision to return two aircraft carriers to the Gulf of Sidra off the Libyan coast and conduct a new round of operations came just three days after Libya's announcement that its Navy, Air Force and Air Defense units had started a week of maneuvers with live ammunition within the Gulf of Sidra. According to Pentagon officials, it is possible that two aircraft carriers may cross into the Gulf of Sidra, which Libya considers part of its territorial waters. The U.S. only recognizes Libyan territorial limits as extending 12 miles from shore. Tensions off the Libyan coast have increased since the two U.S. aircraft carriers entered the central Mediterranean earlier last month following allegations that Libya supported terrorist attacks at the Rome and Vienna airports on December 27 last year.

EVERYTHING READY FOR EAST-WEST SPY SWAP

[Text] Bonn, February 10 (XINHUA) -- Everything is ready today for the East-West exchange of spy prisoners scheduled for tomorrow on Glienicke Bridge connecting West Berlin with the Democratic German city of Potsdam. According to DPA, five prisoners from each side are involved in the swap, including Anatoliy Shcharanskiy, a Soviet social activist sentenced to 13 years in 1978 on charges of spying for the United States. Others to be released are yet to know.

Officials from the U.S., the Soviet Union and the two Germanys have been taking part in the preparation for the exchange. Journalists have camped out near the bridge for several days, waiting for dispatching live reports on the exchange operation. U.S. military authorities in West Berlin today ordered reporters away from the checkpoint, saying they will set up a news center near the spot.

COOPERATION URGED BETWEEN MARCOS, AQUINO

[Text] Washington, February 10 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government today called on the two sides in competition in the Philippine presidential election to "work together to form a viable government and to implement reforms in political, economic and military areas." At a briefing here today, White House spokesman Larry Speakes expressed concern about reported violence and fraud in the Philippine elections. However, he said the Filipino people will determine if the elections are legitimate. The elections demonstrated that both parties have "significant popular support from millions of Filipinos," he said. "There is obvious enthusiasm for the electoral process on the part of the Filipino citizens," the spokesman added.

Earlier, President Ronald Reagan told reporters that his government would encourage the Marcos and Aquino camps to come together "to make sure the government works" when the election returns are complete. He said, "we want to help in anyway we can." He made it clear that the goal of his policy was to retain the "historic relationship" between the United States and the Philippines. One senior U.S. official said today that "the main thing is that we have a strong and stable Filipino ally in the Pacific for the United States." The Philippines, which used to be a U.S. colony, is now the site of two vital U.S. military bases. This is the first time that White House broke its silence over the bitter competition between President Ferdinand Marcos and his challenger Corazon Aquino for the presidency. However, it declined comment on the possible outcome.

SOVIET ACCESS TO SUPERCOMPUTERS TO BE RESTRICTED

[Text] Washington, February 10 (XINHUA) -- The United States will place tight restrictions on Soviet scholars' access to American supercomputers, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported today. The paper quoted National Science Foundation sources as saying that an agreement to that effect was reached between national security officials and the foundation last month after a seven-month debate. The agreement, however, has not been officially announced.

Restrictions are to be imposed because U.S. military officials have contended that Soviet military specialists posing as scholars in this country could make use of supercomputers, which work at high speeds and constitute the world's most powerful computer equipment, to design weapons or break codes. The restrictions will be enforced by government officials by placing standard restrictions on visiting scholars' visas. Last year, four supercomputer centers on campuses were created in Princeton, the University of Illinois, Cornell and the University of California at San Diego. A fifth has recently been added to the program at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh, thus making the technology widely available to basic researchers for the first time and arousing the concern of the government.

PLO CONDITIONALLY ACCEPTED IN CONFERENCE

OW072012 Beijing XINHUA in English 2003 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Kuwait, February 7 (XINHUA) -- A top Palestinian official said here today that the U.S. has accepted the idea of inviting the Palestine Liberation Organisation (PLO) to the proposed international conference on peace in the Middle East in case the PLO recognise the U.N. Security Council Resolution 242.

But he stressed that the PLO will not recognize the 242 resolution because it deals with the Palestinian crisis as a problem of refugees.

In a telephone interview published in local daily AL-WATAN, Hani al-Hassan, the political adviser of PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat, said Washington has agreed on the holding of the international conference following the extensive talks held in Amman over the past few days between top Palestinian and Jordanian officials. The American condition of recognition of the U.S. Security Council Resolution 242 by the PLO constitutes the only remaining obstacle for holding the conference, Al-Hassan noted. The outcome of Amman talks is due to be deliberated by a meeting between U.S. and Soviet foreign ministers, originally scheduled for January 27, Al-Hassan said. He said the meeting between King Husayn and 'Arafat last Wednesday has indicated that Jordan is completely understanding the Palestinian position, and a study of a new formula for joint action that takes into consideration the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people has begun, he added.

An emissary of the U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy has met with Hanna Sanyurah and Fayiz Abu Rahmah, both proposed members of the joint Palestinian-Jordanian delegation, and has been the link between Washington and Amman during the negotiations, Al-Hassan said. An American-Palestinian meeting would take place at any moment, Al-Hassan said, "if we reach an agreement on amending the Resolution 242". But he predicted if the negotiation to amend the resolution fails, the confrontation between the American and Palestinian sides would be escalated.

REAGAN OPPOSES FUNDING CUTS FOR SPACE SHUTTLE

OW090903 Beijing XINHUA in English 0657 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 8 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan will oppose attempts to reduce funding for the U.S. space shuttle program as a result of last week's explosion of the Challenger and said teachers "are still on the list to go up," according to his speech at Thomas Jefferson High School, Virginia, yesterday. "I don't think that it is going to have any effect with regard to, for example, withdrawing of funds or not, and certainly, I will oppose and fight any effort to do that.," Reagan said in answer to a student's question about the effect of the accident on funding for the U.S. National Aeronautics and Space Administration. The U.S. President reiterated his support for sending nonastronauts into space, despite criticism that the missions are too dangerous.

The speech made for some 1,500 students and local officials was delayed at least a week because of the explosion of the Challenger, in which seven astronauts were killed. Among those on the platform with the President were U.S. Education Secretary William J. Bennett and Judith M. Garcia, a teacher at Jefferson school and one of the 10 finalists for the teacher-in-space berth that went to the deceased Christa McAuliffe, known as the first teacher who would give lessons to children in the Challenger. In his speech, Reagan also pressed for his Strategic Defense Initiative, the "star wars" missile defense, promising to "do everything within my power to move forward with research and testing of a high-tech nonnuclear defensive system."

TASS CONDEMNS 'TEAM SPIRIT-86' IN S. KOREA

OW081759 Beijing XINHUA in English 1519 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 8 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union today denounced the decision of the U.S. Administration and South Korean authorities to hold joint military exercises in South Korea beginning February 10. The official news agency TASS said in a statement that the maneuvers on "Team Spirit-86" are a provocative military move that undermines the Soviet Union's security. They pose a direct threat to the Democratic People's Republic of Korea as well as to the Asian-Pacific region.

SOVIET-HEILONGJIANG BORDER TRADE FOR 1985

[Summary] In 1985, Heilongjiang Province successfully prefulfilled the state-assigned tasks for exporting 330,000 tons of soybeans and 400,000 tons of corn to the Soviet Union by 4 and 1/2 months and 14 days respectively. In addition, new progress has also been made in Heilongjiang-Soviet border trade. The export and import volume in 1985 reached 32.569 million francs, an increase of 16.6 percent over that of 1984.

PRAVDA CRITICIZES KAZAKHSTAN PARTY LEADER

[Text] Moscow, February 9 (XINHUA) -- The first party secretary of the Soviet Kazakhstan Republic, Dimmukhamed Kunayev, has been critisized for his nepotic practice and poor handling of economic affairs, the Soviet party daily PRAVDA reported today. Kunayev was the first Soviet Communist Party Politburo member to be publicly critisized by name since Mikhail Gorbachev became the party's general secretary last March, though he was re-elected as party first secretary in the republic at the Kazakhstan Party Congress which ended Saturday.

During the past five years, PRAVDA said, industrial output in Kazakhstan rose only 19.4 percent instead of planned 23 percent. Milk production dropped to the 1970's level, and grain output was 18 million tonnes short of the state quotas. All these shortfalls were attributed by the congress to the poor management of Kunayev and his assistants. Kazakhstan is one of the Soviet Union's main grain producers. Kunayev, 74, became premier of Kazakhstan in 1955 when the late Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev worked as the republic's first party secretary. Kunayev was promoted to succeed Brezhnev as the first secretary in 1964 and has been a member of the Soviet party Politburo since 1971.

All Soviet republics, except the Russian Federative Republic, have convened their party congresses and effected leadership changes in preparation for the 27th Soviet Communist Party Congress due to open on February 25. Since last March when Gorbachev was elected the Soviet party general secretary, 19 main leaders in the republics have been removed from their posts. Among them, first party secretaries of Kirghizia, Turkmen and Tajikistan were sacked for "serious mistakes." Meanwhile, six premiers and nine presidents of public Supreme Soviets at the republic level were relieved for neglect of duties or health reasons. According to reports at the republic party congresses, a large number of party and government officials were dismissed, some were expelled from the party or sentenced to imprisonment.

NAKASONE SENDS REPLY TO GORBACHEV MESSAGE

[Text] Moscow, February 10 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze today received Japanese ambassador to Moscow Yasue Katori, who delivered a message to Kremlin leader Mikhail Gorbachev from Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone. The official Soviet news agency TASS did not reveal the content of the message, but informed sources in Moscow said Nakasone insisted he would go to Moscow only after Gorbachev visits Tokyo and expressed appreciation of Shevardnadze's Japan tour last month.

In the letter, which is a reply to Gorbachev's message to Nakasone last month, the Japanese prime minister outlined Tokyo's position in conducting a peace treaty negotiation with Moscow and Japan's comment on Gorbachev's recent call for a total nuclear disarmament within the next 15 years, according to the sources. Nakasone was said to have requested in the letter that Soviet SS-20 missiles deployed in Asia should be withdrawn in case the Soviet Union and the United States dismantled all their medium-range missiles in Europe. The sources said Nakasone also commented on the Soviet proposal for an all-Asia forum to discuss "collective security" arrangements. During the meeting the Soviet foreign minister reportedly expressed displeasure over Nakasone's remarks on February 7, in which the prime minister regretted at the fact that the northern territories of Japan "have not been returned and remain under Soviet occupation."

KENNEDY ADVOCATES COMPROMISE ON ARMS CONTROL

[Text] Moscow, February 7 (XINHUA) -- Visiting U.S. Senator Edward Kennedy said today that the Soviet Union and the United States should seek compromise in their arms control negotiations to resolve controversial issues. In a speech over the Soviet television, Kennedy said that divergences between the two countries should not hinder them from the common objective of nuclear arms control. He noted there exist possibilities to check the nuclear arms race and forestall the first nuclear strike from any side. To materialize the possibilities, the two superpowers should make a compromise, he added.

Kennedy arrived here Tuesday at the invitation of the Soviet parliament. He met separately with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev and Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze to discuss the U.S.-Soviet disarmament negotiations in Geneva. Kennedy is a member of the U.S. Senate Armed Forces Committee and belongs to a group monitoring these talks. He ended his four-day visit today.

XINHUA COMMENTARY CRITICIZES 'TEAM SPIRIT'

[Commentary by XINHUA reporter Guo Quanyou: "An Act That Goes Against the Trend of the Time"]

[Text] Beijing, 7 Feb (XINHUA) -- At a time when a tiny beacon of hope for peace could be observed on the Korean peninsula, the United States and the South Korean authorities announced on 18 January that the 2-month joint military exercise "Team Spirit-86" would begin on 10 February. Naturally this act against the historical trend evoked a strong response from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and caused grave concern in the international community.

In recent years, people have been delighted to see that the progress of peace has quickened on the Korean peninsula:

-- In January 1984, Northern Korea put forward the important proposal that tripartite talks be held between Northern and Southern Korea and the United States;

-- In September the same year, when Southern Korea was hit by a big flood, Northern Korea immediately decided to provide large quantities of food, clothing, and medicines to the flood-stricken people in the South free of charge, thus achieving the first exchange of goods since the division of the country 40 years ago;

-- In 1985, four economic talks, three Red Cross Society talks, and two preparatory parliamentary talks were held in a harmonious and friendly atmosphere between Northern and Southern Korea, and initial agreements were achieved on certain issues of principle;

-- For the first time in 40 years, Northern and Southern Korea had their first exchange of visits between art troupes and hometown visiting groups in September 1985, and this breakthrough elated all the Korean people.

According to an agreement between the two sides, the 6th economic talks, the 3d preparatory parliamentary talks, and the 11th Red Cross Society talks will be held in November and December this year. To ensure that these talks proceeded without a hitch, the DPRK Foreign Ministry issued a statement on 10 January announcing solemnly that, beginning 1 February, the republic would suspend all major military exercises throughout the North, and would suspend all military exercises during the bilateral talks. At the same time it also called on the United States and Southern Korea to reciprocate positively. Regrettably, only 8 days later, the United States and Southern Korea flagrantly announced that the "Team Spirit" exercise involving more than 200,000 troops would go ahead "conventionally," thus compelling the Northern side to postpone the three talks. The U.S.-South Korean decision, which obviously shows a lack of sense of historical responsibility and sincerity for peace, certainly has seriously obstructed the joyous progress of peace on the Korean peninsula.

It was alleged that the exercise merely follows "convention" and is aimed at "self-defense." What a "convention!" Who does not know that since 1976, the scale of the military exercises has become increasingly larger each year, the troops involved have increased from the original 90,000 to this year's 200,000, the area covered has kept moving northward, the weapons and equipment used are increasingly advanced, and the number of categories of the exercises have increased from the original dozen or so to more than 20 this year? Is this annual escalation a "convention!" And if this "convention" continues, when will Korea's peaceful reunification be achieved? And how can the United States and the South Korean authorities show their "sincerity for peace?"

The "self-defense" claim is even less plausible. People still remember that the United States and South Korea had declared not long ago that the military exercise was aimed at strengthening the "state of preparedness" and the "capability of joint operation." The imaginary enemy is, of course, the DPRK. Is it possible that the United States is really afraid that North Korean troops are preparing to attack Hawaii? And even if they were, all the United States would need to do is to fight the enemy just beyond the threshold of the country. There is no need to muster tens of thousands of troops and warships from the continental United States and the Pacific region and send them all the way across the Pacific to conduct a so-called "joint military exercise!" As for the South Korean authorities, their lies about the threat of a "southern invasion" have long been refuted by the DPRK. The DPRK Government as time and again reiterated that it simply has no intention to "drive southward," much less settle the issue of reunification of the Korean peninsula by means of war. In fact, the DPRK has put forward a series of major principles and proposals and initialed one practical and positive step after another to bring about early peaceful national reunification. This is a fact known to the whole world.

Obviously, the so-called "following the convention" means only one thing, namely the ever increasing desire to show off military strength, and the so-called "self-defense" is nothing but a cheap lie that has been used as an excuse for carrying out a military threat.

The peaceful reunification of the Korean peninsula is the trend of the times and the desire of the people. The past 40 years have made it clear that military threats can only aggravate tension on the Korean peninsula and endanger peace in Asia and the rest of the world. Therefore, it would be wise for the United States and the South Korean authorities to follow the historical trends and respond to the DPRK's call by immediately canceling the joint exercises, thereby creating the necessary conditions and the good atmosphere for tripartite talks and a summit meeting between Northern and Southern Korea.

DPRK SPOKESMAN URGES HALT TO 'TEAM SPIRIT-86'

[Text] Pyongyang, February 10 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today urged the United States and the South Korean authorities to immediately halt the massive joint military war games that began today.

A DPRK Foreign Ministry spokesman denounced the U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises, dubbed "Team Spirit-86", as criminal acts that no only threatened the Northern part of Korea but also undermined peace in Asia and the world. The spokesman said the United States and South Korean authorities must undertake full responsibility for the suspension of the North-South dialogue and for the tense situation on the peninsula.

NORTH KOREA PLACES MILITARY FORCES ON ALERT

OW101608 Beijing XINHUA in English 1542 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 10 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) put its military forces on alert Monday amidst the mounting tension created by the U.S.-South Korea war games. The Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army said in a press release distributed by the Foreign Ministry that it has ordered all the units of the military, security forces and home guard "to maintain heightened revolutionary vigilance and be ready for combat mobilization."

The Supreme Command denounced the U.S.-South Korean "Team Spirit" maneuvers that began February 10, saying that they "may lead to the outbreak of war." The reckless military provocation of the United States and South Korean authorities poses "a great challenge" to the DPRK's "tireless efforts for peace and peaceful reunification in Korea and has created new tension on the Korean peninsula," the press release said.

The alert order, described as a "self-defense step" to cope with with the U.S.-South Korean "war provocation moves", followed a series of charges by the DPRK Government and mass media condemning the ongoing two-month military exercises by the U.S. and South Korean troops. The DPRK Foreign Ministry said in a statement early Monday that the decision by Washington and Seoul to conduct the annual military exercise has ruined the current "atmosphere of peace and dialogue" and has created "a grave situation reminding us of the eve of a war."

DPRK READY TO REOPEN TALKS AFTER JOINT EXERCISES

[Text] Pyongyang, February 11 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) is willing to reopen the parliamentary, economic and Red Cross talks with South Korea after the on-going U.S.-Seoul joint military exercises, a senior official said here today.

Speaking at a press conference, Vice Chairman of the Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland Chon Kum-chol told reporters that the North will try to make these talks fruitful to pave the way for a summit meeting between the two parts of Korea. He pointed out that the joint war games "Team Spirit-86", which started yesterday and will go on for about two months, is of "an offensive nature," judging from the advanced weaponry and equipment involved. If this is called "routine," it is "a bad routine" harmful to North-South dialogue and rapprochement and should be got rid of, he added.

In response to the "Team Spriit-86" maneuver, the supreme commander of the Korean People's Army issued an order yesterday to all the units of the Korean People's Army, the Korean People's Security Forces, the worker-peasant red guards and the red young guards to maintain heightened vigilance and be ready for combat mobilization. Chon Kum-chol said this is a self-defensive step and does not run counter to the DPRK decision on February 1 to suspend all military exercises throughout the Northern half of Korea during North-South dialogue.

Chon Kum-chol, who leads the delegation of the North to the preparatory talks for a North-South parliamentary meeting, said that despite their differences, both parties have expressed their willingness to hold a summit meeting, which will be of paramount importance. He said that both sides should do their utmost to create a suitable climate and favorable conditions for that summit. As for the North side proposal for tripartite talks involving the two parts of Korea and the United States for a settlement of the Korean problem, he said the prospect is still obscure. However, he pledged that the North will continue its effort in this aspect no matter when and how the United States will accept the proposal.

NODONG SINMUN ATTACKS U.S. OVER 'TEAM SPIRIT-86'

[Text] Pyongyang, February 10 (XINHUA) -- The Korean paper NODONG SINMUN in a commentary today attacked the U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises that began today and accused the United States of creating a danger of nuclear war on the Korean peninsula.

The commentary warned that the U.S.-South Korean joint military exercises, code named "Team Sprit-86", involving 200,000 troops, would aggravate tension and increase the danger of war on the peninsula. Peace and peaceful reunification of the Korean peninsula will not be realized if military confrontation in the region is not checked, it cautioned.

The commentary said that tripartite talks among the United States, the North and the South of Korea are the only pragmatic way to solve the Korean problem. It asked the United States to respond to the call for tripartite talks and to withdraw all its troops and nuclear weapons from South Korea. Earlier, the Vice Premier and Foreign Minister of Democratic People's Republic of Korea Kim Yong-nam, sent a message to the Secretary-General of the United Nations Javier Perez de Cuellar, urging the world community to take urgent steps to curb the U.S.-South Korean joint military war games.

CGDK CONDEMNS SRV STAND ON CAMBODIAN ISSUE

[Text] Bangkok, February 9 (XINHUA) -- The Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK) has declared that Vietnam, being unable to impose its fait accompli on Kampuchea by force, tries to achieve it through diplomatic maneuvers. In a statement dated yesterday and published here today, the CGDK was commenting on the December 24 communique of the so-called Indochinese foreign ministers' meeting held in Vientiane, Laos.

The CGDK continues to hold that external interference must not be allowed in the process of national reconciliation among the Kampuchean people who alone can decide on their own future, the statement said. "Vietnam's condition that the regime it installed in Phnom Penh must be in control of such a process is therefore totally unacceptable," it added. The statement said that the root cause of the Kampuchean problem is the invasion and military occupation of Kampuchea by Vietnam. Real and lasting peace, it emphasized, will return only when Vietnam totally withdraws its troops from Kampuchea and the inalienable right to self-determination of the Kampuchean people without external interference is restored.

The statement reaffirmed the CGDK's readiness to enter directly into negotiation or by way of proximity talks with Vietnam to discuss the basic elements of a comprehensive and lasting settlement of the Kampuchean problem as embodied in the relevant U.N. resolutions and the declaration of the International Conference on Kampuchea (ICK), including: withdrawal of foreign forces from Kampuchea, U.N. control and supervisory commission, national reconciliation, U.N. supervised election/exercise of self-determination. The CGDK notes with satisfaction that there has been in the past year many successful operations of the CGDK forces deep inside Kampuchea, the statement said. "This is the result of many factors, especially the high morale and coordination of the CGDK forces which are enjoying increasing support from the local population including patriotic elements within the Heng Samrin regime itself, together with the declining morale of Vietnamese soldiers, especially the young ones," it added. The CGDK reiterates its determination "to continue its patriotic struggle until Hanoi agrees to negotiate with it for a comprehensive political settlement of the Kampuchean problem," the statement concluded.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PHILIPPINE ELECTION

Marcos Calls for Calm

HK110310 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Text] In Manila, the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reports that President Marcos has called on the nation to remain calm while ballots cast during the recent presidential election are counted. Marcos told reporters at Malacanang that it is not possible to declare the winner at this stage, when the official canvassing has still not been completed by the Commission on Elections, the constitutional body in charge of canvassing the ballots.

Meanwhile there are reports that the opposition will begin mass actions, starting with a proclamation rally at Bonifacio Plaza to declare Corazon Aquino the winner in the election. In the face of these threats, Marcos has called on all law enforcement agencies to be on the alert for possible trouble.

Meanwhile a group of international observers in Manila has said that instances of grave electoral malfeasance took place during the 7 February election which will have an impact on the final results. The international delegation, composed of 44 members from 19 countries, made this observation at a press conference last night at the Manila Hotel. In a written statement, the delegation said its members had witnessed various acts of vote-buying, intimidation, ballot box snatchings, and other irregular practices. The worst report involved the disenfranchisement of thousands of voters, especially in the Manila area, where voters found that their names did not appear on the registration lists.

The observers also said there was a deliberate slowdown in the release of the vote results. They said they would try to find means to help speed up the release of the results and hoped that the electoral problems would soon be resolved.

TV SMUGGLING CASE INVESTIGATED; ARRESTS MADE

[Text] Beijing, 6 Feb (XINHUA) -- The Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee recently worked in coordination with the Supreme People's Procuratorate, the General Administration of Customs, and other departments concerned in investigating a smuggling case involving the Guangyu Industry and Trade Corporation under the Ministry of Astronautics. The investigation shows that, in order to reap a windfall profit, and although it was not authorized to handle foreign trade, was not licensed by the responsible department of the state, nor possessed the needed foreign exchange, the corporation signed a contract with a French company to purchase 180,000 unassembled color television sets worth $41.47 million. It used an expired license purchased at a high price from a Hainan company through the Ruida Company under the Radar Equipment Bureau of the Ministry of Electronics Industry and an enormous amount of loans in foreign exchange purchased at a high price fromthe Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China.

In addition to the Guangyu Corporation under the Ministry of Astronautics, other parties involved in this major smuggling case included the Ruida Corporation and the Haima Plant under the Radar Equipment Bureau of the Ministry of Electronics Industry, the Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China, the Foreign Economic Commission of the Hainan Administrative Region, and the Hainan International Trust and Investment Corporation. This is a major smuggling case plotted by corporations under state organs. These corporations' reckless lawlessness in disregard of state interests has seriously interfered with the progress of reforms and the four modernizations, as well as the policy of opening up to the outside world.

The people implicated in the case included two ministry-level cadres, five bureau-level cadres, and four other cadres at or below departmental level. After being investigated by procuratorial organs, Zhu Hancheng, deputy general manager of the Guangyu Corporation; Li Hanwen, general manager of the Hainan International Trust and Investment Corporation; Hou Ruilin, director of the Hainan Haima plant; and Chen Zhi, deputy general manager of the Ruida Corporation under the Ministry of Electronics Industry, have been arrested for their criminal offenses. Because his negligence of duty has caused the state enormous losses, Ma Chunsheng, vice president of the Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China, is being prosecuted by the procuratorial organs. Zhang Jun and Cheng Lianchang, respectively former minister and present vice minister of astronautics, have been given serious disciplinary warnings within the party for their serious bureaucratic mistakes and their irresponsible leadership. Wang Daoli, former member of the leading party group and director of the General Office of the Ministry of Astronautics and concurrently general manager of the Guangyu Corporation, has been placed on probation within the party for 2 years. Zhou Wensheng, director and secretary of the leading party group of the Radar Equipment Bureau of the Ministry of Electronics Industry, has been relieved from all posts inside and outside the party; he is held directly responsible for the speculative buying and selling of the expired television import license. Disciplinary action within the party or administrative measures have also been taken by departments concerned against other relevant personnel.

According to the investigation, in November 1984 the Guangyu Corporation negotiated with a French company to import 180,000 20-inch multifunctional color television sets. It then began to illicitly obtain the needed license and foreign exchange. The so-called license acquired was one issued by the Hainan Foreign Economic Affairs Commission to a so-called Haima Company, operated by the Hainan International Trust and Investment Corporation in July 1984 for the importation of 180,000 color television sets from Japan. The license, however, had already expired.

Realizing that the Guangyu Corporation did not have a valid license to import color television sets, Li Hanwen, general manager of the Hainan International Trust and Investment Corporation, and Hou Ruilin, director of the Hainan Haima Factory under the Radar Equipment Bureau of the Ministry of Electronics Industry, proceeded in their plot by sending Hou to Beijing, authorized by the Haima Company mananger with duplicates of the license. Arranged by Chen Zhi, deputy manager of the Ruida Corporation, and others, Hou had talks with Zhu Hancheng, deputy general manager of the Guangyu Corporation, and then on 29 November signed an agreement on the joint import of 180,000 color television sets. According to the agreement, the expired license was sold to the Guangyu Corporation at 18 million yuan RMB, and the Ruida Corporation and the Haima Company would each receive 9 million yuan RMB. Briefed by Chen Zhi and others in the course of the buying and selling the invalid license, Zhou Wensheng, director of the Radar Equipment Bureau of the Ministry of Electronics Industry, expressed his consent and support for the deal.

While purchasing the phony license for importing the color television sets, the Guangyu Corporation also tried to raise the needed foreign exchange. Realizing that it could get the loan in foreign exchange from the Shijianzhuang branch of the Bank of China if the Ministry of Astronautics agreed to underwrite the loan, the corporation proceeded to apply for the loan in foreign exchange with the Financial Department of the Ministry of Astronautics serving as the underwriter. The Guangyu Corporation also promised that, in addition to repaying the principal and interest on the loan, the Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China would receive a so-called "percentage" of 15 million yuan RMB. After Zhao Zilong, president of the Shijianzhung branch of the Bank of China, was informed of the terms term by Ma Chunsheng, vice president of the branch bank, they decided to extend $46.80 million to the Guangyu Corporation, with Ma Chunsheng acting as signatory. With the approval of Ma Chunsheng, the Shijianzhuang branch of the Bank of China on 29 December gave the French company a certified letter of credit for a lump sum of $41.47 million.

After purchasing the phony license and obtaining the foreign exchange loan, Zhu Hancheng, deputy general manager of the Guangyu Corporation briefed Wang Daoli, then member of the leading party group and director of the General Office of the Ministry of Astronautics. During a brief meeting on 17 December 1984, Wang informed three other members of the ministry's leading party group. Then, without fully understading the matter, Cheng Lianchang, member of the leading party group and vice minister of astronautics, telephoned Zhang Jun, former minister and secretary of the leading party group of the ministry, to brief him the situation. Again without fully understanding the matter Comrade Zhang Jun expressed his consent. Then on 18 December 1984 the Guangyu Corporation, with Zhu Hancheng as the signatory, signed a contract with a French company to import 180,000 unassembled multifunction color television sets.

Beginning 22 March 1985, the French-made color television sets began to arrive in Taikou of Hainan Island. In early April when Guangyu Corporation used the phony license to declare the importation of the color television sets at customs, it was withheld by the customs house. To deceive customs and cover up selling the phony license, and with the approval of Chu Shi, vice chairman of the Foreign Commission of the Hainan Administrative Region, Li Hanwen, president of the Hainan International Trust and Investment Corporation, altered the license and faked a so-called "instrument of ratification" for the importation of 180,000 French-made color television sets. With this "instrument of ratification," the Guangyu Corporation deceived customs into approving the clearance of 6,020 television sets. The case was exposed when customs rechecked the documents.

In March 1985 the Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China, under pressure from the situation, suspended further loans and pressed the Guangyu Corporation to repay the previous loan. With the consent of Zhang Jun, former minister of astronautics, the Ministry of Astronautics paid the Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China $9.2 million, using foreign exchange it should have turned over to the state.

After the case was exposed, the Ministry of Astronautics submitted two reports to the State Economic Commission in May and August 1985. In those reports the ministry withheld the truth, supplied false information, and requested the commission's approval of the import of the color television sets and issuance of a necessary license. Without fully understanding the truth of the matter, Comrade Cheng Lianchang initialled the two reports.

According to relevant customs regulations, all French-made color television sets the Guangyu Corporation tried to smuggle into the country have been confiscated. The case is still being handled by departments concerned.

Report on Commentator's Article

HK090521 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0333 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] In an article entitled "What Does the 'Guangyu Company Smuggling Case' Show?" the RENMIN RIBAO commentator points out today: "This is an economic case unprecedented in the 36-year history of the People's Republic in which so many senior and middle-level officials were involved and punished. This shows that our party is determined to straighten out party style, rectify unhealthy tendencies, and eliminate all corruption. The party is serious and conscientious in doing so and is taking concrete actions."

It has been ascertained that the Guangyu Company of the Ministry of Astronautics illegally purchased foreign exchange at higher exchange rates and engaged in illegal buying and selling to the neglect of state interests. It has imported 180,000 sets of color TV components. Zhu Hancheng, deputy general manager of the company and other people involved in this major smuggling case have been arrested, and former Astronautics Minister Zhang Jun and Vice Minister Cheng Lianchang have received disciplinary warnings within the party.

The article points out that the main people involved in this case are cadres of state organs; most of them are Communist Party members in leading posts. What the central authorities said still rings in our ears and the ink on the central documents is not yet dry, but the persons concerned in the Ministry of Astronautics and other units, persisting in their old ways, have already violated the relevant stipulations and are involved in this serious case of violating discipline and the law, obstructing economic reform, opening up, and construction of the four modernizations of our country. This is a profound lesson .

The article says: At the beginning of this year, CPC Central Secretary Hu Yaobang pointed out that "it is necessary to be resolute and persevere in rectifying unhealthy tendencies." The CPC and the Chinese Government are actually acting in this way. All people are equal before party discipline, government discipline, and national laws. All those who dare to risk universal condemnation and act willfully and wildly in defiance of party discipline and national laws, no matter who he might be, can never escape being punished.

He inquired about details of the installation and operations of these two sets of equipment. He said: In big cities we should have program-controlled telephone exchanges and make use of fiber optics communications so as to improve the strained and backward state of telecommunications through advanced technology. At the same time, we should see to it that the 6-meter-antenna earth stations for satellite communications are developed promptly and that every effort is made to reduce operational costs at these stations. They should be used not only for television transmissions but for numerous other purposes, including telephone and telegraph services, in solving telecommunications problems in border and remote areas.

After the briefings, Comrade Li Peng saw the program-controlled exchange, crossbar exchange, terminal of the fiber optics cable, and other telecommunications equipment. CONTINUED REFORM CONSOLIDATION PREDICTED

HK061039 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 4, 27 Jan 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Reforms Continue to Deepen"]

[Text] This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, reform of the economic structure and reform in other fields will continue to be the primary task. Reforms over the past years have promoted the continuing and steady development of our economy, have coordinated the ratios between agriculture, light industry, and heavy industry, and have improved the people's livelihood. The achievements of the reforms are universally acknowledged. Particularly in 1985, a brave step was taken in economic structural reform. Price reform, wage reform, and reform of the farm produce purchase and marketing system have broken many long-standing conventions and have produced significant and far-reaching influences.

The reform process destroys the old and establishes the new, but it will also introduce some problems. For example, the old things, although destroyed, will continue to influence people's thought and practice, and this influence has yet to be eliminated; new things are not perfect enough and should be further improved. Therefore, in order to progress in the reforms, we need to "tidy up the battleground" in 1986. That is, we should consolidate, digest, improve, and add to reform achievements made last year. Reform should be carried on continuously and should also be divided into stages.

Revolution and construction should be divided into a number of states, as should reform. If we do not carry out reform in an orderly and planned way and on the basis of policies and regulations but just proceed headlong into reckless action, our reform will eventually be frustrated.

Through consolidating, digesting, improving, and adding to reform results, we will make better preparations for furthering reform to a deeper degree. This is not intended to slow reform, much less to backpedal. Therefore, we must not relax our efforts and must not lose heart; instead, we should work harder and make in-depth and careful investigations in order to carry forward reform advantages and overcome their drawbacks, developing reform in depth and in scope.

Reform of the national economic structure is an important task, relevant to the healthy development of our national economy and the realization of the four modernizations. At the same time, this reform is also an arduous and complicated social project. Our reforms began in the countryside. Rural reforms have achieved remarkable results over the past 6 or 7 years, but they are still far from reaching their end. On the other hand, more important urban reforms began just last year and are now still in initial states. Reform will change or readjust and smooth out all vertical and horizontal economic relations. Now, although we have basically fulfilled the task of causing a turn for the better in the economic situation and we are hopeful of forming a benign economic cycle, we will not accomplish the series of reforms in a short time by making a single move. We not only need great courage and resourcefulness; we also need firm determination and perseverance and must make unremitting efforts.

At the same time, reform will arouse the initiative of the central authorities, localities, enterprises, and individuals. It involves the interests of all related parties and all people. We must be very careful when handling reform, continuously make careful investigations, and continuously improve reform measures. That is, we should work as hard as the foolish old man, and as carefully as an embroiderer.

In addition, some reform measures may produce quick results, but most systematic reform measures need to be accomplished and perfected over several years. We cannot expect that once reform begins, great benefits will immediately accrue. We cannot behave like those shortsighted and mediocre people who tend to rush headlong into mass action once they find something is profitable and tend to disperse in confusion when they discover they cannot gain immediate benefit or may even sacrifice their interests temporarily. We should know that one must make painstaking efforts to accomplish everything, whether revolution or construction, and must pay a certain cost in order to achieve successes. We, reformers, should take a broad and long-term view and should work for the benefit of the coming generations. Reform requires a broad view and a down-to-earth work attitude.

Reform is the only way to realize the four modernizations in our country and the only bridge leading to our nation's prosperity. Reform is a cause of the 1 billion people. We should mobilize all people to take an active part in reform and to promote reform. This is a decisive factor. Here, we will repeat the old saying: As long as we are firm and advance steadily, we will certainly emerge victorious.

RECTIFICATION COMMISSION CITES EPISTOLARY APPEAL

[Text] Beijing, 10 Feb (XINHUA) -- On 31 October 1985 members of the fourth grade squadron of the Young Pioneers of Yang Village School of Luoshe Town in Wuxi City, Jiangsu Province, sent a letter to a leading comrade of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission, sharply criticizing the unhealthy practice of ostentation, extravagance, and waste found in today's society. Leading comrades of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification and the Central Discipline Inspection Commission felt the letter was very well written. The General Office of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification added a note to the letter. The full text of both the note and the letter follow.

Note by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification: This is a letter sent to a leading comrade of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission by a group of innocent and lovely Young Pioneers in Wuxi City, Jiangsu Province, in the spirit of their responsibility as young masters of the country. In the letter they sharply criticized the unhealthy practice of ostentation, extravagance, and waste in today's society. They also wrote about a puzzling question, namely, why was it that some of the things they saw around them were not the same as what they had heard from their teachers? Is this not a question deserving attention and consideration on the part of our leading comrades at all levels? Our forefathers said: "You win the nation by frugality, you lose it by extravagance." These words deserve our attention. While we promote the drive for modernization, develop social productive forces, and try to shake free from the state of poverty left over from history, it is still necessary to advocate the spirit of hard struggle and persist in the principle of building up the country through thrift and hard work. No party member or party member-cadre should forget this point at any time in their work and everyday life. (end of note)

Dear Uncle: How are you? Realizing that you are advanced in age and troubled by illness and also very busy, we really hate to disturb you. However, we must write to you since we are puzzled by unhealthy things we see around us and remain perplexed despite much thought.

Our teachers educate us in the need to foster a work style of "diligence and thrift, hard work, and plain living" right from our childhood. We also frequently read and hear publicized in the newspapers and over the radio and television that we should "change prevailing habits and customs" and guard against "extravagance and waste," and so on....

But what about facts? The facts are the opposite of these teachings; the situation is getting worse and worse.

Weddings are held with stress on ostentation and extravagance. Today's weddings are held in the manner of yesterday's and the expense involved is even greater than in the past. If one has no (or not enough) money, one either borrows it or tries to get it illegally. The expenses paid by the bridegroom's family for furniture and by the bride's family for dowry often range from several to ten thousand yuan. A banquet will comprise several dozen tables. A wedding will not be over without 10,000 yuan having been spent on it.

We have dispensed with coffins and now cremate the dead. One would expect cremation to be less expensive. But pomp and circumstance are also deemed necessary here. Expenses for the band, the drinking, and the dining can exceed 1,000 yuan. This has made someone here quip: "Now you cannot even afford to die!"

A great deal of money is spent on building a house. More than 1,000 yuan will be spent on the day the main beam is installed. The money is for drinking expenses and the ceremony of throwing ricecakes over the beam.

Some people in power frequently eat and drink. No household has the courage not to invite them to a wedding or funeral.

Dear Uncle, we are too young to understand, but why do people now say one thing and do another? Why is it that this unhealthy wind remains unchecked? Is it really that our economy is so prosperous, that our wealth is inexhaustible? No, it is not so. Those families spending a great deal on weddings and funerals have actually done so against their own true will. Social conduct being what it is, they cannot but spend the money. They actually are hoping deep down in their hearts that this wind will be stemmed.

Oh, dear Uncle, we are confused! We sincerely wish that you will help clear the doubt in our minds.

[Signed] Respectfully wishing you good health, all young pioneers of the fourth grade squadron of Yang Village School of Luoshe Town in Wuxi City, Jiangsu Province, 31 October, 1985.

PRIVATE FOREIGN CURRENCY DEPOSITS INCREASE

HK090447 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0520 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 3 Feb (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- According to sources in the Bank of China in the period since China has allowed domestic Chinese to open foreign currency accounts at the bank and to freely deposit or withdraw their foreign currencies, private foreign currency deposits have increased sharply. Last year, total deposits increased by 89 percent over the previous year.

China began to accept foreign currency deposits from domestic Chinese about 1 and 1/2 years ago. In order to attract more foreign currency deposits, the Bank of China raised interest rates last year for all kinds of foreign currency savings and deposit accounts held by individuals. The bank also took a new trial measure for individual foreign currency accounts in Guangdong, Fujian, Shanghai, and Beijing last March. That is, people can freely withdraw foreign currency from their accounts. Previously, people deposited their foreign currencies in the bank and could only withdraw renminbi coupled with preferential purchase coupons. In June, this measure was extended to another 10 cities, including Tianjin and Nanjing. In the areas where this trial policy for free deposit and withdrawal has been implemented, foreign currency deposits have increased sharply. In many places, foreign currency deposits have doubled or more than doubled.

With the approval of the People's Bank of China (China's central bank), the measure allowing domestic Chinese to freely deposit and withdraw their foreign currency was officially put into nationwide practice on 20 November 1985. This policy has been widely praised by the public and has achieved marked results. In Suzhou City, Jiangsu Province, 195 new foreign currency accounts were opened in December alone, totaling some $130,000.

According to the sources, Guangdong Province received the largest sum of foreign currency deposits. At present, all branches of the Bank of China in Guangdong have appointed special personnel to handle private foreign currency accounts. It is expected that private foreign currency accounts opened by domestic Chinese will continue to substantially increase in the future.

[Text] Two former Taiwan Kuomintang pilots who crossed over to the mainland in the early 1980s have been dubbed "pilots of special grade" by the Air Force of the People's Liberation Army (PLA). Li Dawei and Huang Zhicheng who flew to the mainland in 1983 and 1981 respectively will soon take off again in flight duty for the PLA Air Force, reports received by CHINA DAILY said.

Li, 35, has just completed a 12-month training course at the People's Liberation Army Academy of Politics. He scored high marks on subjects ranging from philosophy, political economics and psychology to literature and computer science, the reports said. Li told CHINA DAILY in an interview that he had benefitted a great deal from the academy, which trains Chinese senior officers. "Flying is my career and flying in the sky of the motherland has been my dream," Li said, adding that he has been appointed deputy director of a military aviation school, training young pilots for the Chinese Air Force. He flew to the mainland because of strong dissatisfaction with the Taiwan authorities, Li said. The former Taiwan Kuomintang pilot made public appeals on several occasions to the Taiwan authorities to permit his wife and daughter to leave the island. But he said he recently received the news that his wife, still in Taiwan, had been pressed to divorce him.

Huang Zhicheng, 34, and also a deputy director of a pilot training school, performs special duties of drawing up exercise plans for young pilots. When in Taiwan, Huang operated eight kinds of planes and has chalked up 2,100 hours of flying time. Before he came to the mainland, he was a major. He is now married to Ma Hong, who works with the Civil Aviation Administration of China (CAAC).

Both Li and Huang are members of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference and active in the country's efforts to realize the goal of reunification with Taiwan.

We must improve the Fuzhou-Xiamen highway, step up the pace of construction of the Fuzhou-Mawei highway, and be resolved to revamp the Zhangzhou-Zhao'an highway, a road frequently traveled by returned Overseas Chinese. SHANDONG COMMENTATOR ON POLITICAL LIBERALISM

SK100128 Jinan DAZHONG RIBAO in Chinese 20 Jan 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Oppose Political Liberalism"]

[Text] In his article "Oppose Liberalism" Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: Liberalism is "a kind of corrosive that demolishes unity, relaxes relations, slackens work, and causes opinions to diverge. It make the revolutionary rank lose their strict organization and discipline and fail to implement policies through to the end, and segregates the party's organizations from the masses they lead. This is a serious, vicious trend." Liberalism is very harmful, and political liberalism is all the more harmful. In conscientiously improving the work styles of organs, one of the very important aspects is to resolutely oppose and overcome political liberalism.

In some of our organs, and even in leading organs, the trend of political liberalism has developed to such an extent that the issue brooks no negligence. A small number of comrades do not take the party's principles and discipline seriously. They wantonly give their opinions on serious political matters, are irresponsible in what they say, and even spread dissatisfaction with the party's line, principles, and policies. Some express their complaints arbitrarily everywhere instead of doing so through proper channels, totally disregarding the impact and consequences. There are even persons who love to believe in rumors, pass on hearsay, and spread rumors and slanders. Such erroneous tendencies seriously interfere with the organs' work, undermine unity, endanger the party's image, and impair the implementation of the party's line, principles, and policies. In our society there is a trend of airing complaints and "widely circulating" some totally groundless, specious, and irresponsible talk that confuses right and wrong, and some sheer rumors are spread very quickly. The more important an issue is and the more it involves leading comrades, the more vigorously people will talk about it.

Liberalism in organs is only part of such an evil trend. Besides, anything that is spread from organs will more easily confuse and poison the people's minds, and is more harmful. In this sense, our opposition to the organs' trend of political liberalism is a requirement not only for improving the ideology and work styles of organs but also for maintaining stability and unity throughout the entire society.

Some people may ask how private discussions can be interfered with when we are stressing democracy. This is a question that we should clarify. We should, of course, stress democracy, which will be increasingly developed following the development and progress of society. However, liberalism is a matter totally different from democracy. Democracy means the people's political rights to air their views freely and to participate in the administration of the state's political power. Its purpose is to guarantee the people's status as masters of the country, and to ensure the nature of the state as a socialist country and the development of its various socialist undertakings. However, liberalism is the other way around. It never means treating the party's and state's affairs with a serious attitude, it lacks principles, and it disregards organization and discipline. It means an expression of personal feelings out of personal or senseless motives, with the aim of stirring things up. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have negated the erroneous principle of "taking class struggle as the key link," and widely carried forward the socialist democracy. With an ease of mind, people express their views freely, and no longer have to be afraid of being labeled as "counterrevolutionaries" because of some imprudent remarks. Never have the inner-party political life and the entire social life been as vigorous as now. This is a fact for all to see and acclaim. In such a situation, we should all the more value the already-formed democratic situation, and prevent liberalism from becoming rampant in the name of democracy. Otherwise, normal democratic life will be interfered with, and the excellent situation that has already taken shape will be damaged. We must pay attention to this.

Stressing principles and discipline, and treating all political issues with a serious attitude are indicators of the prosperity and development of our party and state. Our leading organs at all levels and all our party-member cadres and personnel of organs should adhere to the party's principles; abide by the party discipline; proceed from the unity of the party and the revolutionary ranks, and from the vital interests of the masses in doing everything; set strict demands on themselves; and refrain from saying or doing anything they should not. They should express their complaints through proper channels. With regard to the sheer nonsense, slanders, and political rumors, which are detrimental to the implementation of the party's line, principles, and policies and to the party's image, they should not believe in or spread them, but should resist them of their own accord. Organs at all levels should improve and strengthen the party's regular activities. They should, on the one hand, encourage party members to exercise their democratic rights and to actively air their views for the purpose of improving party style and social conduct, building the socialist material and spiritual civilizations, and enabling the party to exercise better leadership and unite more closely with the masses. On the other hand, they should eliminate the tendency of political liberalism through conscientious criticism and self-criticism. At present, many organs are lax or even not regular in carrying out party activities. Many ideological problems of party members cannot be solved in a timely manner. This is one of the important reasons for the budding and even rampant tendency of political liberalism in organs.

"All loyal, honest, active, and righteous Communist Party members, unite and oppose some people's tendency of liberalism, and enable them to adopt a correct approach." This was a call to the whole party issued by Comrade Mao Zedong half a century ago. Through opposition to liberalism within the party and the revolutionary ranks in those years, the unity and unification of the revolutionary ranks were strengthened, and the vigorous development of revolutionary struggles was promoted.

Today, as long as the masses of party members and organ personnel exert concerted efforts; oppose political liberalism; and put their major energy in implementing the party's line, principles, and policies in a creative manner and in carrying out the four modernizations wholeheartedly, we will certainly be able to improve the work styles of organs, further strengthen the unity of the whole party and the whole society, and effectively stimulate the development of socialist modernization and various socialist undertakings.

Let us eliminate political liberalism; carry forward the healthy revolutionary trends characterized by unity, activity, seriousness, and vigor; work diligently; engage in less empty talk; and strive to be new "foolish old men" to serve and do more solid work for the people.

HEBEI'S XING CHONGZHI TOURS CANGZHOU PREFECTURE

[Text] During his investigation and study tour of the six counties and cities of Cangzhou Prefecture, including Qingxian, Huanghua, Yanshan, Mengcun, Xianxian, and Botou, from 13 to 20 January, Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, listened to the reports delivered by the county and city CPC committees; visited 38 peasant families, more than 20 town- and township-run enterprises and 6 factories in 19 villages of 12 townships, toured the Huanghua seaport; and held talks with party members, cadres, the masses, and retired comrades. He encouraged the cadres at all levels and the broad masses of party members to work together to make solid contributions to realizing the goal of effecting a fundamental turn for the better in party style among the party and government leading organs at the provincial, prefectural (city), county, and township levels set forth by the provincial CPC Committee, and to promoting a better development of reform and the economic work.

Comrade Xing Chongzhi focused on inspecting and understanding the situation in the education on party style and party discipline, the party's ideological and organizational construction, the rural party rectification, and the achievements scored by party-member cadres since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. While listening to the reports made by the different localities, he set forth that we must attach importance to correctly estimating and clearly understanding the situation of party style in order to achieve party style. He said that we should make a quantitative analysis of the party rectification work of the county and township units to see which units have realized a fundamental turn for the better party style and what measures they should take for further consolidating and improving party style, to see which units have basically achieved party style and what measures they should take for solving problems if they have any, and to see which units have more problems. He urged leaders to attach importance to giving instructions, in line with different actual conditions, for solving problems. He said: We must clearly tell the people that in response to the great decisions of the central authorities and the provincial CPC Committee on grasping party style, the broad masses of party members oppose the unhealthy practices, most of the comrades with various problems are willing to correct their problems, and the main trend of party members and cadres is good. We have done much work with regard to correcting the unhealthy practices over the past few years, and have laid a certain foundation and gained experiences in this regard. A large group of advanced collectives and individuals in this regard has emerged. This is a favorable condition for straightening out party style. At present, the unhealthy practices have formed into a "trend." Some party-member cadres, even leading cadres, are seriously indulging in these unhealthy practices. However, as long as we clearly understand the situation, have firm confidence, and make concerted efforts, we will certainly realize a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

In line with the actual conditions, Comrade Xing Chongzhi and the responsible cadres of the counties, cities, and townships summed up the experiences in straightening out party style to see where they lagged behind, and studied and worked out measures for improving party style. He repeatedly said that the four requirements set forth by Comrade Yaobang, such as "improving efficiency, studying hard, strictly enforcing discipline, and enhancing party spirit," are matters of fundamental importance. Thus, we must conscientiously study and implement these four requirements in line with the actual conditions. In the course of party rectification, we should conscientiously solve, in a step-by-step manner, the problems about which the people have many complaints, such as, some party-member cadres taking advantage of their power to seek private gains, to covet public property, and to be in arrears with public funds; some party-member cadres being lax in discipline; and some violating the law and discipline.

We must pay attention to separating the complicated problems on sorting out financial affairs from party rectification. After hearing the report on which the Botou City CPC Committee, the city government, and the city People's Congress have set an example for all towns and townships in firmly eliminating the unhealthy practices, Xing Chongzhi urged the new leading body of the city CPC Committee to set an example for the whole in bravely taking up and coping with the problems on the basis of each level grasping the work of the next lower levels. The work of eliminating the unhealthy practices should be carried out immediately and practical results must be scored in this regard.

Efforts should be made to grasp education on the one hand, and to strictly enforce discipline on the other. What is important is that efforts should be made to straighten out ideology. The work of straightening out ideology represents that of conducting education. Therefore, we should carry out education on party spirit and discipline. Meanwhile, we should conduct education along with organizational readjustment. We should strictly enforce discipline to cope with the serious problems and with those who have refused to mend their ways despite repeated admonition. We should dismiss the leading cadres from their posts and the party members from the party, when found unqualified. Those who deserve to be punished or dealt with should be punished or dealt with in line with the law. By no means should we tolerate their mistakes and be overlenient. Comrade Xing Chongzhi praised the method adopted by the Qing County CPC Committee in achieving a turn for the better in party style by grasping both typical positive and negative cases. While praising their practice, he pointed out: Efforts shouls be made to integrate the work of grasping the typical cases with that of arousing the masses, and to integrate destruction with construction. We should dare to grasp typical negative cases or major and serious cases. We should also arouse the masses to hold discussions after we have exposed these typical cases in order to educate a large number of people through them. Comrade Xing Chongzhi also acknowledged the experience of Huanghua County in attaching great importance to the people's petition letters and visits; of Mengcun Hui Autonomous County in enforcing the responsibility system among the leading personnel in straightening out party style; and of Yanshan Country in paying attention to blocking the malpractice of the "three-poor-management" [san bu guan] committed by the economic departments, enterprises, and the township level units. In coping with the problems in which localities had incurred many recurrences of malpractices and had the difficulty of arbitrary pleading for mercy for wrongdoers, Comrade Xing Chongzhi particularly pointed out: In blocking malpractices, we should first be determined, and second, should conduct the work in a protracted manner, enhance the measures to conduct consolidation and reforms, carry out reforms while conducting consolidation, establish or improve the system of checking or appraising party style, and carry out supervision of the masses and regular inspections. The better method of blocking the practice of pleading for mercy is to register their pleadings and then, to make them open to the public. We should regard as an information channel the repeated petition letters and visits of the people, and as a measure the people's supervision over cadres and party style. Efforts should be made to enhance the construction of the personnel's ranks in charge of people's petition letters and visits and to bring into play the function role of the discipline inspection departments.

To straighten out party style, Comrade Xing Chongzhi has repeatedly stressed the important ideology in which efforts should be made to make progress in conducting reforms, to accelerate the pace of economic development, to grasp the two civilizations simultaneously, and to achieve marked results in both of them. After visiting Wang Shanyu, a model party member who had won the nickname of "Niu Bai Sui," and Zheng Shuming in Qing and Huanghua Counties; Li Xixian, model party secretary of Mengcun Hui Autonomous County; and the advanced collectives of more than 10 townships and villages, which scored achievements in leading the masses to mutually become wealthy, Comrade Xing Chongzhi happily said that the new successors of the generation had become mature and the new morale of the generation had developed.

He repeatedly stressed that the work of developing the economy and helping the people become wealthy represents the concrete reflection of the objective taken up by party members and cadres in wholeheartedly serving the people, and also represents the practical experience gained in straightening out party style. At present, we should foster morale and public opinion to enable the masses to truly understand the glory of serving the people and the shame of committing malpractices to create a favorable social circumstance for straightening out party style. He also made a special inspection trip to the "poorest" Fengzhuang Township of Botou City and the "48 villages" areas of Xian County to visit the poorest villages and households to carefully inquire about their food, housing, and clothing conditions. He said to the cadres of the prefectural, county, and township units that the leadership should set examples in doing a good job in ferreting out the reason why these poor townships and villages had not experienced a large change while the country, the province, and the prefecture had generally experienced large changes during the more than 6 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The most fundamental issue in conducting party rectification and straightening out party style among the poor villages is to lead the masses to get rid of their backward situation and to become wealthy as soon as possible.

HEBEI: XING CHONGZHI ON SIMPLIFYING MEETINGS

[Text] On the morning of 25 January, Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, declared at the conference of secretaries of the prefectural and city party committees that the conference should not provide room and board for the participating Standing Committee members of the provincial CPC Committee, including their secretaries and drivers, and the participating responsible comrades from the provincial level departments and bureaus. He also declared that the number of working personnel of the conference should be curtailed as much as possible and that the rooms reserved for the participants of the conference should be fully occupied. The conference is the first meeting sponsored by the provincial CPC Committee this year, and it should mark a good start in simplifying meetings. First of all, the provincial-level organs should take the lead in refraining from accepting the room and board provided by the conference and in simplifying the conference spendings in order to set an example for the work of convening meetings.

The conference is a very important gathering during which we should relay the spirit of the central conference on rural work and discuss and study the guiding outlines of the 1986 work taken up by the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government. At 1145 this morning, when the conference went into recess, the participating leading comrades of the provincial authorities and responsible persons from the provincial level departments and bureaus returned in succession to their homes for lunch. The responsible comrades of the conference told reporters that none of the 20 participants from the provincial leadership and the 47 responsible comrades from the provincial departments and bureaus had sought room and board from the conference or bought meal tickets. The secretaries of the prefectural and city party committees have brought with them only one or two working personnel. Meanwhile, there are only 22 working personnel at the conference, and some of them also have no room and board privileges provided by the conference.

SHAANXI CADRE VIOLATES DISCIPLINE; EXPELLED FROM CPC

HK060701 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 2 Feb 86

[Text] (Gao Yaoheng), director of the Weinan City Labor and Personnel Bureau, put on a big show for his son's wedding, gave a dinner, and received gifts. As leading comrades of the central authorities and provincial CPC Committee paid attention to this problem, the Weinan Prefectural and City CPC Committees clearly investigated this case and made a decision on expelling (Gao Yaoheng) from the party, suggesting that he should be discharged from his administrative post. Yesterday the provincial CPC Committee issued a circular on this case to party organizations at all levels throughout the province.

On 20 December last year, (Gao Yaoheng) ignored the advice of leading comrades of the Weinan City CPC Committee and city government and insisted on putting up a shed, adorning it with festoons, and giving an extravagant dinner when his second son got married. After this occurred, the Weinan Prefectural and City CPC Committee immediately sent people to investigate and deal with the case. After leading comrades of the central authorities read the data on (Gao Yaoheng's) case, they wrote some instructions. Bai Jinian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, gave instructions on many occasions on investigating and dealing with this case and sent a deputy secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission to Weinan to help the prefectural and city CPC committees investigate and deal with it.

It has now been clearly established that when his son got married, (Gao Yaoheng) used 9 motor vehicles, gave a dinner with some 90 tables, received gifts of various kinds valued at some 3,000 yuan, asked 35 performers of the prefectural and city professional opera troupes and of the peasants' recreation team to perform for him, and showed 5 films for 2 consecutive nights to add to the fun.

It has also been clearly established that (Gao Yaoheng) took advantage of his power to practice fraud, turned the rural residence status of his son and of his daughter who had been adopted by other people, into urban residence, and transferred his daughter-in-law who had been a worker in another county to the Weinan City Public Security Bureau.

In view of the above problems, the Weinan City CPC Committee has decided to instruct the department concerned to recover his son's and daughter's urban residence permits; to transfer his daughter-in-law from the public security department; to demand payment of the charges for the motor vehicles he had used, in accordance with regulations; and to continue to clearly investigate other problems concerning (Gao Yaoheng) which the masses have reported.

In its circular, the provincial CPC Committee pointed out: A Communist Party member must firmly remember at all times the aim of wholeheartedly serving the people and maintain and carry forward the party's excellent tradition of plain living and hard struggle. Although Comrade (Gao Yaoheng) joined the party over 30 years ago, his ideology was not transformed very well. The decadent feudalist ideas of bringing honor to his ancestors and [words indistinct] in his mind and the backward customs of putting on a show were very serious. He completely lost that moral character which a Communist Party member should have.

The provincial CPC Committee demanded: Party organizations at all levels and party-member cadres must seriously draw a lesson from the mistakes (Gao Yaocheng) made, penetratingly carry out the current rectification of organs' work style, and further strengthen ideological and political work and education in party spirit, party style, and party discipline so that the party member cadres can conscientiously resist and oppose the corrosive influence of decadent capitalist and feudalist ideology and resolutely struggle against all unhealthy trends. Leadership organs at all levels of the party and government must immediately organize vigorous groups to clearly investigate and deal with several big and serious cases so as to strengthen the party members' and the masses' confidence in correcting party style and to achieve a basic improvement in party style and in the general mood of society.

SHAANXI PREFECTURE HANDLES VIOLATIONS OF DISCIPLINE

HK311416 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 28 Jan 86

[Text] The Hanzhong Prefectural CPC Committee has seriously investigated and handled cases of violation of regulations and discipline by leading cadres at the county level, thus showing the masses inside and outside the party the actual results of party rectification and giving an impetus to the in-depth development of party rectification throughout the prefecture.

In early September last year, the Hanzhong Prefectural CPC Committee set up a party rectification inspection group formed by three leading cadres respectively from the prefectural Discipline Inspection Commission, the prefectural party rectification office, and the prefectural Organization Department. The group spent 1 and 1/2 months visiting the counties of Hanzhong, Mian, Ningqiang, Yang, Zhenba, Xixiang, Lueyang, and Foping, and examined case by case and person by person the handling of problems concerning violations of regulations and discipline by leading cadres at the county level.

By making use of his relations with some acquaintances, an inspector working with the Yang County CPC Committee made an arrangement to have his daughter, a factory worker, transferred to a post at the county procuratorate.

Many people complained to the county CPC Committee about this case. This comrade persistently refused to admit his mistake although the investigation into the case proved his fault. The inspection group visited Yang County and talked with this comrade. Through patient and meticulous education, the inspection group finally made him realize his mistake and convinced him to have his daughter transferred to another post by a fixed date.

Apart from sending the inspection group, the three leaders of the prefectural CPC Committee have concentrated their attention on some units faced with more problems, and have devoted efforts to solving some knotty problems.

By practicing fraud, seven leading cadres of Zhenba County arranged to have their children admitted to universities under the pretext of fostering qualified personnel for town and township enterprises. During the party rectification, the county CPC Committee dared not deal with this case and thus aroused grievances among the masses. Having heard of this case, prefectural CPC Committee Secretary (Wang Yun) urged the Zhenba County CPC Committee to solve the problem promptly. Consequently, the children of these seven leading cadres who were not up to the requirements were soon dismissed by their colleges.

By late December last year, the Hanzhong Prefectural CPC Committee had handled the cases of 77 leading cadres at the country level who had violated regulations and discipline, which accounted for over 95 percent of the cases of such violations which were discovered. The prefectural CPC Committee's efforts have given an impetus to the in-depth development of party rectification throughout the prefecture.

SHAANXI PARTY LEADER ON SELECTION OF LEADING CADRES

HK010237 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 31 Jan 86

[Excerpt] Shaanxi has paid attention to selecting leading cadres from among educated young and middle-aged persons who have practical work experience. The 16 new members and alternate members of the provincial CPC Committee elected at the provincial conference of party delegates are all young and middle-aged persons who have more than 10 years of grass-roots work experience, and 11 of them have tertiary education.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Bai Jinian said: We must stress diplomas, but lay all the more stress on practical work ability and achievements in selecting cadres in the future. We must place the organ cadres in the grass-roots for tempering and help them improve their own ability there. In the future, organ cadres who have not undergone a relatively long period of tempering in the grass-roots cannot be selected for leading posts at and above county-level.

In recent years Shaanxi has promoted a total of 7,190 young and middle-aged cadres to leadership posts at all levels. Over 5,000 of them are holding leadership posts at and above county and office [chu] level. Most of these cadres have relatively high educational standards, they are mentally lively, and their work enthusiasm is high. However, many of them come from the organs, and a considerable number went to work in the organs as soon as they graduated. They thus lack experience in grass-roots work.

To help the cadres improve their political and professional qualities and organizational leadership ability, the provincial CPC Committee decided last September to carry out rotational training in batches for grass-roots urban and rural cadres and to transfer a large number of cadres to strengthen grass-roots work. By mid-January, 8,700 cadres from the provincial, prefectural, and county leading organs had been sent to the rural and mountain areas, including over 7,000 young and middle-aged cadres aged under 40.

The responsible comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government praised the 13 members of the group. They said that through report meetings they had educated more than 72,000 people by showing their personal experiences.

Also attending the meeting were Mao Zhengxian, director of the provincial CPC Committee Propaganda Department and (Jie Zhaoyun), director of the provincial Federation of Trade Unions.

The report group was organized by the provincial CPC Committee Propaganda Department and the provincial Federation of Trade Unions. After 23 days of report meetings, the group completed its tour to various provincial departments and some localities of the province, on 29 January.

CHENG MING VIEWS STUDENT MOVEMENT, REFORM

HK090457 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 100, 1 Feb 86 pp 25-27

[Article by special correspondent Liang Ren-shu: "Beijing's Student Movement and Recent Developments of Reform"]

[Text] This is the coldest winter I have ever experienced in my life. I sent off 1985 in Beijing. It was nice for a native of Hong Kong to see with his own eyes how Beijing spent Christmas and New Year's Day. In addition, there had been lots of rumors about China's changes in recent years. All this made me more determined to see things with my own eyes.

Individual Laborers Earn Several Hundred Yuan a Month, but Have a Hard Time Getting Married

The most attractive thing about Deng Xiaoping's reform is undoubtedly the economy, and a fresh phenomenon is the emergence of individual laborers in the urban reform. I had heard something about this in Guangzhou, but how is it in north China? How is it in the capital Beijing? During my stay in Beijing, I visited quite a few individual laborers and talked with some scholars of the Academy of Social Sciences. They told me that the proportion of the output value of the individual economy in the total output value of the national economy was about 4 to 5 percent. The individual economy is conducive to solving the problem of unemployment in the cities and to promoting commodity circulation.

In Beijing's urban area, as far as I could see, the individual market was most brisk near Qianmen. There were many eating spots there, and every evening at about 2000, when the state shops closed, their business began immediately. Most of them did not have shops; they can only be called pedlars, mainly selling roast mutton and dumplings. But they had many customers, including visitors from other areas, who were unable to have their meals in good time due to their busy schedule and shoping during the day, and who usually did not care much about prices. This kind of service could not be offered by state restaurants.

However, unlike Hong Kong, Beijing natives do not often patronize these individual eating houses. When some of my friend there mentioned individual laborers, they often showed an expression of despising them, thinking that most of them were "speculators," "people not attending to their proper duties," and those who could not find proper jobs in certain "units," or even some released criminals. I asked them: "Is it not good that they are making a living and seeking money through the proper channels? " On hearing this, they continued to criticize the individual laborers for "unscrupulously" cheating customers and providing low-quality service. Some of the individual laborers even tried to cheat their customers out of lots of money once and for all, they said. Some people sold used clothes that had been imported to "exploit" other people, and they succeeded since there were few varieties of fashion designs in north China.

A teacher told me that although the individual laborers earn several hundred yuan a month, they have a hard time in getting married, because girls look down upon them and dislike their low social position and cultural level. This shows that people are not "judging everything by wealth." He said frankly that he would not allow his daughter to fall in love with an individual laborer. Later I found that many people held the same view. On the other hand, the individual laborers themselves also completely understand that they are not accepted by society. Most of them regard their current jobs as interim measures. They are always ready to work in state or collective units and receive a monthly pay of several dozen yuan. Some are even prepared to wash their hands of such business immediately after they have earned tens of thousands of yuan.

The policy of the Chinese authorities is to "make all people well-off," but many people think that this is difficult to achieve in the cities. At present, apart from the individual laborers, there are also a number of private companies and partnership enterprises in the cities. They are free economic units in the market, but on the other hand, they can get rich through their special "relations" and "social connections." They are different from the contract system in the countryside, under which people can get rich only through diligence. They also differ from the slow accumulation in the countryside, but can become rich very quickly and earn large sums of money whenever a transaction is completed. This kind of capitalist business is unacceptable to most common people. Since there have been no great changes in the remuneration of state-owned units, for example, after the pay increase other benefits for teachers were reduced, they believed that if things go on like this, the contradictions among the people and the differences between rich and poor will certainly be sharpened, and a new social stratum will appear.

Buses Go Slow, Greatly Inconveniencing People

In the economic field, when I was in Beijing, I felt that there were two main problems: the problem of drivers and the problem of commodity prices.

The problem of drivers might only occur in Beijing. I do not know what the situation is in other cities. It is quite inconvenient for the people in Beijing to travel by bus. Although many people go to work on bicycles, due to the long distances between their homes and working places and the severe winter cold, buses are still the main public vehicles in Beijing. But for quite some time, Beijing's bus drivers seemed to have deliberately made things difficult for the urban residents. With their poor service, it often happened that the buses did not stop at the bus stops as required or several buses ran at the same time rather than at regular intervals. The residents were greatly inconvenienced when they had to wait for buses for 45 to 60 minutes in temperatures of minus 15 or 20 degrees centigrade. It was said that some women even cried when they waited at the bus stops, because they had no other choice but to take the bus.

The leaders of Beijing Municipality know very well about the bus problem, but are still at a loss about what to do even to this day. It was said that the reason was Beijing's bus drivers were discontent with their pay, said to be lower than a taxi driver's. At present, a bus driver receives about 100 yuan a month, including various kinds of allowances, but a taxi driver, whose working conditions are more comfortable, can earn several hundred yuan a month. In addition, the latter has a higher social position, hence the contradiction. Taxi fares are actually very high, and different cars have different fares. The minimum charge is 2.8 to 3.5 yuan, the waiting charge is double, and an additional charge of 50 percent is added to distances over 10 kilometers.

The problem of commodity prices might be a nation-wide problem. Almost all friends I met complained about floating prices and how expensive goods were. They said that the supply of many fashionable goods had often fallen short of demand. Extremely sensitive people in Beijing often rushed to purchase and heard some fashionable goods in short supply. A housewife told me that when she saw that many people had bought wollen cloth, she also went to buy 3 zhang, but the cloth was actually not suitable for her. As a matter of fact, the main task for the current readjustment is to control the prices of staple and non-staple foods. This year, only a few commodity prices have increased, and within very limited ranges too. The pace of development has been quite steady. According to an analysis, the main reason is that the level of the people's consumption has been raised and the demand for high-grade commodities has increased. Thus, the 7-yuan price subsidy certainly will not help.

Of course, the people's reaction to the price reform was mainly due to the shortage of material supplies and their low consumption ability. But this also reflects deep-rooted traditional ideas, which were shaped in the past 30 years. Since commodity prices were kept "unchanged" over the past 30 years and the Chinese authorities always emphasized "there is no inflation in China," once any floating prices appeared, people were very disturbed, thinking that the whole world was in disorder. Many people hate to see the phenomenon of speculation in the market, and more than 90 percent of them are still used to a life-style characterized by a state monopoly in everything under the planned economy.

Two Senior Cadres Were Arrested, Being Suspected of Whipping Up the Student Movement Against Deng

Today's Beijing can hardly impress people that it was a city of revolution for many years, where there were red flags everywhere. But after the students' anti-Japanese parade last year, people still feel that it is a politically sensitive city.

Last December, university students in Urumqi, Xinjiang, held an anti-nuclear demonstration. Strangely, it was quickly responded to in Beijing. More that 200 Uygur students soon went to Xinhuamen to present a petition. A friend, who is a correspondent, told me that the students in Urumqi did hold two demonstrations on 12 and 19 December. The city's Public Security Bureau declared that they took no coercive measures against the students since they had put forth some reasonable opinions. My friend once visited the Central Institute of Nationalities in Beijing. The regular students told him nothing about the incident, but some Uygur students said frankly that they had had telephone contacts with Xinjiang. Following are the three demands of the Urumqi students:

1. Forbid nuclear tests in Xinjiang and Qinghai.

2. Relax restrictions on minority nationalities on bearing children.

3. Give more opportunities to minority nationalities to study at higher schools and abroad.

Beijing's Uygur students added three more: Send no criminals to exploit Xinjiang, support Xinjiang's students' movement, and no confidence in Tomur [Dawamat] as chairman of the Xinjiang Autonomous Region.

The students said that it was not easy for the government to train a university student. They are the cream of the crop. Therefore, the government will not take serious measures against them. Had all this been started by some other unit, the government would have taken stronger measures. But they held that they may suffer some losses in job assignments on graduation. For this reason, most students did not join the demonstrations. Another reason was that this action was "of no use." Nevertheless, the school authorities have strengthened political management. In the past few years, students could attend political and theoretical classes rather casually. But now there are stricter requirements on the students and they are not allowed to be absent without a reason.

On the memorial day for Zhou Enlai's death (8 January), I took a special trip to Tiananmen Square with some friends. There I saw some floral wreaths presented by Bainqen and others, and several guards in uniform. Some people quietly put small white flowers or written poems on the trees. There was a calm and overcautious atmosphere on the square. I tried to talk with two citizens, but they just moved away from me as soon as I approached them. I felt that both the government and the citizens were still overcautious. They did not want anything unexpected to happen. "It is better to save our breath than to get into trouble."

The following is what I heard on other occasions about last year's anti-Japanese student movement: After the 18 September demonstration, two senior cadres were arrested. They belonged to the conservative faction, being suspected of "whipping up the student movement." Some people in Beijing's diplomatic circles held that the essence of the anti-Japanese movement was anti-Deng. The December 9th movement was prevented, but the students might have changed their activities into covert activities of small groups. Since last September, security work for the U.S. and Japanese Embassies has been greatly enhanced. There was also an internal document about this.

"For Me, God Means Material Gains!"

On Christmas Eve, I attended a midnight mass in Beijing's Xishiku Cathedral (North Hall). This was the first time the cathedral had been open in more than 20 years. It was renovated by donations from the Catholics, having typical Chinese colors, especially dazzling red. Bishop Fu Tieshan presided over the ceremony that night. Only a few Chinese were permitted to participate in this ceremony. They told me frankly that they had never participated in such a ceremony and did not know what it was like. They had come to "join in the fun."

In order to expand the effect of the propaganda, the government invited many reporters to make recordings and TV films. Sitting in the front row were some French visitors, the U.S. ambassador, and diplomats from various countries. Mayor Chen Xitong also attended the mass. At the beginning of the ceremony, the bishop said excitedly that he spent all his youth in this cathedral. He believed that Catholicism has a bright future in China. As the reporters were in the front of the hall, we could clearly see that the bishop's hands trembled the whole time he spoke. Since the bishop spoke in Latin, perhaps, having been cut off from the outside world for 30 years, he did not know that the native language can now be used in Catholic ceremonies so that the bishop can better identify himself with the listeners. The believers could only hear the sounds and understood nothing at all.

The most unforgettable impression for me was that the participants were all in a relaxed mood beneath the excited atmosphere. The young people seemed to have no scruples about talking. I asked some young friends: "What is God?" They replied:

"God is the ideal in one's heart!"

"When I read the Bible sometimes, I just accept its reasonable parts."

A reporter even said straightforwardly: "For me, God means material gains!"

I asked a university student: "Is communism a kind of religion?"

He answered without hesitation: "Yes, you are right!"

During Christmas and the New Year festival, there was no Santa Claus, lamp decorations, or Christmas songs in Beijing, except for in this church and some big hotels where foreigners were staying. People could only hear scattered sounds of firecrackers on New Year's Day. Taxi charges tripled. People went to take photos in front of Tiananmen.

On the evening of 3 January, I was invited to a reception held in the new concert hall on West Changan for a preview performance. This is China's first modern music hall with first-rate design, acoustics, decoration, and building materials, just as good as the Hong Kong Art Center and other buildings. But no matter how good it is, it is just a reproduction of foreign designs without new or Chinese characteristics. What disappointed people more was the old-fashioned performance. The programs for that evening were "The Huang He Cantata" and the "Ode to Joy" from Beethoven's Symphony No 9.

It seems that Beijing's artists could perform nothing better than the "reserved items" of pre-1949 and Western classical pieces. For theatrical programs, among those which have been most often performed are Lao She's "Teahouse" and Ba Jin's trilogy.

A literature and art worker later explained: "This is quite normal, because these programs are real artistic pieces and national treasures. It is safest to perform them since they have both fervor and patriotism!"

We also watched a performance by the "Coal Miners' Art Troupe," a qualified and experienced performing unit. Their performance was also the same, full of fervor and sermons. They were not the least bit negligent in acting, but had no new creations. After the performance, a taxi driver said that some of their items were performed as early as in the 1950's. As to the comic dialogue, which is much loved by Beijing natives, he also felt it "too rustic" and "not interesting at all."

But some progress has been achieved in TV programs. The Central TV Station has a program called "Happy Families," which has some similarities to Hong Kong TV's lucky-draw game. In a relaxed and natural mood, the host talks about growing flowers, making dresses, and other mundane topics, and the audience is invited to answer questions by drawing lots. This program reflects the real feelings of the people in Beijing. But other programs often impress people with artificiality. The actors and actresses often wear unnatural expressions and often look very awkward when touching upon certain questions. However, the audience demands nothing more, although they applaud in the theaters and watch television every evening.

Only the young people are sensitive and ambitious and often indulge in fantasy. I asked many people about socialism and capitalism; they all said that they like socialism and just stay at a respectful distance from rotten capitalism. But a young man told me: "Under capitalism there is freedom and the opportunity to get rich. What is 'rotten' about that? We young people do not believe that!"

TWO MINISTERIAL LEVEL OFFICIALS PUNISHED

[Report: "China Investigates, Punishes Two Senior Officials at Ministerial Level· Zhou Erfu Removed From Office, Zhang Jun Given Serious Internal Party Warning"]

[Text] According to information from Beijing, China's struggle with unhealthy tendencies is no longer at the stage of "all talk and no action," and has entered a stage of "taking rapid and severe action." As some reliable sources revealed, two senior officials at ministerial level in the State Council have been punished.

One of these two officials is Zhou Erfu, vice chairman of the Committee for Cultural Exchange With Foreign Countries of the Ministry of Culture and vice president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries. It is said that Zhou was involved in some economic crimes and some "lifestyle problems." During his visit to a foreign country, his behavior impaired the national dignity and lowered his personal dignity. Now he has been dismissed from office. The other ministerial-level official is Zhang Ju, former minister of astronautics industry. He was involved in a serious smuggling case in his ministry and has been given a serious internal party warning.

USSR ACCUSES U.S., UK OF ABM TREATY VIOLATIONS

OW120256 Beijing XINHUA in English 0243 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 11 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union today accused the United States of violating the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty (ABM Treaty) by deploying two new large radars on the Shemya Island of the Aleutian Islands and in Greenland. Vladimir Morozov, deputy head of the Press Department of the Soviet Foreign Ministry, told reporters here today that one such radar is deployed on the Shemy Island of the Aleutian Islands. The construction has involved, in violation of accords reached, the use of elements tested on anti-missile defense targets, Morozov said. Work is also under way to build a phased-array radar of the Pave Paws type in Greenland, which, Morozov said, is a direct violation of Article 6 of the ABM Treaty reached between the Soviet Union and the United States in 1972. Morozov told reporters that the British Government too has of late embarked on a policy of undercutting the ABM Treaty. This is borne out by plans to deploy a new U.S. radar in the area of Fylingdales Moor in North Yorkshire. Although it is being claimed to cover up these plans that it is merely provided to modernize an American radar already existing there, what is meant in fact is the construction of a totally new facility of a totally new design, he noted. In the event of the implementation of these plans, the British Government would become directly involved in breaking the ABM Treaty of 1972, he said.

EAST, WEST EXCHANGE 'INTELLIGENCE AGENTS'

OW111754 Beijing XINHUA in English 1602 GMT 11 Feb 86

[Text] Berlin, February 11 (XINHUA) -- A total of eight intelligence agents were released in a dramatic East-West spy exchange here today. Western sources said three agents in addition to a Soviet computer expert were handed over by the East and five agents by the West. The Democratic German official news agency ADN announced that there were "several spies among those released." ADN said the exchange came after an agreement between the United States and Federal Germany on one side and the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Poland and Democratic Germany on the other. Other reports said the negotiations for the exchange lasted for several months. The exchange took place at Berlin's Glienicke Bridge border crossing this morning, where on February 10, 1962 Francis Gary Powers, American pilot of a U-2 spy plane shot down by the Soviets, was traded for convicted Soviet master spy Rudolf Abel.

It was learned that the three released from East bloc jails included two West Germans, Wolf George Frohn and Dietrich Niestroj, and Czechoslovak Jaroslav Javorsky. Frohn, 41, was arrested in Democratic Germany in 1980 and sentenced in 1982 to life imprisonment for spying for West German intelligence. Niestroj, 50, was arrested during a stay in Democratic Germany in 1981 and sentenced in 1982 to life imprisonment on spying charges. Javorsky fled to Federal Germany and then returned to Czechoslovakia, where he was arrested and sentenced to 12 years for espionage in 1981. Soviet computer expert Anatoliy Shcharanskiy, 37, was sentenced to 13 years in prison in 1978 on charges of spying for the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency. The United States denied the allegations, saying he was a Soviet dissident asking for permission to emigrate to Israel. He was freed today separately shortly before the spy exchange. The five released by the West included Polish Lieutenant Colonel Jerzy Kaczmarek, 33, awaiting trial in Federal Germany since his arrest in March 1985. The others were: Yevgeniy Zemlyakov, 39, a member of a Soviet trade mission to Cologne, Federal Germany, was sentenced to three years in prison last September for computer spying; Detlef Scharfenroth was a Democratic German serving a four-year prison sentence in Federal Germany since last June for spying; Karl and Hana Koecher, a native Czechoslovak couple awaiting trial in the United States on suspicion of trying to infiltrate the CIA.

AMBASSADOR TO UN CONDEMNS APARTHEID POLICY

OW120640 Beijing XINHUA in English 0630 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] United Nations, February 11 (XINHUA) -- The root cause for the turbulent situation in southern Africa lies in the South African authorities' apartheid policy inside and the policy of aggression outside, said Chinese Ambassador Li Luye here today. Li, China's permanent representative to the United Nations, made these remarks at the Security Council meeting this morning. The Council began its current consideration of the situation in southern Africa on February 5 at the request of the African group. Today's meeting is the sixth in a row.

Referring to the policy of destabilization pursued by the Pretoria regime against its neighbors, the ambassador said that South Africa has since last year repeatedly dispatched troops into Angola, Botswana, and Lesotho, killing many innocent people. It has threatened to launch an armed invasion of Zimbabwe. Under the threat of aggression from the South Africa racist regime, he said, the newly-independent frontline states and other countries in southern Africa enjoy no security at all.

He said the racist regime has tried hard to justify its policy of aggression under the pretext of combating terrorism. "This is nothing but a sheer confusion of right and wrong," he added. It is the apartheid regime, he said, that is carrying out terrorist acts. It has not hesitated to employ large numbers of troops and police to suppress the struggle of the South African people, enforcing a reign of terror. Its troops have even crossed borders in pursuit of the refugees and carried out subversion and military intrusion into the neighboring countries. To eradicate terrorism in southern Africa, he said, the apartheid system must be eradicated, since it is the root cause for terrorism in the region.

The realization of peace and stability in southern Africa is the ardent desire of the peoples in the region and the unanimous call of the people of the world, he said. He praised the frontline states and other countries in the region for their unremitting efforts to this end. However, he said that South Africa has recently proposed to its neighbors to set up so-called "permanent joint mechanism" and threatened that should this proposal be "ignored or rejected," it would "take effective measures in self-defense." He said that the essence of this proposal is simply to legitimize South Africa's wanton interference in the internal affairs of the neighboring countries and to create excuses for armed intrusions into these countries. "The Chinese delegation holds that if the South African authorities truly want to improve their relations with the neighboring countries, they must abandon the hypocritical rhetorics and demonstrate their sincerity by actual deeds," he said. They must immediately cease their aggression and threat against their neighbors, unconditionally terminate their illegal occupation of Namibia and eradicate the system of apartheid, he said. Otherwise, he said in conclusion, no matter how hard the South African authorities may try, they will never be able to stop the just struggle of the South African people against apartheid and that of the Namibian people for national independence. The Council will meet again tomorrow, when the present round of discussions on southern Africa is expected to end.

REAGAN 'OPTIMISTIC' ABOUT ARMS CONTROL ACCORD

OW111854 Beijing XINHUA in English 1841 GMT 11 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 11 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan told the WASHINGTON POST Monday he is "optimistic" that the United States and the Soviet Union will reach an arms control agreement this year on intermediate-range nuclear missiles in Europe. He said in his interview, made public today, that the agreement could be reached because Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is no longer requiring abandonment of a U.S. missile defense system known as the "star wars" program as a condition. He said the latest Soviet position conveyed in a meeting with U.S. Senator Edward Kennedy in Moscow is "a hopeful sign" although there are "points that have to be worked out."

Kennedy told a news conference soon after his return from Moscow on Saturday that Gorbachev had tied the timing of his next summit with Reagan to progress toward an agreement on the intermediate-range missiles. Reagan said yesterday he cannot believe that Gorbachev would want to scrap the summit and said the Soviet leader had agreed at the close of their Geneva meeting that there should be a second summit in the United States this year and a third summit in the Soviet Union in 1987. He said he continues to want the second summit to be held in June or July of this year so that it doesn't interfere with U.S. (?election) this fall. The Soviet Union had proposed to postpone the second summit until September. However, Reagan said the Soviet positions on British and French nuclear forces and on Soviet intermediate-range missiles in Asia remain obstacles to an agreement. Meanwhile White House spokesman Larry Speakes said yesterday that the United States very much appreciates the report of Kennedy on his meeting with Gorbachev in Moscow.

CONSULTATIONS UNDER WAY WITH NEW HAITIAN GOVERNMENT

OW080118 Beijing XINHUA in English 0106 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 7 (XINHUA) -- The United States is consulting with the new Haitian Government about its plans for the future and how the United States could be helpful, the State Department said today. The U.S. position was made after a five-member national council was formed in Haiti to replace former President Jean-Claude Duvalier who fled the country earlier this morning, ending his family's 28-year authoritarian reign in Haiti.

The State Department said earlier today that at a "direct request" for the transportation from Duvalier, a U.S. Air Force C-141 plane flew Duvalier and 23 members of his family earlier today to temporary exile in France. State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said this afternoon "the Government of the United States and France cooperated in facilitating the peaceful departure from Haiti of President Duvalier in order to ease the transition in Haiti and reduce the possibility of bloodshed." "We are consulting with the new government on the conditions under which we would have relations. The United States remains committed to respect for democratic government and human rights," he added.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said this morning that the U.S. was very anxious to have stable conditions in Haiti. Weinberger also said the United States was prepared to step in if the lives of the 6,000 to 7,000 Americans in Haiti were threatened. The United States is now holding 26 million U.S. dollars in aid to Haiti and the State Department has asked Congress for new aid for Haiti amounting to 52 million dollars in the next fiscal year.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTARY ON 'TEAM SPIRIT-86'

HK120346 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 11 Feb 86 p 2

[Short commentary: "Military Exercises that Worsen the Atmosphere"]

[Text] On 10 February, the United States and the South Korean authorities flagrantly staged a joint military exercise called "Team Spirit-86" in the Southern part of Korea. Undoubtedly, this military exercise will worsen the atmosphere, which had already been relaxed through dialogue between the two sides of Korea.

The Government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea long ago declared its decision to halt large-scale military exercises in the Northern part of Korea starting from 1 February and suspend all military exercises during the North-South dialogue period, and repeatedly asked the United States and the South Korean authorities to adopt the same measures. However, the United States and the South Korean authorities have turned a deaf ear to the plea and are clinging obstinately to their reckless course. This is very unpopular.

Last year, the many dialogues held by the two sides in Korea made some headway, thus initially alleviating the tension on the Korean peninsula and bringing new hope of independently and peacefully unifying the country to the Korean people who have suffered national separation for a long time. Therefore, it is supported by all the Korean people and welcomed by all Asian countries. Under these circumstances, it is imperative to strive to strengthen further the understanding and trust between the two sides, promote dialogue, truly relax tension on the Korean peninsula and open up new prospects for the independent and peaceful unification of Korea. The important decision of the Korean Government to halt military exercises at the beginning of the new year is a big step in this direction, demonstrating the sincere hope of the Northern part of Korea of alleviating tension through dialogue and realizing independent and peaceful unification. On the contrary, although the United States and the South Korean authorities ever verbally express their willingness to settle various differences through dialogue, they act differently. This kind of two-faced and insincere behavior will not do any good in promoting dialogue between the sides, but will deepen mistrust and antagonism between them. Therefore, it is only right and natural for impartial world opinion to condemn and oppose it.

The United States and the South Korean authorities should face reality in judging the times and sizing up the situation, and do nothing against the will of the Korean people.

DPRK CONDEMNS 'TEAM SPIRIT-86' EXERCISE

OW120221 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1139 GMT 11 Feb 86

[By reporter Gao Haorong]

[Text] Pyongyang, 11 Feb (XINHUA) -- The Korean Government and people strongly condemn the U.S.-South Korean joint military exercise "Team Spirit-86" scheduled to begin on 10 February, pointing out that the large-scale joint military exercise held by the United States and the South Korean authorites in the "International Year of Peace" goes against the will of the people.

In a statement issued on 10 February, a spokesman of the Korean Ministry of Foreign Affairs pointed out that the United States and the South Korean authorities, responding to an appeal for peace with confrontation and the sound of guns, have spoiled the atmosphere of peace and dialogue on the Korean peninsula.

In response to the "Team Spirit-86" joint military exercise, the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army [KPA] on 10 February issued an order calling on the KPA and the worker-peasant Red Guards to be ready for combat mobilization. Mass organizations, such as the Korean Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland and the National Committee for Supporting Peace, have also issued statements and memorandums, refuting the lies of so-called "defensive nature" and "annual routine" of the United States and the South Korean authorities. In Pyongyang City and various provinces of Korea, the people have held one rally after another to express their utmost indignation over the joint military exercise brazenly held by the United States and the South Korean authorities. The three delegations of the North side to the Korean North-South dialogue also issued a joint statement pointing out that dialogue during the military exercise will not yield any fruit; it also announced that the three North-South talks originally scheduled for January and February will be postponed until after the end of the military exercise.

This year is International Year of Peace. People are very worried about the joint military exercise held by the United States and the South Korean authorities.

DPRK FILM REFLECTS DESIRE FOR REUNIFICATION

OW071333 Beijing XINHUA in English 1305 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 7 (XINHUA) -- A new Korean film reflecting the people's desire for reunification of their fatherland has been shown in all cinemas here since the beginning of this year, arousing a strong response and widespread sympathy among the Korean people. The film, entitled "The Spring Snow Is Melting," with its complicated plots, depicts a marriage story of a girl called Yong-a and a boy named Nam-su, two overseas Koreans in Japan who came from different sides of Korea and married at last after overcoming all kinds of hardships and difficulties including opposition to their marriage by the girl's mother and uncle who lives in Seoul. This film, produced by the Korean Film Studio of Arts, is in two parts. It lasts five hours and ends with a scene of a snow mountain's avalanche in the spring sun which symbolizes the bright future of the peaceful reunification of Korea.

Eulogizing the film, Korean chief paper NODONG SINMUN said in a commentary that "The Spring Snow Is Melting," by describing the real life of various figures, reflects the needs and urgency of national unity and the reunification of the fatherland. It is of realistic significance for the Korean people and their compatriots to unite as one for the reunification.

JAPAN TO START SATELLITE SURVEILLANCE IN THAILAND

OW081805 Beijing XINHUA in English 1503 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Japan is to establish its first overseas satellite surface surveillance station in Thailand this April, local press reported today quoting authoritative sources. The planned surveillance station which is worth 800 million yen (4.21 million U.S. dollars) is to receive information from marine observation satellite and is able to monitor marine information from the Philippines, Indonesia and Eastern India.

This marks the first step of Japan to develop remote sensor network in Southeast Asia which may later be extended to Australia, the report said. Countries like Australia and Indonesia have already shown their interests to share the marine information received by the planned surveillance station. According to the report, Japan is planning to launch marine observation satellite No. 1 in early 1987. The satellite which will travel around the earth and scan its surface one in every 17 days, is able to collect more information than the land satellites now commonly used.

HARD WORK OF LU PING'S GROUP IN HONG KONG CITED

HK060917 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1327 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 4 Feb (XINHUA) -- The legal specialists group headed by Lu Ping, secretary general of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office and concurrently deputy secretary general of the Basic Law Drafting Committee, has been in Hong Kong for a month, and will be leaving for the mainland with the planned tasks fulfilled.

Reviewing the Past Month

The specialist group consists of 12 members who arrived in Hong Kong on 4 January. Most of them are the cream of science and law circles, famous in China. The majority are over 50, and some are well advanced in age. They made light of the distance of thousands of miles from Beijing to Hong Kong. Without a proper rest, they started their investigation and research day and night, occupying themselves in a series of activities in listening to the suggestions of the Hong Kong people.

Over the past month, they have had contact with people of various strata in Hong Kong, and have held more than 100 discussion meetings of various sizes. On average, their activities involved from three to four items per day. In one day, nine activities were arranged for them from morning until night. The specialist group has successively visited 1,100 people, including NPC delegates in Hong Kong; CPPCC members; members of the Basic Law Drafting and Consultative Committees; personages of political, industrial and commercial, and banking and trade circles; navigation, labor, and education circles; press, movie and television circles; legal, religious, and women's circles; social organizations; professional people; and government workers. This means that the specialist group has come into contact with 1 in every 5,000 Hong Kong people and listened to their suggestions. Such a figure and a proportion cannot be called large, but it is remarkable considering the short time in which all this was accomplished. The specialist group has also visited government organs, courts of justice, the stock exchange, the gold and silver exchange, factories, dockyards, schools, cultural centers, shopping centers, the race course, and temples, to see for themselves how society operates in Hong Kong and conditions in other respects.

Wherever they went, the specialist group met with a warm reception and welcome from people of all strata. Chu Tsu-han, chairman of the Chinese Chamber of Commerce and Industry, said in his welcoming speech: "Since the specialist group arrived in Hong Kong from Beijing, it has begun a series of activities, contacted personages of various circles, and learned about the environment of Hong Kong on the spot as reference material for the drafting of the basic law. This has proved that the Chinese authorities attach importance to local public opinion, and the Hong Kong people are happy about it." Huang Yun-tian, vice chairman of the Buddhist Association, admired the specialist group's spirit of doing solid work, penetrating all strata seeking advice. He said: "The fact of the specialists coming to Hong Kong to make on-the-spot investigations to gain a profound understanding of the situation has shown that the Chinese authorities have adopted very meticulous and serious measures in carrying out this unprecedentedly arduous work, drawing up the basic law for the future government of Hong Kong in line with the tentative concept of one country, two systems."

Common Concern for the Basic Law

Since the formal initialing of the Sino-British joint declaration on the question of Hong Kong, the 5 million Hong Kong people have more and more come to understand that the fate of the Hong Kong people is closely related to the future of Hong Kong, as well as to China's future.

The Sino-British joint declaration has already sketched the future Hong Kong, and the more specific basic law will draw a blueprint for the Hong Kong special administrative region after 1997. Therefore, the basic law has naturally become the focus of common concern for the 5 million Hong Kong compatriots.

Over the past month, the activities of Lu Ping and the specialist group have almost become daily important news items in various Hong Kong papers and radio and TV stations. Through the media, Lu Ping, as representative of the specialist group, has become a figure known to everybody in Hong Kong. It is precisely out of such common concern for the basic law that the people of all circles in Hong Kong have proposed many valuable suggestions to the specialist group through face-to-face contacts, written reports, and letters. Suggestions were proposed on such issues as the structure of the basic law, the relationship between the basic law and the Constitution, the link between the reform of the Hong Kong government system and the basic law, the selection of the top government officials of the Hong Kong special administrative region, the relationship between the future administrative organs and legislative organs, the relationship between the central government and the special administration regional government, the rights and obligations of citizens, and right to interpret and to revise the basic law. One of the Hong Kong members of the Basic Law Drafting Committee, known as "the most enthusiastic," has himself drafted a program for the basic law, which he presented to the specialist group for their reference. In addition, the specialist group has received many written reports on the drafting of the basic law by many organizations and professional people.

Of course, during this process, different social strata and people of different political views have aired their viewpoints and worries, including such questions as: Will the basic law be affected by the "four cardinal principles"? Will capitalist social operation of Hong Kong be impeded? If the reform of the Hong Kong government system fails to fall in line with the basic law, will it affect the stability of Hong Kong? Will "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong" eventually become "Beijing people ruling Hong Kong"? Will there be legal guarantees after the basic law is drawn up? Will it be interfered with by the "rule of men" and be arbitrarily explained and revised? Lu Ping and the specialist group have listened to these questions in earnest, and discussed them with people in a harmonious atmosphere.

A Speech of Sincere Words and Earnest Wishes

In view of past experiences, quite a number of Hong Kong people have shown their doubts and worries. This is entirely understandable. However, the times are marching on, and some of their doubts and worries are really unnecessary.

Take the issue of "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong," which has been most talked about in the media. Will the formulation "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong" be dropped from now on? Will "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong" eventually become "Beijing people ruling Hong Kong"? Lu Ping and the specialist group have repeatedly answered these questions, the most representative of which is a speech by Lu Ping to industrial and commercial personages at the Chinese General Chamber of Commerce on 11 January.

In his speech, apart from sincerely hoping the personages of industrial and commercial circles would air their views on the future political system of Hong Kong, the administrative organs, the legislative organs, government officials, and elections, he repeatedly touched upon the issue of "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong."

Lu Ping said: "Some people say the formulation of 'Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong' will no longer be proposed. This is wrong, and a misunderstanding. State policy is quite clear about it, Hong Kong will exercise a high level of autonomy in the future. Hong Kong people will rule Hong Kong as a matter of course. Beijing people ruling Hong Kong is a complete impossibility, and it is unnecessary. The principle of Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong will remain unchanged, and the spirit of the joint declaration will remain unchanged from beginning to end."

And he said: "Speaking of the anxiety concerning our interference in Hong Kong's affairs, it is neither possible nor necessary."

Lu Ping also said: "Hong Kong pursues capitalism, and the mainland socialism. What we are familiar with is the socialist system, but not capitalist matters. So it can only be Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong. It is unnecessary to worry about it; it is misunderstanding us, failing to understand our policy."

Here, on three occasions, Lu Ping said "unnecessary," and the personages of the industrial and commercial circles present kept saying that Lu Ping was sincere, and that it was a speech of sincere words and earnest wishes, and an enlightenment to them.

Practice is the best test for judging truth. People can see from the words and actions of the specialist group in Hong Kong that the Basic Law Drafting Committee, which has shouldered a historical mission, is certainly working hard on the basis of pooling the wisdom of the masses, and that it will put the spirit of "Hong Kong people ruling Hong Kong" into the basic law in rigorous legal terms, and that other problems will also be appropriately solved.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PHILIPPINE ELECTION

Senator Lugar on 'Manipulation'

OW081908 Beijing XINHUA in English 1901 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 8 (XINHUA) -- Richard Lugar, the chief of the U.S. observers team monitoring the Philippine presidential election, today accused the Philippine Election Commission of "managing" the election results. In an interview shortly after his arrival in Cebu, Richard Lugar, who is chairman of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, bewailed the slow counting of votes by the Commission on Election (Comelec). "It appears to me that there was management of count and that only 10 percent of the election results were available this morning," he said. "That is very disturbing."

In a separate intreview in the chapter office in Cebu of the National Movement for Free Elections (Namfrel), Lugar bewailed the failure of many voters to see their names in the list of registered voters. According to Namfrel chairman Jose Concepcion, 10 percent of Metro Manila voters or about 400,000 voters were disenfranchised. This, he said, would "greatly affect results of the elections." "I am of the impression that the more we travel around the country there was a gross problem with regard to the voting list," Lugar said. "We keep hearing of this bizarre situation of intimidation of voters in some parts of the country. It is certainly not democratic," he said. He said if there was a stall that went on for hours, it just simply defied any other explanations, other than gross manipulation.

Beijing Tagalog Report

HK090625 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Text] XINHUA NEWS AGENCY reports from Manila: Preliminary unofficial election returns from 140 out of 65,797 precincts show reelectionist President Ferdinand Marcos leading his opponent 3 to 1. However, the final official tally by the Commission on Elections will only be known on Monday. This election has been marked by widespread killings, vote buying, and harassment by armed goons. Nonetheless, there was a heavier turnout of voters than during the 1984 parliamentary elections.

Independent poll watchers said that harassment and intimidation in many places seriously infringed on the votes of the 26 million Filipinos. Not less than 35 persons were killed in election violence and most of the victims were opposition supporters. In Makati, goons entered precincts and mauled poll watchers, according to Jose Concepcion, chairman of the National Citizens Movement for Free Elections [Namfrel]. Priests and nuns held onto the ballot boxes so that they would not be snatched. Namfrel charged elections officials with fraud. According to a Namfrel spokesman, supposed indelible ink was found to be easy to erase.

Marcos voted in his hometown in Batac, Ilocos Norte, while Mrs Aquino cast her vote in San Miguel, Tarlac. Meanwhile, opposition vice presidential candidate Salvador Laurel voted in Tanawan, Batangas. The PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY quoted Laurel as saying that he would have no choice but to accept the people's choice if elected vice president to President Marcos. Laurel made this statement amid reporters from the KBL [Kilusang Bagong Lipunan] and United Nationalist Democratic Organization camps that the Marcos-Laurel combination might triumph.

In Washington, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said that whoever is elected president in the Philippines, the United States will strive to maintain its bases in the country. Reagan added that he hoped that U.S.-Philippine friendship will be preserved regardless of the Filipino people's choice for president.

Marcos, Aquino Speak

OW111518 Beijing XINHUA in English 1504 GMT 11 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 11 (XINHUA) -- President Marcos said here today that he was prepared to invite Corazon Aquino and other oppositionists to a council of state he is to organize, while Mrs. Aquino announced today the election was a fraud and she had actually won.

Speaking in a brief press conference at the presidential palace this afternoon, Marcos said, "I intend to organize a council of state to be composed of members of the political groups, including majority and opposition parties, former foreign ministers, presidents and candidates for president." He said that the council would be the highest advisory body in the government. Mrs. Aquino, Marcos said, could introduce whatever measures she thinks are needed to carry on the government's programs and if that is good to adopt then he will adopt it.

At the same time, the president sought to allay fears of post-election violence, saying that his administration is trying to keep away from a situation where there will be confrontation. Marcos said that he will abide by the decision taken by the National Assembly regarding their declaration of an election victory. Corazon Aquino issued a statement to the press here today especially for her "foreign friends." She accused what she called the "most shameful electoral fraud." She also noted that her campaign van was shot and a provincial campaign chairman and a campaign worker were killed. "The counting was slowed down and the government reached again into its seemingly inexhaustible bag of tricks for yet another means to cheat the people of their victory." Corazon declared. She asked Marcos to concede now, saying "so that I can begin the process of reconciliation in a climate of amity, unity and peace."

Canvassing Beings

OW111912 Beijing XINHUA in English 1845 GMT 11 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 11 (XINHUA) -- The Philippine National Assembly began the official canvass of election results tonight after ironing out the kinks in the canvassing procedures. The assembly convened this afternoon for the cavass but the counting could not start until parliament members from the ruling and the opposition reached an agreement on the canvassing procedures after a nearly five-hour debate.

The boxes containing certificates of canvass were opened in front of a bipartisan board of tellers and the whole assembly one by one. The ten-member board of tellers was created yesterday to assist the speaker in the tabulation. Up to 9:00 p.m. this evening, the assembly has received 103 certificates of election returns out of a total of 137, the secretary general of the National Assembly announced. The assembly has set aside 15 session days for the tabulation of the certificates. The final results of the tabulation will be the basis proclaiming the winners in the presidential and vice-presidential contest. The National Assembly building was placed under heavy guard as thousands of supporters of Corazon Aquino were anxiously waiting outside for the results.

THAI-JAPANESE CONCERN FOR SOVIET BASES IN SRV

OW111205 Beijing XINHUA in English 0901 GMT 11 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 11 (XINHUA) -- Thailand and Japan share the view that the Soviet military bases at Vietnam's Da Nang and Cam Ranh, besides posing a threat to Southeast Asia, affect Japan and the rest of the world as well. Asa Sarasin, deputy foreign minister, made this remark here yesterday after his meeting with visiting Japanese Deputy Foreign Minister Shinichi Yanai. He said Thailand and Japan had expressed worries over the Soviet military installations in Vietnam. Yanai briefed Asa on the recent Japanese-Soviet foreign ministers' meeting in Tokyo. Thailand and Japan agreed that Japanese and Soviet leaders should keep on holding meetings, Asa said.

Referring to the Kampuchean issue, Asa said both countries demanded that Vietnam withdraw its troops from Kampuchea and let the Kampucheans decide their own destiny. Asa said the major problem that affects the development of Thailand's relations with Japan and the United States is the problem of Thai exports of textiles, canned food, steel tubes and rice to the two countries. He said Japan attaches great importance to the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and is making efforts to promote cooperation with the private enterprises and governments of ASEAN countries.

[Summary] Katmandu, 28 Dec (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Nepalese construction workers held a rally at Fuerping today on the Chinese-Nepalese border to celebrate the completion and commissioning of the Balabis-Kedali section of the China-Nepal Friendship Highway. The highway, 114.479 kilometers in length, is the only roadway linking Katmandu with the Nepalese-Chinese border. With Chinese assistance, the highway opened to traffic in 1967. However, the Balabis-Kedali section was washed out by floods in 1981. According to an agreement reached between the Chinese and Nepalese Governments, China was to send a road construction team from Shandong Province to repair this section of the friendship highway gratuitously. Through close cooperation between the Chinese and Nepalese technicians and workers, the damaged roadway and bridges were repaired and rebuilt.

AFGHAN GUERRILLAS PREPARE FOR PROLONGED WAR

OW101348 Beijing XINHUA in English 1326 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Text] Islamabad, February 10 (XINHUA) -- Sixty-seven Afghan civilians were killed or wounded last month in Russian bombardment and there is no indication that the Soviet Union is willing to pull out its troops from Afghanistan, although it is a must. This is said today by Gulbuddin Hikmatyar, president of the Afghan Islamic Party, in an interview with XINHUA. He said Soviet MIG-25s have resorted to frequent night raids on the Afghan mujahidin (holy-war fighters) caravans, causing heavy casualties.

Asked whether the Afghan resistence forces can sustain a prolonged war against the strong enemy, Hikmatyar said: "The resistance, far from subsiding, is being intensified. The Afghan mujahidin are prepared for a long war till their final victory." "They will never lay down their weapons before they win freedom of the country," he added. Hikmatyar contradicted the notion that Soviet occupation of Afghanistan has been a fait accompli. "The Russian troops," he said, "control a limited area of no more than ten percent of Afghanistan. Even their control of big cities is being weakened." He said that guerrilla bases are spreading all over the country and much stronger than before. It is not possible for the Russians to crush them. "Last year, we carried out big operations against almost all Russian military bases and airports in Afghanistan," the guerrilla leader said.

Speaking on the eventual solution to the Afghan problem, Hikmatyar said the key to the settlement of the issue is no other than the immediate withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan. Commenting on the Geneva indirect talks on the Afghan issue between Islamabad and Kabul, of which the sixth round of negotiation is scheduled to be held, he said the two warring parties in Afghanistan are the Soviet Union and the Afghan mujahidin. "Without the participation of the two sides," he said, "it is very difficult, if not absolutely impossible, to make any substantial progress in seeking a peaceful solution to the Afghan question."

With regard to the difficulties facing the mujahidin, he said: "The Afghan nation has paid dearly for the restoration of its independence. One million Afghans have been killed and 4.5 million more reduced to refugees in foreign lands since the Russian invasion six years ago." "Yet the Afghan mujahidin are still fighting in high morale," he emphasized.

FRANCE'S MITTERRAND REAFFIRMS NUCLEAR POLICY

[Text] Paris, February 8 (XINHUA) -- French President Francois Mitterrand today reaffirmed the independence of France's nuclear deterrent, indicating that France had no intention to share its defense system with its neighboring countries. At a conference on defense issues organized by the "Here and Now" movement, Mitterrand said that France had neither the means of having offensive weapons nor the will of acting on the offensive, as he referred to the existence of the French nuclear arsenal.

In terms of nuclear arms, Mitterrand said that he did not believe in the bellicose intentions of the Soviets but people were obliged to argue about the number of nuclear arms that the Soviets possessed. The president said that the Soviet Union and the United States each possessed about 10,000 nuclear warheads and that France had 150, which were sufficient for defense and for prevention of an eventual aggression. Mitterrand denied that France intended to extend its nuclear deterrent to neighboring countries including Federal Germany. He also made it clear that Federal Germany had shown no apparent desire to exchange United States nuclear backing for French protection.

ITALIAN PRIME MINISTER COMMENTS ON DISARMAMENT

OW111139 Beijing XINHUA in English 0729 GMT 11 Feb 86

He made these remarks when he exchanged views at a meeting with Paul Nitze, U.S. President Ronald Reagan's special adviser on arms control, on the Geneva nuclear disarmament talks, the latest arms reduction proposal by Soviet leader Mihhail Gorbachev and U.S. President Ronald Reagan's personal letter to Craxi concerning the Soviet proposal, according to a government bulletin issued after the meeting. 'BRAVE STEP' IN 1985 REFORMS PRAISED, ENCOURAGED

HK12074 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 12 Feb 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "A Brave Step"]

[Text] As an old Chinese saying goes: "In doing anything, it is difficult to begin." There is also a Western saying: "A good beginning means half done." When we review the process of economic structural reform in 1985 at the beginning of spring 1986, we, in particular, deeply understand the meaning of these two sayings. Through 1 year of efforts, we have already fulfilled the task of "ensuring the victory of the initial battle," a task put forth at the beginning of last year. In the first year of all-round reform, we took a fairly great step forward and scored an achievement better than we had expected. We have already made a good beginning. In Comrade Deng Xiaoping's words, last year we took "a brave step" on the path of our reform.

In carrying out reform, it is always necessary to overcome difficulties and to undergo hardship and risks. This is particularly true in China, a big country with a complicated situation. In carrying out our economic structural reform, we have to explore a path building socialism with Chinese characteristics. In whatever sense, this is a brand new undertaking. On the one hand, we have no successful precedents to which we can refer. On the other hand, the force of habit from the old system is still very strong. For several decades, our economic structure spun in an old orbit, but now we want to switch it to a new pattern. Undoubtedly, there will be extremely great difficulties and risks. In order to enact reform abolishing the old and establishing the new system, we cannot help but pay a certain price. We even must endure a certain degree of social turbulence. This turbulence is the jolting we must undergo in our progress and may cause dizziness for some people, but it is by no means the turmoil from which we have suffered bitterly. Nevertheless, this turbulence is a grim test of our economic and mental capacity for endurance. In the economic sphere, some problems have emerged in the process of reform; in the ideological sphere, there have indeed been some different views. It is the people's will to implement reform. But we cannot say that there are no differences in views or even no misgivings or objections regarding the actual measures and steps of reform, the estimate of the degree of reform's success and the part of reform directly involving some people's personal interests. What we should rejoice in is that in spite of the difficulties and risks we have encountered, we have not stopped our progress and have continued to forge ahead conscientiously and prudently. In many important aspects of our urban and rural economic systems, including the sensitive links of our price and wage systems and the system of agricultural and sideline products purchases, we have taken a brave step. This step was of far-reaching significance. Some foreign commentators also said that this was a "quiet revolution," which "revitalized China."

The facts of our successes have given us a convincing assessment of our courage in carrying out reform. Our rural reform began relatively early and people have a relatively clear view about it; therefore, there is no need to say much about it. In our urban economic structure, ownership structure has tended to diversify. In this structure, socialist public ownership naturally occupies a dominant position. Our enterprises have been invigorated, and we have effectively given play to the regulatory role of the market mechanism. We have greatly strengthened economic ties at home and abroad and begun to switch from the direct control management method to the indirect control management method. We have improved our people's living standards. A brand new situation has also emerged in the spheres of people's thoughts, views and lifestyles. We have smoothed our rough and bumpy path of progress and gradually reduced the complaints which, for a time were quite loud.

Facts have taught people to realize that reform is the only way out for us and that we have the courage and ability to follow this path of reform. The great and outstanding insight of the CPC Central Committee and the confidence and will of people all over our country were fully reflected in reforms last year. They are the basic guarantees for the sure victory of our cause.

"A principle for civil and military rule is that there should alternately be exertion and relaxation." Having taken the first brave step, this year the major task of economic structural reform is to do a good job in "consolidation, assimilation, supplementation, and improvement" on the basis of reform successes last year. At the same time, we should intensify our investigation and study and reform experiments in order to make good preparations for taking even more important steps of reform next year and in the year following it. Of course, this does not mean that our reform tasks are lighter now and we will stop pushing the reform forward.

After exerting ourselves in fighting one battle, we will consolidate our position in a planned manner and improve the economic and social results of the reform we carried out last year. This precisely means that we are to expand the achievements of the battle. We should satisfactorily solve some outstanding problems in order to remove the defects and maintain the advantages. In regard to the fact that we only adopted reform measures in major spheres at that time, we should carefully do our work in other spheres in order to have a complete set of measures for our reform. Through the above-mentioned work, our reform achievements will be more stable and desirable. These are all arduous and painstaking aspects of work, to which we should attach great importance and vigorously and satisfactorily accomplish.

In short, reform continues to be the first priority task of this year. All other aspects of our work should be conducive to reform and ensure the smooth progress of reform. At the very beginning of this year, with extremely great resolution and prompt measures, the CPC Central Committee grasped the work of setting our party style right and fighting against corruption inside our party and government. This conformed to the common aspiration of our people and party. One of the reasons for this was that these practices of corruption and unhealthy trends interfered with our great reform undertaking and undermined our four modernizations. Only by waging a resolute and sustained struggle against them can we ensure a stable social and political environment for our undertaking in socialist reform, a strong leading force giving play to the initiative of the vast number of people, and a situation where upper and lower levels unite as one and strive with one heart and one mind. Fighting corruption a correcting unhealthy practices by no means signifies a relaxation in reform nor the relinquishing of our reform. Precisely to the contrary, they are aimed at clearing obstacles to reform in order to further deepen it. The reform and rectification of our party style supplement each other. They have a common goal, namely, to rally people together to carry out the struggle and renew our efforts in order to build our country into a powerful modern socialist country with a high degree of civilization and democracy.

Without the "brave step" last year, there could not have been such a fine situation this year; if we stop here, we will obtain lesser results or fail to maintain this step. All our work this year is, after all, to be carried out around the aim of taking a new step in reform. Here we should display the persevering spirit of the foolish old man. If we have this spirit, we will be able to continue forging at a rapid pace along the road of reform. On the basis of last year's work, we can foresee that through this year's "consolidation, assimilation, supplementation, and improvement," we will continue reforms with bravery and finish the arduous, glorious, and great process of reform.

'MOMENTUM OF THE YEAR OF THE TIGER' LAUDED

HK120513 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 9 Feb 86 p 2

[Article by Li Demin: "The Momentum of the Year of the Tiger"]

[Text] The fireworks of yesterday evening provided a send-off for the hard-working and persevering golden ox, and the spring tide this morning ushered in the powerful and majestic tiger. The people of the whole country are celebrating the Spring Festival of the Year of the Tiger.

To celebrate the festival, families have been reunited and friends and relatives have come together to drink and talk to their hearts' content. Once they have started talking, they will talk about everything: things which happened yesterday, things which happen today, and things which will happen tomorrow. They will talk about family affairs, state affairs, and world affairs. Thousands upon thousands of families have become thousands upon thousands of forums. Since this year is the Year of the Tiger, people will naturally talk about tigers. Although tigers sometimes hurt people, people still show a certain respect for them and even admire them in some ways. Are the fear-inspiring prowess of a tiger, the vigor of a tiger, the firm strides of a tiger, the leaps of a tiger, ministers brave like tigers, generals brave like tigers, tiger cubs, and so on not commendatory terms? The reason is that the "king of the mountain" has a bold and powerful character and demeanor, worthy of emulation by human beings. Since ancient times, many artists have become world-famous for their skill in drawing tigers. However, "trying to draw a tiger and ending up with the likeness of a dog" is also a satiric saying.

In discussing tigers today, we will naturally ponder the on-going struggle to rectify party style; people have indeed seen a momentum with the "vigor of a tiger" in the Year of the Tiger. The issue of party style has recently become a topic about which people frequently talk. The Chinese people are worthy of being masters of the socialist motherland. We are not only concerned about food, clothing, and a peaceful life, but also very much concerned about the health of the body of the party and the growth and prosperity of the party cause. We have closely tied our destiny to that of the party and the state. Not long ago, the masses of the people were angry to see that some party members, even party members with several decades of revolutionary history and holding senior positions, had forgotten the party's goals, flung away the party's traditions, engaged in unhealthy practices, and abused their power to seek private gains. They were even more worried to see that some party members, or their relatives, had colluded with the dregs of society in profiteering, swindling, smuggling, and other evil activities. How can this be allowed to continue? However, people have recently sensed a healthier atmosphere prevailing over the unhealthy one, and those who wantonly committed crimes have begun to restrain themselves. There are of course some reasons for this. Several days after New Year's Day 1986, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat held meetings of central organ cadres and gave the mobilization order to rectify party style. Shortly before and after these meetings, the central authorities issued a series of documents on perfecting rules and regulations and on strengthening discipline Both the central and local authorities are investigating and dealing with major and important cases and some people with strong "backing" [laitou 0171 7333] are being punished according to party and administrative discipline and state laws. This is most gratifying to the people and has increased the joyful atmosphere of the Spring Festival.

The CPC is determined and has effective ways to eliminate these evils for the people. In making revolution in the past, the party, like a tiger from the mountain, led the people in defeating the enemies and in building our country today. It will not be softhearted toward lawless elements and corruption within the party. In 1952, Tiapjin put Liu Qingshan and Zhang Zishan to death according to law. Several years ago, Guangdong put Wang Zhong and Ye Makan to death according to law. All this has shown that anyone who does evil things under the people's democratic dictatorship are playing the dangerous game of stroking a tiger's beard. Of course, even a tiger sometimes nods. Over a period of time, we did not grasp the work of stopping unhealthy trends firmly enough, and did not make sufficient efforts to crack down on economic and other criminals. Now, things are different. The party Central Committee is determined to firmly and solidly grasp work in this aspect. As a central leading comrade put it: "Once work is grasped firmly, there will be very good prospects."

COMMENTATOR'S ARTICLE ADDRESSES TV SMUGGLING CASE

[Commentator's article: "What Does the 'Guangyu Company Smuggling Case' Show?"]

[Text] This newspaper today publishes news about the investigation and handling of persons involved in smuggling by the Guangyu Industrial Trade General Company under the Ministry of Astronautics, with the joint efforts of the CPC Central Discipline Inspection Commission and departments concerned of the Supreme People's Procuratorate and the General Administration of Customs. This is a serious smuggling case by some companies under the charge of some state organs, who worked hand in glove with each other to speculate, profiteer, buy and resell imported television sets by lots and fraudulently purchase foreign exchange at higher exchange rates. It is the first important smuggling case to be investigated and handled since the conference for cadres of central organs.

The main persons involved in this case are cadres of state organs, most of whom are Communist Party members in leading posts. The case took place in mid-December 1984, after central document No 27 had been issued on 3 December 1984. This document explicitly banned workers of state organs from going into business. What the central authorities have said is still ringing in our ears and the ink on the central documents is hardly dry. But the persons concerned in the Ministry of Astronautics, and other units, who persisted in their old ways, violated relevant stipulations and became involved in this serious case of violating discipline and the law, thus obstructing economic reform, opening up, and the construction of the modernizations in our country. This is a very profound lesson.

What has made them so bold? To put it bluntly, they have done this for personal gain. Engaged in this illegal deal, the Guangyu Company thought it could reap a net profit of more than 100 million yuan. Reida Company and Haima Company resold their expired licenses to obtain their share of 9 million yuan in profits. The Shijiazhuang branch of the Bank of China, violating central bank regulations governing short-term loans in foreign exchange, made an illegal loan for a commission of 15 million yuan. In short, these people have been doing everything at their disposal to pursue personal gains, and they would go to any extreme. It is money that has maddened some cadres, including some leading cadres. They have forgotten all about the party purpose of serving the people heart and soul, the solemn party rules and discipline, their responsibility as public servants, and the idea that party members and cadres must set an example in observing and executing the law! They "have forgotten justice at the sight of profit," violating the law while knowing the consequences. Some of them have become criminals and have been arrested according to the law. It serves them right.

That this illegal deal should have been "legally" carried out for a certain period of time is inseparable from the serious bureaucratism and ignorance of relevant economic decrees on the part of the responsible persons of some leading organs. As responsible persons of state organs of economic work, they should have a profound understanding of the situation and have a good grasp of relevant policies and stipulations before making a relevant decision. Zhang Jun and Cheng Lianchang, respectively former minister and vice minister of astronautics, nodded approval before obtaining a clear understanding of the situation and approved this illegal deal by the Guangyu Company. They have the unshirkable responsibility of leadership. They should be duly punished under party discipline.

This is an economic case unprecedented in the 36-year history of the People's Republic in which so many senior and middle-level officials were involved and punished. This shows that our party is determined to straighten out party style, rectify unhealthy tendencies, and eliminate all corruption. The party is serious and conscientious in doing this and is taking concrete actions. Early this year, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out: "In rectifying unhealthy tendencies, it is first necessary to be resolute, and second, it is necessary to persevere." Our party and government are doing precisely this. Everyone is equal before party discipline, government discipline, and the law of the state. No matter who he is, if he should defy world opinion, disregard party discipline and the law of the state, and commit all kinds of outrages, he will not escape the punishment of party discipline and the law of the state. If we persevere in this, in a year or two a basic turn for the better in party style and social atmosphere will result.

DU RUNSHENG COMMENTS ON RURAL PROSPERITY

OW112107 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0220 GMT 26 Jan 86

["Excerpts" of speech by Du Runsheng on 20 December at national rural work conference -- "Become Better Off Earlier, Become Better Off Later, and Achieve Common Prosperity"]

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jan (XINHUA) -- Adhere to the Policy of Allowing Some Portions of the Population To Become Better Off First

1. Achieving common prosperity is a goal for which our party has always worked hard. However, our practical experience over the past 30 years and more indicates that equating common prosperity with making everybody in the same place equally affluent at the same time is illusory. Resorting to the egalitarian practice of "suppressing the rich and helping the poor" will not only fail to achieve the goal of common prosperity but end in common poverty. Our experience in the contemporary communist movement proves that after the proletariat seizes political power, a developing nation must endure a process of establishing and improving the socialist system of public ownership and realize a system of distribution according to work. It is impossible to establish a pure socialist society within a short period. Nor is it possible to eliminate income differences in society within a short period. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party, based on the spirit of seeking truth from facts, has adopted the new policy recommended by Comrade Deng Xiaoping on behalf of the central authorities by allowing some areas and some portions of the population to prosper faster than others by working hard. Spurred by economic impetus, more and more people and areas have taken the road to affluence. This policy was initiated in the countryside. As seen from practice in the past few years, this new policy has yielded remarkable results.

During the 25 years prior to the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the peasants' annual net income in China rose by only 70 yuan from 64 yuan in 1954 to 134 yuan in 1978. With the implementation of the new policy, the peasants' annual per capita net income increased by 221 yuan in the past 6 years. The number of households of low income decreased, while that of those of high income increased. The number of households with a per capita income of less than 200 yuan a year dropped from 85 percent in 1978 to 14 percent in 1984, while those with a per capita income of more than 500 yuan a year rose from 0.6 percent in 1978 to 18 percent in 1984.

This indicates that the process of becoming well off in the whole countryside remains steady and sound. Our practical experience indicates that the policy of allowing some portions of the population to become well off first by working hard in entirely correct. This policy helps develop the economy and realize the goal of common prosperity. We must unswervingly implement this policy over a protracted period.

It should be realized that there exists an income gap among peasants. According to figures provided by the State Statistical Bureau, the income gap between a typical high-income household and a low-income household increased by 0.7 times in 6 years, from 1.9 times in 1978 to 2.6 times in 1984.

2. There are objective reasons for the creation of an income gap among individuals in the course of economic growth. The socialist system of public ownership in China provides all workers with basic conditions for earning a living and the opportunity to develop. It enables social and economic development to advance toward common prosperity, and prevents the polarization of commodity economy characteristic of private ownership. However, if society continues to adhere to the principle of remuneration on the basis of work done, such differences in income are inevitable, because people differ in work skills and management ability. These differences will continue to exist over a protracted period until a system of distribution according to need is implemented.

Currently, there exist a variety of economic ownership patterns in China, with public ownership of production means predominating. In particular, it permits the existence of individual economy, with differences in the quantity and quality of production tools peasants possess or use. Also, there are differences in the nature and quantity of resources. With the progress of technology and the accumulation of funds, there will be an even wider gap among various industries in the exploitation and use of resources. In the course of economic growth, balance and fluctuation of supply and demand constantly and alternately replace each other, providing many opportunities to make a profit on the market. This enables those with greater adaptability to market changes to reap larger profits and higher income. These income differences resulting from differing conditions are inevitable. It is necessary to recognize differences in profits, while adopting appropriate regulatory measures to keep them within reasonable bounds. Only thus can we encourage the development of commodity production. Negation of these differences is tantamount to negation of economic development itself.

Furthermore, in the course of developing commodity economy, some people may look for loopholes to enrich themselves through improper business methods, appropriation of public property, plundering of people's properties, and infringement on the interests of producers and consumers. There are a handful of such people, and their income is abnormally high. They have already aroused strong indignation in society. Although this is historically an inevitable phenomenon in the course of developing commodity economy, we must and can curb and stop these practices by applying the legal and tax systems to the best of our ability.

3. China is a vast country, and the degree of economic development differs greatly in the various localities. This inevitably creates a difference in economic power and technological capability among different regions. For various historical reasons, the western part of China and other remote areas, although very rich in natural resources, still remain underdeveloped. The economy of a large part of inland China has only been half developed. Relatively speaking, some coastal areas are more advanced technologically and stronger economically, and have been able to absorb advanced production and management techniques from foreign countries earlier. After these areas achieve economic prosperity, they will push the center of economic development to the central and western regions. We realize that some economically underdeveloped areas may achieve local economic prosperity by combining local resources and advanced technologies introduced from foreign countries or other localities. We should also realize that some areas may achieve temporary economic prosperity. But, viewing the nation as a whole, the main trend of economic development will be from the eastern to the western part in decades to come. The relatively low prices of primary products and relatively high prices of processed products, which have existed for a long time, as well as the impossibility of bringing profit margins of these products to the same level at the present time, have created a better environment for capital accumulation in the eastern part of China, with its concentration of processing industries. Although the state may use a macroeconomic approach to adjust the growing gap in income distribution created by the differing degrees of economic development in various regions, we must admit that this growing gap in income distribution is an inevitable phenomenon in the course of developing commodity production.

This does not mean that development opportunities no longer exist in these regions. Differing degrees of economic development in different regions and mutual dependence of supply and demand among these regions provide opportunities for opening up markets beneficial to everyone. If these regions could grasp these opportunities and establish a foothold for economic development by pooling their limited manpower, material, and financial resources, and by taking advantage of the resources of individual localities, they would be able to create fundamental conditions for shifting the state's economic development strategy and improving their own local economic conditions.

On the Argument for Efficiency and Equality

4. The argument for economic efficiency and social equality has existed for many years in Western countries. Social equality refers to the equalization of income of all members of society, while economic efficiency refers to the organization of production elements conducive to economic development and the mode of economic development. Markets are needed to provide, on the basis of economic efficiency, remuneration to commodity producers who have invested capital or labor or have made a technical contribution. This remuneration is income for these people. The following phenomenon is not uncommon. It is necessary to maintain a difference in remuneration in order to improve economic efficiency, and high economic efficiency is unlikely if income is equalized.

In a capitalist system, these contradictions between production and distribution, and between efficiency and equality, cannot be completely resolved, because the production means are owned by individuals, and interests and profits, as a form of distribution, are based on the exploitation of laborers employed by capital holders. Socialist countries are based on public ownership, and therefore provide every condition for ironing out contradictions between efficiency and equality. Through appropriate distribution and redistribution policies, it is possible for the people's regime to achieve the highest possible efficiency with a minimum of inequality, or to achieve the highest possible equality with the smallest possible loss in efficiency. Our economic reform will create practical conditions for realizing this objective.

5. In the past, we erroneously regarded social equality as absolute equality, handled issues on equality without taking economic efficiency into consideration, adopted administrative means of egalitarianism and indiscriminate transfer of resources, maintained equality at the expense of economic efficiency, negated development of commodity production under socialist conditions, negated the objective law that income distribution is subject to market situation, practiced forced intervention with noneconomic means, severed the relationship between equality and efficiency, and disrupted the relationship whereby equality and efficiency can improve each other in a socialist society. Such forced intervention contributed to the growth of egalitarian social ideology among small farmers, which even now remains the major ideological obstacle of the development of a commodity economy. As a result, some people cannot understand correctly the fact that the living standard of the whole society has improved while the gap in income has grown relatively wider. These people have ignored general improvements in living standards and improvements in their own economic situation, simply hoping that the income gap among people could be eliminated as soon as possible. Although their living conditions have greatly improved, some people still feel that they are lagging behind other people, or think that other people's living conditions have improved even more. These people tend to use some abnormal cases as references for comparison, and tend to negate the policy of allowing some people to become better off earlier. This is a kind of ideological tendency we should seriously endeavor to curb now.

Create Conditions for Realizing the Goal of Common Prosperity

6. Material conditions for realizing the goal of common prosperity can only be created with economic efficiency. We should exercise appropriate control over the income gap, but at the same time we should take more care in ensuring the development of productive forces, and recognize the positive role of laborers' independent material benefits and the gap in income in developing productive forces. We should not intervene excessively in income differences, resulting from the difference in the individual ability of producers and business operators. We should only exercise appropriate control over some cases involving extraordinarily wide gaps in income, and over some special consumption projects by adjusting social consumption funds. High income resulting from differences in capital and resources possessed may be adjusted through the progressive income taxation or through taxation on resources and property. High income earned by business owners who have exploited market deficiencies or discrepancies appearing in the course of economic reform should be curbed with taxation, and, in addition, market administration regulations should be established and improved as soon as possible to close loopholes. The legal system should also be improved so that those seeking exorbitant profits by violating the law can be brought to justice. Party members and cadres who lead the masses in rural areas to achieve common prosperity should be commended, those who set an example in becoming better off through hard work should be protected, and those who acquire wealth by abusing powers or through crooked means should be handled according to the law. The policy of allowing some people to become better off first should not be altered. At the same time, it is necessary to create an optimum climate to encourage peasant investment in the development of production and to prevent them from engaging in excessive consumption and carrying out acts such as business speculation. What we should do is provide basic conditions for steady development. Economic development has promoted the division of labor in society, resulting in the emergence of a large number of specialized households in rural areas. We should protect, encourage, and support these specialized households and allow them to become better off sooner than others by applying advanced scientific and technological techniques and operation and management methods. The appearance of artificially created improper "rich families" in rural areas is entirely different from allowing some people to become better off first through industrious work. Supporting rich families at the expense of sacrificing progress opportunities for the general public does not conform to party policy and should not be considered a normal phenomenon.

7. In our country there are basic prerequisites to preventing polarization, and there is a guarantee for embarking on the road toward common prosperity. In rural areas these are reflected primarily in the persistent public ownership of basic means of production, the perfection and development of the cooperative economy, and equal opportunities accorded to all laborers. Facts have proven that where the cooperative economy has been fully developed, more peasants have become better off, and the advance toward affluence is more rapid. The motivating force of the cooperative economy comes from the peasants' demand to develop commodity production or, more specifically, their need for services before and after production and their demands to expand their operations. In view of this, it is necessary to consider the needs of commodity economy development in different localities and proceed from providing required services to establish and perfect the various kinds of economic associations suited to different local conditions on the basis of household operations.

Implementation of the cooperative system, however, cannot eliminate differences in the degree of affluence and in the speed with which affluence is acquired. When the system of distribution according to work is implemented in a cooperative under a collective's centralized management, differences in individuals' income should, of course, exist. In a cooperative under dual management, the difference in the degree of affluence is all the more inevitable among peasant households due to their different production conditions. Moreover, the differences among cooperative operational organizations in the means of production in their possession, their methods of operations and management, and their geographical conditions comprise another important factor for the income gap among peasant households. For this reason, implementation of the cooperative economic system can only result in common prosperity in the sense of establishing common development and prevent class polarization. In no way does it mean simultaneous and equal prosperity. In view of this, we should make a positive effort to perfect and develop the cooperative system and, at the same time, to guard against absolute egalitarianism and not slip back into the old rut of "sharing food from the same big bowl" and "throw every unfavorable thing onto the big heap" [gui da dui 2981 1129 1018]. In this way we will maintain the inherent unity of allowing some people to become better off first and achieving common prosperity.

8. To make low-income earners better off, we should try to improve them by raising their educational level and cultivating their production skills and operational capability so as to enable them to meet the needs of developing the commodity economy. What is more important is to open more avenues for them to develop diversified operations. It is necessary to regard the changing use of the rural labor force as a fundamental condition for achieving the long-term strategic goal of common prosperity. In particular, while the fulfillment of agricultural production needs can be ensured, feasible steps should be taken to switch the use of the rural labor force from developing agriculture to developing secondary and tertiary production and from the countryside to cities and towns. The flow of the labor force includes the "flow" from one sector to another and from one locality to another as well as the flow between different social strata in urban and rural areas. Allowing a steady flow in the labor force is not only conducive to the creation of equal opportunities but can also encourage people to progress and help raise economic efficiency. This is another potential waiting to be tapped in our society.

On the whole, only when a steady growth of the gross national product is guaranteed will it be possible to provide the necessary material basis for common prosperity. This is because we should not merely pay attention to distribution but, more important, we should pay attention to production in order to eliminate various differences. The task of rural reform is to create a favorable economic environment for developing rural productive forces, primarily favorable market conditions. However, if the applied technology is not advanced, if the scale of operations is too small, and if labor productivity cannot be raised, this market condition cannot become a favorable factor for economic development.

According to the fundamental Marxist view, distribution is determined by production, the relations of distribution hinge on the relations of production, and distribution, in itself, is a product of production. Because of this, when speaking of common prosperity, we cannot avoid discussing the development of productive forces. The degree of social material affluence determines the total amount of income that can be distributed to people. The goal of common prosperity can only be achieved successfully under the premise of highly developed production, abundant supplies of social products, and perfection of the system of public ownership. To achieve the goal of common prosperity, efforts should be made to raise the level of rural social productive forces and to develop a cooperative economy step by step in line with the needs of development of productive forces and based on the willingness of the masses. This shows the two sides of the issue, a fairly prolonged course of economic development, and an inevitable road in the advance of history.

TECHNOLOGY, TOWNSHIP ENTERPRISES CONSIDERED

HK070651 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 27 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Wu Mingyu: "A Fundamental Policy for Promoting the Technological Progress of Township Enterprises -- A Few Points of Understanding on the 'Spark Plan'"]

[Text] Recently, the CPC Central Committee and State Council entrusted the State Science and Technology Commission to work out and implement a "spark plan." This has received a warm response from the broad masses of various provinces, municipalities, and regions and aroused their great interest. Now many places are also drafting their own "spark plans." What is the fundamental purpose and target of the "spark plan?" Why do we need it. What will be its influence on national economic and social development, especially on town and township enterprises which are springing up vigorously?

The purpose of the "spark plan" is to draw the spark of modern science and technology toward the countryside and the town and township enterprises so that it can spread far and wide and forcefully promote the local economy. The targets of the state's "spark plan" during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period are: 1) To develop 100 complete sets of technological equipment suitable for the countryside and the town and township enterprises and put them into group production; 2) To help establish 500 model town and township enterprises and provide them with complete technology and production techniques and methods of standard management, product design, and quality control; 3) To train a number of educated youths and grass-roots cadres for towns and townships every year so that they can master one or two advanced technologies suitable for their own areas and some knowledge of modern management.

In order to fully understand the significance of the "spark plan," it is first necessary to study and analyze the position and role of town and township enterprises in China's national economy.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, China's industrial and agricultural production has been developing rapidly. Total grain output reached more than 800 billion jin in 1984 and total industrial and agricultural output value reached more than 1,000 billion yuan. A very important part of this achievement came from town and township enterprises. By the end of 1984, total output value of these enterprises already exceeded 170 billion yuan, comprising more than 17 percent of the total industrial and agricultural output value or more than 24 percent of the total industrial output value. In 1984, the growth rate of town and township enterprises was even higher. Their total output value reached more than 230 billion yuan, nearly 20 percent of total industrial and agricultural output value or 30 percent of total industrial output value.

By the end of this century, China will quadruple its total industrial and agricultural output value, which should reach 2,800 billion yuan. How can we achieve this aim? Now we have a vital new force. If town and township enterprises continue to increase their output value at a rate of 10 percent each year, in the year 2000 their output value will exceed 1,000 billion yuan and will make up one-third of the national total industrial and agricultural output value. From this we can see that town and township enterprises are an important pillar of our national economy.

Apart from its great economic significance, the development of town and township enterprises is also of far-reaching strategic significance to China's economic and social development.

First, it has opened multiple possibilities for the settlement of the surplus labor problem in China's countryside. For many years, we had several policies preventing rural people from entering cities blindly and in large numbers. We established many labor-intensive industries as a solution to the surplus labor problem. But the problem was not solved. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, due to increased agricultural labor productivity, there has been more surplus labor in the countryside. There are presently more than 360 million laborers in China's countryside. In 1949, right after the country had been liberated, a rural laborer had to till an average 9 mu of land; now a laborer has only 4.5 mu of land to tend. In addition, there are a total of more than 200 million horsepower of farm machinery and equipment in the countryside. This equals 700 to 800 million laborers. Thus, the problem of surplus labor in the countrysdide has become more prominent. Although a diversified economy has been developed in the countryside, there are still many surplus laborers.

Development of town and township enterprises is now providing these surplus laborers with more employment opportunities. According to 1984 year end statistics, there were then more than 50 million laborers in town and township enterprises. In the 35 years since liberation, whenever a laborer was recruited by state-owned industry the state had to invest some 14,000 yuan in fixed assets. Thus, for 50 million laborers the state would have had to invest 700 billion yuan in fixed assets. Moreover, whenever a rural laborer was recruited and entered the city, the city had to provide him and his family with housing, work space and other public facilities amounting to 10,000 yuan. When these two expenses were combined, for the 50 million peasants living and working in the cities the state had to spend 1,200 billion yuan. It was impossible for the state to afford such great sums of money in a short period of time. Now the employment problem of 50 million people has been solved by town and township enterprises. In 1984 their output value reached more than 170 billion yuan. Not only has the economy been developed and peasant income increased, but stability of the whole socity has been greatly promoted. This is really an amazing achievement.

Second, development of town and township enterprises has accumulated good experiences for China's countryside in blazing a new trail toward modernization. The problem of how to realize modernization in the countryside is one that people are most concerned about. In the past, as a result of implementing the policy of "making grain the key link," even high-yield areas were still poor and unaffected by modernization. But now the situation is entirely different. Since a diversified economy and town and township enterprises have been developed by the peasants, the rural economic basis has been strengthened and the face of China's countryside has changed. Some comrades were concerned that the development of town and township enterprises would affect agricultural production. When some locations were hit by natural calamities last year and grain production areas were reduced, they were more apprehensive that agricultural production might drop significantly. Such apprehensions were unwarranted. What are the facts? Last year, despite serious natural calamities and a drop in grain production, our agricultural output value as a whole continued to increase.

People have often said that "when there is grain in hand, we have nothing to worry about." This is true in an agricultural society. In a society with a commodity economy it is also very important for the peasants to have money in hand. With the ability to invest and reinvest, they will have everything, such as fertilizer, farm machinery, and water conservation facilities. But where can they obtain money? They can get it chiefly through developing a diversified economy and town and township enterprises. Only when they have more money and the economic strength of the countryside is enhanced, and when "industry is capable of supplementing agriculture," can agriculture be better developed. We can imagine how serious the consequences of natural calamities would be without the vigorous development of a diversified economy and town and township enterprises.

In the course of industrialization, no country can avoid taking the road of urbanization, because many public facilities and industrial bases have to be established and concentrated. Work in many fields, such as water supply, heat supply, gas supply, road maintenance, and communications has to be centrally managed. But we must not just mechanically copy the experiences of the capitalist countries in urbanization. It is possible that China's urbanization will take its own specific road. The urbanization of many capitalist countries was based on destruction of agriculture or the bankruptcy of large numbers of peasants due to the increased mechanization of agriculture. The peasants then had no choice but to work in the cities. Many developing countries are presently following the same road in their urbanization. What road will China take? In the past we spent large sums of money to help develop large and medium-sized cities. But now, with our economic strength, it is very difficult to build many large and medium-sized new cities. We must blaze a new trail, that is, build small towns and townships all over the country, each with a population under 100,000 or less. By the year 2000, China's population will reach 1.2 billion. There is presently an urban population of 200 million in our country. By 2000 it will possibly reach 400 million. We are unable to build dozens of large cities like Shanghai, Tianjin, and Guangzhou. Therefore, the only solution is to build small towns and cities. The central authorities proposed strict control of the development of large cities while building large numbers of small towns and cities. This is an important policy decision. But what are the conditions for developing small towns and cities? A very important condition is the development of town and township enterprises. Therefore, modernization and urbanization of the countryside must rely on the development of town and township enterprises.

Third, transformation of the old and large cities also needs the support of town and township enterprises. For example, Shanghai, with its highly intensive industry, is seriously polluted and must be transformed. A solution in this transformation is to develop town and township enterprises so as to disperse some traditional inustries from this city and gradually turn the city into a technology-intensive industrial city. In Suzhou, some 80 to 90 percent of spare parts for several brand-name household electric appliances are produced by town and township enterprises. The fact that town and township enterpises have promoted the development of specialized production proves that the development of these enterprises is an important channel for the transformation of large cities and the industrial and technological transformation of these cities.

From the above-mentioned, we can see that by developing town and township enterprises, it is quite possible for us to forge a new road suited to China's conditions to eliminate differences between industry and agriculture and those between town and country.

Of course, there are still many problems in developing town and township enterprises. The main problems are: 1) There exists a degree of blindness. In some places, when the leaders got wind of something, they hastily decided to make an investment; but once they found it inapplicable, they changed their minds immediately. In some places, running woolen mills was once the prevailing practice because they were quite profitable then.

2) The level of management is insufficient. Many factories do not have a scientific management system. For example, a factory producing textile machinery has achieved very good economic returns because its products sell well in many provinces. However, in its workshops there are no fixed production lines and no systems, of personal responsibility; they store spare parts anywhere they like. 3) The technological level is low. There are almost no technicians in town and township enterprises. Of the more than 1.8 million industrial technicians in the entire country, about 400,000 are in industrial enterprises above the county level. Each enterprise has less than four technicians on average. But there are almost no technicians in the more than 6 million town and township enterprises (including those run by villages). They only have some middle-school graduates. This problem, which should be gradually and conscientiously solved, exists in many places.

Of course, this does not mean that the past phenomenon of "small indigenous groups" can thus be totally prevented. By drafting the "spark plan" and supporting technical innovation in the countryside, we are attempting to avoid such problems. Since the countryside is backward in technology, we must provide it with technology and help it develop on a healty road.

Some people may say that town and township enterprises have many other shortcomings, such as low labor productivity and economic returns, inferior quality of products, and competition with large industrial enterprises for raw materials and energy resources. That is true. However, we must look upon the question from both sides. On the question of low labor productivity, it depends on the comparison. If we compare it with the industrial level of developed countries, it is certainly very low. This is true not only regarding labor productivity in town and township enterprises but in the whole country's industrial production. If we compare it with the other fields in our country, we find that although it is lower than the labor productivity of modern enterprises, it is much higher than that of agriculture. A peasant, though working very hard throughout the year, can only produce an output value of less than 1,000 yuan. When he works in a town or township enterprise, he can produce more than 3,000 yuan. This is why peasants wish to develop town and township enterprises. Raising labor productivity means development. The transition from agriculture to manufacturing is itself an expression of raising labor productivity. Besides, we must realize that the development of town and township enterprises has greatly improved agricultural production conditions. More than 50 million peasants have left the agricultural production front, and more and more peasants will do the same in the future. This is an example of raising agricultural labor productivity.

As for economic returns, judging from some production targets, town and township enterprises are no worse than large state enterpises. According to statistics, the output value of industrial enterprises above the county level from every 100 yuan of fixed assets is 91 yuan; that produced by town and township enterprises is 229 yuan. In addition to the output value, profit and tax values of town and township enterpises are also higher. In 1984, taxes and profits turned over to the state by state enterprises on the basis of 100 yuan of fixed assets was 22 yuan; that of town and twonship enterprises was 24 yuan, nearly 20 percent of which came from town and township enterprises. Town and township enterprises naturally need to consume energy resouces, but they can also produce energy resources. Over the past 4 years, coal output increased by 150 million tons, of which 110 million tons came from small coal mines. This played an important role in mitigating contradictions between supply and demand of energy resources in our country. In the past, in order to increase production by one ton of caol, the state had to make an investment of 170 yuan. Thus, in order to increase production by 110 million tons of coal, the state would need to invest 20 billion yuan. Now all this has been achieved by the efforts of the peasants without spending a single state yuan.

The situation is the same in the production of construction materials, some 53 percent of cement, sand, and stones have been produced by town and township enterprises. These enterprises have also provided large industrial enterprises with many primary processing materials and some spare parts. In this respect, they are an essential supplement to the large state industrial enterprises.

Management of town and township enterprises must deal with the dual nature of backwardness in production management and special vitality in administrative management. Most town and township enterprises have developed in the economic competition of the market. Nobody provides them with raw materials and energy resources, so they have to purchase them at higher prices. With low management costs and few administrative personnel or idlers, town and township enterprises have treated the three links of production, supply, and sales as a whole. This shows that these enterprises are very adaptable. China's enterprise reform may well learn some useful lessons from town and township enterprises.

At present, there is a question of how to deal with town and township enterprises. Following are three methods: First, force them to close down. Since town and township enterprises have great adaptability and can easily change their products, just as the "72 metamorphoses of the Monkey King," it is impossible to force them to close down. Not even a prairie fire can destroy the grass; it grows again when the spring breeze blows. Since the peasants have need of them and are capable of management, it is impossible to close them down. Moreover, there is a new trend toward developing large numbers of small but specialized modern factories in the contemporary world. This is especially true in the United States, Japan, West Germany, Italy, France, and some developing countries. Town and township enterprises conform to this trend. Second, let them emerge by themselves and perish by themselves. If we do not give town and township enterprises any support or guidance when they encounter problems and difficulties, we may inflict great harm on the national economy, or make town and township enterprises follow a roundabout course in further development. Third, make positive efforts to guide the town and township enterprises and help them improve technological and management levels so that they can develop healthily. This is the basis of the "spark plan."

The town and township enterprises need science and technology. Science and technology must serve the development of town and township enterprises in the countryside. Implementing the "spark plan" has provided China's science and technology workers with a vast showcase for their abilities. The flexibility and initiative of town and township enterprises as well as their strong desire for technology will inevitably speed the course of transforming technological achievements into commodities and give full play to the wisdom and ability of the broad masses of science and technology workers. Only half a year has passed since the "spark plan" was drafted and put into effect. It has already drawn a warm support and response from various circles. If this plan is carried out constantly, we can expect great achievements in the future.

HENAN'S YANG XIZONG DISCUSSES DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

HK070523 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] At the Henan provincial discussion meeting on the strategy for the economic and social development which concluded yesterday, Governor He Zhukang said: The leaders of all departments at the provincial level and of all prefectures, cities, trades, and professions must have foresight and strategic thinking regarding the formulation and implementation of the strategy of development and the giving of strategic guidance as the most important task of a modern leader. He hoped: Experts, scholars, and more comrades will attach importance to and show concern for the study of the strategy of economic and social development in our province.

From 29 January to 2 February, the provincial government held a Henan provincial discussion meeting in Zhengzhou on the strategy of economic and social development, to discuss and revise the report on the study of the Henan provincial plan for the strategy of economic and social development, so as to work out as soon as possible a strategic plan which can really meet the needs of the economic society and of scientific and technological development and so as to provide a scientific basis for the provincial CPC Committee and provincial government to formulate important policy decisions.

At the meeting, Comrade He Zhukang stated his views on the importance of studying and formulating development strategy, on the main tasks of the development strategy in our province, and on the aim, focal point, and measures of the strategy. He said: By the end of this century, our province's gross industrial and agricultural output value must increase by some 400 percent. At the same time, we must strictly control the growth of population and strive to make the people's material and cultural life reach the level of a comparatively well-off family. For this purpose, we must raise the per capita gross industrial and agricultural output value and national income, which are now equal to 65 to 70 percent of the average national level, to some 85 percent of the average national level. Thus, the people's living standard can reach the level of a comparatively well-off family. Later, on this basis, we must strive to make them reach or surpass the average national level and enter the national advanced ranks. So long as we press forward in the face of difficulties, have our feet planted on solid ground, and practically and realistically work hard, we can achieve our target completely.

Comrade He Zhukang said: With a view to achieving our strategic target, we must regard reform as an overriding task at present and for a certain period in the future. We must vigorously and carefully push reform forward. We must lay stress on the development of intellectual resources and vigorously raise economic results. Leading cadres at all levels must have a sense of urgency.

Some 200 leading comrades of all departments at the provincial level and of all prefectures and cities, experts, and scholars who were attending the meeting unanimously held: So long as we have a plan for the strategy of development which conforms to Henan's realities, and a series of principles, policies, and measures, and really carry them out, after some 10 years' hard work, we can surely invigorate Henan.

At the conclusion of the meeting, Hang Xizong, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, attended and spoke. He said: To formulate our province's plan for the strategy of economic and social development, we must regard the resolutions of the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee as the basis and the development of the planned socialist commodity economy as guiding ideology and, at the same time, have the planning, market, and [words indistinct] viewpoints. We must take the road of exploiting resources and, in accordance with the advantages and disadvantages of Henan, formulate the plan for the strategy of development. In the building of energy resources, we must stress the development of small hydroelectric power stations.

We must put the vigorous development of the urban and rural collective economy in an important position and begin paying attention to developing some new and developing industries, such as microelectronic techniques and bioengineering. In regional exploitation, we must give guidance according to different conditions and gradually [words indistinct].

Comrade Yang Xizong said: To develop Henan's economy, we must place our hopes in the development of economic relations among enterprises and regions and technological cooperation in the light of Henan's realities and in accordance with our current foundation. Under the premise of raising economic results, we must develop our province's commodity economy slightly more quickly than the average speed of national development.

Ji Hanxing, vice chairman of the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee; Yan Jimin, vice chairman of the provincial CPPCC Committee; and Vice Governors Hu Tingji and Hu Tiyun attended the meeting one after another to listen to the views.

On behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government, I take this opportunity to thank you and express my highest considerations to the intellectuals who are working on various fronts.

He said: We face more requirements this year. It is hoped that all intellectuals across the province will first further have firm faith in the lofty goal of making more contributions to the socialist modernization programs. We should regard as our duty the work of invigorating Henan and the nation, and should devote our efforts to and be bold in the state's prosperity and the people's happiness.

Second, we should carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains.

Third, we should actively take part in the actual work of reforms and construction. Focusing on solving problems that have developed in the course of reforms and the four modernizations, we should make greater efforts in the area of cultivating qualified personnel and so on.

He Zhukang also said: Intellectuals are the treasure of our party. It is the duty of our party committees and governments to solve problems for the intellectuals. From now on, we must further do well in this work and speak less but do a lot. At the same time, it is hoped that the intellectuals will realize that the foundation of the state and the province is still not very good. Therefore, some problems cannot be solved instantly and it is difficult for everything to be satisfactory. I hope that you can understand this.

[Text] The CPC Central Committee and State Council have worked out plans for 1986 rural work. They have summed up new achievements and new experiences in rural work and proposed new measures for promoting an in-depth rural reform. This is a programmatic document. If we want to make a good start in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must seriously implement this document.

The provincial CPC Committee conference on rural work urged all localities to take the propaganda and implementation of the central document as the central task of the province's 1986 rural work. This is an absolutely correct plan. We must really grasp this firmly and well.

Cadres of various departments at all levels, particularly the leading cadres, must take the lead in studying the central document. Measuring themselves by the standards of CPC Central Committee's five successive Central Documents No 1, they should review their progress and experience in rural reforms. They should examine the situation of implementing various policies and that of serving villages, the grass roots, and peasants. Through studying, they should seek a common understanding about the new situation and the new task. They should also get a deeper understanding about rural reforms and the strategic position of agriculture.

All departments at all levels must act in accordance with the requirements of the provincial CPC Committee and government, seriously sum up their experience, work out measures to overcome their shortcomings, and really do well in the provision of services in such areas as qualified personnel, technology, funds, transport, the market, information, materials, and management. Cadres of various departments at various levels, particularly the leading cadres, must enthusiastically publicize the central document in the rural areas. They should carry out the spirit of the central document down to every household. They should organize the grass-roots cadres and the masses to hold large-scale discussions in connection with the local conditions. Focusing on the local advantages, they should discuss ways of attaining common prosperity. They should help villages formulate or revise plans of social and economic development, and help the peasant households formulate plans to attain prosperity by reaping bumper harvests or by extricating themselves from a poverty-stricken state.

The second stage of rural reform has become coordinated with the urban reform. Thus, the work is extensive and we face more problems. We should be determined in our work, use our innovative and bold spirit, and use the practice of seeking truth from facts to create a new situation in the province's rural work.

We believe that as long as the leadership at various levels carries out their work at the grass-roots levels in the rural areas, carries out large-scale discussions in an in-depth manner, and mobilizes the initiative of various sectors, we shall certainly make new and greater achievements in the second stage of rural reform. Our gross social output value of the rural area, our gross agricultural output value, and our per capita income will be greatly increased.

GUIZHOU'S HU JINTAO AT RURAL WORK CONFERENCE

HK070933 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] Between 28 January and 2 February, the provincial CPC Committee held a conference in Guiyang on rural work.

The conference determined that in this year's work, we should take as the basic guiding ideology the continuous in-depth rural reforms and the promotion of a continuous, steady, and coordinated development of the rural economy. We should further implement the policies toward the rural areas, greatly popularize technology in those areas, strive to improve production conditions, organize well pre- and post-production services, and grasp simultaneously the practices of attaining prosperity and helping the poor. Thereby, we can achieve a rapid growth in the gross social output value of the rural areas, the gross agricultural output value, and the per capita net income.

The conference conveyed the spirit of the central conference on rural work. It studied this year's Central Document No 1, as well as the central leaders' important speeches. It also summed up the province's situation and exchanged experience in rural reforms, and discussed measures for implementing this year's Central Document No 1.

The conference was attended by leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Advisory Commission, the provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, and the provincial government. They also listened to speeches of representatives to the conference and reports on the conference. Qiao Xueheng, Standing Committee member and rural work department head of the provincial CPC Committee, conveyed the spirit of the central conference on rural work. After listening to the reports on the conference, Hu Jintao, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Su Gang, chairman of the provincial Advisory Commission, delivered speeches. At the closing session, Wang Chaowen, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor, made a summary speech.

The participants analyzed and discussed at the conference the province's present situation in rural areas. They held that the situation was a good one. In 1985, the province promoted the development of rural commodity economy despite natural disasters and the relatively sharp drop in grain production. This was because the province reformed the centralized system of distributing and purchasing agricultural products and implemented market readjustment under the guidance of state plans. Therefore, the peasants' per capita net income in 1985 was increased by 9.4 percent compared to 1984. At the same time, the volume of agricultural and sideline products put directly on the market was increased. The turnover volume was also increased. It is expected that compared to 1984, the annual turnover volume of rural markets will have been increased by 45.5 percent.

When analyzing the situation, the participants recognized the province's problems concerning the rural areas. Generally speaking, the foundation of material supply and technology, on which the development of agriculture depends, is very poor. The areas are incapable of fighting against natural disasters. The development of rural economy is very uneven. The marketability of products of the rural areas is not high. The cooperative economy is imperfect. Some policies are still not implemented. The measures concerning reforms do not dovetail with each other. In connection with these problems, we must take active measures to solve them, so as to promote an extensive and intensive development of rural reforms.

The conference stressed: Party committees and governments at all levels must make their work meet the general requirements for 1986 rural work stated in the Central Document No 1, as well as the specific requirements proposed by the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government. They should arrange well their agricultural work in connection with their local conditions. They must continue to readjust the industrial structure of rural areas. They must uphold the principle of grasping grain production and developing diversification.

They should develop in the direction of promoting farming, breeding, and processing on the one hand, and agriculture, industry, and commerce on the other. They should gradually build a multilevel, comprehensive, open, and multipurpose rural industrial structure. They should actively support and greatly develop town and township enterprises, improve their operation and management, strengthen technological transformation, improve product quality, and improve the competitiveness of products.

They should mobilize the peasants' initiative in growing and selling grain. They should adopt measures to ensure a steady and high rate of growth in grain production . They should strengthen basic agricultural construction, and improve production conditions so that agricultural production will gradually base itself on the supply of new materials. All localities must greatly strengthen the training of technicians and qualified personnel in connection with the requirements for readjusting industry. They should popularize technology in the rural areas so as to improve the scientific and technological standards of those areas. They should grasp well the work concerning transport and circulation. They should turn the credit cooperatives into genuine mass financial organizations, and strengthen their ability in money circulation. They must expedite the pace of road construction in counties and towns, further perfect the system of circulation, and develop diversification. On the work of helping the poor, they must thoroughly understand the uneven development brought about by historical causes and poor natural conditions. They should help the poor areas have faith in extricating themselves from a poverty-stricken state. They should activate the internal economic vitality of these poor areas in order to help them get rich.

The conference also pointed out: To perfect and develop the rural system of cooperation is an important part of the in-depth reform. All localities must begin and do well in their work by offering services.

The conference stressed: The CPC Central Committee has issued this year's Central Document No 1. Cadres of party committees and governments at various levels, as well as various departments concerned, particularly leading cadres, must go to the rural areas, the grass roots, and the masses. They should organize large-scale discussion among cadres and the masses, so as to convey the spirit of the central document down to every household.

GUIZHOU ISSUES CIRCULAR ON ECONOMIC CRIME PROBLEM

HK090616 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] The provincial Discipline Inspection Commission and the provincial Political and Legal Committee jointly issued a circular recently calling on party committees, discipline inspection commissions, and political and legal departments at all levels to conscientiously implement the relevant instructions of the CPC Central Committee; carry out the struggle to attack serious economic crime in an in-depth way; and promote the building of socialist spiritual and material civilization.

The circular pointed out that a prominent feature of serious economic crime in Guizhou at present is that cases of speculation and swindling have increased in number over the past. The activities of these speculators and swindlers have undermined economic reform and opening up; caused heavy losses to the state and collective; corrupted a number of party members and cadres; and consequently hindered the building of socialist modernization. Party committees at all levels should be aware of the seriousness and harm of economic crime and should take effective measures to attack speculation and swindling activities. To this end, the circular has set forth the following requirements:

First, party committees, discipline inspection commissions, and political and legal departments at all levels, should conscientiously study and implement the joint circular issued by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission and the Central Political and Legal Committee and should conduct education in lofty ideals, discipline, and the legal system among party members, cadres, and staff members. In accordance with the requirements of the circular, it is necessary to make an all-round inspection of the work in attacking economic crime at the previous stage; sum up the experience and lessons; clearly understand the characteristics and laws of economic criminal activities under the new situation; and carry out the struggle to attack economic crime in an in-depth manner.

Second, carefully investigate and handle speculation and swindling cases, and sternly attack the speculation and swindling activities. Party committees, discipline inspection commissions, and political and legal departments at all levels should properly arrange speculation and swindling cases according to their seriousness, handle the major cases one by one, and wind them up by the prescribed time. It is necessary to have the courage to tackle tough problems, deal with backdoor influence, and thoroughly investigate the cases. While dealing with the cases, we must abide by the laws and rely on evidence. The individuals who are checked and found to be true speculators and swindlers must be sternly punished. The units and individuals involved should also be seriously handled according to the seriousness of their cases. Party and government organs, enterprises, and institutions should carefully investigate economic criminal activities within themselves. Those who fail to handle cases and report them to the higher levels, and leading cadres of the party and government organs concerned, should bear the responsibility.

Third, certain companies and centers should be reorganized. "Briefcase" companies engaged in speculation and swindling must be banned. Cases of party and government organs and social organizations engaging in speculation and swindling in collaboration with enterprises and institutions must be thoroughly investigated. Individuals engaged in speculation and swindling as well as the organizers and those plotting behind the scenes should all bear legal responsibility.

Fourth, typical cases should be used to build up momentum. It is necessary to select typical cases and pronounce judgment in public so as to frighten the culprits and educate the broad ranks of cadres and masses.

Lastly, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission and the provincial Political and Legal Committee circular called on party committees, discipline inspection commissions, and political and legal departments at all levels to take a clear-cut stand, be resolute, work meticulously, and strike surely, accurately, and relentlessly at speculation and swindling activities.

YUNAN PARTY LEADER'S FESTIVAL VISIT TO COAL MINERS

HK080629 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Excerpt] Pu Chaozhu, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, paid a comfort visit to cadres, technicians, and workers of the Fuyuan County (Gongsuo) coal mine this afternoon. He extended season's greetings.

At 1400, Comrade Pu Chaozhu drove to the coal mine in spite of the cold wind. He chatted with representative cadres, technicians, and workers. After listening to their views on enterprise consolidation, economic structural reform, and production at the mine, he talked with those representatives who sat next to him. He asked them about their family lives and the food supply situation on the eve of the Spring Festival.

Pu Chaozhu said: Coal mines are one of the main elements in our national economy. The province's coal production developed significantly in 1985, thereby contributing to the state's four modernizations. You have all assisted in this effort. Therefore, you all have made contributions. The Spring Festival has arrived, but you continue to stand fast and work hard at your posts. Therefore, on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government, I express thanks to each of you and wish you a happy Spring Festival. I hope you will continue this year to do well in reform, strengthen management, make progress through technology, and invigorate your enterprise. At the same time, I hope you will give play to the advantages of large state enterprise, strengthen the extensive economic and technological links with local coal producers, lead local peasants on the road to prosperity, and strive to make greater contributions for the four modernizations.

Comrade Pu Chaozhu also met yesterday morning with some leading comrades of Qujing Prefecture and Fuyuan County. Responsible comrades of the county CPC Committee and government reported on last year's production and this year's plans.

DENG XIAOPING REMARKS ON ZHOU ERFU CASE CITED

HK120358 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 12 Feb 86 p 1

["Special Dispatch" from Beijing: "Deng Xiaoping on Stopping Unhealthy Trends, Reprimands Zhou Erfu for Impairing National Dignity at Political Meeting"]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Feb -- Zhou Erfu, vice president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries, who compromised national dignity and personal integrity during his visit to Japan, has been relieved of all duties and expelled from the party. Zhou Erfu was the first cadre at the ministerial level subjected to such punishment at the current campaign to rectify party style.

Zhou Erfu acted as the head of a Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries delegation on a visit to Japan. During his stay in Japan, ignoring the advice of the PRC Embassy there, he visited the Yasukuni Shrine dedicated to Japanese war dead. At the hotel where he stayed, he also watched pornographic videotapes. He invited a young female interpreter to interpret things for him, but was rejected. Another report also described Zhou Erfu's other misbehavior during his stay in Japan.

It was learned that at a Political Bureau meeting on 17 January, Central Advisory Commission Chairman Deng Xiaoping, referring to Zhou Erfu by name, said that the latter had "compromised national dignity and personal integrity." At the meeting, Deng Xiaoping also said that cases that should be judged and acted upon immediately. The main points of a case should be looked into. Once things were made clear, action should be taken without delay. Any delay or relaxation cannot help us in effectively rectifying unhealthy trends. Not long after the Political Bureau meeting, Zhou Erfu was dismissed from office.

A report said that at present, individual cadres at the ministerial level are under investigation.

CHENG MING ON DENG LIQUN'S ACTIVITIES, STATUS

HK090505 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 100 1 Feb 86 pp 67-68

[Article by Chung Wang-shu: "Away With Deng Liqun" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] UNCEASINGLY CURSE THE REFORMERS

According to what we heard recently from the Chinese mainland, at a meeting held in Wuhan last November, Deng Liqun, who was dismissed from the post of director of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department not long ago, poured a stream of abuse on the reformers and wantonly peddled his "doctrine that political and ideological work is universally applicable" by taking advantage of the opportunity when the CPC once again stressed the importance of political and ideological work because of recent student riots and worker strikes. What is more surprising is that he openly attacked Liu Binyan, Hu Jiwei, and Wang Ruowang by name in the presence of a number of the CPC senior enterprise cadres. Furthermore, on the occasion, Li Honglin, who Deng Liqun got into trouble but who has now jumped out of his hand and transferred to Fujian, was also lashed by the ousted minister. He criticized Liu Binyan's stand for "freedom of artistic creation" and stuck the label of "lack of party spirit" on Hu Jiwei. Deng described Wang Ruowang's proposition that "we should import not only advanced technology but also other advanced things" as nothing but heresy. He also flared up because Li Honglin "refused to acknowledge his mistakes" and a certain publishing house boldly "collected and published his erroneous views on public affairs."

In a word, Deng Liqun entertains feelings against anti-extreme-leftist heroes "who were not beaten down and stepped on" in the drive against spiritual pollution and is full of grievances against the premature end of the "anti-pollution" drive," which he played up 2 years ago. Actually he is full of resentment because he was relieved of his post by the highest CPC authorities. Deng Liqun intends to reverse the correct decision already made and launch an offensive. He wants to launch a last punitive expedition against the reformers with what power he still has.

However, it is a pity that in the land of China, stabbed and wounded by numerous political campaigns in the past several decades, people are highly sensitive to any political reaction. A mere rumor may often stir up a great disturbance, much less a member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat spouting a stream of empty rhetoric. The speech of the ex-minister immediately spread through all the intellectual circles of the country. In the twinkling of any eye, black clouds appeared again and the waters were muddied. Everybody was panic-stricken by the alarmist talk. It seemed that the "anti-pollution drive" might stage a comback. However, all in all, times have changed and the past is not the same as the present. What we have learned from the mainland indicates that in China today, Deng Liqun and his ilk can hardly stir up trouble by a speech. The outsed minister is no longer what he was. His recent hoarse and exhausted speech used attack as a means of defense. He fought with his back to the wall and made a last ditch fight. What he did recently was nothing but an epilogue to the unsuccessful "anti-pollution drive." He is not reconciled to "stepping down from the stage of history" before he finishes the last part of the drama. In order to see what Deng Liqun and his ilk take to heart, we must bring up old scores of the "anti-pollution drive" launched 2 years ago.

VAINLY ATTEMPT TO LAUNCH ANOTHER "ANTI-POLLUTION" DRIVE

Between the summer and autumn of 1983, Deng Liqun, who held the power of that CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department in his hands, was the first to adopt the slogan of "clearing away spiritual pollution" just as some senior CPC leaders went abroad. He fanned the flames everywhere by writing articles and delivering speeches. Consequently, Deng Xiaoping had to nod in approval at the closing ceremony of the CPC plenary session. As a result, this minister went all out by holding the "imperial sword," as if he had found a treasure. In no time, the "anti-pollution drive" swept throughout the country . Many extreme leftists who had ceased all activities since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, became active again and made use of the drive to attack people without restraint. The divine land was immediately covered with sadness and misery. Girls dared not put on make-up or wear colorful clothes; there were no dancing parties any longer; and soldiers handed out pictures of their fiancees in order to show that they were pure in heart. Furthermore, a female correspondent of a newspaper office was refused admittance to a unit to perform her duty just because she wore her hair down to her shoulders. (The incident spread through the journalist circles in Beijing as ridicule for a time.) Moreover, a newspaper office even published an editorial entitled "Crack Down on the Criminal Activities of Spiritual Pollution." It raised "spiritual pollution" to the higher plane of crimes, with the result that CPC officials shuddered hearing of it.

Just when Deng Liqun was pushing the "anti-pollution" drive to a climax in high spirit, the voice of opposition gradually resounded from the higher levels to the grass roots and both at home and abroad. The common people of China and the majority of the CPC cadres, who had suffered untold tribulations in political campaigns, were all discontented with the "anti-pollution" drive and feared that this might be the sign of another Cultural Revolution. The senior CPC leaders working for economic development also realized that the situation was grave.

At a meeting of the Army, Yu Qiuli first said that "the question of spiritual pollution should not be raised in the Army." Then Bo Yibo said so in economic departments. Wan Li suggested that no "anti-pollution drive" was to be launched in the countryside, and Wang Zhaoguo said that the question of "spiritual pollution" should not be put forward in the CYL organizations. Before long, Deng Liqun retreated in defeat again and again and the spots where he was able to stir up trouble crumbled one after another. Since then, RENMIN RIBAO, which had persisted in criticizing the leftist ideology for a long time and against which Deng Liqun nursed a hatred (he hated it because it did not accept his assignments), carried editorials one after another in an attempt to dampen the atmosphere and to lower the temperature. These editorials became a barometer for Western correspondents to observe the short-lived political campaign. Amid the voice of opposition inside and outside the party and at home and abroad, top CPC leader Deng Xiaoping finally made a statement, putting the brakes on the drive and criticizing those who are infatuated with political campaigns within the party. Consequently, Deng Liqun was totally beaten in the contest. However, in order to "protect cadres," the CPC did not discharge him from his post at once, though rumors about his dismissal were spread abroad time and again.

LIU BINYAN AND LI HONGLIN -- THORNS IN HIS FLESH

Time zipped by and 2 years were soon over. The world remains as it was but some people were "removed" from office. Deng Liqun was at last "dismissed" from his post from which he was reluctant to part. We can therefore imagine what his personal "feelings" were. So he used every possible means to vent his personal "feelings." From the people whom he attacked by name, we can have a clear knowledge of his ulterior motives.

After the "gang of four" was smashed in October 1976, China hesitated at the crossroads in the political aspect for a short time. In the drive of ideological emancipation, RENMIN RIBAO was in the vanguard in setting things to rights boldly and resolutely and its contributions were commendable. During that time, those who ruled the roost of the newspaper were the celebrated Hu Jiwei and his right-hand man, Wang Ruowang, who was in charge of the theoretical page of the newspaper. In the "anti-pollution drive," Deng Liqun draped himself in the flag to impress people and finally forced Hu and Wang, with whom he had been discontented for a long time, to quit their posts of director and deputy chief editor of RENMIN RIBAO on the excuse that Hu's views concerning "party spirit and the affinity to the people of newspapers" and Wang's theory regarding "alienation" were all involved with "spiritual pollution." Hu and Wang were relieved of their posts, but their influence remained. What Deng Liqun advocated was hard to carry out in the RENMIN RIBAO office. Moreover, the well-known writer, Liu Binyan, was also a thorn in Minister Deng's flesh. Liu worked for RENMIN RIBAO concurrently, he went hither and thither to get to know the people, exposed venal officials and eulogized heroes and fighters. That is why Deng Liqun hated him so much that he could not be happy with anything less than his removal from office. When he was correspondent of ZHONGGUO QINGNIAN BAO, Liu Binyan and Hu Yaobang, who was then secretary of the Central CYL, were on very good terms. After Hu became head of the CPC Central Committee Organization Department after the Cultural Revolution, he made endless efforts to protect Liu. Were it not for that, Liu Binyan and others would have been removed from office.

Li Honglin was once a junior official who was completely under the control of Minister Deng. However, after the Cultural Revolution, nothing could daunt people. The junior official flatly refused to kowtow to Minister Deng. He even argued with the minister in a form of "making a self-criticism" at the height of the "anti-pollution" drive. After the drive came to a premature end, he made his argument with the minister known to the public by pushing a collection of his views entitled "A Theoretical Storm."

Publication of the book, no doubt, made the minister (though he had already been thrown out) fly into a rage. This is why he attacked his former subordinate at the recent meeting.

A BLACK SHEEP IN THE CPC CENTRAL COMMITTEE SECRETARIAT

Seeing that Deng Liqun "lost his temper" at the recent meeting, we would like to ask him a question. At a time when China is striving to fulfill the major tasks of opening to the world, eliminating age-old malpractices, mopping up extreme leftists, and building the four modernizations, what on earth does Deng Liqun want to do -- play a positive or negative role?

Like most of the CPC officials in the cultural revolution, Deng Liqun was also attacked and knocked down. However, after the Cultural Revolution, he brushed the dust off his pants and stood up again on the strength of the people opposing extreme leftists and by virtue of the blood shed by numerous ardent youths (for example, those who shed blood in the April 5 Tiananmen incident). Then he rose steeply by a lucky coincidence and even climbed to the throne of head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department. However, after he climbed to power, he immediately went all out to get rid of those who had rendered outstanding service but held different views from him. He imitated the practice of the "gang of four" that "those who attack me are wrong, but I am correct when I attack you." Meanwhile, he also attempted to restore the extreme leftist line by means of the "anti-pollution drive."

The surprising move by Deng Liqun at the recent meeting also reminds us to ask him another question. As the ousted head of the CPC Central Committee Propaganda Department and the member of its Secretariat who is no longer [as published] in charge of propaganda work, why does Deng Liqun have the right to attack by name the chairman of the All-China Journalists Association and member of the NPC Legislative Affairs Commission? Why does he have the right to attack by name a well-known writer who enjoys a great reputation at home and abroad and is the vice chairman of the Chinese Writers Association? Deng Liqun always puts pressure on others to pay attention to "party spirit" and the "party's organizational discipline." However, may we ask where his "party spirit" and "organizational discipline," were when he attacked some people by name behind their backs and without collective discussions?

All this shows that Deng Liqun is a black sheep in the CPC Central Committee Secretariat. At a time when the CPC is striving to promote the modernization program and create the image of an enlightened reformer at home and abroad, it should avoid all the pernicious influences of extreme leftists like a tiger, and keep at a distance from all extreme views for sowing discord and damaging unity as if they were the plague. For this reason, the highest CPC authorities should ask the ex-minister who likes to stir up trouble to withdraw from the CPC Central Committee Secratariat.

VIETNAMESE SLANDER, ATTACKS CONDEMNED TO UN

[Text] United Nations, 12 Feb (XINHUA) -- A memorandum of the Chinese Foreign Ministry, made public today at the United Nations, sternly condemns the Vietnamese authorities' wanton acts in invading Cambodia and opposing China. The memorandum also refutes their slanders and attacks against China.

On the afternoon of 11 February, Li Luye, Chinese permament representative to the United Nations, sent a letter to UN Secretary General Javier Peres de Cuellar, requesting the distribution of this memorandum entitled "Memorandum on Questions of Stepped-up Aggression Against Cambodia and the Creation of Tension Along the Sino-Vietnamese Border by the Vietnamese Authorities." The memorandum was distributed today as a document of the UN General Assembly and the Security Council.

The memorandum points out: Recently, the Vietnamese authorities proclaimed their intention to improve Sino-Vietnamese relations, at the same time setting their propaganda machine in full motion against China. In the UN General Assembly they have disseminated the so-called "Communique of the Committee for Investigation of Anti-Vietnamese War Crimes of Chinese Expansionists and Hegemonists," which leaves no stone unturned in slandering and attacking China, and accusing China of crimes of aggression and expansion.

The memorandum points out: During the past 7 years, the Vietnamese authorities have mobilized 200,000 troops to invade and occupy Cambodia, brutally trampled the independence and sovereignty of Democratic Kampuchea, pushed neo-colonialism in occupied areas, and on many occasions, intruded into Thai territory, posing a serious threat to peace in the entire Southeast Asian region.

[Beijing XINHUA in English at 1314 GMT on 12 February 86, in a similar report, renders the previous paragraph... "For seven years now, the memorandum said, 'the Vietnamese aggressor troops have been engaged in wanton attacks and mopping-up operations against the patriotic resistance forces in Kampuchea, brutally massacring innocent Kampuchean civilians and committing heinous crimes against the Kampuchean people. Pushing a policy of neo-colonialism in Kampuchean areas under their occupation, the Vietnamese authorities are systematically emigrating large number of Vietnamese into Kampuchean territories in an attempt to Vietnamize Kampuchea,' it said."]

The Vietnamese authorities have totally disregarded [the XINHUA English item adds at this point... "rejected and vilified"...] the just calls of the international community and the resolutions adopted by the UN General Assembly urging the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia. Their so-called "negotiations" and "troop withdrawal" are nothing but deceptive talk. "Perpetuating their occupation and control of Cambodia is their real intention."

[The XINHUA English item adds at this point... "Recently, the memo points out, the Vietnamese authorities have clamorously repeated that they will definitely not pull out their troops by 1990 if their demands, which are unjustifiable, are not met, and that even after 1990, they will not necessarily withdraw their troops unless their puppet troops have become strong enough by then."]

The memorandum says: "China consistently upholds justice, resolutely opposes any hegemonist practice, and strives to safeguard regional and world peace. As a friendly neighbor of Democratic Kampuchea, we join the ASEAN countries and the majority of UN member states in supporting the Cambodian people's struggle against aggression and strongly demanding the immediate withdrawal of all the Vietnamese aggressor troops from Cambodia.

"This is entirely just. The slanders and attacks hurled by the Vietnamese authorities against China on the Cambodian issue are to no avail."

Referring to the Vietnamese authorities' wanton acts against China, the memorandum states: "For a long time, the Vietnamese authorities have pursued an anti-China policy as their national policy and created armed conflicts along the Sino-Vietnamese border as their major anti-China trick. According to incomplete statistics, from April 1979 to the end of 1985, Vietnamese troops committed armed provocations and intrusions on more than 10,000 occasions along the Sino-Vietnamese border. They constantly fired and shelled areas within China's Yunnan and Guangxi, killing and injuring many Chinese border residents and disrupting the tranquil state of China's southern territory. As a result, the Chinese residents in these border areas can neither carry on their normal production nor lead normal lives. "In the past year the Vietnamese troops' provocative activities have increased rather than ceased. They have constantly carried out large-scale shelling of Malipo, Hekou, and Jinping Counties in China's Yunnan Province and Longzhou, Napo, Fangcheng, and Ningping Counties in Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region, firing nearly 500,000 shells of one kind or another and killing or wounding over 10,000 Chinese residents living in the border areas." "They made ceaseless efforts to send out ground troops of company or platoon size or even of battalion or regimental size to attack China's border defense posts in Laoshan, Yunnan, and in other areas on as many as 1,000 occasions in a year. Such a large number of attacks in a single year has been unprecedented since 1979." "Currently, the Vietnamese authorities are still sending more troops to the Sino-Vietnamese border so as to provoke new military conflicts."

The memorandum continues: "Numerous facts show that the tension along the Sino-Vietnamese border has been the sole making of the Vietnamese authorities." "In the face of the Vietnamese troops' wanton provocations and driven beyond forbearance, the Chinese frontier guards have naturally fought back forcefully. This is entirely an act of self-defense under compelling circumstances and an exercise of their sacred right."

In conclusion, the memorandum states: "We treasure highly the traditional friendship between the Chinese and Vietnamese peoples and hope that the Vietnamese authorities will become aware of their errors and mend their ways by immediately withdrawing all their aggressor troops from Cambodia and halting all provocations against China, creating conditions for a fair and reasonable settlement of the Cambodian issue, for the normalization of Sino-Vietnamese relations, and for the restoration of peace and stability in Southeast Asia."

BAN YUE TAN ON PROSPECTS FOR U.S.-SOVIET RELATIONS

HK090651 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 1, 10 Jan 86 pp 28-30

[Article by Peng Di, XINHUA commentator and former chief XINHUA correspondent in Washington: "The Prospects for U.S.-Soviet Relations"]

[Text] Editor's note: The building of the four modernizations needs a prolonged peaceful international environment. At the start of the new year, people will naturally be anxious to know what development and changes will take place in the international situation. Our editorial department specially invited Comrade Peng Di, Comrade Yu Mingshen, Comrade Yu Hang, and Comrade Luo Zhaohong to write articles on the prospects for U.S.-Soviet relations, the situation in world "hot spots," North-South relations, and trends in the development of the world economy. This group of articles will help us to understand and observe the world situation. [end of editor's note]

The old year has passed and the new year has come. At a time when the new replaces the old, U.S.-Soviet relations have shown some improvement. Last November, the heads of state of the two countries met in Geneva. Since then, the summit quarrel has turned into summit dialogue, and U.S.-Soviet economic and cultural relations have begun to improve. This change in their bilateral relations has been welcomed by the people of the whole world.

People hope that the two superpowers will continue to ease the tension between them and walk on the road of peace by first reducing their arms, especially nuclear arms, and softening their regional confrontations and trying to reach substantive agreements on some major issues, especially on their contention over the hot spots, in order to reduce their bipolar confrontations and prevent a new world war.

At the same time, people are also worried: The U.S.-Soviet confrontation has been serious for decades and such little easing of the atmosphere will not be enough for the overall relaxation of the tension between the two superpowers.

This worry cannot be called unreasonable. As far as strategic nuclear weapons are concerned, the United States has in all more than 1,800 instruments for delivering nuclear bombs, whereas the Soviet Union has in all more than 2,500 such instruments. Each of them respectively have over 10,000 nuclear warheads. They aim these nuclear weapons at each other 24 hours a day. A single mistake or a minor incident could cause a war. When that time comes, not only will the nuclear weapons "totally destroy" the two superpowers from the ground, the sea, and the sky, but the nuclear pollution will also harm other countries in the world. This cruel reality has not been changed. Even since last year's U.S.-Soviet summit talks, there has been a continued expansion of the nuclear arms race between the two superpowers, and this expansion is expected to develop into space.

The language of the two superpowers has less in common on the issue of regional contention. The two superpowers have concentrated their best troops and most advanced weapons in Eastern Europe and Western Europe respectively. Their troops now stand in combat readiness and a single conflict could cause a full-scale war. There are hot spots of contention in Southeast Asia, Northeast Asia, the Middle and Near East, and Central and South America. The partial wars conducted by the two superpowers have never ceased.

Although the tone of the verbal struggle between the two leaders has softened a little, the leaders of both countries were still hostile to each other even during and after their summit talks. And there is always a sting in their remarks to each other. One side accuses the other of militarism, while the second accuses the first of expansionism. Both sides have simultaneously said: "We don't cherish illusions about you" to each other. Both sides have unanimously stressed that, because of fundamental differences between them, they can only continuously contend with each other in the future. There is still a long way to go before their differences are finally solved. It seems that it is really difficult to break the solid ice between them.

However, is it true that, except for the improved atmosphere in U.S.-Soviet relations, it is impossible for the two superpowers to reach agreements on some major and substantive issues? It is too pessimistic to think like this, becuase times have changed.

First, although only the two superpowers are qualified to start a world war, they cannot arbitrarily do things according to their own will because it is a matter concerning all the people in the world. The people of the whole world, the Third World countries, and all the other countries in the world, including the military allies of both the United States and the Soviet Union, are all strongly against war.

The war forces are actually surrounded by the forces of peace. So each military deployment or each step toward arms expansion has met with increasingly strong opposition and resistance. The people's struggle against foreign oppression and intervention in Cambodia, Afghanistan, and the Third World and the mass antiwar movement in Western Europe and North America echo each other at a distance and form a great wall of peace that the forces of war cannot surmount. At present, all the countries in the world are demanding that the two superpowers adopt an attitude of restraint and be no enemies of peace.

Second, nowadays, the development of nuclear weapons has changed people's traditional concepts of war. For example, past wars could end with one side the victor, but present wars can only end with both sides suffering. In the past, at the beginning of a war, big countries like the United States and the Soviet Union could still win some time for preparations, but modern wars have changed the traditional concepts of space and time, so the United States and the Soviet Union, including their capitals, could become the battlefront of a nuclear war immediately after a war breaks out. The leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union have said that they "unanimously agree that neither of them could win a nuclear war, so they should never fight a nuclear war." Their remarks reflect the actual situation and are not diplomatic language.

Under such objective and subjective circumstances, the leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union are expected to take into consideration the common aspirations of people throughout the world, the uncertain future of the nuclear arms race, and the serious consequences of a nuclear war, and strive harder to reach agreements on some major and substantive issues. As I have said before, because of the antagonism between the interests of both sides and the deep chasm between them, there will be a long and complicated struggle between the two superpowers. For instance, both sides have agreed in principle to reduce their respective nuclear arms by 50 percent. But, because both sides fear that they would destroy their present balance, no one knows how many complicated negotiations it will take for an agreement in practice to be realized. Even when they have reduced their nuclear arms by 50 percent, they will still have more than enough weapons to destroy each other. It will be more difficult for the two superpowers to reach agreement on regional confrontations, because they each have gains and losses in these areas. And, for the time being, regional confrontations have not directly or immediately affected their respective safety. Of course, it would be another question if major internal changes took place in some regions. For example, if the Arab countries and the Palestinian people can further strengthen their unity and coordination and eliminate foreign intervention, a Middle East peace agreement would probably be reached, and the superpowers would have no way to obstruct the Middle East peace process.

In a word, that the United States and the Soviet Union have begun their dialogue is a good beginning, but it is also the beginning of a long process. So the people of the world cannot relax their vigilance. Demanding peace is the right of the people of all countries. Stopping the arms race, especially conscientiously reducing and then thoroughly destroying all nuclear weapons, is primarily the responsibility of the superpowers. All countries fighting for peace can obstruct plans for a war from various aspects, continue to exert influence and pressure on the superpowers, and try to make them not only hold talks but also take actual steps toward agreements which not only do not harm the interests of other countries but are also beneficial to world peace.

REAGAN 'CONCERNED' OVER SITUATION IN PHILIPPINES

OW121111 Beijing XINHUA in English 0928 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 11 (XINHUA) -- President Ronald Reagan repeatedly avoided comment tonight on the election in the Philippines but said his country is "concerned about the violence that was evident there and the possibility of fraud." In a press conference at the White House, Reagan said he will not comment officially until the counting of votes has finally been completed in the Philippines. "We are neutral. And then we hope to have the same relationship with the people of the Philippines that we have had for all these historic years," the President said. Reagan said violence and fraud could have been occurring "on both sides". However, he added that the United States is "encouraged by the fact that it is evident that there is a two-party system in the Philippines and a pluralism that I think would benefit their people. And we are glad to see that particular thing happen and we'll wait until we hear the outcome."

The election in the Philippines has caused concern here in the past few days. The United States sent a group of observers headed by Senator Richard Lugar, who has just returned with reports that they witnessed fraud and violence by backers of President Ferdinand Marcos. U.S. press and television networks have carried widespread reports of such fraud. Supporters of Corazon Aquino today braved heavy snow to hold a demonstration at the square opposite the White House to voice their support. Asked on whether the two U.S. bases in the Philippines are of paramount importance when he considers U.S. policy, Reagan said: "One cannot minimize the importance of those bases, not only to us, but to the Western world and certainly to the Philippines themselves." He added: "I don't know of anything that's more important than the bases on the Philippines." Asked whether "an unprecedented fraud" would be accepted by the U.S., Reagan replied "no", adding that this is the election of the Filipino people and "we'll wait and see what the final count determines." Reagan said he would send retired diplomat Philip Habib to the Philippines to meet political, church and other leaders in an effort to assess the desires and needs of the people.

Lugar Comments

OW121154 Beijing XINHUA in English 1140 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 11 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Senator Richard Lugar, leader of the U.S. observation delegation with returned from the Philippines Monday, asked President Ronald Reagan today to remain neutral in the Philippine presidential election, press reports said here today. After reporting to President Reagan for 35 minutes, the senator told reporters that "nobody has won" in the Philippine election. "That is important for the President to recognize the election is not over," he added. "I advised everybody the process goes on and it is in our interest for it to go on."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman also said there were irregularities and fraud in the election. But he added: "the question at this point is whether it is retail, was it wholesale, was it of the magnitude that the election results, the will of the people, might be frustrated." He noted the count was controlled by officials under President Ferdinand Marcos. "That is the government and it was great power." Lugar said his 20-member delegation was careful not to pass a quick judgment that the election was invalidated by government abuses, thereby giving Marcos an excuse to throw out the results and stay in office. "We were not going to give him (Marcos) that option," the Indiana Republican told a news conference shortly after reporting to Reagan at the White House. "Our advice, I think, to everybody -- the government or the opposition -- would be to count fair and square," he said. "There is still that ability to handle that."

LAST EXPATRIATE RUSSIAN SHANGHAI RESIDENT LEAVES

HK121428 Hong Kong AFP in English 1406 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, Feb 12 (AFP) -- The last Russian resident of Shanghai has left the mainland after nearly a lifetime spent in China, including 15 years in a Shanghai prison, and is here en route to Australia, it was reported here today.

Sergei Ivanovich Kostrometinoff, 77, a former freelance writer for the Hong Kong-based weekly FAR EASTERN ECONOMIC REVIEW, plans to leave for Australia later this month where he will settle under an Australian programme offering refuge to Russians exiled in China, the REVIEW said in its latest issue.

Born in China to Russian parents, Mr Kostrometinoff worked as a journalist, translator and interpreter until he was sent to prison without trial in 1967 at the height of China's tumultuous Cultural Revolution, the REVIEW said. Mr Kostrometinoff spent eight years in jail before he was put on trial and convicted of spying for so-called "Soviet revisionists" in 1975. He was kept in prison another seven years until his release in 1982, the REVIEW said, adding that Mr Kostrometinoff then stayed in Shanghai to await cash compensation given to victims of the Cultural Revolution and which had been promised him by the Chinese authorities.

But when he learned last week that he was not entitled to any reparation because he had been self-employed, Mr Kostrometinoff, who had obtained a new Soviet-issued passport, decided to leave China, the REVIEW said. "In spite of his hardships, he is not bitter," said the REVIEW which quoted him as saying: "The people in charge in China today are the same people who suffered as I did, even worse, during and after the Cultural Revolution."

Mr Kostrometinoff plans to visit his son and daughter in Moscow after settling down in Australia, the REVIEW added.

BEIJING TAGALOG: REAGAN STATEMENT ON ELECTIONS

HK130301 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] In Washington, the U.S. Government has called on the two opponents in the recent Philippine presidential election to work together and set up a viable government that would institute political, economic, and military reforms. Prior to this, President Ronald Reagan told reporters that his government is encouraging the Marcos and Aquino camps to join hands in order to create a stable government once the election returns are completed. A senior U.S. official said that the United States has a strong and stable Filipino ally in the Pacific but he did not comment on the election results.

Aquino Displeased

OW121335 Beijing XINHUA in English 1245 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 12 (XINHUA) -- Philippine opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino this afternoon asked U.S. President Reagan "to make additional enquiries" before making further comments on this country's February 7 snap elections. She made this remark at a press conference in response to President Reagan's national press conference yesterday in the U.S.

Reagan said in his statement that the Philippine election showed there is a "strong two-party system." He called on both sides to abide by the outcome and work together for reforms. He also declared he found disturbing reports of fraud in the elections and was sending veteran diplomatic trouble-shooter Philip Habib to the Philippines.

Corazon [Aquino] showed her discontent about what she called "a position of neutrality" taken by Reagan. She said that she had actually scored at least 25 percent majority of votes in the poll. She said she was alarmed by Reagan's suggestion that there may have been fraud on both sides while Reagan's own observers said they had only seen it on one side. As to Reagan's decision of sending Philip Habib to the Philippines to help reconcile the opposing sides, Corazon said the Filipinos welcomed Habib's visit. However, she added, that Habib's last task for Reagan was trying to negotiate an end to Lebanon's civil war. She hoped neither Reagan nor Marcos is expecting to see the Philippine go the same way.

Envoy Criticizes Western Media

OW121822 Beijing XINHUA in English 1607 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Dhaka, February 12 (XINHUA) -- The Philippine Ambassador in Bangladesh Reynaldo O. Arcilla today criticized Western media for spreading alarming reports of "civil strife or civil war" in Manila. The ambassador at a press conference here this afternoon said that there is "absolutely no basis" for such reports.

Western media reports which appeared in local press said that tanks and troops were deployed around the presidential palace and the parliament building in Manila, indicating the possibility of the outbreak of violence. The ambassador denied the press reports. He said if the foreign mediamen had any evidence on the deployment, they could come out with photographs as they were allowed to cover the polls there freely. The ambassador also criticized the Western media for giving "fabricated" stories when President Marcos wanted to restore the country's relations with the United States "on clear terms". He said the Marcos administration earlier allowed the United States to keep its military bases in the Philippines till 1991.

MORE DRUGS SEIZED IN HONG KONG IN 1985

OW121814 Beijing XINHUA in English 1449 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, February 12 (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong's customs and excise department seized 315 kilograms of drugs in 1985, six percent more than in 1984, assistant commissioner of customs (investigations) K.S. Tong said here today. The seized drugs, with a street value of 43 million Hong Kong dollars (about 5.5 million U.S. dollars), comprised 90 kilograms of heroin base, 48 kilograms of heroin, 33 kilograms of opium and 144 kilograms of cannabis and cannabis resin, Tong said. He described 1985 as a "year of steady yields" in the battle against illicit drugs. Total drug seizures for the year by the customs service and the police amounted to 621 kilograms, Tong said.

The favorite method of smuggling drugs into Hong Kong, he said, continued to be the sea route because of Hong Kong's easy accessibility by sea. One extensively used tactic involves smugglers' trawlers which drop their cargo of drugs close to Hong Kong waters. The drugs are then picked up by local fishing vessels.

Tong also warned that drug traffickers, relying on supplies from the "golden triangle," a mountainous region where the borders of Thailand, Laos and Burma meet, are turning to more elaborate smuggling routes in a bid to evade detection. Instead of shipping the drugs directly from the producing areas, Tong said, traffickers are switching to longer, more circuitous routes and transshipping their illicit cargoes through non-producing countries.

HONG KONG TRADE COUNCIL TO OPEN BEIJING OFFICE

HK100249 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0930 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 4 Feb (XINHUA) -- The first mainland office of the Hong Kong Trade Development Council is to begin operating in the last 10 days of this month. In an interview with a XINHUA reporter, Huang Wei-hao, the designated chief representative of the Beijing office, said that Hong Kong and the mainland are as close as lips and teeth and expersed his hope that the office would play the role of a bridge and further promote the development of bilateral trade and economic cooperation.

Since the Trade Development Council set up its "China Department" in 1980, Huang Wei-hao has been the manager. He heartily told the reporter that over the years he had spent a lot of time on the mainland on business, and had made a lot of friends there. He hoped that in his future work, closer cooperative ties would be established.

Chen Yu-yeh, former director of the council's marketing department, will serve as the deputy representative of the office. Personnel from the Beijing locality have been invited to apply for positions on condition that they have experience in international trade and a certain mastery of the English language.

Huang Wei-hao pointed out: the specific tasks of the office are as follows:

1. Making arrangements for the Trade Development Council tc launch trade development activities on the mainland, handling consultancy matters relating to bilateral trade, and introducing Hong Kong manufactured goods to the mainland. A Hong Kong machinery equipment exhibition and a large-sized Hong Kong-made products exhibition will be held in Guangzhou and Beijing this year.

2. Strengthening market survey work and conducting more investigations of special subjects on a selective basis to provide Hong Kong firms and businessmen with concrete reference materials. He gave as an example the problems cropping up in the course of setting up a cooperative enterprise, from the initial application to its actual commission, and their solutions. He also cited the procedures of arbitration in China's foreign trade and the ways of investigating related cases.

3. Promoting mutual visits and relations, exchanges of experience, and close cooperation between business people in Hong Kong and on the mainland. The office will plan to organize various forms of delegations composed of Hong Kong industrialists and businessmen to visit the mainland and learn on the spot about the investment environment and trade opportunities there, and at the same time, invite persons in charge of various economic departments on the mainland to visit Hong Kong.

Huang Wei-hao also indicated that his office was ready to provide the mainland with consulting services relating to the economics and trade of Hong Kong and of other countries or regions in the world and bring into play the role of Hong Kong as "a window" for China.

Touching on the cooperative relationship between the office and organizations on the mainland, Huang Wei-hao said: The Hong Kong Trade Development Council has had a good cooperative relationship with the China Trade Promotion Association for years. The establishment of the Beijing office will further expand this already close relationship. Many trade development activities can be jointly organized. He hoped that the council's first office on the mainland would be able to lay a sound foundation in its operation at an early date, creating favorable conditions for the establishment of a second office in Shanghai at the end of this year.

BOOKLET REVIEWS NEW ZEALAND-PRC 1985 TRADE, TIES

[Text] Wellington, February 12 (XINHUA) -- The total trade between New Zealand and China in 1985 approached 230 million N.Z. dollars (112.74 million U.S. dollars) and was three to one in New Zealand's favor. This was disclosed in "A Guide to New Zealand's Foreign Relations 1985," a booklet issued by the New Zealand Foreign Ministry recently.

"China's domestic political stability and its new market-oriented economic policy make for a good climate for pursuing an already healthy relationship" between New Zealand and China, said the booklet. More than a hundred official delegations, it said, exchanged visits during 1985. The booklet also said, "The government has welcomed the agreement on the status of Hong Kong, to take effect after 1997, both for its political implications and because the prosperous New Zealand trade with that territory now seems unlikely to be jeopardized."

LIAOWANG ON U.S., ISRAELI THREATS ABAINST LIBYA

HK070929 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 2, 27 Jan 86 pp 26-27

["Special Dispatch From Cairo" by contributing correspondent Mu Guangren: "Why Does the United States Threaten Libya by Force?"]

[Text] The moment the new year began, the U.S. aircraft carrier Coral Sea cruised from Naples toward the Mediterranean, thus triggering the first round of shock waves on the sea in 1986. The U.S. warship Iowa and aircraft carrier America at a Virginia base also moved toward the Mediterranean. Their destination was Libya, and the pretext they used was that Libya masterminded the 27 December 1985 terrorist attacks on the El Al (Israeli National Airline Company) offices at Rome and Vienna.

On New Years Day, the White House and Pentagon were busily preparing military options for "punishing" Libya in accordance with Ronald Reagan's instructions. One option was an air strike by FB-111 fighter-bombers from a base in the United Kingdom. The other was a strike by B-52 bombers flying from the United States and refueling in midair. The third was to launch F-18 warplanes from the aircraft carrier Coral Sea to enter Libya's Gulf of Sidra, luring Libyan warplanes into a head-on fight in order to shoot them down and further attack Libyan Air Force bases.

Israel also took military actions. Its fighter planes flew to the Mediterranean and stayed on the aircraft carrier Coral Sea. Israeli warplanes flew above the Bab el Mandeb Strait in the Red Sea to spy on the Kamaran Island and Perim Island off South Yemen and North Yemen. Israel threatened to take military action against all Palestinian fighters in their camps in various Arab countries.

Libya was not to be outdone. Mu'ammar Qadhdhafi asserted that if the United States attacked Libya, "there will be no peace in the Mediterranean" and "Americans will be harassed on their own streets." On 6 January he issued a partial mobilization order to the whole nationand enlisted 40,000 reserve personnel into the Army to fight. SAM-5 missile launchers provided by the Soviet Union were being deployed in Libya under the guidance of Soviet military personnel.

The situation looks extremely critical. However, no one has ever taken the war of intimidation excessively seriously. A diplomat in Cairo said: "The louder the cries for a fight, the less the possibility of a real fight will be. Those who really intend to use their guns and cannons will not breathe a word about their intention." In fact, while making loud statements, Reagan carefully made it clear that any measure taken "should not start World War III." Of course, some people are worried that President Reagan might take unpredictable actions. In November 1985, the United States dispatched warplanes to intercept an Egyptian civilian airliner. That was beyond all expectations. As far as Israel is concerned, people have to heighten their vigilance against such actions. But Israel has a sinister reocrd, having launched an air-raid attack on Iraq's nuclear facilities and bombed PLO Headquarters in Tunis.

Europeans ask: Is there really any need for the United States to dispatch its aircraft carriers and B-52 strategic bombers to deal with a few terrorists? This is evidently absurd logic. However, now that Washington has taken such a stance, naturally there must be a beginning and subsequent developments.

Terrorist attacks at Rome and Vienna airports were condemned by the world community, including PLO Chairman Yassir 'Arafat, who declared that the PLO had nothing to do with the attacks. Judging from the results of the trial of the terrorists who attacked the airports, the PLO really had nothing to do with the attacks.

However, some people in the United States and the Israeli authorities regarded the events as an opportunity for striking at the PLO, just as Israel bombed PLO Headquarters in Tunis by capitalizing on the yacht incident in Cyprus on 1 October 1985. The first reaction of the Israeli authorities was an indication of this point of view. Prime Minister Shim'on Peres said: No matter who carried out the attacks, "We will never let the PLO go unpunished." Although, in a speech delivered in Cairo on 1 October 1985, 'Arafat denounced terrorism, Peres, who obstinately asserted that the PLO favored the use of terrorist means, said he would be content with nothing less than the PLO's destruction.

Since October of last year, the PLO has suffered repeated setbacks and the Middle East peace process based on an agreement between Jordan and the PLO has come to deadlock. Supported by the United States, Israel has firmly refused to recognize the PLO and tried every possible means to exclude the PLO from any peace talks and to ultimately write off the organization from reality. The Rome and Vienna airport incidents gave the Israelis an excuse to once again strike at the PLO, which has suffered repeated setbacks.

They plan to start striking at the PLO in two ways: One is to undermine the relationship between the PLO and European countries, and the other is to weaken the support of Arab countries for the organization.

A PLO representative in Cairo told AL-AHRAM that someone was behind the incident who intended to undermine the good reputation of the PLO and its relationship with European countries in an attempt to convince people that the PLO is unable to bring the Palestinians' actions under control. This is precisely what Israeli Prime Minister Peres did. Peres said: "All European countries" have provided the terrorists with sanctuaries and weapons and given (the PLO) diplomatic recognition. They should be held responsible for the incident. The implication of these remarks is that European countries should cut off their support for the PLO.

Israel has used all means of threat and intimidation against Arab countries. Israeli planes not only appear and disappear unpredictably in the Mediterranean and the Red Sea, but also fly over Lebanon's Al Biqa' Valley and southern cities on the pretext of gathering intelligence about the PLO's activities. Israeli Defense Minister Yitzhaq Rabin claims that the terrorist faction headed by Abu Nidal is supported by Iraq, Syria, and Libya. He threatened that Israel would not rule out the possibility of retaliatory actions against any supporter of the Palestinians.

However, the result of U.S. and Israeli threats has turned out to be opposite their wishes. After realizing that it would not win sympathy from the world community by linking the incident with the PLO by drawing a forced analogy, and considering the influence the incident would have on the Middle East space process, the United States asked Israel to be somewhat "restrained" and focused the target of attack on Libya. The United States maintained: The accusation against Libya-supported Abu Nidal terrorist factions will be more acceptable to the world community, and thus reprisals against Libya will meet with less resistance in Congress. If these threats produce positive results, the United States can show off both at home and abroad. We are the United States, and the United States alone can counter terrorism. However, this performance of the United States brought results that were the opposite of its wishes in the new year.

With his military threat failing to produce positive results, Reagan announced economic sanctions against Libya, appealing to the U.S. European allies to follow suit. U.S. economic ties with Libya have dwindled to insignificant proportions, but European countries still have intense economic interests in Libya. Therefore, they have indicated one after another that they will not heed the U.S. economic sanctions. Hence, the economic sanctions carried out solely by the United States have lost their effectiveness. Moreover, the world community takes exception to this U.S. move.

At present, tense relations between the United States and Libya are still developing. On 13 January, a reconnaisance plane from the aircraft carrier Coral Sea flew over Khalij Surt (the Gulf of Sidra) northeast of Tripoli, and two Libyan Soviet-made MiG-25 fighter planes approached it. Two U.S. F-18 fighters immediately took off from the aircraft carrier. Nevertheless, neither side became hostile. Some 1,000 Libyans rallied in Libya's capital to protest the U.S. policy against their country the very same day.

The Arab Leauge and the conference of foreign ministers of Islamic countries separately adopted resolutions denouncing the U.S. military threat and opposing U.S. economic sanctions against Libya. European allies also tried to persuade the United States not to make a fuss over a trifling matter. Hence, the United States became "a loner" and "a target of public criticism." U.S. acts also helped Qadhdhafi win sympathy both at home and abroad. Since U.S. economic sanctions against Libya were rejected by its European allies, the problems between the United States and its allies are further broadening.

Who wins, and who loses? The development of events will leave Washington with this conclusion: The loss outweighs the gain.

ETHIOPIA DEPLORES U.S.-S. KOREAN EXERCISES

OW121331 Beijing XINHUA in English 1226 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Addis Ababa, February 12 (XINHUA) -- Ethiopia strongly deplored the current U.S.-South Korean military manoevres and expressed its solidarity with the Democratic People's Republic of Korea against this deliberate military provocation and intimidation.

The Ethiopian Foreign Ministry said in a press statement last night that the Korean peninsula continues to be a major trouble spot where tension and the danger of war cast dark shadows, often disrupting serious efforts towards peace and stability in the area. It said that the joint military exercises which are now taking place in South Korea between U.S. and South Korean forces under the code name "Team Spirit-86" are "clear manifestations of the policy of armed provocation and confrontation." The statement said: "At a time when maximum efforts are being exerted for a successful outcome of the North-South dialogue, the decision taken by the U.S. and South Korea to go ahead with these military exercises is meant to perpetuate tension in the region and disrupt all efforts being deployed to create a favorable atmosphere with a view to attain a lasting national reconciliation and the peaceful reunification of the Korean people."

IRANIAN MAJLIS SPEAKER ON RELATIONS WITH USSR

OW091952 Beijing XINHUA in English 1918 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Text] Tehran, February 9 (XINHUA) -- Iran's parliament speaker Hashemi-Rafsanjani said here today that the Soviet Deputy Foreign Minister Georiy Korniyenko's recent visit to Iran "will exert a tremendous influence upon the relationship between the two countries." Speaking at a news conference, he said he was optimistic about improving Iranian-Soviet relations in many spheres. Rafsanjani pointed out, however, that there remain two problems in the Iranian-Soviet relations to be resolved, namely, Soviet support to Iraq and occupation of Afghanistan. Nevertheless, the speaker said: "The Iranian-Soviet relationship can not be compared with Iran's relations with the United States who is a big devil. Although the Soviet Union hurts Iran in the war, they are not like the United States. We have diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union and they are building some projects in Iran.

Asked whether any improvement of Iranian-Soviet relations would mean Iran will give up its policy of "no East and no West," he said, "Iran's policy of 'no East and no West' means rejection of domination from both East and West. We don't reject friendship of the East and West." "If the United States stops doing any evil any more, we could establish relations with them also," he added. On conditions set by Iran for ending the war with Iraq, the speaker said, "to bring Saddam to a trial, to let the Iraqi people be free and to pay for our loss in the war are our conditions for ending the war," he said.

LEBANESE AMAL MOVEMENT RELEASES COMMUNISTS

OW121333 Beijing XINHUA in English 1233 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Beirut, February 12 (XINHUA) -- The Lebanese Shi 'ite Amal Movement has released 86 Lebanese communists who were kidnapped by the movement recently in southern Lebanon, according to Phalangist radio broadcast this morning. Sources of the Lebanese Communist Party said that there are more than 30 leading members of the party are still detained by the Amal Movement.

The sources close to the Amal Movement argued that the detention of the Lebanese communists was aimed "to prevent the Communist Party from helping the Palestinian guerrillas to rebuild their military superiority in southern Lebanon." The sources said the Amal Movement is also worried that Israel might launch a large-scale retaliative operation in south Lebanon. Therefore, the movement insisted that the anti-Israeli guerrilla activities should be conducted only within the so-called "security zone." Relations between the Amal Movement and the Communist Party has become tense recently. On January 7, leading member of the Communist Party Michel Wakid was kidnapped and killed after 64 days of detention. An extensive operation of searching communists was carried out by the Amal in Sayda recently.

LIBYA DETERMINES TO INTERCEPT ISRAELI PLANES

OW101400 Beijing XINHUA in English 1149 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Text] Cairo, February 10 (XINHUA) -- Libya is determined to intercept any Israeli airplane flying within the range of Libyan warplanes, force it to land and search it for terrorists in retaliation for Israel's interception of a Libyan jet last Tuesday. This is contained in a statement of Libyan Foreign Liaison Bureau (Foreign Ministry) and was published in Libyan newspaper AL-FAJR AL-JADID (NEW DAWN) on Sunday. The statement said that this decision came after the U.N. Security Council failed to perform its tasks in maintaining international peace and security due to U.S. veto against resolutions condemning Israel. Citing the interception and American provocative maneuvers off the Libyan coast as reasons, the statement said that Libya has the right to undertake all steps necessary in defending its independence, sovereignty and interests. Meanwhile, Libyan Air and Naval Forces continued maneuvers off the coast on Sunday with live ammunition. The Libyan exercises started last Saturday and were reportedly to continue for a week.

BEIJING ON TENSE SITUATION IN CENTRAL AMERICA

OW130617 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1150 GMT 12 Feb 86

["International Current Events" program commentary: "The Crux of Prolonged Turmoil in Central America"]

[Excerpts] The situation in Central America has been tense for many years. Social contradictions remain complicated and clashes among various factions in the five countries of Central America are quite sharp. Civil wars still rage in some countries. Interference and infiltration by the superpowers in Central America have become even more destructive than ever before, and there is always the possibility of foreign invasion. The situation in Central America has aroused concern and uneasiness in the international community. Central America has become one of the hot spots of the world.

What is the crux of the prolonged turmoil in Central America? There are two basic causes: One is internal social unrest in various Central American countries, and the other is outside interference. Both superpowers seek to take advantage of the contradictions and clashes in this area for their own interests. It is under these conditions that the national and democratic movements in Central American have gradually flourished, leading to various armed struggles and even civil wars.

The civil war in El Salvador has already lasted 6 years, and more than 50,000 people have died in it. The country's domestic economy has been undermined.

In Nicaragua, victories have been won in the armed struggle, the Somoza regime has been overthrown, and the government of national reconstruction has been established. However, the problems left from the old society have hindered the efforts of the new administration in promoting the national economy and stabilizing social life. In particular, Somoza remnants that have fled the country have tried to organize an anti-government armed force with the direct support of the United States. They are attempting to initiate a new civil war in Nicaragua.

The social turmoil in various Central American countries is the internal reason for the tense situation in this area. However, the intensifying outside interference is an even more important reason for the chaotic situation in Central America.

Central America is geographically important, connecting North and South America, and the Panama Canal is the only waterway connecting the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The strategic position of Central America is extremely important, and both superpowers are struggling fiercely to gain control of this region. The United States works hard to maintain its hegemony in Central America, while the other superpower -- the Soviet Union -- seeks to use the turmoil in the area to expand its influence.

Since the beginning of 1980, the United States has strengthened its control over Central America and tried to interfere in the affairs of its countries politically, economically, militarily, and diplomatically. U.S. policy on Central America has three main points:

1. Politically and militarily stabilize the situation in Guatemala, Honduras, and Costa Rica; support the incumbent administrations; promote democracy in these countries in order to solve domestic contradictions; prevent the escalation of civil war; make these countries follow U.S. decisions on foreign and military affairs; and thus control the situation in Central America.

2. Try to suppress the Salvadoran anitgovernment guerrilla troops with emphasis on military encirclement and annihilation. The armed struggle against the government in El Salvador has been going on for years. The strength of the Salvadoran guerrilla troops is fairly strong, and the flames of civil war have engulfed the whole country. In order to prevent El Salvador from experiencing changes similar to those in Nicaragua, the United States is working hard to support El Salvador's reactionary military forces and the current administration.

3. Completely isolate Nicaragua and try to change the structure of the current Nicaraguan administration. Since the Sandinist National Liberation Front overthrew Somoza's dictatorial rule by force in Nicaragua, the political situation of the United States dominating the whole of Central America has changed. Therefore, the United States regards the current Nicaraguan Government as a thorn in its side and has tried its best to isolate Nicaragua in foreign affairs and to undermine its economy. In the past 2 years, it has hurled military threats against Nicaragua. While supporting antigovernment armed forces with Somoza remnants as the core, the United States has built military camps near the Nicaraguan border to enable these forces to intrude into Nicaraguan territory to start a new civil war. The United States also incites Nicaragua's neighboring countries to stir up border clashes, while its Army and Naval forces repeatedly conduct military exercises in nearby areas and waters. In the face of U.S. military threats, the Nicaraguan government of national reconstruction has launched counterattacks. The tense relations between the United States and Nicaragua have made the area the hottest spot in Central America.

CONCRETE CASES SEEN IMPROVING PARTY STYLE

[Commentator's article: "Effecting a Change for the Better in Party Style Must Start With Grasping Concrete Cases"]

[Text] There are many things to do in order to improve party style and the social mood. But what should we start with? The practice of some areas in grasping major and serious cases proves that it is necessary to start grasping concrete cases. The masses of people usually judge party style and social mood by direct and concrete things. They bear deep resentment against some cases of unhealthy trends, which violate party discipline and national law and corrupt social values. Only when concrete cases which the masses can see and feel are firmly grasped and the persons involved in these cases are seriously dealt with can the masses have full confidence in the improvement of party style and social mood.

Why have there been no notable results in improving party style and social mood and in checking unhealthy trends since the CPC Central Committee has repeatedly emphasized it and policies have been made very clear? An important reason is that some leading organs and leading cadres have been seriously affected by bureaucratism and have made no great effort to grasp cases of unhealthy trends and violations of the law and discipline. They have said more but done less. Some of them, out of their selfish ideas and personal considerations, dare not grasp the work firmly. As a result, those involved in unhealthy trends and who have violated discipline and the law feel they have strong backing and have nothing to fear, and the unhealthy trends continue to spread rather than being checked. When some concrete cases are firmly grasped and conscientiously handled, the law-violators and criminals will be punished, the unhealthy trends will be checked, healthy trends will be encouraged, and those involved in unhealthy trends will be taught a lesson. Moreover, the broad masses of cadres will also be educated. Greater effects will be achieved if we pay more attention to grasping and handling those typical cases of violations of discipline and the law, which have greater influence and harm. This will show that our party is determined to overcome all obstacles to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style and in social mood.

The key to investigating and handling concrete cases, especially major and serious cases, is to stress party spirit, the law, and discipline rather than stressing personal feelings. We must dare to expose mistakes without sparing anyone's sensibilities and dare to surmount all obstacles so that the cases may be handled impartially. No matter who is involved or which organization is involved, it is necessary to handle the cases seriously and resolutely in accordance with the principle of "all are equal before the law" and based on facts. We must never hesitate, or be irresolute or softhearted, and must handle each case as soon as a thorough investigation is made.

At present, the line, policies, and principles of the CPC Central Committee are correct. As a result of implementing the policy of reform and opening up, we have made satisfactory achievements in our economic construction. The situation is gratifying. However, if party style and social mood are not fundamentally improved, the policies of reform, opening up, and economic construction may be affected. Therefore, we must never treat problems concerning party style and social mood lightly. If we start by grasping concrete cases, inflict severe punishments on those who undermine our construction, and forcefully check unhealthy trends, we will surely by able to improve our party style and social mood in the near future so that they can be as good as those in the 1950's, their best period, and ensure the smooth progress of our reform, opening up, and modernization drives.

TOWNSHIP SUPPORTS AGRICULTURE WITH INDUSTRY FUNDS

[Report by Su Yinhu and Liu Jianming: "Beijing Beiqijia Township Vigorously Grasps Industry and Subsidizes Agriculture With Industrial Funds"]

[Text] Beiqijia Township of Changping County in Beijing Municipality has vigorously grasped industry and subsidized agriculture with industrial funds. While developing industry and a diversified economy, it has also increased grain output in a sustained and stable way.

This township is located on a plain which mainly produces grain. In 1980, the per capita income of the township was 196 yuan. The township was known for its poverty. In that year, the higher authorities reorganized the leading body of the township. The new leading body paid attention to developing industry and sideline occupations and realized that "it is impossible to get rich without developing industry." Thanks to efforts exerted over the past 4 years, the production output value of enterprises run by township and production brigades increased from 3.9 million yuan to 20 million yuan. The profits turned over to the state by the collectives increased from 80,000 yuan to 800,000 yuan.

The rapid development of industry and the diversified economy has accumulated abundant funds for agricultural production. Over the past 5 years, the township has made an accumulated investment estimated at 1 million yuan to purchase agricultural machinery. Mechanization has been basically realized in the production process ranging from planting to harvesting. In the meantime, some water conservancy facilities were repaired and some new projects have been completed. The affected irrigated area has been expanded from 10,000 mu to 16,500 mu. The township has also allocated 350,000 yuan to directly subsidize agriculture. At present, more than 3,000 mu of grain fields have been contracted to 531 able-bodied workers throughout the township so that more than 2,000 farm workers, who were originally engaged in grain production, can turn to industry and the diversified economy.

Total grain output of the township has annually increased by 360 tons on average. Total grain output last year was 7,500 tons, and 3,000 tons were used as commodity grain.

To meet the demands of specialized agricultural production, this township has also gradually established a comparatively effective service system to serve agricultural production satisfactorily.

With the development of a specialized division of labor and the socialization of service trades, great changes have taken place in the structure of the labor force in this township. Compared with 1980, in 1985 farm workers engaging in grain production dropped to 531 from the previous 2,600; those engaged in industrial production have increased from the previous 900 to 2,300; and those engaged in forestry, fruit production, fish farming, and other trades increased from 230 to 920. The development of socialized and specialized production has greatly enhanced labor productivity. In the past, each farm worker engaged in grain production could only supply 0.5 tons of commodity grain a year. At present, each worker can supply 5.5 tons of grain. The output value of each working day has also increased from the previous 2.5 yuan to 12.5 yuan. The average per capita annual output value created by workers engaging in industry and the diversified economy has also increased from 4,000 yuan to 9,000 yuan.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Dialectics of Industry and Agriculture Mutually Helping Each Other Advance"]

[Text] In the short period of several years, Beiqijia township in the suburbs of Beijing has succeeded in changing from unitary agricultural production with an emphasis on grain production to laying equal stress on the rapid development of industry and agriculture. Grain production and the diversified economy have developed in a steady way. The most important reason for this success is that cadres of the township are ideologically clear about their objectives and can handle the relationship between industry and agriculture in a better way. While taking agriculture as a base, they vigorously grasp the work of accumulating industrial funds. In addition, they make use of funds accumulated in industry to support agriculture in changing production conditions, improving basic facilities, and providing a complete set of services to effectively promote the specialization and intensive management of agriculture, grain production in particular. In so doing, they manage the land on a proper scale and enhance the yield of the land and labor productivity. Steady development of agriculture has in turn provided better conditions for the development of industry and the diversified economy.

The practice of Beiqijia Township has vividly demonstrated the dialectics of mutual help between industry and agriculture.

Within the rural economy, there are contradictions between agriculture, industry, and sideline occupations. If we fail to handle the situation well, two kinds of inconsistencies will occur: 1) Traditional unitary setups cannot be changed and the agricultural economy will stagnate; 2) industry and sideline occupations will squeeze out agriculture, and the agricultural economy will be dislocated. A drop in agricultural production might even occur. However, if we handle the relationship between industry and agriculture well, they will help each other advance. Before the convening of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, most areas throughout the country were affected by the first inconsistency. They concentrated their efforts on producing only grain. The more they did so, the poorer they became. The poorer they became, the more restrictions were placed on the development of the diversified economy. Because less investment was made in agriculture, a vicious circle began. Practice showed long ago that if we follow the past practice of purely relying on administrative means and consider agriculture and grain as they stand, the labor productivity of our agriculture will be very low and our agriculture will lack vigor. Under such circumstances, it is difficult to develop agriculture in a steady way. However, in the last 2 or 3 years, some localities have gone to the other extreme. In these localities, the tendency of industry to squeeze out agriculture occurs. This is a matter which merits the attention of various quarters.

The new situation in the rural area has put new demands on leaders at various levels: They should conscientiously study economic knowledge, master the skill of grasping the situation as a whole, treat and handle relations between industry and agriculture in a dialectical way, and follow the path of promoting mutual help between industry and agriculture. Due to the fact that conditions in various localities might differ, they might not follow the same path. They should suit measures to local conditions, give play to their own merits, and take agriculture as their base to develop mining, the building industry, and a diversified economy which supports agriculture.

However, they share one thing in common: the strengthening of the agricultural foundation should have a solid material investment. Only by putting more into production can we have sufficient staying power for development. In places where industrial production and the diversified economy are active, steady agricultural development in those places will have a powerful backing. We can also discern from this the vital significance of readjusting production set ups in the rural area, actively developing the diversified economy, and developing nonagricultural production. This is needed not only for the all-round development of the agricultural economy, but also for the steady development of agriculture, including the development of grain-planting undertakings.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTS ON SCIENCE RESEARCH FUNDING

HK101250 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 5 Feb 86 p 3

[Commentator's article: "A Crucial Move To Promote Integration of Science, Technology, and the Economy"]

[Text] The promulgation of the "provisional regulations concerning supervision over scientific and technological appropriations" by the State Council is one of the policy measures to reform the structure of scientific and technological departments of our country and is a crucial move in promoting further integration of science, technology, and the economy. The implementation of these regulations will certainly speed the progress of the structural reform of scientific and technological departments.

The former structure of scientific and technological departments of our country is not favorable to the integration of science, technology, and the economy. Nor is it favorable to in-depth scientific research. This can be clearly seen in the management of scientific and technological funds and in the personnel management system. In the past, nearly all scientific and technological funds depended on financial allocations. Funds were used freely and achievements were transferred at will. This resulted in research departments eating out of the "big pot" of the state and scientific and technological personnel eating out of the "big pots" of their respective departments. Scientific and technological work lacked the motivation to serve economic construction. Without exception, they received funds allocated by leading departments and were assigned tasks. They seldom gave a thought to whether they could obtain good results in their work or whether the results obtained could be turned into productive forces.

Since scientific research departments depended on appropriations from leading departments and lacked the motivation to arm themselves or to make progress, research work could only remain at the same level. At present, funds can be obtained in many different ways and from various channels based on different characteristics and categories of scientific and technological work. For work on technology exploitation and applied study expected to be of practical value within a short time, funds can be obtained from contracts signed with departments at the same level or an upper level. For basic research and applied study work which cannot be of practical value in the near future, research departments depend mainly on applications for science funds. For research on public welfare, scientific and technological services, and basic technological work, funds will be allocated by the state on a contract basis. In this way, much research on technology exploitation and much applied study, expected to be of practical value within a short time, can be geared to the needs of the economy, society, and market in the whole process from setting tasks to achieving results. Practice in the past few years has shown that this is an effective measure and is conducive to promoting the integration of science, technology, and the economy.

Some people think that in this case the state will reduce scientific and technological funds. This is a misunderstanding. In the decision on reforming the structure of scientific and technological departments, the central authorities explicitly pointed out that for some time in the future, scientific and technological appropriations from local and central governments should be gradually increased. Even funds cut from operational expenses will be used for the development of science and technology in an appropriate manner. In the "provisional regulations," the State Council has reiterated these principles. Moreover, scientific and technological operational expenses will only be gradually reduced. Speed in such reduction should not be stressed without paying attention to actual conditions. Drastic and speedy reduction of operational expenses will be harmful to the steady progress of the structural reform scientific and technological departments.

Some comrades worry that changes in management methods of scientific and technological funds may cause scientific and technological personnel to pay attention only to minor projects and neglect major and long-term ones. This worry is not without basis. The "provisional regulations" issued by the State Council have already taken into consideration in-depth scientific research in order to ensure staying power for the integration of science, technology, and the economy. Funds for major scientific and technological projects, key laboratories, and intermediate test bases will still be included in state and local plans. Of course, the method of state appropriations according to departments, trades, and professions can no longer be used even for major scientific and technological projects, but should be replaced by the invitation and contract system. In this way, barriers between different departments and between departments at different levels can be removed, competition can be launched, and research under better conditions will receive greater support so that limited funds can be fully utilized.

FORESIGHT IN FLOOD PREVENTION RECOMMENDED

[Commentator's article: "A Lesson From the Flooding of the Liao He"]

[Text] When the Liao He flooded last year, more than 1.7 million armymen and civilians in Liaoning Province fought without rest for tens of days and nights, protecting the main dikes as well as the cities, oil fields, and major factories and mines. At a time when we confirm the tremendous achievements in antiflood and rescue work, we should pay close attention to the lesson learned from the flooding of the Liao He and carry out flood prevention in a better way.

The Liao He, one of seven big rivers in our country, is less capable of handling flood waters. Before the flood season in 1983, the State Council approved and transmitted the "report on doing a good job of flood control along the seven big rivers" submitted by the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power. The report explicitly pointed out that the immediate task for flood control along the Liao He was to step up river administration, dredge the river, completely remove the bends and dikes seriously hindering water flow along the main streams, and promptly resume measures to control floods along the Liao He. Unfortunately, the departments concerned did not pay sufficient attention to these problems. The flow during the highest flood peak of the Liao He last year was only two-fifths of the annual flow. Why did it become a disaster? The major causes included poor river administration, man-made obstacles, and failure to implement flood control measures. This lesson should provoke deep thought.

What lesson has the flooding of the Liao He taught us? First, close attention should be paid to harnessing the river. Any slackening of effort and delay in work may cause disaster. Second, in carrying out flood control, emphasis should be on prevention.

Only by taking precautions can we avoid danger. Third, rivers need to be harnessed. River administration is also needed. Abandoning or slackening river administration and separating river harnessing from river administration not only prevents the state investment in flood control from yielding profits due but also may cause irretrievable losses. Fourth, exploitation and utilization of rivers should not be carried out indiscriminately. River courses and banks form natural passages for draining flood water. Comprehensive utilization of rivers is permissible provided the draining of flood water is not hindered. Indiscriminate reclamation of land from rivers will block the outlet of flood water and result in disaster sooner or later. Fifth, all areas, departments, units, and individuals must consciously take the whole situation into account when carrying out flood control. Any deed of confining one's scope of vision to immediate and partial interests, damaging flood control projects and weakening their antiflood capacity is impermissible. The lesson has reminded people that in order to prevent floods and ensure safety, they must improve the policy, clearly specify the duties, tighten the laws, and carry out river administration according to law.

Our country's big rivers have not yet been permanently harnessed and have yet to increase their capabilities to fight floods. In some parts of the rivers, there are increasingly more man-made obstacles, seriously weakening the capability of rivers to drain flood waters. These obstacles must be removed, lest they inevitably harm the interests of the whole. A saying goes: "The overturned cart ahead is a warning to the cart behind." The lesson learned from on the flooding of the Liao He serves as a warning to all localities. Flood control and removal of obstacles concern the lives and property of millions of people as well as the overall interest of the four modernizations. We must tightly grasp this matter of prime importance.

LITERATURE, ART DEVELOPMENT ENCOURAGED

HK100409 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Hua Jai: "Correctly Deal With External Influences -- from a speech made at a forum sponsored by the GUANGMING RIBAO literature and art department"]

[Text] As our economy develops, so too does our culture. Our old, middle-aged, and young writers and artists have been working very hard since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They have produced many influential works. New writers, new artists, and new works have continued to emerge. It is a thriving and encouraging scene. Moreover, there are exciting new developments. Many mass amateur literature and art organizations have emerged in recent years, such as literature societies, poetry societies, calligraphy and painting societies, music societies, and research societies of various descriptions, and literature and art organizations devoted to creation and research by well-known old, middle-aged, and young writers and artists. For example, the Guangzhou poetry society is an organization which includes leading cadres at provincial and city levels, poets, and painters. On invitation, it visited Singapore for a cultural exchange. The Xiangxue [Fragrant Snow] Calligraphy and Painting Society and Guangzhou Watercolor Painting Society founded in suburban Guangzhou have on several occasions been to Hong Kong, Macao, and Southeast Asia to hold exhibitions. They were warmly welcomed. There are also the Photography Society of the Aged, the Children's Puppet Service Center, and the Cantonese Opera Research Center. These literature and art organizations have in recent years produced many talented people and excellent works. Pianos and cameras are now available to many worker and peasant families. Many amateur singers, musicians, and amateur photographers have emerged in our districts, township, and neighborhoods. Many young mothers in particular accompany their young children to family tutors to learn skills in violin and piano playing, or to learn painting. This is now a common scene. With such a growth in literature and art activities in such colorful variations, we can imagine what a vigorous development of literature and art there will be in the next century.

As we are implementing reform policies and opening up, and people come and go, there are inevitable cross-cultural influences. External cultures are affecting us, and our culture is affecting them. This is unavoidable and normal. With its geographical location, Guangzhou is China's southern gate, so it is the first to be affected. External influences come more quickly, more directly, and with more impact than in the hinterland. This is a fact.

A few years back, with the spread of radio cassette-recorders, Hong Kong's "pop songs" became fashionable in Guangzhou. Nobody had made a particular effort to import them. Since the windows were open, the "southern wind" was bound to come in. As we are not going to shut the windows, we have to learn how to properly deal with such external influences. At the time, the provincial committee put it well: "Repel pollution, but not everything foreign." Thus, the principle of adroit, guiding action according to circumstances, strengthening control, and developing self-creation was adopted. Consequently, the problem has been basically solved. A number of our own pop songs have become popular; at the same time, a number of popular young singers and lyrics writers have emerged. In fact, we have even affected Hong Kong's "pop songs," but this is not the result of special efforts by our people. Hong Kong singers are now also singing our northern Shaanxi folk songs and some Cantonese opera in their nightly performances. This amounts to some kind of change in terms of mutually influencing each other.

With the development of our economy, cultural development is on the agenda. This is an objective demand. Economic development includes the development of science and technology. Imports of the new science and technologies of the 1980's have not only produced a new generation of products, but a new generation of young technical workers. When we import the results of a new generation of advanced science and technology, we have a process of digestion and absorption, a process of transforming and creating the new in linking our characteristics and experiences. In this way, we can create more advanced results in our science and technology. Of course, such a process should be accomplished by relying on people. It is the same with cultural development. But only by making foreign things serve China, weeding through the old to bring forth the new, and letting a hundred flowers bloom, a hundred schools of thought contend, will it be possible to produce more and better literature and art works to serve the people and socialism, thus better meeting the needs of our cultural life in the vast urban and rural areas.

LEGAL SPOKESMAN EXAMINES ECONOMIC CRIMES

HK080241 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 1 Feb 86 p 4

[Report by correspondent Xiong Yongnian: "An Interview With the Spokesman of the Supreme People's Court on a Further Crackdown on Economic Crimes"]

[Excerpts] On 31 January the spokesman of the Supreme People's Court answered questions raised by this reporter, questions about which the masses of people are much concerned.

Question: How should we appraise the situation in the present struggle against serious economic criminal activities?

Answer: Over the last few years, proceeding from the overall situation regarding the socialist four modernizations program, the central authorities have adopted a series of important instructions and policy decisions on cracking down on economic criminals in grave cases. Moreover, the instructions and policy decisions have been made more concrete and definite. Party committees and governments at all levels are deepening their understanding of the necessity and urgency to crack down on economic crimes. They have gradually strengthened leadership over the struggle against serious economic criminal activities.

In the past year in particular, after the central authorities proposed that new unhealthy practices be corrected, party committees and governments at various levels paid more attention to and strengthened their work of cracking down on economic crimes. All economic management departments conducted mass financial, tax, and price surveys and checked on and consolidated the work of companies, thus further advancing the struggle against economic crimes.

Great progress has been made in the present crackdown on serious economic crimes, but it must also be noted that economic criminal activities are still rampant. The growing arrogance of economic criminals, whose cases are serious, has not been totally deflated. The phenomena where cases of serious economic crime have not been not effectively resolved is continuing. Cracking down on economic crimes is a long-term, arduous task. On no account must we take it lightly.

Question: What obstructions and resistance have procuratorial organs encountered in handling economic criminal cases?

Answer: The present economic crimes are characterized by collusion between those inside and outside the unit or the country and between higher and lower levels. Our units and cadres are looking into many economic criminal cases. Sometimes, tens of units and cadres at and above the county level are involved. Working in the interests of small groups, some government offices and state-owned or collective enterprises and institutions have forsaken integrity, tempted by personal gain. They have engaged in economic criminal activities in a big way, collaborating with criminals in our society, each using the other for his own ends. Therefore, while handling economic criminal cases we are often confronted with a sophisticated network of relationships, strong protection, and numerous obstructions and resistance from the higher authorities.

Some people run around everywhere pleading for the offenders; some support offenders in applying for an audience with higher authorities to lodge complaints and voice grievances for them; some erect obstructions and barriers in various ways to prevent cases from being investigated and handled; some take offenders under their wings using all kinds of pretexts; others shield offenders by abusing their power or by substituting the law with personal intervention; still others even hamper investigations of their own cases. Frequently, when investigating and handling economic criminal cases, it is more difficult to overcome the numerous obstructions and break through the network of relationships and protection from the higher authorities than to investigate and handle the cases themselves.

Analyzing the obstructions and resistance we encountered in investigating and handling economic criminal cases, we found the following: 1) Some leading cadres still have trouble understanding the dialectical relationship between the crackdown on economic crimes and reform, opening up to the outside world, and invigorating the domestic economy. They are worried that cracking down on economic crimes will hinder implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world, invigorating the domestic economy, and developing economic construction. 2) Some leading cadres weigh the crackdown on economic crimes against that of regular criminal offenses, arguing that the crackdown on economic crimes will affect our efforts to concentrate on taking strong measures against regular criminal offenses. 3) Some leading cadres have little sense of the legal system and have not acted strictly according to the law. 4) Some people are indulgent and lenient toward economic criminal cases involving cadres, leading cadres in particular, because they are their former superiors or subordinates, colleagues or relatives, with a view to shielding them. 5)Some state cadres involved in malpractices or bribed by offenders have provided them with conveniences by abusing their power. Some even colluded with them in their evil deeds. This shows that to remove obstructions and resistance, it is necessary to be upright and outspoken, to enforce the law impartially, to have the courage to handle and be good at handling tough problems, and to do a good job of conducting investigation and study.

It is also necessary to keep party committees informed of recent developments so as to win their guidance and support, to strengthen education among involved cadres, and to hold responsible those who gave unprincipled protection to or plead for offenders in accordance with the resolutions of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council. Only in this way can the so-called network of relationships and protection shield be smashed and obstructions and resistance removed.

Question: How can the struggle against economic criminal activities be carried out thoroughly? What key problems should be firmly solved?

Answer: Criminal activities in the economic sphere are a problem of a social character. It will not do to rely exclusively on procuratorial organs and judicial departments in solving the problem. To solve it successfully, the whole party and society should be serious and take action.

China's political and economic situation is presently very good. After the National Conference of Party Delegates, the CPC Central Committee stressed simultaneously grasping "the building of two civilizations." Recently the central authorities have decided that in bringing about a fundamental turn for the better in party work style and the standard of social conduct, the central party, government, and Army organizations should set examples for the entire nation. All this has created favorable conditions for carrying out a thorough crackdown on serious economic criminal activities. We believe that as long as we seize this favorable opportunity and the whole party and society take vigorous actions to thoroughly implement the struggle against serious economic criminal activities, persistently implement the principle of punishing criminals strictly and severely according to law, effectively put an end to the phenomena where economic criminals are not effectively dealt with, and strive to further the positive momentum which has already emerged, we will surely win a great victory in the struggle against serious economic crimes.

GUANGMING RIBAO DISCUSSES REFORM, OPENING UP

HK090709 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 25 Jan 86 pp 3, 4

[Article by Yuan Mu: "Several Questions of Understanding Concerning Reform and Opening Up to the Outside World"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has taken up the general task for the new historical period and put forward the general topic of building socialism with Chinese characteristics. With a view to completing this general task for the new historical period and accomplishing the aim of building socialism with Chinese characteristics, our party has adopted the principle of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world. Judged by the main current, essence, and general tendency of development, the situation is excellent, and we have scored enormous achievements. A new situation of sustained, stable, and coordinated development has arisen in our country's national economy. Increased ranges in the people's living standards, in both rural and urban areas, have been rare since the founding of the country. Over the last few years, the financial and economic strength of the country has been greatly strengthened. However, while fully affirming the excellent main current in the current economic situation in our country, we must also notice some new problems that have arisen since the fourth quarter of 1984. On the one hand, as the development situation over the last few years was very excellent, the state of blindly expanding the scale of production construction once again arose in work to a certain extent. And on the other hand, as more attention in reform was paid to the invigoration of the microeconomy than the strengthening of macroeconomic control, some new unstable factors have emerged in economic life as a result.

Notwithstanding that the contradictions have been or are being mitigated through a whole year's effort last year, the problems have not yet been completely solved and we still cannot lower our guard in the slightest degree. At present, our task is to persevere in the reform and the orientation of opening up to the outside world, and under this condition to conscientiously summarize experiences, resolve the problems in the course of advance and ensure the reform and opening up to the outside world more healthily forges ahead.

Construction Arrangements Should Be in Favor of the Economic Structural Reform

Fundamentally speaking, reform is to serve construction. The most important issue for us in accomplishing the general task for the new period and building up a modernized and highly civilized and democratic socialist country is to carry forward socialist economic construction. The reform is to eliminate various long-standing abuses fettering productive forces in the existing management structure and to more favorably promote the development of social productive forces, building socialism with Chinese characteristics and consolidating and perfecting the socialist system. Therefore, it is consistant with the objectives of construction. So, the construction arrangements must serve the reform. In carrying out the reform, we must not only have our eyes on the present but also the future. It is imperative to proceed from such a strategic viewpoint to correctly handle well the relationship between reform and construction and make them mutually adaptable and supportive in forging ahead.

With a view to ensuring the smooth progress of the reform, it is particularly necessary to provide for the reform an economic environment in which economic life will be more well-to-do and the proportional economic relations will be more coordinated and stable. Therefore, we must strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, continue to prevent an overheated economy, and resolutely control the scale of investment in fixed assets, in particular the scale of capital construction. Otherwise, reform will not proceed smoothly. At present, some localities and departments do not have a deep understanding of the decision of the central authorities and the State Council regarding strengthening macroeconomic control and are not resolutely carrying it out; and some even hold that the strengthening of macroeconomic control is only the business of the central authorities and has little to do with their own localities and departments. As the whole is composed of individual parts, if each part holds that a decision of overall importance has little to do with it and goes its own way, solving matters of overall importance will become empty talk.

The development of each locality and department does not only involve the question of its own overall balance. At present, it is particularly necessary to stress cultivating the sense of proceeding from the interests of the whole. Only when everyone fully understands the necessity of strengthening macroeconomic control, consciously brings the excessive scale of construction under control, and maintains an appropriate rate of economic development under the condition of raising economic effectiveness can we contribute to the smooth progress of reform and the healthy development of the economy and create better conditions for sustained, stable, and coordinated economic development in the coming 5, 10, or 20 years, or even longer. If economic relations in every field are strained, general social demand exceeds the general supply, national income is distributed excessively, and we do not promptly solve these problems, these contradictions will become more and more acute; we would have to make major readjustments in the end. Thereby, it will be difficult for the reform to be carried out smoothly. The excessive price hikes of some commodities last year was due primarily to the excessive scale of investment in fixed assets, drastic growth in consumption funds, runaway credit funds, excessive currency in circulation, and other factors but not the reasonable readjustment of price structure. This also fully shows that in order to smoothly push forward the price reform and every other reform, we must further strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, regulation, and administration and promote the change of current economic environment from being strained to well-off.

To Build New Modes According to the Demands of the Planned Commodity Economy

In essence, the orientation of the economic reform adhered to by us, or the target mode to be achieved, is to thoroughly break away from the influence of the previous practice of attempting to prematurely set up the mode of the planned product economy, reform the original economic structure, and set up a new, lively, and energetic mode of socialist economic structure, in light of the demands of developing a socialist commodity economy based on public ownership of the means of production in a planned way.

In this historical stage of socialism, if the commodity economy is not fully and highly developed, we just cannot realize a high degree of socialization in production and modernization in the economy and fundamentally consolidate and perfect the socialist system. The development of the commodity economy is an indispensable stage of the economic develpment of human society. The natural economy, the commodity economy, and the product economy to be experienced in the future stages of communism are three economic patterns which human society must experience in development. The founders of Marxism always envisaged that the socialist revolution would first win its victory in highly developed capitalist countries or countries with highly developed commodity economy. Following the realization of the ownership of the means of production by the whole society, namely public ownership, as social labor was directly reflected by individual labor, it would be possible for a unified social center to plan production and distribution for the whole society, relations between commodities and money would automatically wither away, and commodity economy would become the planned production economy.

This is a scientific prediction about future society through in-depth analyses of the development law of capitalist society. Neverthless, the question is under what conditions or by what possibility can we realize this prediction. In the past, we did not have a deep understanding of this question. However, it seems now that without a highly developed commodity economy, we just cannot realize this vision of Marx and Engels in this historical stage of socialism. In the whole socialist stage, without highly developed social productive forces, labor productivity, and the commodity economy, great differences would still exist in the labor of each individual, labour would remain the main means for people to make a living, the old form of social division of labor would still exist, relatively independent economic interests would still correspondingly exist in each enterprise, and relations between commodities and money would not wither away. Thereby, it would be impossible for the commodity economy to change into the product economy.

As a highly developed commodity economy is the inevitable demand of the historical stage of socialism, in planning as well as every other economic work, we must consciously act according to and apply the law of value. Since the law of value is the general law of commodity economy, if we consciously apply it, we can effectively promote the development of the socialist commodity economy; and if we consciously or unconsciously go against it, we will butt our heads against a wall of hard facts and hinder the development of the socialist economy. This is an objective reality independent of man's will. To fully develop the commodity economy, we must attach great importance to and bring into full play the role of markets, as there is no commodity economy without markets. If we want to carry out commodity production and exchange while bringing the role of markets into full play, we must make state-run enterprises become economic entities possessing relatively independent economic benefits and let them be run independently and assume sole responsibility for their own profits or losses. If we do not act according to this demand, we just cannot fully develop the commodity economy. Since we have to fully develop the commodity economy, we must correctly handle the relationship between the state and the enterprise.

We should change the previous practice of the enterprises being directly run by state organizations, apply the principle of streamlining administration and instituting decentralization and separating government from enterprises' responsibility and let the state-run enterprises have relatively independent microeconomic decision-making power and business management authority. Therefore, the state can no longer adopt the whole set of the previous enterprise management structure focusing on "centralization."

In order to meet the need of developing the socialist commodity economy in a planned way on the basis of public ownership, it is necessary for us to pay particular attention to making a clear distinction between the following two fields: On the one hand, we must fully understand the historical inevitability of the socialist stage to fully develop the commodity economy and in no way attempt to prematurely set up the mode of communist product economy regardless of the reality of history; otherwise, we just cannot possibly shake off the influence of "leftism" and will be out of tune with many current reform measures. On the other hand, we must not mix up the essential distinction between the socialist commodity economy and the capitalist commodity economy. The most important is that the socialist commodity economy is a kind of planned commodity economy based on public ownership. Developing the socialist commodity economy is to meet the constantly growing material and cultural needs of the masses of people to the maximum degree. In the current reform, some factories do not proceed from realizing the fundamental aim of making the country prosperous and powerful and the people well-off and happy but persist in making profits regardless of product quality and economic effectiveness and do not strive to reduce consumption and production costs. Fundamentally speaking, this has violated the principle of developing the socialist commodity economy. Under the socialist conditions in our country, manpower is not a commodity, nor are all the state-owned enterprises and resources like land, mines, banks, railroads, and so on.

Therefore, commodity fetishism and the profit-before-everything mentality are fundamentally incompatible with the socialist system. Of course, with the development of the socialist commodity economy, on the one hand, the social productive forces would attain fuller development; and on the other hand, people's thinking would also more easily be corroded by bourgeois ideology. However, this shows all the more the necessity to remind people to draw a clear and fundamental distinction between the socialist commodity economy and the capitalist commodity economy and the necessity and importance of persisting in conducting education in socialist and communist ideals and ethics. In addition, there is also a question of how to deal correctly with the advanced business management experiences of the developed capitalist countries. As the commodity economy in our country is underdeveloped and we lack experience in managing socialized mass production, in reform we must not refuse to learn all the advanced business management experiences and scientific methods reflecting the modern production laws of all the countries in the contemporary world including the developed capitalist countries. On the contrary, we must be determined to earnestly study and draw lessons from them and use them to serve us as well as the development of the socialist commodity economy. Of course, while upholding doing this, we must not include those decadent things characteristic of the nature of capitalist system and completely use the principles of the market economy to guide the development of the socialist commodity economy departing from the mode of the planned economy.

Reform Measures Need Time To Be Effective

The reason for the party and state to persevere in carrying out reform or the starting point and aim of all the policies concerning the reform is to make the country prosperous and powerful and the people well-off and happy. Fundamentally speaking, reform will surely promote the development of the social productive forces, consolidate and perfect our socialist system and the socialist modernization construction in our country. It conforms completely with the long-term and fundamental interests of the people of the whole country and every social member.

However, in reform and especially in the reform in urban areas where various relations are more complex and complicated, will the implementation of each reform measure bring immediate and visible material interests to each social member? We just cannot view this question in this way and make such demands.

First, in economic reform and especially in urban economic reform, some reform measures need a certain period of practice time to become effective; some also need the good coordination of other relevant reforms to become effective. Take the reform of the price system and the price control system for example. Either carrying out structural readjustment of some irrational price relations or decontrolling some prices to establish floating or free-market prices can cause some commodity prices to rise for certain time and affect to a certain degree the actual interests of the people. However, the stimulative role of the rational readjustment and decontrol of prices in developing production, its promotive role in carrying out rational readjustment of production structure and invigorating economy as well as the price stability reappearing on such a basis and more actual benefits to the people would need a certain time to show up and be fully acknowledged by more people. If we only stress the "instant results" of the reform, people would tend to oversimplify the reform and make feverish demands on the results of reform. Or, due to a change from high hopes to disappointment and from disappointment to being sulky, they would even be shaped into forces reacting against the reform and resist the reform mentally. Of course, this is very unfavorable to the smooth progress of the reform. Therefore, during the reform we should not make too many early promises. In this aspect, we should also encourage doing more and speaking less.

Second, during the process of reform and the transition between the new and old structures, a certain kind of redistribution of vested interests will unavoidably exist. For example, following the smashing of the system of "everybody eating from the same big pot," those people who worked hard under this system or will work harder in the future would certainly get more actual benefits. However, those people who did not work hard in the past and are not willing to work hard in the future would obviously not and also should not continue to get the vested interests under the old system as before. Giving a clear explanation of this situation would probably be advantageous to inspiring people all to display the spirit of actively forging ahead.

The Process of Reform and Opening Up to the Outside World Is Also A Process of Constantly Checking Unhealthy Tendencies

During the process of carrying out the reform and expanding opening up to outside world, the breeding and spreading of various unhealthy tendencies create serious interference in the reform and opening up to the outside world. In order to correctly and effectively check and rectify the unhealthy tendencies, we should adopt an analytical attitude toward the so-called "source" of the unhealthy tendencies and get a correct understanding. If people just simply and sweepingly attribute the unhealthy tendencies to the reform and opening up to the outside world, this viewpoint is not analytical and proper. Moreover, it is also unfavorable to our common effort to persevere in uniting the whole party and the people of the country under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee to jointly check and rectify unhealthy tendencies.

The main sources of unhealthy tendencies are first, the influences of the exploiting classes' moribund and decadent ideologies left by the old society, and second, the influences of individualism and anarchism viciously inflated during the "Cultural Revolution." Of course, we should also notice that some leading organs or party-member leading cadres also help upgrade unhealthy tendencies or directly violate party and government discipline and the law. Some unhealthy tendencies were actually stirred up by some departments, units, and individuals in the name of reform. Meanwhile, as we do not have much experience in economic structural reform, it is unavoidable that during the process of reform some shortcomings and errors might crop up and that the reform measures could not become perfect overnight.

Therefore, some unhealthy tendencies have exploited loopholes in some of the reform measures. However, we just cannot attribute unhealthy tendencies generally to reform simply because of these. Otherwise, we would easily and simply come to the conclusion that only by bringing the reform to a close can we check and rectify unhealthy tendencies. Of course, this is obviously inappropriate. Reform conforms with the immediate and long-term interests of the Chinese people and the fundamental way out for China. Checking and rectifying the unhealthy tendencies is to better ensure the smooth progress of the reform. Long ago, the central authorities explicitly pointed out in the "decision of the CPC Central Committee of the economic structure" that "the more we enliven the economy and invigorate enterprises, the more we must pay attention to combating the corrosive influences of capitalist ideas, eliminating the decadent practice of seeking personal gain by abusing one's position and authority, and preventing any action that seriously harms the interests of the state and the consumers, and the more we should strengthen the building of a fine party style and sense of discipline." Thus, we can see that at the time when the overall reform focusing on the urban areas was about to be gradually unfolded in the whole country, the central authorities sounded an alarm for the whole party that the growth of unhealthy tendencies goes against the fundamental demand of the central authorities. There is also another viewpoint that the growth of unhealthy tendencies is a result of the adoption of the policy of opening up to the outside world. The central authorities pointed out long ago that the adoption of the policy of opening up to the outside world would bring us many favorable factors which would greatly promote our country's four modernizations construction but also some unfavorable negative factors referring mainly to the impact of the decadent and moribund capitalist ideology and lifestyle in the west. It is entirely necessary and correct to point out that the latter would become a factor in breeding unhealthy tendencies, so as to put the people on guard. However, it is not correct to completely attribute the growth of unhealthy tendencies to the adoption of the policy of opening up to the outside world. The policy of opening up to the outside world is a long-standing fundamental state policy of our country as well as a strategic measure for speeding up the four modernizations drive. With the further expansion of opening up to the outside world, Western countries' advanced experiences in science and technology and business management will be introduced along with their decadent and moribund ideology. However, we should not give up eating for fear of choking. We should up hold the "two-point" policy repeatedly stressed by the central authorities, namely, to persist in opening up to the outside world; and second, under this condition to resolutely resist the corrosive influence of the moribund and decadent ideology and lifestyle of capitalism.

In a certain sense, we can also hold that the reform and opening up to the outside world itself is a process of constantly doing away with the old and setting up the new, solving problems, correcting mistakes, and forging ahead. Bringing order out of chaos since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has corrected the mistakes of the "Cultural Revolution;" and the implementation of the principle of "readjusting, restructuring, consolidating, and improving the national economy" has put an end to the serious imbalance in major proportional relations in the national economy shaped over a long period of time. During the process of reform and opening up to the outside world, new problems will unavoidably crop up constantly and some errors may also occur. Nevertheless, the process of solving problems and correcting errors is the process of unceasing progress and gradual development for reform and opening up to the world. The exposure and gradual elimination of unhealthy tendencies will surely make our party more brilliant and also make the restructuring of our domestic economy and opening up to the outside world even better.

Doing Away With the Old and Setting Up the New Should Be Linked in Reform

Since the reform is necessary, we should, of course, do away with the old things which are incompatible with the times and emphasize and bring into play the spirit of actively blazing new trails and forging ahead.

Otherwise, reform cannot be carried out. However, we cannot and should not repeat the previous wrong practice of "smashing it first." We should strive to dialectically link the relations between doing away with the old and setting up the new. While doing away with the old rules and regulations fettering the development of productive forces, we should adopt new methods and measures and work out and perfect new rules and regulations as quickly as possible, so as to rapidly put economic life onto the new right track. We should try to avoid the situation that after the old has been smashed, the new cannot be set up, thus not creating opportunities for people engaging in unhealthy tendencies and lawbreakers to take advantage of. Therefore, we are required to carefully think things over and avoid either acting hastily or only doing away with the old but not setting up the new.

Judging by the experiences gained in the reform practice not long ago, we should pay special attention to the following points: first, the scope, degree, and plan of the state's reduction of direct control over the activities of enterprises or microeconomy should be in conformity with the state's capabilities for strengthening indirect control over macroeconomy. If on the one hand, direct control is reduced and the policy of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the outside world is adopted, but, on the other hand, indirect control cannot keep pace with it, relevant methods and systems are not worked out, and means of economic regulation are not well employed, the phenomenon of the macroeconomy being out of control would easily occur. Second, it is necessary to correctly understand and employ administrative means. In the previous economic structure, we excessively employed administrative means to directly interfere with the productive operations of enterprises. Thus, the development of productive forces was hindered, due to too many and too rigid controls. This kind of abuse must be rooted up. Therefore, gradually reducing the employment of administrative means but adopting more economic means to administer the economy is the orientation of our reform. This must be understood. However, we must also notice that the necessary adoption of administrative means in the management of the socialist economy is indispensable at any time. It is difficult to abolish all administrative means while maintaining the main frame of the planned economy. Moreover, under the condition that not long ago the macroeconomy was, to a certain extent, out of control and some new unstable factors emerged in economic life, within a certain period of time the employment of administrative means should also be strengthened. By doing so, we shall reduce the employment of administrative means in the future. Third, the procuratorial and supervisory systems should be gradually perfected. While enterprises are invigorated and the economy becomes enlivened, if we do not have the necessary procuratorial and supervisory organs and sound and well-organized procuratorial and supervisory systems, it will be difficult to better plug the loopholes in economic life and better safeguard the interests of the state and consumers. Fourth, it is imperative to make the work of economic legislation and judicature closely keep abreast of the reform and strengthen the work of legislation while carrying out the reform. The progress of the economic structural reform and the further development of the national economy increasingly demand fixing economic relations and the norms of economic activities in the form of laws, so as to make law an important means for regulating economic relations and economic activities.

Reform Should Be Carried Out in an Orderly and Well-Coordinated Way in a Number of Stages

We can never act recklessly and try to achieve the expected goal of our reform in a single move. Reform is a cause that should be carried on continuously and be divided into a number of stages too. That is, we should conduct reform in an orderly and planned way.

In our reforms, especially the urban reforms, relations between economic activities in all fields are very close, and cooperation and coordination are necessary in modern socialized production.

Therefore, our reforms in each field cannot be carried out separately and must be well coordinated. We should give consideration to the influence of each reform measure in all related fields. Only thus can we achieve better results. In the whole country, there should be an overall reform program; and in a city, there should also be an all-round plan. At present, priority should be given to the reform measures favorable to economic stability, favorable to effective macroeconomic control, favorable to economic legislation, to the enforcement of economic laws, and to economic supervision, favorable to the proportionate development of the economy and the rationalization of the industrial structure, and favorable to the prevention of overheated economic activities and the prevention of the excessive growth in capital construction. If these issues are properly resolved through reform and our work, we will further control the macroeconomic links which were out of control in the previous period, will further rationalize various economic ratios, will further stabilize our economic life and create a better economic environment for reform, and will more effectively promote the orderly development of comprehensive reform. By successfully taking this step and achieving obvious results in improving the economic environment, we will be able to go ahead in reform and improve our planning, monetary, financial, and taxation systems so as to develop a socialist commodity market and to perfect the market system. Reforms in all these fields must be well coordinated and must not be carried out separately. The most important task is to, under the guidance of plans, gradually establish a sound system of socialist markets, including commodity markets, funds markets, and technology markets, and to establish a price system which can reasonably and sensitively reflect relations between supply and demand on the markets and the changes in social labor productivity and which can meet the needs of the development of the national economy so as to promote the full development of the socialist planned commodity economy on the basis of public ownership and to gradually form a vigorous and dynamic new-type socialist economic structure. Corresponding to the above-mentioned two reform steps, we should further streamline and reform state economic management institutions.

Outlook and Prospects for Our Reform

Through practice in the past 7 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have found the road to build socialism with Chinese characteristics, and we can see more and more clearly the outlook for our economic structural reforms. Here, I would like to discuss several main points about the prospects for our economic reform.

The central issues that should be solved in the course of reform: With the in-depth development of the reforms, two issues must be properly solved. First, we must further invigorate enterprises, especially the large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises. This is the central link of the economic structural reforms in cities, is the starting point and footing for the reforms, and is the foundation for enlivening the economy as a whole. Second, we must strengthen the state's macroeconomic control, management, and regulations so as to bring the overall economic situation under effective control. The essential requirement in these two aspects is to seek a whole set of mechanisms and means to ensure effective macroeconomic management and enliven microeconomic activities and to perfectly and organically integrate plans and markets. This is the most difficult and also the most important issue that must be solved in reform, and it is a central issue that concerns the whole situation.

The way to invigorate enterprises, especially large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises: In order to improve external conditions for the enterprises, we should, first, continue to streamline administration and decentralize management power on the principle of separating government from enterprise functions. It is necessary to really and thoroughly delegate the microeconomic decision-making power and enterprise management power to the enterprises. This power must not be withheld by administrative institutions at various levels.

Second, large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises which operate efficiently, make great contributions to the state, and retain a relatively low proportion of profits in their hands should be allowed an appropriate reduction of taxes and profit contributions. In particular, regulatory taxes on them can be appropriately reduced. Third, mandatory plans and tasks assigned to these enterprises should be further reduced gradually and appropriately and enterprises should be allowed to sell a larger proportion of their own products by themselves. While adopting the above reform measures, we should pay special attention to maintaining an equilibrium between total social demand and total supply and should try to create a situation in which supply slightly exceeds demand so as to form a buyers' market. This will prompt the enterprises to seriously improve their management and operations and to make rapid progress in technology in order to win a better position in market competition.

Enterprises, especially large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises, should fully and properly use the decision-making power granted them by the state, speed the pace of their internal reform, perfect their economic responsibility systems based on all types of contracts, strengthen quality control and technological management in an all-round way, and effectively tap the great potential in these enterprises through improving product quality and raising economic efficiency. In order to speed internal reforms in enterprises, it is necessary to resolutely reform the personnel system inside enterprises, especially in large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises and to promote a number of competent people who have courage, insight, and management skills to the leading bodies of the enterprises. It is also necessary to gradually adopt the system under which enterprise managers' responsibilities are clearly specified in the contracts signed between the higher authorities and the management bodies of the enterprises. That is, a management responsibility system based on contracts should be adopted in the enterprises.

Bringing the functions of cities into full play and gradually perfecting the socialist commodity market. Our reforms should serve the purpose of developing a socialist commodity economy in a planned way on the basis of public ownership, so it is necessary to bring the manifold functions of the cities into full play and to gradually establish and perfect an open rather than close, unified rather than separated socialist market. On the one hand, cities should no longer interfere in the routine business activities and production of the enterprises through issuing administrative orders as in the past; on the other hand, all cities should open their doors to other cities and other areas.

The development of the socialist commodity economy will inevitably require the further expansion and improvement of the socialist commodity market. Therefore, we not only should develop the markets for consumer goods, but should also allow more production materials and capital goods to enter markets for free transactions by gradually narrowing the scope of production materials and capital goods allocated by the state authorities. Along with the development of the commodity market, there must also be the fund markets and technology markets. Reasonable movement of labor force should also be promoted so as to meet the needs in the development of markets. Cities should all open their doors and welcome all people, no matter whether they represent public or private enterprises and whether they come from the north or south, to do business, make investments, arrange cooperation, and conduct technological exchanges.

The coordinated reforms and the use of various economic regulatory mechanisms: This includes issues concerning the reforms of our planning system, price system, labor and wage system, monetary system, and foreign trade and foreign exchange management.

The main body of our economic plans will gradually shift from mandatory plans to guidance plans, and the main means of our economic management will gradually change from direct control into indirect control. This is the central task in the reform of our planning system.

Under the socialist conditions in our country, we will maintain some mandatory plans, but the scope of mandatory plans will be narrowed, and the scope of guidance plans will be gradually expanded. At any time, administrative means will still be used for economic management, and sometimes the administrative means should be strengthened. But our general orientation is to reduce the use of this means step by step. The reduction of mandatory plans and the use of administrative means, as well as the decontrol of microeconomic activities, should all be coordinated with the strengthening of the state's macroeconomic management and the authorities' ability to use economic regulatory mechanisms.

In price reform, we should be good at applying the "four-character" formula, namely, "decontrol, readjustment, participation, and management." By "decontrol," we mean that prices for some commodities should be gradually allowed to change freely according to the relationship between supply and demand on the markets, thus gradually becoming floating or free prices. By "readjustment," we mean that the state should take the initiative in readjusting price differences between commodities of different quality and readjusting price parities between different commodities. By "participation," we mean that state-owned industrial and commercial enterprises and the state departments in charge of material supply should hold some commodities in their hands so that they can participate in regulating market conditions and stabilizing the prices. By "management," we mean that price management should be conducted at various administrative levels. In the future, the state will continue to exercise management over prices, but the management will not be so highly centralized as before.

In addition, we will continue to explore ways that are in line with our national conditions to conduct reforms of the wage system, the monetary system, the foreign trade system, and the foreign exchange management system.

The readjustment and streamlining of the state organs for economic management: In general, comprehensive economic departments will make their policy decisions more scientific and concentrate on macroeconomic management by freeing themselves from concrete affairs. They should also strengthen their decision-making brain trusts. The functions of some departments which take charge of specific industries are often overlapping, and they should be further streamlined. The functions of these departments in managing the enterprises' production, supply, marketing, personnel, and financial affairs should be weakened. However, they should pay more attention to planning the development orientation of the industries they take charge of and should strengthen their functions to rationalize the industrial structure and the enterprises' organizational structure. In addition, the departments for economic legislation and the enforcement of economic laws should be further strengthened. All leading departments must have the viewpoint of serving the grass-roots units.

Because of the limitations of the length of the article and of my understanding, the above points may not be all correct and perfect. However, our practice has shown a clearer and clearer road for our economic reforms, and we have accumulated more and more experience. This must be fully affirmed, and we should highly value and cherish our achievements and experience.

PURSUIT OF RISK INVESTMENT STRATEGY DETAILED

HK101514 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 p 14

[Article by Ling Wancheng and Liu Kao: "Risk Investment in China"]

[Text] China's first financing enterprise specializing in risk investment in developing new technologies -- the China New Technology Investment Corporation -- was founded on 28 December 1985 with the approval of the State Council.

This company is under the dual leadership of the People's Bank of China and the State Science and Technology Commission, and its capital is jointly held by these two state institutions. The founding of such a company is a new experiment in China's economic, technological, and financial structural reforms.

What Does Risk Investment Mean?

Risk investment is a mechanism combining financial arrangements with the development of new technologies. Song Jian, minister of the State Science and Technology Commission, used some vivid figures of speech to describe the function of risk investment. He said: Risk investment is an important "bridge" linking large quantities of new technological achievements to social life, is a "hotbed" for breeding high technology products, is a "matchmaker" for the marriage between high technological achievements and the commodity economy, and is a "guide" to the development of new industries.

Risk investment originated in the United States in the late 1940's. After the end of World War II, the electronics industry and other new technologies emerged successively, and the investment activities which turned the new technologies into new products boomed. Now risk investment has became a major branch of economic activities in the world.

Developing Risk Investment Is Necessary

A major drawback of China's existing scientific research systems is that research achievements cannot be rapidly and effectively turned into commodities and be used in the production process to produce economic benefits. This state of affairs is more obvious in the new industries based on high technology. China develops many new technologies and makes many research achievements every year, but they remain at the stage of samples, gifts, and exhibits for a long time and have few opportunities to really enter people's socioeconomic life as commodities people can buy, sell, and use. These new technologies and research achievements can hardly promote the updating and renewal of social products, enhance labor productivity, and accelerate the accumulation of social wealth.

The greatest obstacle to the shift of technological achievements to social products is the shortage of funds. Banks usually just offer loans to the guaranteed projects and enterprises, as they do not quite understand the development of the new technological projects which will conduct trial production. For research departments, research items under trial production fall out of the scope of research and belong to the scope of production. But state economic departments care only about some large-scale research projects. Many smaller scale technological items with good market prospects, potential for intense economic efficiency and which involve risk cannot be further developed and shifted to production; no department is willing to allocate funds, and no bank is willing to offer loans. They are simply cast aside. This is the background against which people began to seek a mechanism to link technological development with funds.

Risk Investment Is Feasible

The contemporary technological revolution in the world is playing two major roles in economic development: First, it enables the new industries based on high technology to replace the traditional industries and to take a leading position in the economy; second, it helps high technology infiltrate traditional industries so as to effect major structural changes in these industries. These two aspects, however, all depend on the support of large amounts of funds. That is the reason why risk investment has been booming over the past decades.

In October 1983, Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out: We should take action to meet the challenge of the new worldwide technological revolution. Chairman Deng Xiaoping also said: The long-standing problem of scientific research and technological development being separated from economic activities should be resolved as soon as possible.

In November 1984, the development strategy institute of the research center for promoting and developing China's science and technology put forward a "proposal on making feasibility studies for the establishment of a risk investment company." This proposal pointed out the disadvantages of the existing system under which the government directly controls funds for technological development. As a result, large quantities of new technologies cannot be efficiently shifted to commodity production. The proposal said that the measure of making risk investment should be taken as soon as possible so as to make up for the shortage of funds for developing new industries.

A leader of the State Science and Technology Commission made an instructive comment on the proposal: "This is a good proposal. The referent studies should be start immediately, and the report should be submitted before the Seventh 5-Year Plan is officially passed."

This marked the beginning of the study of risk investment in China. The research center for promoting and developing China's science and technology studied the practice of risk investment in foreign countries and sent some investigation groups to such developed coastal areas as Guangdong and Fujian and to Beijing Municipality to discover the feasibility of making risk investments there. According to the large quantities of data and the results of the investigations, the research center reached the following conclusions:

-- There are numerous sources of technology for the founding of risk investment undertakings in China, and there are many promising high technology products with great potential. The supply of such advanced technology can be guaranteed through various channels such as the introduction of technology, transactions on the technology market, and the transfer of research achievements.

-- There are a number of entrepreneurs who have technological knowledge, management skills, and a pioneering spirit. According to statistics, there are more than 6 million scientific and technological personnel in the whole country, with over 1.04 million of them at and above the intermediate level. There are about 10,000 research units in the whole country.

-- Risk investment undertakings can get funds from various sources. The development of the rural economy and the expansion of enterprise decision-making power have continuously increased available funds scattered in society. In 1984, the sum of private savings, working funds, and enterprise funds reached 350 billion yuan. If an investment mechanism is built to make flexible use of these idle funds and funds not included in state plans, they will be partly used to develop new technologies and to shift these technologies to the production process. This will greatly promote China's economic development. In addition, many localities are willing to allocate some money from their finances to the special risk investment funds.

-- The reform of the technological system will bring about broad prospects for the market for high-technology products. The development of the technology market, the compensated transfer of technology based on a contract system, the trial implementation of the science fund system, and the appearance of research-production combination bodies will bring about unprecedented prosperity in the field of science and technology.

The Founding of the New Technology Development and Investment Company

The investigation and study group for the issue of risk investment submitted a study report to the leaders of the State Science and Technology Commission, proposing that a limited liability company be established to specialize in making risk investments in developing high technology. The group also designed the forms, management methods, technological spheres, geographical distribution, and organization of risk investment. The State Science and Technology Commission and the State Council gave full support to this imaginative and scientific proposal. On 4 April 1985, the leading party group of the State Science and Technology Commission held a meeting to discuss and pass the proposal and program for establishing the China risk investment corporation. This point was also written into the CPC Central Committee's decision on reform of the technological system. "Support should be given to the founding of investment institutions which specialize in developing high technology which may incur some economic risks."

In April 1985, the State Council and the economic and financial affairs leading group of the CPC Central Committee approved the establishment of the China New Technology Investment Corporation, and agreed with the form of risk investment in order to support the development of new technology. The State Science and Technology Commission then set up a preparatory group for the establishment of this company. The concrete options were submitted for comment to the June meeting to exchange technological achievements.

At the same time, China began to reform its financial system and a financial market began to take shape. This paved the way for movement of funds and for horizontal financing activities and provided a better environment for the founding of the risk investment company.

LIAOWANG EXPLAINS ENTERPRISE BANKRUPTCY LAW

HK111150 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 4, 27 Jan 86 pp 10-13

[Article by Sun Yaming, adviser to the Economic Legislation Research Center of the State Council and vice president of China's Economic Law Society: "China's Enterprise Bankruptcy Law, Which Is Being Formulated"]

[Text] In order to carry out the policy of reform, opening up to the outside world, and invigorating the domestic economy, we have discussed the following questions while formulating China's enterprise bankruptcy law:

The Reason for Formulating the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law

The reasons for formulating China's enterprise bankruptcy law are as follows:

-- To meet the need to smoothly carry out reform of the overall economic structure centering on our cities. Formulating China's enterprise bankruptcy law and establishing the socialist enterprise bankruptcy system are an important aspect of our economic structural reform. Leaders and workers of enterprises must establish the concept of competition, value, market, and risk while firmly establishing the concepts of reform, law, and an overall point of view. The so-called concept of risk means that we should recognize that if an enterprise is unsuccessful, it will run the risk of bankruptcy. So the socialist enterprises must be successful, not unsuccessful. This is an important criteria for demonstrating that socialist enterprises are responsible to the country and its people.

-- To meet the needs of developing a socialist commodity economy. Proceeding from China's reality, while extensively carrying out socialist competition, we must, according to the principle of promoting the good and eliminating the bad through competition, enable most of the several million enterprises throughout China to vigorously develop, actively compete, continuously increase economic results, and strengthen competitive strength so as to provide high-quality and reasonably priced commodities for the society. In the increasingly keen competition, a minority of enterprises will inevitably to bankrupt because of poor management. Under such circumstances, economic construction will be damaged if we do not have an enterprise bankruptcy law to deal with these cases of bankruptcy. The bankruptcy law is an important legal norm in our use of legal methods to control the economy and correctly deal with cases of bankruptcy.

-- To meet the needs of reducing the state's financial burden and practically improving the management and operation of the enterprises. Before 1979, China had implemented an excessively centralized economic management structure and a unified purchase and marketing system. All revenues and expenditures were handled by the state in a unified way. Profits of the enterprises were turned over to the state, and losses of the enterprises were subsidized by the state. In recent years, along with development of the reform of China's economic structure, on the one hand, the decision-making power of the enterprises run by the state has gradually been expanded; on the other hand, the state's macroscopic control over the national economy has also gradually been strengthened. At the beginning of 1983, in order to raise the economic results of the enterprises and reduce the number of deficit-ridden enterprises, the State Council instructed the various areas and departments to stress turning losses into profits while vigorously developing production. By the end of 1983, after a year of hard work, the number of unprofitable state industrial enterprises had been reduced by more than 4,200 and the amount of loss reduced from 4.27 billion yuan to 2.79 billion yuan. By the end of 1984, the number of the unprofitable state industrial enterprises was reduced by another 1,400 compared with 1983, and the amount of loss was reduced to 2.16 billion yuan. Among these, business losses were reduced from 60 percent in 1981 to around 40 percent in 1984. For quite some time, the losses of state industrial enterprises, especially business losses, were subsidized by the state. This method was detrimental to the development of the socialist commodity economy, because, on the one hand, state finances had to shoulder a burden of billions of yuan, on the other hand, by depending on state subsidies, some enterprises lost their vigor and were not keen on increasing production. Moreover, subsidizing enterprises means supporting backward enterprises and hampering advanced enterprises from greatly developing socialist economic results. To reverse this situation and cast away the old practice of "eating from the same big pot," it is necessary to formulate a socialist enterprise bankruptcy law.

Is It Possible That Enterprises Run by the State Will Go Bankrupt?

Some people think it is impossible for socialist state enterprises to declare bankruptcy. This is not so. If state enterprises cannot operate well, they should go bankrupt. All enterprises that bankrupt -- be they collective enterprises, joint ventures, enterprises run through cooperation with foreign businessmen, enterprises with exclusive foreign investment, or state enterprises -- must be dealt with according to China's enterprise bankruptcy law. How will state enterprises pay off debts when they go bankrupt? They should use the fixed assets allocated to them by the state, various kinds of funds under their control, and self-owned funds to pay off their debts. It is acknowledged that the fixed assets of state enterprises belong to all people and not to the enterprises themselves.

If fixed assets belong to all the people, how can state enterprises use these to pay off their debts? It is because China presently has 300,000 state enterprises, nearly 100,000 of which are state industrial enterprises. So it is impossible and unnecessary for state organs, especially government departments, to directly operate so many enterprises. The practical experiences of China's economic construction for the past 30 years tell us that if government departments directly operate enterprises, subjectivism and bureaucratism will inevitably prevail. This will make enterprises dependent upon administrative organs, restrict the vigor and vitality of the enterprises, and dampen the enthusiasm, initiative, and creativity of the workers.

The CPC Central Committee's decision on reform of the economic structure clearly points out: "Ownership and power of operation can be duly separated." This means that except for a few special cases, government departments will not directly operate enterprises in the future. Government departments will instead administer, examine, guide, and coordinate state enterprises through state plans and economic, administrative, and legal methods, that is, exercise macroscopic administration and macroscopic control over the enterprises. This kind of control is not direct control, but indirect control. Indirect control means to bring into play the coordinating role of all kinds of economic levers and perfect economic legislation and economic supervision.

To enable state enterprises to truly become relatively independent economic entities, true legal representatives of the enterprises, and socialist commodity producers and operators who can operate by themselves and be responsible for their own profits and losses, the state should also delegate to the enterprises the power to possess, use, and deal with the fixed assets allocated to the enterprises. This means that the state authorizes state enterprises to practically exercise the right to own and dispose of the fixed assets. Thus, the state enterprises can always make full and reasonable use of their machines and factory buildings, successfully turn raw materials and auxiliary materials into commodities needed by the society, and properly carry out technological transformation and equipment renewal. When state enterprises go bankrupt, they can use their fixed assets to pay the debt. This does not mean the state has been deprived of its right to own the fixed assets of the state enterprises. The state's ownership of state enterprises' fixed assets gives the state the right to administer and supervise the state enterprises, collect from the state enterprises by means of revenue and some other means net income which is to be used by the state in a unified way, and appoint, approve, or select leaders of the enterprises. It also gives the state the right to set up, close, combine, and move enterprises and stop or change the production of the enterprises.

While they are specifically exercising their right to own, use, and deal with the fixed assets, the state industrial enterprises must also be correspondingly responsible to the state. This mainly means that state industrial enterprises must fulfill state plans, guarantee the quality of their products, and be responsible to their consumers and customers. At the same time, state industrial enterprises must observe financial discipline, pay taxes, and turn over their profits to the state, trying at the same time to not only guarantee the value of the fixed assets, but to enable the value of the fixed assets to graudally increase in order to carry out expanded reproduction.

If state enterprises did not have the use their fixed assets to pay off debts when they went bankrupt, while collective enterprises and other types of enterprises had to use all their property -- including fixed assets -- to pay their debts, then state enterprises would be in a special position, This would be extremely unfair. It would also not conform to the law governing development of the commodity economy. So the state has delegated to state enterprises the powers to own, use, and deal with the fixed assets allocated to state enterprises. This is quite necessary to the development of the socialist commodity economy and development of the horizontal economic contacts among enterprises.

The "general regulations of the civil law of the People's Republic of China (draft)" correctly stipulates: "The legal representative of the enterprises owned by all the people shoulders civil responsibility for the property managed and administered by them." This will be an important legal basis for dealing with cases of bankruptcy by state enterprises.

The Main Contents Which Should Be Included in the Law of Bankruptcy

-- The guiding ideology in the legislation. China's enterprise bankruptcy law must be beneficial to socialist economic construction. In dealing with enterprises which are on the verge of bankruptcy, it must, first of all, aim at carrying out detailed investitations and analyses, try to reform and rectify those which can probably be saved, enable them to recover their vitality so that they can continue to operate, and make due contributions to the society by creating wealth. Only those enterprises which cannot recover their vitality after being reformed and rectified or which do not have necessary conditions for reform and rectification will be declared bankrupt by the people's court according to the law. So the basic spirit embodied in China's enterprise bankruptcy law mainly stresses rectification rather than bankruptcy.

-- The area of application. China's enterprise bankruptcy law is not only applicable to enterprises owned by all the people and collective enterprises or collective companies. It is also applicable to joint ventures, enterprises jointly managed by Chinese and foreign businessmen, enterprises or companies with exclusive foreign investment, various kinds of cooperative enterprises, and companies and combined economic organizations.

In dealing with cases of bankruptcy among agricultural, industrial, and commercial household enterprises, we can refer to relevant regulations of the enterprise bankruptcy law. When conditions become ripe in the future, we will formulate a bankruptcy law for agricultural, industrial, and commercial household enterprises.

-- The limits of bankruptcy. The preliminary concept of bankruptcy is "to be unable to pay off debt which has become due for payment." Enterprises in any of the following categories can be declared bankrupt: 1) Debt accounts for 90 percent of the registered funds of the enterprises (or companies), and the enterprises (or companies) are unable to pay off the debt which has become due for payment; 2) the total irremediable loss of the enterprise accounts for 80 percent of the registered funds, and the enterprises are unable to pay off the debt due for payment.

-- The composition and tasks of the committee to administer, deal with, and supervise cases of bankruptcy. Bankruptcy cases should be dealt with by the people's court in the locality where the department responsible for enterprises on the verge of bankruptcy is located. The enterprises on the verge of bankruptcy, the creditors of the enterprises, the local people's government's planning commission, economic committee, industrial and commercial administrative bureau, financial and revenue department, local people's bank, and department responsible for the enterprises can all apply to the relevant court for rectifying the enterprises or declaring them bankrupt. After the court places the case on file for investigation and prosecution, a supervisory committee will be formed by the court. Members of the supervisory committee should be representatives of the above mentioned relevant departments. The supervisory committee will be responsible to the court and report its work to the court. The task of the supervisory committee is to go to the enterprises on the verge of bankruptcy to carry out investigations and help the enterprises make rectification plans. If an enterprise does not have the conditions for rectification, the supervisory committee will advise the court to declare it bankrupt. During the period of rectification, the supervisory committee is responsible for supervising the work of rectifying the enterprises. After the enterprises have been declared bankrupt, the supervisory committee is responsible for taking care of, checking up on, appraising, selling off, and distributing the property of bankrupt enterprises.

-- The creditors' meeting. The task of the meeting is to examine the certificates and other relevant documents of the creditors, decide on the number of creditors, discuss, and vote on the rectification plan put forward by the enterprises on the verge of bankruptcy. After the rectification plan is examined and approved by the supervisory committee, the plan should be submitted to the court for adjudication.

-- Distribution of the property of bankrupt enterprises and the order of paying off the debt. When bankrupt enterprises pay off their debt, they must first pay the workers salaries and the revenue they owe. They will then distribute among the creditors the property of the bankrupt enterprises according to the percentage their credits occupy in the property of the bankrupt enterprises. The creditors who have insured the property of the bankrupt enterprises have the right to claim before other creditors repayment for all property or that part of the property they have insured.

-- How to resettle workers after enterprises go bankrupt. The labor department or labor service companies must try their best to provide jobs for workers of bankrupt enterprises. The workers can also look for jobs by themselves The workers can also get some bankruptcy relief funds from the social guarantee institutions according to the relevant regulations. This can help maintain the workers' standard of living.

-- Regulations for punishment. Those who embezzle, hide, destroy, or throw away property belonging to the bankrupt enterprises or fabricate debts should be punished according to the law. Leaders of bankrupt enterprises who are responsible for the bankruptcy should not be appointed to new leading posts or be allowed to manage new enterprises for 3 years. Instead, they should be punished economically. The people concerned in the departments responsible for the bankruptcy of the enterprises should also receive some sort of disciplinary sanctions and economic punishment.

LEADERS MEET NUCLEAR SCIENTISTS, DISCUSS STRATEGY

HK110656 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 pp 3-4

[Article by reporters Gu Mainan and Gu Wenfu: "A Change of Strategy in the Nuclear Industry"]

[Text] Spring came to Zhongnanhai especially early this year. Though it was the 12th month of the lunar year with the cold of winter still in the air, the drooping willows on both sides of Zhonghai and Nanhai had sprouted new green buds presaging the arrival of the season of many colors.

On the afternoon of 21 January, 10 scientists and engineering and technical personnel from the Ministry of Nuclear Industry, together with Minister of Nuclear Industry Jiang Xinxiong and Vice Minister Chen Zhaobo, excitedly went into the back room of Huairen Hall in Zhongnanhai. Among them were white-haired nuclear chemist Jiang Shengjie, nuclear physicist Wang Ganchang, and middle-aged high-level engineers and scientists Liu Xingzhong, Min Yaozhong, Huang Qitao, Yu Min, Lian Peisheng, Qian Gaoyun, Lu Dexian, and Sun Zuxun. Among them the oldest was near 80 and the youngest 48. In the past 38 years, they, together with their partners and colleagues, fought bravely in the wind swept and snow-bound wastelands and in the Gobi Desert, performing outstanding deeds of merit in building China's nuclear industrial system, in researching and manufacturing strategic nuclear weapons, and in the peaceful use of nuclear energy. Now, the initial period of building nuclear industry has passed. The state has entered the period of construction of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Displaying more fight, 300,000 workers on the nuclear industrial front have begun to work on making the second chapter in the history of starting a nuclear industry -- a chapter in the peaceful uses of nuclear energy.

The peaceful uses of nuclear energy have wide ramifications. In what direction should energy be diverted? The news that party and state leaders wanted to have direct talks with scientists and experts filled the latter with great delight. They had actively worked out their proposals and come to Zhongnanhai.

The scientists had scarcely seated themselves in the back room of Huairen Hall when Hu Yaobang, Fang Yi, Li Peng, Yang Shangkun, Hao Jianxiu, and other leaders entered. Jiang Xinxiong introduced the experts to the leaders, one by one. After an exchange of cordial greetings, everyone gathered together for a group picture. Hu Yaobang and Yang Shangkun came over to take the hands of Jiang Shengjie and Wang Ganchang, saying: "Please let the elderly comrades be seated in front!"

The forum began in a lively and cordial atmosphere. Hu Yaobang said: "The comrades on the nuclear industrial front have made valuable contributions serving the party, the state, and the people. Thanks to their efforts, our country has successfully researched and manufactured nuclear weapons, strengthened national defense, and established a relatively perfect nuclear industrial system. It has a quality nuclear industrial force. The party Central Committee, the State Council, the Central Military Commission, and people throughout the country will not forget the historic and brilliant contributions made by you!"

These few lines by the secretary general summed up several decades of hard work and several decades of seeking, struggle, hardships, and joys for experts and workers on the nuclear industrial front. The responsible comrades of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry and the scientists felt deeply moved, a surge of warmth running through their hearts. "You comrades have really achieved much," Hao Jianxiu cut in with a smile. "In 1984, I wanted to return home through Italy after a visit to Albania. I could not obtain an airplane ticket. It happended that we had at that time exploded the first atomic bomb. As the news spread, the people at the airport on learning that a Chinese wanted a ticket immediately offered to sell one to me!"

Continuing, Hu Yaobang said he hoped that comrades in the nuclear industry could specialize in one field and be capable in many, get involved with multiple undertakings, and actively support civil industries in given areas, making new contributions toward development of civil industries and toward the building of the socialist economy.

"This is a matter of course. In the past, all sides came to your support and gave you the green light. You may as well be atop a high-rise building. Now it is hoped that you will walk down a few stories. Help those of us half-way from the top!" Hu Yaobang said laughingly. Everyone else laughed knowingly.

Before this forum, Vice Premier Li Peng had personally inspected nuclear facilities, including the Taishan nuclear power station under construction. At the forum, he said: The fundamental guideline for the development of our nuclear industry is that while guaranteeing war production, we must emphasize development and use of nuclear energy. This is to say that we must "guarantee a switch from military to civil uses." In developing civil industries, the Ministry of Nuclear Industry must focus on the development of nuclear plants. Of course, it must also get involved with other industries. The building of our nuclear power stations has been tough going. But we have after all made a start! In developing nuclear power projects, we must chiefly rely on our own resources. Of course, we must also introduce advanced technology from foreign countries.

He told everyone: "The CPC Central Committee Secretariat and the State Council have tentatively decided to entrust all the research and manufacture of nuclear power stations to the Ministry of Nuclear Industry. Thus, there is more scope for the abilities of the comrades of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry!" Li Peng look expectantly at the nuclear experts present.

Hu Yaobang agreed with Li Peng's view on a wide scope for the abilities of those of the Minstry of Nuclear Industry. He expressed the hope that the various departments of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry would establish wide connections, strengthen ties with local industries, industrial and mining departments, and town and township enterprises, and send scientific and technical personnel in support of given areas. He also said that in the peaceful use of nuclear energy, we can also enter into cooperation with foreign countries.

Fang Yi then said: "It is also very important to maintain a nuclear industrial research force. We must keep injecting new blood. While we study the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, we should achieve something new in such fields as nuclear chemistry, isotopes, and lasers, as is also our hope. In sum, there is a great scope for the abilities of the comrades of the nuclear industrial departments in various fields and a bright future for them!"

The experts present also talked freely about what they thought. On learning of the decision of the party Central Committee and the State Council to entrust the great mission of developing nuclear power projects to them, they were filled with great joy. They said that at present, 26 countries in the world have built nuclear power stations. In many scientifically and technically developed countries, around 50 percent of energy used comes from nuclear plants. We have already had experience in building 10 nuclear reactors. We have a relatively complete nuclear industrial system and a red and expert force. We also have the support and cooperation of various trades and fields throughout the country. The realization of this great decision of the party and the state can be definitely achieved. Some experts said that this has long been the desire of 300,000 workers on the nuclear industrial front. Given a quadrupling of total annual industrial and agricultural output value by the end of the century, the demand for electiricity will also rise several times. If we rely completely on thermal electricity generation, just the transportation of several hundreds of millions of tons of coal from north to south would be expensive in terms of manpower and material resources, to say nothing of environmental pollution.

To thoroughly solve China's energy problem by the 21st century, we must develop nuclear plants. This is an extremely important task. If we do not start now, it will be too late as time goes on. So it can be said that the central decision is an unusually timely and correct one. Some scientists also said that despite the tough conditions in the 1950's or 1960's, we were able to build nuclear reactors in the Gobi Desert by relying on our own strength. Now conditions in various fields are far better than before. Given the state's policy of opening up to the world, we can rely chiefly on our own resources to build nuclear power stations. By introducing advanced foreign technology with emphasis on self-reliance, we can be adequately assured of success.

The interview of more than 2 hours ended. The scientists left Zhongnanhai full of confidence and hope. After the meeting, they immediately passed on the news to the masses of workers on the nuclear industrial front. A big question -- how to adjust a person's own work to this change in strategy -- is becoming a topic of common talk among workers in the nuclear industry. What Minister of Nuclear Industry Jiang Xinxiong and Vice Minister Chen Zhaobo said to scientists Jiang Shenjie and Wang Ganchang is thought-provoking. They said: In building nuclear power stations, we should also enforce mass cooperation among many departments the way we did before in researching and producing the atomc and hydrogen bombs. It will not do just to rely on the Ministry of Nuclear Industry. Though the party and the state let us bear the chief responsibility, we must cooperate properly with various departments. In the manufacturing process, we must bear firmly in mind what Premier Zhou Enlai said in those years when we were researching and manufacturing the "two bombs:" "Be solemn and serious; be attentive and careful; show not the least neglect; be on the safe side." Only after achieving the generation of electricity by one nuclear reactor, two nuclear reactors, and three nuclear reactors in a network and its continuous safe operation can we claim with justification that we have accomplished this glorious and tough task entrusted to us by the party Central Committee.

WANG RENZHONG, HAN XIANCHU VISIT WUHAN

HK080415 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 5 Feb 86

[Excerpts] On the eve of Spring Festival, Wang Renzhong and Han Xianchu, vice chairmen of the NPC Standing Committee, inspected Wuhan. Comrade Wang Renzhong visited factories and schools to conduct investigation and study and hold forums with representatives of various circles. He stressed: Correcting party style and unhealthy trends is an urgent demand of the masses. It has an extremely important bearing on doing all aspects of our work well and is an important factor concerning the success and failure of the great cause of the four modernizations. We must look to the central authorities as our example and do well in grasping this important matter to the end. We must truly score achievements.

From 22 to 27 January, Comrade Wang Renzhong held forums respectively with responsible persons of 18 factories, including the second motor vehicle plant, Wuhan Iron and Steel Corporation [words indistinct], Wuhan passenger vehicle manufacturing and assembly plant, Wuhan enamel plant, Wuhan cigarette factory, Shashi cotton textile mill, and Huangshi coal machinery plant. He listented to the reports of these factories and fully affirmed the achievements and experiences made in the course of reform.

1985 CAPITAL CONSTRUCTION RESULTS DETAILED

[By reporter Ge Daxing]

[Text] Beijing, 10 Feb (XINHUA) -- In China's 1985 capital construction, 97 large and medium-sized projects and 134 large and medium-sized single items were completed and put into operation, greatly enhancing China's economic strength.

According to the latest statistics supplied by the State Statistical Bureau, 35 percent of the large and medium-sized projects and 72 percent of the single items recently put into operation were energy and communications projects. The major energy and communications projects completed were the Yuanbaoshan power plant in Nei Monggol with a generating capacity of 600, 000 kilowatts, the Mudanziang power plant in Heilongjiang, and the Dahua hydroelectric power plant in Guangxi with a generating capacity of 400,000 kilowatts; the 308-km Yanzhow-Shijiazhuang railway and the 430-km electrified double-track Beijing-Qinhuangdao railway; the second-phase of the Qinhuangdao port coal terminal with a designed handling capacity of 20 million tons of coal and the Shijiu port in Shandong with 15 million-ton coal handling capacity; and the Beijing-Wuhan-Guangzhou medium-sized coaxial communications cable. China mainly relied on the expansion and transformation of its 13 oil fields such as Daqing, Dagang, Liaohe, Jilin, Shengli, and Zhongyuan to produce more than 17 million tons of crude oil last year.

At the same time, by developing capital construction, China's metallurgy, building materials industry, chemical industry, machine building industry, and textile and light industries also increased production capacities. Among the projects were the chemical fertilizer plant of the Zhenhai petrochemical general plant in Zhejiang with a production capacity of 300,000 tons of synthetic ammonia and 520,000 tons of urea a year; the No 2 automobile plant with a production capacity of 85,000 automobiles; and the Loyang plate glass works in Henan with a production capacity of 2.32 million standard cases of plate glass per year.

In addition, another group of large and medium-sized capital construction projects also made remarkable progress. Currently, China has completed the construction of its largest copper smeltery, the Guixi smeltery in Jiangxi, and the Ningguo and Huaihai cement works. They have been or will soon be put into operation on a trial basis. The large and medium-sized projects that have been completed or basically completed include the Dajiang power plant of the Gezhouba hydroelectric power station with a designed power generating capacity of 1.75 million kilowatts; the Dajiang shiplock through which 10,000-ton ships can pass; the project of drawing water from the Luan River into Tianjin's south side; and the Xinxiang-Heze railway connecting the Jiaozue-Taiyuan, Xinxiang-Jiaozuo, Heze-Yanzhou, and Yanzhou-Shijiazhuang railways.

It is understood that growth in capital construction in early 1985 was put under control since the beginning of the third quarter after the party Central Committee and the State Council adopted measures to strengthen macrocontrol. However, the scale of capital construction is still excessive. A responsible person concerned said: To exercise strict control over the scale of capital construction, readjust the investment setup in capital construction, vigorously develop key energy and communications projects, and improve investment results in an overall way remain pressing problems in promoting the healthy development of China's capital construction.

ANHUI EXPANDS COOPERATION WITH OTHER PROVINCES

OW111241 Hefei ANHUI RIBAO in Chinese 28 Jan 86 p 1

[Excerpts] Last year our province made further progress and achieved remarkable economic results in its economic and technical cooperation work. As of the end of last year, our province had established various forms of cooperation with 23 other provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions. Long-term, stable, and friendly cooperative partnerships were formed between 41 Anhui prefectures, cities, and counties and 61 prefectures, cities, and counties of other provinces. The number of joint economic and technical ventures for which contracts or letters of intent were signed reached 2,408 for the whole year. Implementation was begun on 1,685 of the contracts, an increase of more than 4-fold over 1984. The joint ventures already contracted and under implementation have brought a total capital of over 680 million yuan into the province plus some 150,000 metric tons of rolled steel and pig iron, 4,000 metric tons of nonferrous metals, 80,000 metric tons of coke, as well as sodium carbonate, timber, and other items in short supply in our province.

Since our province became part of the Shanghai economic zone, it has signed or is negotiating a number of fairly large joint ventures with the fraternal provinces and municipalities within the zone in coal, building materials, chemical, and metallurgical industries. These include a large cement factory of 1.24 million metric tons annual capacity in Tongling which calls for a joint investment of 420 million yuan by the State Administration of Building Materials Industry, Shanghai Municipality, and Anhui Province; the continued construction of the 600,000-ton capacity Xinqiao iron sulfate mine for which Shanghai Municipality and the Ministry of Chemical Industry will invest 53.4 million yuan; and the expansion project of the Wuhu Iron and steel plant to build a 300-cubic-meter blast furnace with an investment of 45.5 million yuan by the Shanghai Municipal bureau of metallurgical industry and Jiangsu Province.

ANHUI PARTY COMMISSION STRESSES SELF-CRITICISM

OW111251 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Excerpt] Leading members of the party committee of the Hefei aluminum plant have persisted in serious criticism and self-criticism in the course of party rectification in an effort to correct mistakes while carrying out party rectification. This has deepened the development of party rectification work.

The General Office of the provincial Commission for Guiding Party Rectification under the provincial party committee has written a note on this experience of the Hefei aluminum plant, pointing out that serious criticism and self-criticism are of great importance in rectifying party style. The note said:

What approach should the party rely on when it deals with the various problems and contradictions within the party? It should rely on the approach of encouraging all comrades in the whole party to use the weapon of criticism and self-criticism. But, some comrades have rejected this cherished tradition of the party. The attitude that it is difficult to carry out serious criticism, and even more difficult to do serious self-criticism, has been quite widespread within the party in recent years.

The Hefei aluminum plant party committee has provided a useful experience in reviving and carrying forward the party's fine style of criticism and self-criticism in the course of party rectification and in using this weapon to do well in party rectification. In its efforts to deal with problems found in the plant during party rectification, it has practiced serious criticism and self-criticism. In addition, it has focused attention on the key issues following comparison and examination to effectively correct mistakes while carrying out party rectification. It has achieved fairly remarkable results in this respect.

It is hoped that comrades of other party committees at various levels will act like the comrades of the Hefei aluminum plant party committee by really using the weapon of criticism and self-criticism and persist in attaining high standards in party rectification.

FUJIAN GOVERNOR GIVES SPRING FESTIVAL MESSAGE

OW120521 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Radio talk by provincial Governor Hu Ping greeting the Spring Festival]

[Excerpts] Comrades, friends: Amid reports of all-round fulfillment of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, we greet the Lunar New Year of 1986. On behalf of the provincial government, I would like to extend my regards and thanks to those comrades working on production, administrative, and fighting posts during the holiday season; my holiday greetings to workers, peasants, intellectuals, cadres, technical personnel, all commanders and fighters of PLA units stationed in our province, public security cadres and policemen, various democratic parties, personages of various circles, and retired veteran cadres; and my season's greetings to compatriots from Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao, Overseas Chinese, and foreign experts and friends helping in our province's socialist construction.

In the first 5 years of the 1980's, we implemented the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Under the guidance of the line adopted at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, people throughout the province exerted concerted efforts over the past 5 years. An excellent political and economic situation has emerged. Great achievements have been made on various fronts. Our province's economy has achieved sustained, steady, well-coordinated, and relatively rapid development. The goals of struggle stipulated in the Sixth 5-Year Plan have been reached. Under the Sixth 5-Year Plan, our province's total industrial and agricultural output grew at an average annual rate of 12.2 percent and reached 23 billion yuan in 1985, increasing 77.8 percent over 1981. Our province's economic results have also been greatly enhanced.

The provincial economy has begun to shift from a closed door to an open door economy. Our economic and technological cooperation and exchange with foreign countries are expanding daily, enabling us not only to effectively use Overseas Chinese and foreign capital, introduce advanced technology, and increase our foreign trade and exports but has also opened our eyes to the outside world, enriched our knowledge, and broadened our economic base.

The next 5 years of the 1980's is a period for implementing China's Seventh 5-Year Plan. The next 5 years will be a period for China to be united, work hard, and fulfill another grand plan according to the general requirements for building socialism with Chinese characteristics. The fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan will be of great significance in revitalizing our province's economy, promoting social progress, bringing prosperity and happiness to the people, and in marching to the fore of the whole nation in the four modernizations. Unfolding before our eyes is a bright and beautiful future. We must have a strong sense of historical mission and political responsibility and dedicate our talents and abilities to the fulfillment of the goals of struggle of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The year 1986 marks the beginning of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Hence, to have a good beginning, we must accomplish various tasks in 1986. We plan to increase our province's total agricultural and industrial output by 8 percent in 1986. At the same time, we plan to complete a number of large and medium-sized key projects vital to our province's economic construction. We must display the tiger's spirit in the Year of the Tiger and make 1986 a year of success, thereby creating favorable conditions for further economic development in our province.

While promoting economic construction, we must place economic structural reform above everything else. To consolidate reform achievements, we must stress agriculture, the foundation of the national economy, we must never neglect grain production, and we must continue to develop a diversified, economy and rural commodity production.

While accelerating the building of a material civilization, we must do a still better job in building a socialist spiritual civilization. We must seriously study the important directives of central leading comrades on correcting party style, take resolute actions, and crack down on major cases. While resolutely checking unhealthy tendencies and hitting hard at economic criminal activities, we must pay close attention to struggles in the ideological sphere. Leading cadres and organs at all levels must be models in correcting party style and work hard to bring a fundamental change for the better in party style.

In the new year, we will miss our Taiwan compatriots on the other side of the Taiwan Strait. Let us join hands and work together to bring an early end to the separation between Taiwan and Mainland China and to realize the reunification of the motherland. We welcome our compatriots in Taiwan, Hong Kong, Macao, and overseas to travel, visit relatives and friends, and promote trade and economic cooperation with the motherland.

I wish you success and prosperity in everything you do in the new year. Thank you.

SHANDONG SECRETARY LIANG BUTING VISITS PREFECTURE

SK110411 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Text] At about 1500 on 6 February, Liang Buting, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, arrived at (Shuzhuang) Village of (Shuangqiao) Township, Yuncheng County. He visited (Su Zhenyi), a specialized chicken raiser, and three other big households to inquire about their production, lives, income, and their plans for further sideline production. He also convened a forum to hear the opinions and requests of rural grass-roots cadres and to discuss with them future plans for achieving prosperity.

Many peasants said excitedly: Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee visited our village at the beginning of spring. We will take a greater step forward in achieving prosperity this year.

In this trip to the southwestern part of the province, Comrade Liang Buting set a good example in improving work styles. He went there by a van instead of a car, and was accompanied by only a very few necessary personnel instead of a large group of people. Major prefectural and county leaders accompanying him on the trip also rode in the same van with him instead of riding in different cars to form a motorcade. As proposed by Comrade Liang Buting, neither the prefecture nor the county had their leaders go to other prefectures or counties to welcome and send off Comrade Liang Buting and his party. As soon as they arrived at the Yuncheng County guesthouse, Comrade Liang Buting repeatedly asked Comrade (Yu Bohai), secretary of the Heze Prefectural CPC Committee, not to exceed the standards for meals when entertaining him. Shanxian County of Heze Prefecture was where the CPC Committee of the (Huxi) Prefecture was located in history. Comrade Liang Buting once fought and worked there for 4 to 5 years between 1940 and 1949. Because his trip there represented a return to a familiar place and it was the Spring Festival period, leading organs of the prefecture and the county wanted to hold dinner parties for Secretary Liang and his old comrades-in-arms. Secretary Liang declined them all. He said: A cup of tea shows deeper affection. We should have only four dishes and one soup or even ordinary noodles and millet gruel for each meal.

The cadres and people of Heze Prefecture and the counties said happily: Secretary Liang has brought with him a new work style.

HAINAN CURBS INDISCRIMINATE PRICE HIKES

HK080553 Haikou Hainan Island Service in Mandarin 0400 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] In conjunction with party rectification, CPC committees and governments at all levels in our region have done well in curbing the indiscriminate hiking of prices, indiscriminate levying of charges, indiscriminate imposition of fines, and the indiscriminate apportioning of expenses. Over the past 4 months or so, they have scored initial achievements. According to statistics, the whole region checked 1,016 chaotic items which involved some 12.2 million yuan in violation of discipline, recovered some 3.79 million yuan and deposited it in the treasury, and returned to customers 2.53 million yuan which was the difference between the normal prices and the raised prices.

Since the regional CPC Committee and regional government made the decision on the elimination of disorder, CPC committees and governments at all levels have regarded this work as an aspect of party rectification and have grasped it. According to statistics, some 1,830 units were fined for indiscriminately levying charges and some 1,390 of them were consolidated, accounting for 76 percent of the total number of units. The burdens of the state, production units, and consumers can be reduced by some 9.7 million yuan a year.

In the course of eliminating disorder in Danxian County, every level has had people responsible for this work and the county has eliminated disorder by itself. Of some 120 items on which fines were imposed, 89 irrational items were cancelled and the standards of 21 items whose standards had been slightly too high were lowered. Some 600,000 yuan in violation of discipline was deposited in the treasury and some 310,000 yuan which had been the difference between the normal prices and raised prices was returned to customers.

While visiting, he expressed many important opinions on propaganda through radio and television.

Each of these has its own special characteristics and is unable to replace the others.

On literary and art programs, Old Wang said: Each provincial station must exchange its experience with others. This concerns the issues of reform, opening up, and invigoration. We must let the qualified personnel handle the work and produce more programs in regard to our daily life. In addition to the flower-drum opera, Hunan has its Kunqu opera and [words indistinct], which I also enjoy watching.

LI LIGONG SPEAKS AT SHANXI MILITIA WORK MEETING

HK100433 Taiyuan SHANXI RIBAO in Chinese 30 Jan 86 p 1

[Report by Li Xiangde and Wei Benli: "The Provincial Military District Holds a Meeting To Report to Party Secretaries at Provincial, Prefectural, and County Levels on Militia Work"]

[Text] The provincial military district held a meeting yesterday afternoon to report to party secretaries at the provincial, prefectural, and county levels on militia and reserve service work. The provincial military district expressed its determination to take the spirit of Central Document No 22 as its guiding principle, submit itself to and serve the overall situation concerning state economic construction, alleviate the people's burden, fundamentally strengthen the building of reserve forces, cut down on the size of the militia, pay close attention to major issues, lay a solid foundation, and create a new situation in Shanxi's militia and reserve service work.

Yu Hongli, commander of the provincial military district, presided over the meeting. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee and government -- Li Ligong, Wang Senhao, Wu Dacai, Wang Maolin, and Zhang Weiqing -- were present.

Luo Jinghua, political commissar of the provincial military district, pointed out in his speech that the core members of the militia should be cut down by 55.9 percent, that training tasks of the militia and reserve forces should be reduced by 58.8 percent, and that the role of the militia in building spiritual and material civilization should be brought into full play. The militia should take the lead in studying and implementing the party's line, principles, and policies; in building spiritual civilization; in getting rich through hard work; in accomplishing urgent, difficult, dangerous, and arduous tasks; and in abiding by discipline and law. The militia should engage in production so as to provide for its military activities and contribute to the revitalization of the local economy. The building of training bases should be developed gradually in line with local conditions and according to local capacity. Existing training bases should be used comprehensively so as to enhance combat-readiness, attain better economic results, and improve social benefits. Those training bases under construction should be controlled with unnecessary construction projects being curtailed. It is necessary to reform political work for the militia and reserve forces and management of the militia's arms storage. The weapons should be stored and sealed up at the county level for safekeeping.

In his speech, secretary Li Ligong of the provincial CPC Committee emphasized the following: First, it is necessary to conscientiously implement the spirit of central document No 22 and strengthen militia and reserve service work in earnest. The guiding ideology for militia and reserve service work should be straightened out and the past state of combat or semi-combat readiness in militia and reserve service work should be switched to peaceful construction. We must make a careful study of the new conditions and solve the resultant new problems. We must strengthen leadership over militia and reserve service work. The people's armed forces at all localities should perform their functions and strive to create a new situation in Shanxi's militia and reserve service work. Second, it is necessary to do a good job in transferring leadership of the people's armed forces. It is a great turning point to delegate leadership of the people's armed forces to the locality. Leading cadres at all levels should enthusiastically support this work and, where conditions permit, help them solve their practical difficulties.

LIAONING MAKES PROGRESS IN CRACKING ECONOMIC CRIMES

SK061122 Shenyang LIAONING RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jan 86 p 1

[Excerpts] Recently, the cities of Shenyang, Dalian, Jinzhou, Liaoyang, Fuxin, and Tieling have successively held rallies on dealing strict blows to economic crimes. The various city intermediate people's courts have conducted open trials of a group of serious economic criminals in accordance with the law. This has dealt a strong blow to the economic criminals, educated the broad masses of cadres and the people, and safeguarded the smooth progress in reform and the four modernizations. The broad masses of people applauded and cheered this.

Recently, some economic criminals have taken advantage of the opportunities of opening to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy to desperately disrupt reform, the practice of opening to the outside world and invigorating the economy, and the four modernizations construction. The number of major cases has increased greatly. In 1985, we had 502 major cases on file, each of which involved more than 10,000 yuan. Of these cases, 67 were appalling cases each of which involved more than 50,000 yuan, showing an increase of 11.6 times over 1984.

One of the prominent features of the major economic crimes is that the number of cases involving swindling has increased remarkably. The swindlers usually raise the banner of opening to the outside world and invigorating the economy to exploit the advantages of reform by all means and to make use of the legal economic activities to engage in speculation, swindling, and bludding, and other illegitimate and criminal activities. In 1985, the province as a whole has put on file 1,139 cases involving speculation and swindling, an increase of 42.7 percent over 1984. Of this number, 55 were cases each of which involved more than 50,000 yuan, showing an increase of 17.3 times over 1984.

At present, the work of investigating and handling the major economic criminal cases has aroused the great attention of the CPC committees at all levels. They have persisted in grasping the policy of opening to the outside world and invigorating the economy on the one hand, and decided to advance on the crest of a victory, to eliminate the evil and to deepen the struggle against economic crimes.

HK110429 Lanzhou GANSU RIBAO in Chinese 28 Jan 86 p 1

[Report by correspondents Li Zhiyong and Yang Zhanhong: "Leading Members of the Party Committee of the Lanzhou Military Region Are Determined To Take the Lead in Rectifying Party Style"]

[Text] Members of the Lanzhou Military Region party committee have indicated that they will not stand on the sidelines in rectifying party style. They will adhere to the principle of "taking the lead" and set a good example for Army units.

The military region party committee had 6 days of meetings of its Standing Committee and committee members to study and discuss speeches made by Hu Yaobang, Yang Shangkun, and other leading comrades of the central authorities and the Central Military Commission at meetings of cadres of the central organs. In formulating the "decision on effecting a fundamental change for the better of party style of all units of the region this year," the party committee has stressed doing a good job in improving the party style of leading cadres and has demanded that leading cadres consciously "take the lead in three aspects": enhancing education on party spirit, strictly observing party discipline, and struggling against actions harmful to the interests of the party and the people. They should become "surveyor poles" in rectifying party style and should safeguard party style and party discipline with their actions. In future, decisions on using personnel must be made by the collective according to the party's organizational principles.

Leading cadres shall not involve themselves in arranging jobs for their children, relatives, friends, or those who work around them. In holding meetings or receptions for leading cadres and officials from departments at higher levels, no extravagance or waste, eating and drinking extravagantly, or presenting gifts shall be permitted. In making business trips or trips to sanitoriums, cadres shall not make detours for sightseeing and shall not have a greater number in their entourage than as stipulated. While making a trip, leading comrades of the military region shall not allow their subordinates to meet them or to send them off at railway stations or airports. Leading cadres shall not seek personal gain through fraud, seek undeserved reputations, or play tricks and pay lip service to get awards. They should take the lead in upholding principles and dare to stop wrongdoing. The military region party committee is determined to handle all problems where personal gain has been sought through abuse of power. It will not perform its duties in a perfunctory manner or turn big problems into small ones, or small problems into no problems. Leading comrades of the party committee will personally handle major, important cases and support discipline inspection personnel so that everything concerning those cases will come to light. In the past 10 days or so, the Discipline Inspection Commission of the military region has been diligently investigating 17 cases of illegal business, corruption, taking advantage of the reduction-in-strength reorganization to promote large numbers of cadres, theft, and other crimes.

NINGXIA TO PROMOTE, ENHANCE GRAIN PRODUCTION

HK101300 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jan 86 p 1

[Report: "Li Xuezhi Announces: Ningxia Regional CPC Committee and Government Decide To Adopt Eight Policy Measures to Protect and Mobilize the Peasants' Initiative in Growing and Selling Grain"]

[Text] The regional rural work conference has been in progress in Yinchuan since 25 January. At a general meeting on 28 January, Li Xuezhi, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, announced that in order to protect and mobilize the peasants' initiative in growing and selling grain and further promote grain production, the regional CPC Committee and people's government have decided to adopt the following eight policy measures:

1. Improve and perfect the system of fixed quota purchases of grain on a contract basis. The quantity of grain thus purchased by the whole region has been reduced from 700 million jin last year to 450 million jin. It is planned to purchase another 400 million jin on a negotiated basis, but this will not be assigned as mandatory tasks to prefectures, cities, and counties. In the future, it will be arranged in light of the grain harvest situation.

2. Provide the peasant households which have signed contracts on selling grain with a certain amount of fine-quality chemical fertilizer at the state market price or at a preferential price lower than the state price. These peasant households also have priority to get loans from the state.

3. Appropriately lower the selling prices of small chemical fertilizers so as to reduce the cost of grain production.

4. Increase investment in agricultural capital construction. The investment in agricultural capital construction gy the regional finance department will be gradually restored to the level of 1983 (of which the investment in water conservancy construction will be restored to the level of 1980). All cities and counties are also required to increase their agricultural investment.

5. "Supplement agriculture with industry." Beginning this year, the autonomous region will use more than 50 percent of funds obtained from the increase in levying income taxes and industrial and commercial taxes on town and township enterprises to help develop agriculture, mainly to subsidize grain production. Bonus tax will also be used in agriculture. The town and township enterprises will use at least 50 percent of the profits they have turned over to township and village authorities in agricultural capital construction and public facilities.

6. Effectively lighten the burdens of peasants engaged in agricultural production. It is necessary to improve the method of overall arrangement of expenses and collective retention of funds so as to gradually solve the problem of the great disparity between the peasants engaged in agricultural production and those engaged in industrial production and commercial activities.

7. On the premise of the production on dry land not being affected, actively reclaim new rice fields on uncultivated saline-alkali and low-lying land, so as to promote rice production. Whenever one mu of wasteland is reclaimed, the state will lend the person who reclaims the land 40 yuan, which can be paid off over 4 years. The state plans to allot 2 million yuan for this purpose, two-thirds of which will be allotted by the autonomous region. The rest will be allotted by the agricultural reclamation bureaus of various prefectures, cities, and counties. If conditions allow, more funds will be allotted. In this way, some 250,000 mu of new rice fields will be reclaimed in 5 years.

8. Continuously and vigorously promote the capital construction of water conservancy works. This spring, it is necessary to do a good job in repairing water conservancy works. The construction of the Guhai pumping project should be completed and put into production this year, and preparations should be made for the construction of the first phase of the Yanchi-Dingbian-Huanxian pumping project.

NINGXIA URGES SEPARATED MILITARY CADRES TO REMAIN

HK080611 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jan 26 p 1

[Report by Fan Wei and Wei Zhaoqing: "Party Committees and Governments at All Levels in Ningxia Should Do a Good Job of Persuading Discharged Cadres of the People's Armed Forces to Stay and Work in Ningxia"]

[Text] Party committees and governments at all levels in our region have conscientiously performed ideological work among cadres of the people's armed forces and actively taken measures to persuade the cadres of the people's armed forces to stay in Ningxia and contribute to the development of Ningxia Autonomous Region after they are transferred to civilian work.

The regional CPC Committee and people's government have paid great attention to the important policy of putting the people's armed forces department at the county level under the control of the local people's government. Li Xuezhi, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, Hei Boli, chairman of the regional people's government, and responsible comrades of the relevant departments have twice listened to the report from the Ningxia Military District on the work of reconstructing the people's armed forces. They have outlined clear requirements on how to prepare for the reconstruction work. They have also issued special documents on the work and made arrangements for carrying out the work of reconstructing the people's armed forces. They have stressed that CPC committees and people's governments at various levels should treasure the enthusiasm of the cadres of the people's armed forces, who deeply love the motherland and the big northwest, and welcome the cadres of the people's armed forces to stay in Ningxia and contribute to Ningxia's construction.

The Shizuishan City CPC Committee, the Yinchuan City CPC Committee, the Guyuan administrative office, and the Yinnan administrative office have respectively held discussions on how to do this work well and how to cooperate with the Army to do the work of reconstructing the people's armed forces well. The Shizuishan City CPC Committee has also carried out various kinds of activities to express gratitude to the cadres of the people's armed forces, held symposiums in the people's armed forces department, talked with the cadres, even visited the cadres' homes and tried to help those cadres who are willing to stay and work in Ningxia overcome some difficulties, such as their housing problem, employment for family members of the cadres, education of their children, and so on. Hu Weixin, former secretary of the Qingtongix City, has been to the people's armed forces department three times to give reports on the regional situation, the industrial and agricultural development of the region, and the good prospects of the region. They have allocated 170,000 yuan to help the people's armed forces department build dormitories for the cadres of the people's armed forces and find jobs for family members of four cadres of the people's armed forces. The leaders of Shihuijing district of the Helan mountainous area have also expressed a willingness to find jobs at any time for family members of the cadres of the people's armed forces who are willing to be transferred to local civilian work, so long as their family members have jobs at present and are willing to be transferred to the area. If their family members do not live with the Army, the district can also try to properly resettle them in the district according to their respective situations. For example, Qiao Hongru, chief of the logistics section of the people's armed forces department of Xiji County, had originally planned to go back to Shaanxi, his native place. But after Wang Hunshan, former secretary of the Xiji County CPC Committee, talked with him and persuaded him to remain in the county, he was deeply moved and agreed to settle down in Xiji County to help with work relating to the people's armed forces in the county.

CPC committees and people's governments at all levels in our region are sincere and warm in persuading the cadres of the people's armed forces, who are to be transferred to civilian work, to stay in the region and contribute to regional construction. All this has deeply moved and encouraged all the cadres of the people's armed forces in the region. Many of them have said that they will not be unworthy of the profound love of the people of the whole region, and will settle down in Ningxia and do a good job in work relating to the people's armed forces.

SHAANXI AUDITORS RECOVER MISAPPROPRIATED FUNDS

HK070839 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Text] The province's auditing organs at various levels have fulfilled their role of economic supervision. Over the past two years they have recovered 267.68 million yuan of misappropriated funds, such as retaining funds targeted to the state and bonuses and payment in kind which were arbitrarily given.

The province's auditing organs were founded in 1984. In 2 years, they have totally examined the financial situation of over 3,000 enterprises and institutions. They have discovered that some units have violated financial discipline and committed serious crimes.

In 1984, the province's education sector misappropriated 10.3 million yuan of educational funds. In Xian City, the paint company made a profit of 2.2 million yuan by speculating on the state's low-priced paints.

Stressing focal points, the organs also examined the problem of some units abusing power and arbitrarily giving money and payment in kind under the pretext of reforms. They eventually recovered 20.47 million yuan misappropriated for bonuses, allowances, and making clothes. At the Heyang County epidemic prevention station, which only employs 30 workers, the total number of suits made was 215, or six suits for each worker, involving a total sum of 10,770 yuan.

The organs also examined and conducted education about loans granted by the province's industrial and commercial banks since 1979. They found out that some loans were not used in accordance with the regulations, or that the loans were not used in a way that brings great economic results. These issues have been handled and corrected.

4. It is necessary to establish and perfect local cooperative economic organizations in rural and pastoral areas and to further perfect the dual-level business system with a combination of centralized and decentralized operations.

XINJIANG: SONG HANLIANG DISCUSSES AIDING POOR

HK050233 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Excerpts] Regional CPC Committee Secretary Song Hanliang proposed in his speech to the recent regional rural work conference a number of measures for helping poor areas to extricate themselves from poverty. He demanded that party committees and government at all levels grasp support for poor areas as a political task and switch from providing relief to aiding production.

He stressed the following points:

1. Send by rotation a number of young cadres from the regional, prefectural, and city organs to strengthen work in poor areas.

2. Practice still more flexible and open policies for the poor areas, such as appropriately reducing or waiving taxes.

3. Provide support in production. In particular, it is necessary to help them turn their strong-point products into commodities. They should be looked after as much as possible in the supply of production materials. Their grain procurement quotas can be appropriately reduced.

4. Large state-owned factories, mines, and other enterprises should take responsibility for supporting local poor areas.

The gathering was presided over by Ismail Maikeshuti, mayor of Urumqi City. Amudong Niyazi, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee and chairman of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee, spoke at the gathering. He extended season's greetings and best regards to representatives of various nationalities from all circles and the people of various nationalities in Xinjiang.

Amudong Niyazi said the PLA stationed in Xinjiang is a long-tested army which serves the people of various nationalities in border areas heart and soul, and has made great contributions in developing building, and defending the border areas. The people of various nationalities in Xinjiang will never forget this.

In his speech, Tan Guagcai, political commissar of the Xinjiang Military District, said that over the past year CPC committees and governments at all levels and people of various nationalities in the region showed political concern for the military district and the armed forces, supported their work, and gave preferential treatment to them in goods supply, so that the military district and armed forces could successfully fulfill all tasks. Tan Guangcai also said that in the new year it is necessary to further educate the armed forces about unity of nationalities, about being revolutionary armymen with lofty ideals, good morality, knowledge and good health, about the three ardent loves, and about the inseparable relations between Han and minority nationalities. The military district and armed forces must vigorously support economic construction in the region and contribute to developing and building Xinjiang, making Xinjiang prosperous and powerful, and making people of various nationalities rich.

PRC OFFICIAL SEES CHANGING ATTITUDES IN TAIWAN

HK080541 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 pp 18-19

[Article by Li Jiaquan, deputy director and research fellow of the Research Center on Taiwan under the Academy of Sciences of China: "The 'One Country, Two Systems' Policy and the Interests of the Taiwan People"]

[Excerpts] I know some scholars and friends of Taiwan origin now living abroad. I have participated with them in some academic symposia. I have also read many articles by scholars of Taiwan origin as well as nonparty personalities from Taiwan. Some of them are rather doubtful about the CPC proposal of "one country, two systems," feeling that the concept does not necessarily conform to the interests of the Taiwan people.

I have thought about it for a long time. What really are the interests of the Taiwan people? This is a very broad question. If it is dealt with in a general manner it will fade away, being too abstract and not easily understood. At the present, the most fundamental interest of the Taiwan people should be that of maintaining the continuous stability and prosperity of Taiwan's economy. Nothing is more important than that. Realizing this target is precisely what we want to discuss.

To my mind, if the "one country, two systems" concept is turned against the interests of the Taiwan people, and if some practices counter to it are adopted, resulting a failure of reconciliation between the two shores of the Taiwan Strait it will only result in an intensifying of the contradiction. It will only lead to more confrontation and opposition among the two parties, greater political unrest in Taiwan, and a stricter implementation of the martial law. Thus, the good environment and conditions of Taiwan, with its stability and harmonious economic development, will be completely spoiled. Will it do any good for Taiwan's economy and the Taiwan people? The advantages and disadvantages of the two propositions are very clear.

Some people say the living standard of the Taiwan people is higher than that of mainlanders and that implementation of "one country, two systems" will not bring anything to the Taiwan people; on the contrary, they would only be harmed. True, the living standard of the Taiwan people is much higher than that of the mainlanders. But to my mind, things are always varied. The living standard in all areas of Taiwan is not the same, nor is it the same between its eastern and western parts. On the mainland, the living standard in Shanghai, Jiangsu, and Zhejiang is also not the same as in the northwest; but this does not affect the northwest as a part of China. Looking at the "one country, two systems" concept, both Taiwan and the mainland are component parts of the PRC. As a special administrative region, Taiwan would maintain its original social system and independent judiciary. Ultimate jurisdiction would not go to Beijing. Taiwan may also have a separate budget and the mainland will not collect any taxes or apportion any duties. How then can this harm the interests of the Taiwan people?

Some people continue to doubt the feasibility of the "one country, two systems" concept, saying it seems very difficult to implement "two systems" within "one country." I hold that whether it is feasible depends first on the sincerity of the two parties. I believe the CPC is sincere, and everyone who has studied in-depth the CPC's current policies will reach the same conclusion. Second, all this depends on whether there are legal guarantees. China is gradually completing and perfecting its legal system. That special administrative regions will be set up respectively in Taiwan and Hong Kong, with social systems that differ from the mainland, has already been recorded in the state Constitution. Further explicit stipulations may be made on may other issues through talks and negotiation. Third, it all depends on people's will. The concept of one country, two systems, peaceful coexistence, refraining from injuring each other, all this has given expression to the common wish of people on both shores for building the motherland and invigorating the Chinese nation. No serious party will violate any of this. To do so would be to lose honor before the people, as well as international society.

The CPC is now more mature than in the past. It is impossible for the CPC to go back on its word.

I am happy to find that many friends and scholars of Taiwan origin, including some nonparty personalities who once held different opinions on these issues have changed some of their views. This is based on recent contacts with them and on articles I have read. I believe one day they will approve of the "one country, two systems" concept. We are looking forward to the day when the great unification, unity, and invigoration of China will come true.

CHINA POST ON U.S.-TAIWAN RELATIONS UNDER TRA

OW100635 Taipei CHINA POST in English 6 Feb 86 p 4

[Editorial: "Discussion of U.S. Ties With ROC"]

[Excerpt] In a Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee hearing Feb. 4, a discussion was held between Senator Jesse Helms, Rep.-N.C., on one side and new U.S. Ambassador to Indonesia Paul D. Wolfowitz and new Assistant of Secretary of State Gaston J. Sigur Jr., on the other as to present U.S. relations with the Republic of China [ROC] and the Chinese mainland.

Senator Helms voiced his concern about maintaining continued strong ties with the Republic of China at the confirmation hearing of both appointees. Both contended that U.S. ties with Taiwan under the Taiwan Relations Act (TRA) do not conflict with U.S. relations with mainland China. Sigur told Helms that in the 1982 communique with Peking "we agreed to the reduction of arms sales to Taiwan -- based on the fundamental policy of the Chinese for settling by peaceful means the Taiwan question." He said, "I don't see any conflict between the (1982) communique and the Taiwan Relations Act," passed by Congress in 1979 and providing for unofficial relations with Taiwan until the "Taiwan question" is peacefully settled.

It is unfortunate that Sigur failed to see any inconsistency between the joint communique and the TRA as the joint communique is merely an executive agreement while the TRA is the law of the land and the Act must preempt the executive agreement. Moreover, the Chinese Communists have not lived up to the condition of the 1982 joint communique of peaceful settlement of the so-called Taiwan question. Instead, Chao Tzu-yang and other Chinese Communists have openly threatened to invade Taiwan by force in 8 to 10 years. How could the United States implement the joint communique in view of the Chinese Communists' violation of the fundamental policy of peaceful settlement of the so-called Taiwan question?

Senator Jesse Helms' concern about maintaining strong U.S. ties with the Republic of China was therefore quite justified and not unfounded in the least. He pointed out at the hearing that President Reagan and his administration are under pressure to revise the existing policy on the ROC by asserting that "not only would it be immoral for him and his administration to change our commitment to Taiwan, it would be the worst possible statement to our other friends" about U.S. reliability.

A thorough review of the Reagan administration's implementation of the TRA is indeed long overdue. As Senator Barry Goldwater has announced his intention of holding such a hearing, the American people will have an opportunity to learn who are betraying the Taiwan Relations Act's fundamental purposes and objectives and lobbying in favor of the Chinese Communists. If such betrayal is so, the people of the Asian and Pacific region deserve to know that their vital interests and security would not be further compromised or even endangered. The people of the Republic of China have the right to know who our true friends are and who our potential enemies -- posing as friends -- are.

KOREAN CROSS RECOGNITION SCHEME EXAMINED

OW071145 Taipei CNA in English 1025 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 7 (CNA) -- A local newspaper Friday called on the nation to watch closely the development of the proposed cross recognitions between the United States, Japan, the Soviet Union and Communist China and North and South Koreas. The UNITED DAILY NEWS said in an editorial that the idea was apparently initiated by the United States. The United Nations and some other countries, including France, India, and Japan also have helped promote the proposal. A recent statement by South Korean Foreign Minister Yi Won-kyong on the cross recognition problem hinted that the past contacts among the parties concerned might have yielded some results, the editorial pointed out.

The UNITED DAILY NEWS opined that Yi's remarks clearly reflected a change in South Korea's position on the proposed cross recognition. Seoul originally opposed the arrangement, but it now supports the scheme, the paper said. The realization of the scheme, however, depends on the attitude of North Korea, the paper noted. North Korean leader Kim Il-Song has been opposed to the plan, and there is little possibility that Kim will change his mind overnight, the paper said.

But Kim is aging and prepared to pass political power to his son. The paper thus did not rule out the possibility that North Korea might accept the proposal in exchange for the withdrawal of U.S. Armed Forces from the Korean peninsula.

PROGRESS MADE IN WEAPONS SYSTEM DEVELOPMENT

OW070531 Taipei CNA inEnglish 0300 GMT 7 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 6 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan said Thursday that it has already made significant progress in the research on and development of advanced weapon systems, thus helping the nation's Armed Forces improve their defensive, offensive and mobilization capabilities. The yuan pointed out that over the past one year, ROC [Republic of China] Army units have completed deployment of defensive missiles at all strategically important positions, and the Navy was also making vigorous efforts to build up a fleet of advanced combat ships and improve its development along the coasts.

In the coming one year, the Air Force will continue its efforts to develop high-performance fighters, establish a task froce capable of carrying out bombardment and attack missions, and improve its electronic defense command system so as to increase its combat capabilities.

In a written report to the Legislative Yuan on the nation's defense affairs in the first half of fiscal 1987, the Executive Yuan said that at the present stage, the priorities in the development of defense technologies are placed on the improvement of the weapon systems for countering air and sea offensives. On the other hand, the government will stick to the principle of developing those weapons systems with multiple purposes.

The yuan said the government will continue to develop high-performance fighters, missiles, a control radar system, and updating its naval weapons and surveillance equipment, and make evaluation of the armed forces' overall combat capabilities in accordance with the established defense policy and the development of the situation of the China mainland.

TAIPEI JUSTIFIES BAN ON NEW POLITICAL PARTIES

OW100143 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] Among the questions most often asked of Republic of China [ROC] officials is why the ban on new political parties cannot be lifted. The ROC is a free and democratic country with three political parties. But one, the Kuomintang or Nationalist Party of China, is dominant. The Young China and the Socialist Democratic Parties are largely negative and elect few candidates. However, citizens are free to run in all elections and many nonpartisans have been successful.

The Executive Yuan or cabinet recently asserted that it has no plans to open the electoral process to new parties within the foreseeable future. The reasoning is clear and to the point. Free China faces what the cabinet has described as an extraordinary situation in which the Chinese Communists have not renounced the use of force against it. Therefore, to assure social stability and solidarity, it is not appropriate to sanction the formation of new political parties. To spell this out in more detail, adquate political representation of all points of view -- except that of communism -- the three extant parties, and the permissibility of nonpartisanship are quite sufficient. Democracy does not require 2 parties or 10. The necessity is that there be opposition, and that clearly exists.

With the communists bent on power by violent means, the admission of new parties to the political field inevitably would allow their representatives and sympathizers to bid for power. Who wants new political parties? Obviously, the communists or those in league with them.

Additionally, several difficult problems remain to be solved for the political unification of China. The communists are in control of the mainland, so all-China elections cannot be held. Lawmakers who came to Taiwan with the government in 1949 hold permanent office in the Legislative Yuan, the National Assembly, and the Control Yuan until the mainland is free once more. New blood has been added to the national political bodies through additional representatives for Taiwan and the filling of vacancies. Local governments have been developed at provincial, central cities, and the lower levels. In other words, the Republic of China has been as free and democratic as the circumstance of a continuing pro-communist rebellion would permit.

The destruction of the Republic of China in the name of democracy would achieve nothing less than concurrent destruction of freedom and democracy. An additional political party or parties could contribute to this result. Whether the Republic of China eventually becomes a country of many parties or two or three will have to await the final resolution of the China problem. For now, the position of the Executive Yuan provides a guarantee of free survival for the Republic of China and the 19 million people of Taiwan to fight on to assure that all the more than a billion Chinese will enjoy the heritage of Confucianism and the Three Principles of the People, nationalism, decmocracy, and social welfare.

HU, ZHAO CITED ON HAINAN AUTOMOBILE CASE

["Special Dispatch" by staff reporter from Guangzhou: "Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang Inspected Hainan on Different Occasions and Talked About the Automobile Case"]

[Text] Guangzhou, 11 Feb -- CPC Central Committee General Secretary Hu Yaobang and Premier Zhao Ziyang respectively arrived at Hainan Island before and during the Spring Festival. During his stay at Hainan Island, Hu Yaobang called a meeting of party, government, and Army cadres at various levels, inspected various parts of Hainan, and gave fairly clear-cut instructions on various issues, such as Hainan's continued opening to the outside world and its construction, which have drawn widespread attention at home and abroad following the automobile case.

Hu Yaobang called on Hainan's cadres at all levels to extricate themselves from the automobile case, to understand the case from a positive aspect, to sum up lessons and experiences, and to correct their mistakes. They need not let it weigh on their minds and give them a sense of inferiority. He held that Hainan enjoys exceptional advantages. It has favorable natural conditions that can be developed and used. For instance, it can vigorously grow industrial crops and develop the fishing industry. Situated in the subtropical zone, two-thirds of Hainan's area is most suitable for the development of tourism. If it can make a success of this, it can attract more than a million tourists to Hainan each winter. This will represent an inestimable income. If this income is used in construction, there will be wonderful prospects for Hainan. Improvement in the living standards of the Hainan people will also be just around the corner. Hu Yaobang reportedly placed high hopes on, and gave encouragement to, Lei Yu, former leading cadre of the Hainan Administrative Region who had been transferred to another post. He held that he "is bold and resolute in his work and has drive. It will be good if he can realize his mistakes and correct them." After leaving Hainan, Lei Yu was assigned to Guangdong's Conghua County and worked as deputy secretary of the county CPC Committee.

After the central authorities criticized Hainan for the automobile case and instructed it to correct its mistakes, Hainan was in financial difficulties because the imported commodities and huge sum of money derived from profiteering were confiscated. But the central authorities understood Hainan's need for construction funds. In 1985 the state allocated several hundred million yuan. In his recent inspection tour to Hainan, Zhao Ziyang also made decisions in light of the practical conditions there. In the financial budget for 1986, the central authorities have reduced Hainan's tax payments by several hundred million yuan in order to alleviate its financial difficulties.

ZHAO ZIYANG INSPECTS SHANTOU ECONOMIC ZONE

["Special Dispatch From Guangzhou" on 5 February: "Zhao Ziyang Inspects Shantou Special Zone"]

[Text] Premier Zhao Ziyang of the State Council, accompanied by Hu Qili, secretary of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, and Tian Jiyun, vice premier of the State Council, inspected the Shantou Special Economic Zone from 3 to 5 February. Zhao Ziyang felt that the Shantou Special Economic Zone had achieved more results with less investment and that the road taken by the Shantou Special Economic Zone is a correct one.

During their visit to Shantou, Zhao Ziyang and other members of his delegation went to see the Shantou Special Economic Zone products exhibition and also went to the joint venture 3,000-ton container and bulk wharf to see the operating area of the wharf and watch the workers there. Zhao Ziyang also went to the Jinglong Textile, Dyeing, and Clothes Manufacturing Co Ltd, the Huadabao Porcelain Manufacturing Co, the Yixing Enterprise Co Ltd, and the Zhengda (Shantou) Carpet Factory, all of which are enterprises independently owned by Hong Kong and Macao businessmen. While visiting these enterprises, Zhao Ziyang talked with the managers of these enterprises and got first-hand information about the situation of the enterprises in the special economic zone.

During his stay in the Shantou Special Economic Zone, Zhao Ziyang and other members of his delegation listened to a report by Liu Feng, the director of the Administrative Committee of the Shantou Special Economic Zone, and expressed their appreciation of the achievements gained by the special economic zone.

BO YIBO ON ALL OFFICIALS BELONGING TO CPC

HK070719 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 4 Feb 86 p 2

["Special Dispatch": "Bo Yibo on Malpractices Involving Party Members"]

[Text] Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Advisory Commission and permanent vice chairman of the Commission for Guiding Party Rectification of the CPC Central Committee, held that the phenomenon in which "if one does not join the party, one will never become an official and all officials are party members" should be "thoroughly studied and solved."

Bo Yibo made these remarks when he recently wrote comments on a report of related materials. In the written comments, he said: Ours is a party in power. Over the last 3 decades or more, a situation in which "office cadres (officials) at various levels are all Communists" emerged before we knew it. Only Communists can be officials. However, without the participation, both direct and indirect, of Communists in encouraging unhealthy practices, these unhealthy practices would not have become, in a certain sense, so "popular." This is because our "legal system is not sound and perfect and officials are not subjected to the supervision of the people" and moreover, "the idea of party members being servants of the people seems not to have been stressed for some time, still less to be practiced." He said: This is "the conclusion" he "drew from party rectification work lasting for several years."

LIAOWANG ON TRENDS IN INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

HK130213 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 pp 23-24

[Article by Peng Di: "The Trend of Readjustment in the 1980's"]

[Text] The wind of readjustment sweeping Asia in the East and Europe and America in the West is a characteristic of the world situation in the first half of the 1980's. With the changed domestic and world situation, quite a few countries have successively readjusted their own domestic policies and relations with other countries to varying degrees. The trend of these readjustments has an important impact on the development of the situation in the second half of the 1980's.

Let us start with the United States. After experiencing the Vietnam war and the Watergate incident, the United States, where public sentiment ran low, was confronted with new challenges abroad. As far as the United States is concerned, military and geopolitical confrontation comes from the Soviet Union, economic and trade competition comes from Japan and Western Europe, and the struggle against power politics and for a change in the economic order comes from the Third World. A feeling of a big power suffering setbacks and the present being inferior to the past dominated the United States and also led some people to remember past times.

With the country entering the 1980's, protectionism and flaunting the banner of augmenting national strength to restore national prestige has gained ground in the United States. Politically, it has stressed taking one's ideological approach as the dividing line and has a strong anticommunist mentality. Economically, it has supported enterprises in their development and boosts market supply through tax-reduction policies. Financially, it has put inflation under control by raising interest rates, cutting down public welfare expenses, and curtailing outlay and, at the same time, maintained its unprecedentedly huge military spending on the basis of continued high deficits. In foreign relations, it has pursued an escalated hardline policy, thus further straining its relations with the Soviet Union, China, Western Europe, Latin America, and the Middle East for a time.

These policy readjustments have played a stimulative role domestically but are incompatible with the present needs in its relations with other countries. They are neither helpful in solving complicated international problems nor for the long-term interests of the United States. They have met no small resistance at home and abroad.

Therefore, people can see that the U.S. conservative stance in foreign relations has been somewhat scaled down. It has readjusted its policy toward China, thus avoiding a crisis. Although barriers to solving the Taiwan issue erected by the United States remain, generally speaking, significant progress has been made in Sino-U.S. relations.

U.S. policy toward Latin America and the Middle East is very unclear and shifts from time to time. On the one hand, the United States has done a lot of unpopular things, including launching military attacks on Grenada, imposing subversive threats against Nicaragua, and conniving at and supporting Israel in its military expansion and savage acts of aggression. But it has also continued to take the initiative to some extent in exploring ways to alleviate contradictions through political means. One most important principle to be followed in resolving regional problems must be to respect the independence, sovereign rights, and territorial integrity of various countries, including the national rights of the Palestinian people and the right of peoples in various Latin American countries to choose their own political system. This is where the key to the question lies. Whether or not the United States can readjust its related policies in this direction remains to be seen.

The most important U.S. topic in its relations with other countries is how to deal with the Soviet Union. Following the U.S.-Soviet November summit at the end of 1985, U.S.-Soviet relations turned from a war of words into a dialogue between the top leaders of the two countries. Bilateral relations have improved considerably and an easing has appeared in their relations to a certain degree. Although no significant progress has been made in such key problems as the arms race and contention for control of some regions in the world, both sides expressed their willingness to continue the momentum of dialogues at all levels, and at the higher level as well, to explore the possibilities for a compromise. This indicates that both the United States and the Soviet Union are attempting to readjust their own policies. U.S.-Soviet confrontation has lasted for quite some time. Evidently, their icy relations cannot completely be improved just because of several rounds of relaxed conversations. Nevertheless, if there are no incidents and if both sides continue their efforts to explore ways of readjusting their relations, a relatively stable situation may emerge in the second half of the 1980's although basic contradictions continue to exist.

There are also indications that policy readjustments are being carried out in the Soviet Union. Top Soviet leaders have passed away one after another, and the leadership changed hands three times within 2 years. Following the personnel changes, which were imperative, the problem of continuing or renewing existing policies also emerged. In 1982 Yuriy Andropov negated Leonid Brezhnev's thesis that the Soviet Union had built "developed socialism" and pointed out that the Soviet Union was just at "the starting point of the long historical stage of developed socialism." Therefore, some appropriate readjustments should be made in the Soviet Union's existing economic structure and policies. Mikhail Gorbachev has further viewed economic structural reform as one of the priorities in the country's work and made proposals for planning work, the management structure, the price system, and the methods of distribution, and for revising the Soviet Constitution. All in all, all kinds of information coming from Moscow indicates that the Soviet leaders do not deem the hard and fast policy as the best one.

In foreign policy, the Soviet Union has never been ready to admit shortcomings or mistakes. However, the spectator sees most clearly the right and wrong, the success and failure of their foreign policy. It is hard to imagine that there is no need to make a reappraisal of its foreign policy. So far people have seen no substantial change in this regard.

However, the Soviet Union has taken some steps to readjust its approach toward some issues, including its policy toward the United States and increasing the number of bilateral exchanges and political talks with China. The overbearing attitude it took toward numerous Third World countries during the 1970's and the early 1980's has been modified considerably, but judging from "hot spots" such as Afghanistan and Cambodia, any significant change in its attitude toward the issue is still far from reality.

China has clearly declared that it will conduct major readjustments and reforms in its domestic and foreign policies. It has made thorough and open self-criticism of policy errors committed during the "Great Cultural Revolution" and summed up the experiences, both positive and negative, since the founding of the PRC. At the end of 1978, China entered a new stage of bold and steady reform and made marked achievements in the first 5 years of the 1980's. It has pursued a policy of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the domestic economy, and simultaneously grasped the building of material and spiritual civilizations, thus opening up a road of socialist construction with Chinese characteristics.

China has also readjusted the priorities in its foreign policy in light of the developed situation. It has a clear-headed appraisal of the danger of a world war and is more confident in the growth of the forces for peace and of safeguarding the cause of peace. China has declared in unequivocal terms that it will firmly pursue an independent and peaceful foreign policy and not form any alliances with other countries. It is playing its unique role in safeguarding peace, opposing hegemonism, and promoting development. The tremendous changes taking place in China, the biggest Third World country, are winning a positive response from the world community.

West and East European countries, which belong to two military blocs, have been pursuing a more independent policy and thus they have a greater role to play. Quite a number of countries in the Asia-Pacific Region, the Middle East, and Latin America are also readjusting their own policies, partly in consideration of their domestic needs and partly as the result of a chain reaction. The situation is continuously changing and every country needs to readjust its policies, to adapt itself to the new situation. This is normal. Policy readjustments in some countries are carried out willingly but, on many occasions, policy readjustments are the result of the pressure of a situation.

If the forces for peace were not growing day by day and if the outcome of a nuclear war was not mutual destruction and global calamity, it would not be easy for the United States and the Soviet Union to sit down and readjust their relations, to avoid a head-on clash.

If the Third World does not adhere to independence, oppose bullying and humiliation by foreign countries, and demand fair treatment, the power politics characterized by strong, big nations bullying weak, small ones will not give way automatically.

Changes in the world economic situation such as intensified market competition, restoration of trade protectionism, and increased difficulties in economic development may serve as the objective conditions for many countries to seek a new solution through readjusting their domestic policies and their relations with the rest of the world. The continued development of science and technology has stimulated many countries to readjust their economic structures and strive to subsist in the course of a new technological revolution.

In other words, policy readjustments sooner or later become unavoidable. The problem is that, more often than not, people's understanding lags behind the development of the situation. Particularly, political short-sightedness, vested interests, and force of habit very often limit people's outlook and action. Commonly, that which needs readjustment is not readjusted. If the principle of contending for superiority on the basis of strength is not changed, it will be difficult to reach any agreement on arms control. If power politics is not discarded, equal and friendly relations between states cannot be achieved. If policies already not in keeping with present needs are not substantially readjusted, any state will find it hard to adapt itself to the changes of the times.

The trend of readjustment emerging in the 1980's seems to be anything but an accidental phenomenon. True, whether the readjustments carried out in some countries are false or true and are an act taken from a long-term point of view or an expedient measure, or whether they are carried out thoroughly or superficially remains to be tested by practice. However, the emergence of the trend of readjustment is better than a pool of stagnant water.

When entering the 1980's, people had both worries and hopes about the prospects for world peace and development. If the ongoing trend of readjustment can really keep abreast of the changed conditions of the times and continue to develop in line with the people's aspirations, world peace and development in the mid-1980's will be increasingly full of promise although people's worries about them continue to exist. Even if a force going against the tide of the times emerges, it will suffer disastrous defeat sooner or later.

SATELLITE LAUNCH ROCKETS FOR WORLD MARKET

OW131046 Beijing XINHUA in English 1031 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] United Nations, February 12 (XINHUA) -- China is willing to make two types of her satellite launch vehicles available on world market as her contribution to international space cooperation for peaceful purposes, a Chinese official declared here today. Shi Jicheng, Chinese delegate to the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, made the announcement at the 23rd session of its scientific and technical subcommittee. The two types of rockets to be available to other countries are "CZ-2" and "CZ-3".

In a lengthy review of China's space-related activities, Shi said so far China has successfully launched a total of 18 satellites, of which seven are recoverable ones launched by "CZ-2" rockets, and two are geostationary put into orbit by "CZ-3". These successful launchings have not only created "propitious conditions for China's own development of space science and technology," but also suggested her ability "to provide launching services to other countries," Shi stated. Meanwhile, Shi went on, China has made good progress in space science cooperation or exchange with many other countries, which include the United States, France, Federal Germany, Italy, Britain, Canada, Brazil, Thailand and India. China has also engaged in multi-lateral space-related activities, Shi recalled. Last year she sponsored an Asian regional seminar on remote sensing in April, and hosted a U.N. workshop on space science applications in October.

ENVOY TO U.S. SAYS TIES 'DEVELOPING STEADILY'

OW141048 Beijing XINHUA in English 1034 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] New York, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador to the United States Han Xu said this evening that Sino-U.S. relations were developing steadily and more progress has been made in various fields in recent years. Han addressed a conference on international strategic affairs at Columbia University in New York. About 250 people attended the opening session, which was called "China in Transition."

Last year, Han told the conference, the two countries signed four agreements for cooperation on peaceful uses of nuclear energy, culture, education and fishing. U.S. direct investments in China totaled more than 1.5 billion U.S. dollars, leading all other nations doing business in China. Sino-U.S. trade set a record, exceeding six billion dollars. Also in 1985, there were more exchanges of visits by government leaders and business executives, including Chinese President Li Xiannian's trip to the United States and U.S. Vice President George Bush's return tour of China. These visits have increased mutual understanding and friendship between China and the United States, Han noted. Ambassador Han pointed out that the U.S. Government has relaxed controls on technology transfer to China. "But we hope the United States will go further and show, specifically in this field, that it truly regards China as a friendly, non-allied country." He said China is firmly committed to an open-door policy and is offering various incentives to overseas banners and industrialists to do business in China.

Discussing China's independent foreign policy, he said, "China makes its own judgment and determines its own position on the merits of each case" in the interest of the chinese and the world's people. Han said Sino-U.S. relations would develop in a more productive way if the U.S. Government would abide by principles issued in the Sino-U.S. joint communiques. Better ties between the two countries are in the best interest of the Chinese and American people and for world peace, he added. The three-day conference is sponsored by Columbia University, in association with other insitutions including the Asia Society. Conference speakers will focus on China's recent economic and political development.

In his speech tonight, former U.S. Senator Abraham Ribicoff said that China with one billion people "is becoming more and more important in global endeavors." He discounted the notion that China is going to become another capitalist country. "The key means of production remain in the hands of the state, and the Communist Party remains firmly in charge," he explained. On relations between China and the United States, Ribicoff pointed out that the two countries have succeeded in resolving several impediments to normal trade relationship, such as frozen assets. China and the United States signed a comprehensive tax treaty that prevents double taxation of income earned by one country's nationals in the other country. This has opened the way for growing business and cooperation between the two coutries.

FORMER SENATOR LAUDS PRC REFORM POLICY

OW131320 Beijing XINHUA in English 1306 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] New York, February 12 (XINHUA) -- Former U.S. Senator Abraham Ribicoff said today that "China's present economic reform and other social policies are opening up a new road never traveled before" and represent "some of the most significant events in modern history".

In an exclusive interview with XINHUA at his Manhattan office, Ribicoff said that Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping and his colleagues "are implementing new policies that integrate socialist economic tenets with market forces: in an effort to expedite China's economic development and catch up with the advanced countries in the world.

Ribicoff was a U.S. senator from 1964 to 81 and chairman of the Senate International Trade Committee in 1979, the year that the United States granted "most favored nation" statues to China. He has visited China three times since 1982 on business for the law firm of Kaye, Scholer, Fierman, Hays and Handler, which employes him as a special counsel. The 74-year-old Ribicoff said each time he visited China he observed the progress made by the Chinese people and came back impressed by the vibrant life of the country. "I met Deng Xiaoping and all other top Chinese leaders in Beijing during my visits. They have a clear projection of their country's future and are in full charge of everything." he said. "I am confident that China will succeed in pursuit of its goal and its policy and practice may be followed by many other developing countries in the years to come," he said, adding that "the new policy is aimed at ensuring rapid economic growth and improving the people's living standards. It now works very well."

The positive economic results achieved over the last few years have proven the soundness of open-door policy which, he believes, will become long-term state policy. "The new policy will no doubt enable the Chinese people to accelerate their drive for modernization," he said. According to Ribicoff, the main areas for U.S.-China cooperation should be in the fields of high technology, communications, and exploration and development of oil, minerals and other natural resources. China is in need of all types of expansion and companies from both sides will benefit in starting joint ventures, he added. As a lawyer, he was particularly pleased with China's adoption of laws and regulations relating to foreign trade, patent, contract and other economic matters. The former senator sees these areas as essential in attracting foreign capital and technology. "China is moving in the right direction in perfecting its legal system," he said. Ribicoff said he expects "a strong and stable leadership in China to see the new policy carried through," as there is a second and third echelon of younger and dynamic leaders working along with the old generation of veteran revolutionaries, such as Deng Xiaoping and Hu Yaobang.

SOVIET PROPOSAL ON CHEMICAL WEAPONS REJECTED

OW130931 Beijing XINHUA in English 0751 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 12 (XINHUA) -- The United States today rejected a proposal by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev for an interim agreement banning the spread of chemical weapons, and reaffirmed Washington's favor for a global ban on such weaponry.

Gorbachev proposed on January 15 certain interim steps that could aid progress on a ban on chemical weapons, including an agreement "on a multilateral basis not to transfer chemical weapons to anyone and not to deploy them in the territories of other states." The U.S. State Department in a statement today said that "Mr. Gorbachev's proposal for a formal agreement, along the lines of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, is not appropriate, nor would it be effective due to the technical characteristics of chemical weapons." It went on to say that "such an agreement could also detract from the achievement of a global ban by diverting attention from the tough verification issues which have yet to be resolved."

According to the statement, the primary U.S. and Soviet efforts "should be directed toward a global ban." "We believe that an effective and verifiable global ban on all chemical weapons is the way to solve the triple problems of existing chemical weapons capabilities, their recent use and their further spread," said the statement. The statement, read by State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb, also said that "the United States has acted through diplomatic channels and by the imposition of export controls to hinder the spread of these weapons in the most dangerous cases."

CIVILIAN AIRLINE SERVICE BETWEEN U.S., USSR RESUMED

OW140210 Beijing XINHUA in English 0158 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The United States and the Soviet Union have agreed to resume direct civilian flights between the two countries, the U.S. State Department announced today. U.S. Deputy Secretary of State John Whitehead and Soviet Ambassador Anatoliy Dobrynin exchanged diplomatic notes this afternoon amending the 1966 air transport agreement between the two countries. Under the terms of the amended agreemen direct air service will be inaugurated on April 29 of this year. Soviet airline Aeroflot and American airline Pan Am are designated carriers.

The agreement permits each airline to make a maximum of four flights per week to the other country. The U.S. Pan Am will serve Moscow and Leningrad and the Soviet Aeroflot will fly to Washington and New York. There had been twice-a-week commercial flights between the two countries until the Reagan administration suspended Soviet Aeroflot landing rights in the United States in late 1979 when Soviet troops invaded Afghanistan. The new amended air transport agreement doubles the air traffic between the two countries.

BEIJING REVIEW VIEWS SOVIET POLICY ON CAMBODIA

OW131151 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 13 Feb 86 p 10

[Article by Tang Tianri: "Kampuchea: All Talk, No Action"]

[Text] Although the official Soviet press and propaganda machines have been trumpeting new slogans about Kampuchea and other regional issues, its policies remain the same. PRAVDA, the official Soviet Communist Party newspaper, said in a recent article that the political solutions to regional problems required a new approach, and that the Soviet Union was willing to coordinate its actions with other countries in this matter. Soon afterwards Soviet Vice-Foreign Minister Mikhail S. Kapitsa told reporters at a press conference in Moscow that if a political solution was found to the Kampuchean problem the Vietnamese troops possibly would withdraw from Kampuchea in 1987.

But does this rhetoric really represent a new Soviet policy on the Kampuchean issue? In his statement, Kapitsa asked Democratic Kampuchean President Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and Democratic Kampuchean Coalition Prime Minister Son Sann to negotiate with the Phnom Penh regime with Vietnamese troops still in Kampuchea on condition that they must first cut all ties with the Democratic Kampuchean National Army. This is clearly a ploy to disrupt the unity of the three resistance forces of Democratic Kampuchea and dissolve the country's Coalition Government.

Kapitsa's remarks to the Democratic Kampuchean National Army were quite hostile. He described them as "bandits," and did not recognize the National Army as a political force. He said that if the Democratic Kampuchean National Army was willing to "take the road of a political settlement," some of its leaders could contact Phnom Penh authorities.

He maintained, however, that those leaders "could not be regarded as representatives of a political force." What Kapitsa proposed, in fact, is a political conspiracy that attempts to weaken, break up and eventually wipe out the most powerful one in the three Kampuchean patriotic resistance forces.

Kapitsa took it for granted that the elimination of the three anti-Vietnamese factions in Kampuchea would lead to an agreement ending the undeclared war in Kampuchea, and to a "national election with international supervision." However, the so-called election would not be a real one, which the Kampuchean people deserve, and would not be without foreign interference. The election, if it were to take place, undoubtedly would be under Soviet control and serve only to legitimize the Heng Samrin puppet regime.

In the Kremlin's view, the realization of these plans will allow the establishment of a "peace zone" in the form of an "Indochinese federation," which is backed by the Kremlin and controlled by Hanoi. Kapitsa called for an "international conference" and assurances for a peace zone. This means Moscow wants the international community to recognize Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea and Soviet hegemony in Indochina.

The Soviet Union actually wanted to support Vietnam to solve the Kampuchean problem through military means while advocating its so-called "political settlement blueprint." Kapitsa said if there were no way to reach a political settlement, "the de facto undeclared war would be continued." He imagined that with the Soviet Union's support, the Vietnamese and Heng Samrin troops could become more militant and stronger within a few years' time, and the Kampuchean resistance forces would be wiped out. Then, the Kampuchean problem "would be eliminated automatically."

To help realize this, last year the Soviet Union doubled its annual economic and military aid to Vietnam from US$2 billion to US$4 billion. A large number of Soviet-made tanks, artillery pieces, mines, rockets and airplanes continue to arrive in Kampuchea to help Vietnam with its offensive drive, which is aimed at eliminating the Kampuchean resistance forces in two to three years.

Peace and development are the trends of the 1980s, and the world desires to solve international disputes in accordance with the Five Principles of Peaceful Coexistence.

Moscow's attempt to rely on its economic and military superiority and use its power politics to conquer a weak country directly or indirectly should not be allowed. But in their endeavours, the Soviets have not only met with strong resistance by the weak nation, but have also come under severe condemnation from the world community, leaving them in an even more isolated position.

In its six years of occupation of Afghanistan and seven-year support for Vietnam's aggression in Kampuchea, the Soviet Union has tasted some fairly bitter fruit. Events will prove that the scheme to wipe out the Democratic Kampuchean resistance forces and make the Kampuchean problem vanish in two or three years, is merely a daydream.

MOSCOW NOT READY TO DISCUSS ISLANDS WITH JAPAN

OW131450 Beijing XINHUA in English 1435 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 13 (XINHUA) -- A Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman today denied that Moscow is ready to negotiate its long-standing dispute with Japan over the Kurile Islands, seized by the Soviet Union at the end of World War II but claimed by Japan. Valeriy Sukhin, a deputy chief of the Foreign Ministry's press department, gave the denial at a press conference when he was asked whether last month's visit to Tokyo by Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze had cleared the way for talks on the territorial issue. A joint communique on the visit made a vague reference to the 41-year-long Soviet occupation of Japan's four northern islands. Japan, which has insisted on the return of these islands before signing a peace treaty with Moscow formally ending hostilities between the two countries, interpreted the communique as an indication that the territorial issue would be included in the talks to be reopened on a peace treaty.

At today's press briefing, Sukhin said that during Shevardnadze's visit, "the Japanese side raised the (territorial) issue during the negotiations. The Soviet side was strongly opposed to these unsubstantiated claims made by the Japanese side..." "I want to stress that the Soviet position has not changed.... The communique reaffirmed our readiness to continue negotiations on a peace treaty and not the territorial issue," he said. He also stated that "the existing borders between the two states is a historical fact," and that "the Soviet Union is known to proceed from the principle of non-violation of borders." The talks on a peace treaty have been held up over Japan's insistence on the recovery of the Soviet-held islands and the Soviet position that there is no issue to discuss.

[Text] Moscow, 12 Feb (XINHUA) -- The Union of Soviet Societies for Friendship and Cultural Revolutions With Foreign Countries and the Soviet-Chinese Friendship Society cosponsored a report meeting at the Home of Friendship in Moscow to mark the 87th birth anniversary of renowed Chinese writer Lao She.

At the meeting, chaired by Tikhvinskiy, chairman of the Soviet-Chinese Friendship Society, (Shemanov), professor of the Asian and African Institute of Moscow University, made a report on Lao She's life and literary work. He said: Lao She was a writer deeply cherished by the Chinese people. Many of his works that have been translated into Russian are popular among the Soviet people. A great writer, Lao She belongs not only to China, but to the whole world. "Rickshaw Boy," a Chinese movie adapted from Lao She's noted novel bearing the same title, was shown after the report meeting.

Chinese ambassador to the Soviet Union Li Zewang, and others attended the meeting.

SOVIET VICE PREMIER URGES SCIENTIFIC PROGRESS

OW132118 Beijing XINHUA in English 1835 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Vice-Premier Aleksey Antonov today called upon the member states of the Council of Mutual Economic Assistance (CMEA) to concentrate manpower and material resources on speeding up scientific-technological progress, which he called a key to their economic race with the West.

In an article carried by the Soviet daily SOTSIALISTICHESKAYA INDUSTRIYA, Antonov described the acceleration of scientific-technological progress as an urgent task for the CMEA countries, and condemned Western countries for holding back the world's new scientific and technological achievements through various restrictions and bans. At the same time, Antonov criticized some related Soviet departments for their lack of high demands in putting forward draft agreements on cooperation with other CMEA countries in science and technology, and for the lack of proper demands upon the technical excellence of products being exchanged among the CMEA countries.

He stressed the need to create in the Soviet Union and even within the CMEA an atmosphere incompatible with those draft agreements on scientific-technological cooperation which are obsolete or have poor prospects. He said that a comprehensive program for scientific and technological development to the year 2000 among CMEA countries had been adopted last December to meet their interests. If the Soviet Union carries out its commitments to the program, which contains 93 major items, it would directly promote the economic growth in the country, he added.

S. KOREAN NKDP URGES CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION

OW131156 Beijing XINHUA in English 1133 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The main South Korean opposition party and several other democratic groups launched yesterday a campaign to collect ten million signatures to press for changes in the existing Constitution," the KOREA CENTRAL NEWS AGENCY (KCNA) quoted foreign reports as saying. The camapign was initiated by the New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), the biggest opposition party in South Korea, and some other organizations. Democratic personages Kim Tae-chung, Kim Yong-sam and President of NKDP Yi Min-u were among the first 300 people to sign before the noon time yesterday.

A statement issued prior to the campaign by the NKDP and the council for the promotion of democracy, said that the existing "Constitution" enacted by the Chon Tu-hwan authorities in 1980 was drawn up and promulgated in an undemocratic way and is therefore lacking legitimacy. The campaign is intended to "demonstrate the aspirations of people," the statement added.

It was reported that South Korean authorities have threatened to take action against the signature campaign under the "law of assembly and demonstration." A large number of police were already deployed yesterday at places where signatures were being collected. The signature campaign, now limited to Seoul, will reportedly extend to many other parts of South Korea next week.

CHINESE, JAPANESE RICE PRODUCE QUALITY HYBRIDS

OW130811 Beijing XINHUA in English 0640 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Kunming, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese and Japanese scientists have bred nine new high-yielding rice hybrids from their countries' strains, officials in Southwest China's Yunnan Province said today. They said the new strains produce tasty rice and are resistant to cold weather and disease.

After successful experiments with the new strains in Yunnan Province and on Hainan Island in South China, the scientists plan more tests this year on small tracts in Yunnan, Guizhou and Sichuan Provinces. The strains were selected from more than 400 hybrids developed since 1983 by crossing rice from Japan and Yunnan. With its varied landscape, Yunnan produces a wide range of rice strains, many of them resistant to the cold and bearing large ears and kernels. On the other hand, scientists said, Japanese rice strains grow and taste better than most Yunnan varieties.

USSR TRANSPORTS MILITARY VEHICLES TO SRV TROOPS

OW140312 Beijing XINHUA in English 0259 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 14 (XINHUA) -- Soviet cargo vessels transported 180 military vehicles and a large number of weapons to the Vietnamese troops at Kompong Som in Kampuchea on January 31, radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today. Kompong Som, 190 kilometers southwest of Phnom Penh, is the largest port city in Kampuchea.

The radio said the Soviet move showed "the political solution of the Kampuchean problem" as declared by the Soviet Union and Vietnam was a sheer fraud. Their strategy remains to be aggression and expansion in Southeast Asia, it said.

SRV SAID UNLIKELY TO WITHDRAW FROM CAMBODIA

OW131642 Beijing XINHUA in English 1444 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Thai Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila said here today there is no indication that Vietnam will withdraw its troops from Kampuchea in the next few years. He made the remark in a speech on Thailand's foreign policy towards Indochina and ASEAN countries at Ram-Khamhaeng University here this morning. Having occupied Kampuchea for seven years, Vietnam is trying to control and Vietnamize the whole of Kampuchea, he said.

As Vietnam has spent a huge proportion of its resources on warfare, including half of the state budget and 30 percent of its GNP, its economy has been deteriorating, Sitthi said. Vietnam's foreign debts now amount to six billion U.S. dollars, and it has to send 18,000 laborers to work in the Soviet Union to pay off its debts. The Vietnamese still lead a life of poverty and hunger, he added. Sitthi noted that Vietnam had seized many military bases of the Kampuchean resistance forces and attempted to seal off the border and prevent the resistance forces from advancing into the interior, however the resistance forces have managed to break up into smaller units, and penetrated into the interior to fight the Vietnamese, he said. Vietnam has failed likewise in its attempt to block the Thai-Kampuchean border, he added.

U.S., LAOS TO EXCAVATE PLANE CRASH SITE

OW140212 Beijing XINHUA in English 0201 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The United States and Laos have agreed to begin on February 17 the joint excavation of the crash site of a U.S. airplane which was lost during the Indochina war, the U.S. State Department announced today. This will be the second of such joint excavation in Laos. The first took place in February 1985.

According to a statement issued by the State Department, the aircraft to be excavated is a U.S. Air Force AC-130 which crashed on March 29, 1972 in Savannakhet Province in southern Laos with fourteen crew members aboard.

"The United States Government appreciates this further step by the Lao Government in our cooperative effort to resolve the issue of Americans who are missing or otherwise unaccounted for in Laos as a result of the war," the statement added. Dialogue on the excavation between the United States and Laos has speeded up recently. U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Paul Wolfowitz, the first U.S. official of his rank to visit Laos since 1978, paid a two-day visit to Vientiane, the Lao capital, last December.

PHILIPPINE OPPOSITION LEADERS ON HABIB'S VISIT

OW131731 Beijing XINHUA in English 1514 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 13 (XINHUA) -- A Philippine opposition leader today branded as "intervention" the forthcoming visit of U.S. special envoy Philip Habib to the Philippines. Member of Parliament Aquilino Pimentel, Jr. said Habib, whom President Ronald Reagan has sent here to talk to President Ferdinand Marcos and opposition candidate Corazon Aquino, would likely "persuade" the two presidential contenders to have a "compromise" regarding the poll results. "Whatever pretensions the U.S. has will be shattered by Mr Habib's visit to the country", Pimentel said.

Meanwhile, opposition Member of Parliament Hombono Adaza warned that the U.S. would lose friends here if it continues to ask the opposition to work closely with the ruling party. He said Reagan's statement asking the two groups to work closely was a denial of the existing realities in the Philippines. Reagan has ignored the report of the U.S. observers' team led by Senator Richard Lugar and news reports in the U.S. media about the widespread fraud and violence committed by the ruling party in the February 7 poll, Adaza said.

At a national press conference on February 11 in the U.S., the U.S. President called on both sides of the Philippine presidential candidates to abide by the outcome and work together for reforms. He also declared he would send veteran diplomatic trouble-shooter Philip Habib to the Philippines. Commenting on Reagan's statement, opposition presidential candidate [Aquino] said yesterday that she was alarmed by Reagan's suggestion that there might have been fraud on both sides while Reagan's own observers said they had only seen it on one side. However, she reaffirmed that she would continue to use peaceful means and welcomed the visit of Philip Habib.

Reagan Statement on Bases

HK140349 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] In Washington, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said at a press conference yesterday that despite reports of widespread fraud and violence during the recent Philippine presidential election, it is heartening to know that the two-party system is alive and a pluralistic democracy exists in that country. He said the American Government will maintain its relations with the Philippines regardless of which administration is chosen by the Filipino people. Reagan added that the USSR is building a larger naval base than the U.S. one in the region. He said this would enable the Russians to block the 16 sea lanes used by the United States and its allies. For this reason, Reagan said, the United States should maintain its bases in the Philippines so it can send its forces when required and keep the sea lanes open.

Marcos, Aquino Speak

OW131737 Beijing XINHUA in English 1617 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 13 (XINHUA) -- President Marcos reiterated his call for national unity and reconciliation before a group of local and foreign correspondents at the presidential palace here this evening. He deplored the violent incidents that had taken place, including the brutal slaying of former Governor of Antique Province and opposition leader Evelio Javier who was gunned down in broad daylight on February 11.

He said that even greater tension had risen in the country since the voting came to a close, and more divisions had occurred among the people as compared to the period of the election campaign. He renewed assurances of his administration's commitment to honor "without reservation" the people's verdict in the February 7 presidential and vice-presidential polls.

Opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino proposed tonight that President Marcos must first step down from the office of the president to solve the crisis the Philippines is facing. She made the proposal in a written statement read at a press conference held at her headquarters. "By this I do not mean another election but a process which enable the political system to respond to the real will of the people," Mrs. Aquino elaborated. She emphasized that unity and reconciliation can only be served if Marcos clearly and unequivocably separates himself from the presidency. Mrs. [Aquino] assured that she will do her best to ensure the political crisis will be resolved without violence.

NEPAL CUSTOMS SEIZES LARGE AMOUNTS OF DRUGS

OW131250 Beijing XINHUA in English 1227 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Katmandu, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The Nepalese customs and authorities concerned seized 3.5 tons of various drugs and arrested 154 drug traffickers in 1985, according to data issued by the Home Ministry today. The drugs include 3,320 kilograms of marijuana, 175.64 kilograms of hashish (a kind of marijuana), 3.3 kilograms of heroin and 1.68 kilograms of opium. Of all the arrested drug traffickers, 111 are Nepalese nationals.

Drug addicts in Nepal have increased to around 20,000, and most of them are young people including a number of girl students. To fight against drug abuse, the government established a narcotic drug abuse prevention committee last year which consisted of representatives of the Nepal youth organization, the Home Ministry, the Health Ministry and the police. Official data showed that from 1982 to 1984, a total of 7.68 tons of various drugs have been seized and some 1,500 people including foreigners were found to be involved in this connection. According to Nepal's act, drug traffickers are subject to imprisonment of three to 14 years and fines up to 100,000 rupees (about 5,000 U.S. dollars).

BANGLADESH PLANS TO HOLD ELECTIONS IN 1986

OW131703 Beijing XINHUA in English 1457 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Dhaka, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The Bangladesh martial law government announced today that the long-delayed elections would be held in the first half of this year. Chief martial law administrator Hussain Mohammad Ershad made the announcement here this afternoon when addressing a mass rally organized by the Jatiyo (National) Party, known as "the government political front."

Ershad, who is also the Bangladesh president, urged the opposition parties to go to the polls and help the military government return democracy to the nation.

Parliamentary and presidential elections have been scheduled over and over again since March 1982 when Ershad took over power and promulgated martial law in the country, but none materialized because of repeated opposition boycotts. The opposition parties have insisted that they would go to the polls only when martial law is withdrawn and the country is run by a neutral government. They also demanded that parliamentary elections be held before the presidential election.

Speaking at the rally, M.A. Matin, Jatiyo Party secretary general and also government works minister, called for early holding of a neutral, fair and free election in the country.

Unofficial sources said the elections are likely to be held in April. But observers here believe the government and the opposition will have not got themselves ready by then. The elections will not be held until at least next November, they say. Most of the government ministers, state and deputy ministers attended today's rally organized by the party to which they mostly belong. The party announced its establishment on January 1, 1986.

FRANCE EXPELS 13 FOREIGNERS FOR DISRUPTING ORDER

OW141024 Beijing XINHUA in English 0857 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Paris, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Interior Minister Pierre Joxe signed orders today for the expulsion of 13 of the 64 people arrested yesterday morning by counter-espionage agents investigating the recent series of bombings in Paris, French news agency AFP reported today. According to AFP's source, of the 13 to be expulsed for "disrupting the public order," four are Iraqis, four Iranians, three Lebanese, one Algerian and one is Kenyan. They will be sent to their country of origin or their country of choice.

One of the Lebanese was sentenced to two months jail before his expulsion, by a Paris court today, on charges of breaking French immigration laws.

Counter-espionage police detained 64 people in a nationwide sweep yesterday in the wake of last week's bombings on a bookstore, sports shop and a shopping arcade, which injured 20 people. All but the thirteen have been released. Officials said that no link had been found between the thirteen to be expulsed and the bombings.

WESTLAND DEAL CAUSES 'POLITICAL CRISIS' IN UK

OW131124 Beijing XINHUA in English 1059 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] London, February 12 (XINHUA) -- The near-bankrupt Westland Company, Britain's only helicopter manufacturer whose future has caused a protracted political crisis for the Conservative government today accepted a financial rescue deal made by the U.S. Sikorsky Company and its Italian partner, Fiat.

At a shareholders' meeting held here today, 67.8 per cent of the votes were cast in favor of accepting the American deal with only 32.2 per cent voting against it. The deal was strongly recommended by the company's board of directors.

Last month, the Sikorsky-Fiat offer failed to gain the necessary 75 per cent backing. This time, the terms were restructured to require only a simple majority to succeed. Sikorsky and Fiat will now hold a 29.9 per cent stake in the company. Under the terms of the new arrangement the ailing Westland firm will receive a cash injection of 80 million pounds (112 million U.S. dollars) and will soon begin manufacturing helicopters designed by Sikorsky under U.S. licence.

Earlier today, a European consortium, which had offered a rival rescue package for Westland, called for an adjournment of the shareholders meeting to allow an inquiry into the identity of six "mystery shareholders" who recently got control of more than 20 per cent of the shares, which helped swing the vote behind the American deal. The move to postpone the meeting was rejected and the European consortium was forced to admit defeat after the vote was taken. However the matter of the "mystery shareholders" has not been resolved and the London Stock Exchange plans to investigate whether there have been any irregularities in the way the shares have changed hands. If irregularities are found, today's vote could be made invalid.

Former Defence Secretary Michael Heseltine, who resigned from the Thatcher government over the issue and has been campaigning for the European offer, said he was "disappointed" at the results of the vote but added that he still believes in the principle of European defence cooperation. Other supporters of the European consortium also argued that the Sikorsky deal, now approved by Westland's shareholders, will leave Britain's sole helicopter manufacturer over-dependent on U.S. technology and may jeopardise future European collaboration in both helicopter production and other defence projects.

The political crisis over Westland surfaced early last month when Heseltine resigned his post in disagreement with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and Trade and Industry Secretary Leon Brittan, over the handling of the Westland affair. Brittan also resigned 15 days later after being accused of leaking a confidential cabinet letter, in order to undermine Heseltine's campaign. The dispute within the Cabinet over Westland has since snowballed into the biggest crisis for Mrs. Thatcher since she won power in 1979, raising questions about both her competence and integrity.

Observers here suggested that today's shareholders' decision will probably alleviate the two-and-a-half-month old political crisis over the Westland affair, but will hardly help restore the Conservative government's damaged popularity.

Earlier this week, the British Broadcasting Corporation (BBC), carried out a poll in four parliamentary constituencies held at present by the Conservative party. The survey showed a total of 70 per cent of the voters in the ridings thought that the government had not been honest about the Westland affair. The latest national Gallup opinion poll, due to be published in tomorrow's DAILY TELEGRAPH, shows that Prime Minister Thatcher's personal popularity has slumped to its lowest level since before the Falklands (Malvinas) war. Of those questioned, 67 per cent said they were "dissatisfied" with her performance and only 29 per cent were staisfied that she had acted properly.

The previous lowest level of voter confidence in a prime minister was 25 per cent she polled in 1981 -- the lowest for any post-war British leader. The Gallup Poll now puts the opposition Labor Party in the lead in the popularity stakes with 35.9 per cent of voter support and the Liberal-Social Democratic alliance second with 33.5 per cent, while the ruling Conservative Party rates a poor third at just 29.5 per cent.

ENVOY PRESENTS CREDENTIALS TO BULGARIA'S ZHIVKOV

[Text] Sofia, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Bulgarian leader Todor Zhivkov today said his country is "satisfied with Bulgarian-Chinese relations" and high-level political contacts between the two sides should continue.

He made these remarks when receiving Chinese Ambassador to Sofia Teng Shaozhi who presented credentials to the Bulgarian leader. Zhivkov told the Chinese ambassador, who arrived in Sofia on February 5, that in recent years bilateral relations have further developed in economic, cultural and other fields in addition to the exchange of high-level visits by leaders of both countries. The Bulgarian leader expressed the hope that Bulgarian-Chinese ties should continue to develop.

U.S. EXTRADITES WAR CRIMINAL TO YUGOSLAVIA

OW130815 Beijing XINHUA in English 0704 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Belgrade, February 12 (XINHUA) -- War criminal Andrija Artukovic, known as "the Balkan Butcher," was extradited from the United States today and is to stand trial for his involvement in the massacre of more than 700,000 people during the Second World War. According to an official document outlining the case, the Yugoslav Government had sought the extradition of Artukovic, who fled to the United States in May 1945, for 35 years.

Artukovic, 87, faces charges that he presided over the massacre of Serbs, Jews, Gypsies, and other innocent victims Croatia when he acted as minister of the interior in the "Independent State of Croatia," a Nazi puppet state. The United States had refused to extradite Artukovic, described by the Yugoslav Government as "the Balkan Butcher," whose lawyers argued that the charges against him are "politically inspired." However, international pressure and the rising tide of U.S. public opinion "forced the U.S. authorities to re-examine his past and finally extradite him to Yugoslavia," the Yugoslav news agency TANJUG reported.

Artukovic was arrested in November 1984 at his Los Angeles home, and his extradition to Yugoslavia was ordered by a Los Angeles court in March 1985. "After 40 years, Andrija Artukovic has returned to the country where he perpetrated heinous crimes for which he must render account," the news agency said.

Artukovic was directly responsible for the extermination of 700,000 men, women and children, TANJUG said. The extermination, including genocide against children, was predominantly carried out in the Jasenovac concentration camp. According to TANJUG, Artukovic was also responsible for inspiring and organizing mass murders of Croat anti-fascists.

SOCIALIST PARLIAMENTARIANS END WARSAW MEETING

OW140720 Beijing XINHUA in English 0644 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Warsaw, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Heads of parliamentary groups from 11 socialist countries today ended their two-day consultative meeting on preparations for two conferences of the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) scheduled for this year. Participants at the Warsaw preparatory meeting for the 75th and the 76th IPU conferences, scheduled to be held in Mexico in April and in Argentina in October respectively, said that the theme of the Mexico conference "should be contributions by parliaments to the endeavor for halting the arms race and to preventing the militarization of outer space," the Polish news agency PAP reported.

The role of parliaments in eliminating the source of international tensions and in fighting against international terrorism, as well as their contributions to faster economic growth of developing countries will also be discussed during the conference, PAP said. The latest Soviet disarmament proposal announced by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev a month ago, the participants said, should be the "central topic" for discussion at this year's IPU conferences.

They also discussed the Sixth Inter-Parliamentary Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, to be held in Bonn in May. Delegations from the ten member states of the Council for Mutual Economic Assistance (Comecon) and the Democratic People's Republic of Korea attended the Warsaw meeting.

JARUZELSKI SAYS MOST POLES SUPPORT GOVERNMENT

OW101354 Beijing XINHUA in English 1258 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Text] Warsaw, February 9 (XINHUA) -- An overwhelming majority of Poles hold identical views on world peace, structural principles of socialism, internal stability, territorial integrity and state security and the union, according to Polish leader Wojciech Jaruzelski. In an interview with Italian reporters, a transcript of which was published by the official news agency PAP here today, Jaruzelski said that "not all the people are satisfied with the policies of the state," and that confrontations, contradictions and disputes exist on all the major and minor issues. But, he added things are not as bad as is sometimes portrayed.

Jaruzelski also said that his government is holding dialogues at all levels with the Catholic Church and that the joint committee of the government and the church is continuing its work. "But that does not mean there are no conflicts. For instance, some clergymen go counter to their mission by getting involved in political activities. This even made it possible for some non-Catholics to take the church as a political forum," he said.

Jaruzelski also down played the influence of the Solidarity trade union. He said that the early 1980s will be remembered not for the union's role but a period of socialist reform in accordance with the will of the working class and working people." He accused Solidarity trade union leaders and "extra groups" of attempting to overthrow the constitutional order of the country at a time when tens of millions of working people were attempting reforms.

READJUSTMENT OF INVESTMENT STRUCTURE STRESSED

OW130649 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0237 GMT 13 Feb 86

[XINHUA Commentator's article: "It is Necessary Not Only To Control the Scope of Capital Construction But Also To Readjust the Structure of Investment]

[Text] Beijing, 13 Feb (XINHUA) -- Controlling the scope of capital construction and readjusting the structure of investment so as to pool our financial and material resources to strengthen the construction of energy resources, communications, raw and other material industries, and other key projects is of crucial significance to guaranteeing the steady development of our country's national economy this year. It is also an important task confronting us.

The situation in some localities shows that the policy of controlling the scope of capital construction, as repeatedly emphasized by the central authorities, has not yet been implemented well. According to the initial statistics from departments concerned, investments in capital construction in 1985 increased by 75 percent over 1983, a margin greatly surpassing the 28 percent increase in national income over those 2 years. On one hand, the scope of construction as a whole is now rapidly expanding; on the other hand, irrational phenomena in the investment structure have appeared: Productive construction projects have slowed: nonproductive projects have increased drastically; the proportion of energy resources, communications, raw and other material industries, and other key projects had dropped; the proportion of the construction of processing industry has risen. Historical experience tells us that if such a situation remains unchanged, it will inevitably damage the healthy development of the national economy.

Why is the scope of capital construction still too large? Why is the structure of investment irrational? The main reason is that quite a few department and enterprises have failed to seriously implement the central authorities' directive on control over the scope of investments in fixed assets. Along with reforms in the economic structure, nonstate budgetary funds owned by all departments and enterprises in our country have increased by big margins year after year. In 1980, these funds amounted, on the whole, to the equivalent of two-thirds of the state's revenues. By 1985, these funds increased on the whole to the equivalent of four-fifths of the state's revenues. With money in their pockets, many local departments have emphasized the construction of industrial processing projects which can be completed in a short period and can produce good profits. Or they are fond of building office buildings, halls, hostels, and guesthouses which are not urgently needed. They lack enthusiasm for energy resources, communications, raw and other material industries, and other projects which cannot be completed in a short period and which cannot make money soon.

Generally speaking, many localities had hoped that expanding the scale of capital construction would accelerate local economic development. However, if their hopes excess the limit imposed by objective conditions, capital construction would instead have negative results. Over the years, we have seen many projects, including even key construction projects, postponed repeatedly and becoming obsolete. Most of these failures were caused by overextended capital construction ambitions. This fact should merit our serious attention.

Obviously, an urgent task at the moment is downgrading nonproductive projects and nonessential processing projects, stepping up the construction of energy, communications, transportation, and raw and processed materials projects, and striving to eliminate backwardness in these industries. We are experiencing acute shortages in energy, transportation, and raw and processed materials. The only way to resolve this problem is to sharply curtail all general-purpose construction projects and shift the money and materials thus saved to more energy, transportation, and raw and processed materials projects.

Only when there is sufficient energy, transportation means, and raw and processed materials can our country lay a firm foundation for and gain relatively rapid development in its processing industry and the entire national economy as a whole.

In restricting capital construction and readjusting the investment structure, there are bound to be contradictions between local interests and those of the whole and between immediate and long-range benefits. The only way to solve this problem is by subordinating local interests to those of the whole and immediate benefits to long-range benefits, thus curtailing nonproduction projects, stepping up the construction of production projects, limiting general-purpose projects, and stepping up the construction of key projects, including energy, communications, and raw and processed materials. This requires us to seriously examine all projects under construction, keep those worthy of retention, and resolutely do away with those that must be eliminated. Why can we not resolutely stop those projects lacking sufficient conditions for construction or those projects that will not bring good economic results even when completed? We must postpone the construction of projects which, though needed, are beyond our ability, so that sufficient financial and materials resources can be made available for key projects vital to the entire national economy, thereby accelerating the pace of construction and achieving better economic results with our investments.

CREATIVE FREEDOM SEEN AS HISTORICAL 'MISSION'

HK120707 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 23 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Guan Shanyue: "Freedom of Creation as I Understand It -- Speech Made at Forum held by the GUANGMING RIBAO Literature and Art Department"]

[Text] Pushed forward by the current policies of opening up and reform, the windows are opened, fresh air is coming in, and it is inevitable for the weak to catch cold. But should we close the window lest somebody catch cold? That is a negative measure. The positive measure is to strengthen our immunity.

Grasping the two civilizations simultaneously, we should by no means neglect building spiritual civilization. Neither should we put aside building spiritual civilization while grasping economic construction. What was fatal in the past was our onesidedness. From now on we should never repeat our past onesidedness. Sometimes it is easy for us to waver, to take a tortuous path, and sometimes, going from one extreme to another, to take the road back. Now that we are opening up, if we shut the door again that would be taking the road back.

To my knowledge, there has never been absolute creative freedom. Was there any freedom during the KMT reign? That would endanger one's life! Is there freedom in the capitalist society? No. It seems that painters there are quite free. But they have to make a living. They have to see what the capitalists like, and curry their favor. The paintings must bring in profits and be favorable to the capitalists. Are those painters free? They have to forget about their consciences, they have to paint things for which they have no liking. Therefore, freedom is relative. Creation was not free during the reign of the "gang of four." Rocks were not to be portrayed while drawing scenery, and painters were asked to draw socialist trees. But heaven knows what socialist trees are. Those with straight trunks were called socialist trees, and those painted with too much ink were called malicious paintings. Besides, painters were ordered to give expression to focal tasks and artists to give performances centering around the focal tasks. Too many rules and regulations interfering with the law governing it would really bring restrictions to creativity. However, today we are implementing the freedom of creativity under the premise of "serving the people," and "serving socialism." We have obtained our creative freedom under the restrictions of the "four cardinal principles."

It is imperative for us to fight against bourgeois liberalization, the freedom of creating those things injurious to our national dignity, and poisoning the people's souls. Such things are: violation of social benefits, deviating from the policy target of reform; countering the requirements of the party; and going against the will of the people. We should never forget that we are revolutionary literature and art workers serving the people and socialism. We should fully understand the dignified title of the architects of the soul. This is the glorious responsibility assigned us by the party and the people. We should not shrink from this sacred responsibility. If we strike a blow for creativity while shouldering this sacred responsibility, can it be said that there is no freedom in such creation? This identifies with our purpose in life. I think that this is the greatest freedom, like a bird flying in the vast expanse!

There is an argument that the farther removed from politics, the better are creative literature and art. In my personal opinion, the slogan "literature and art should serve politics" is no longer proposed, but this does not mean that literature and art are entirely divorced from politics. I agree that literature and art should not become an appendix to politics; that they should have their own independence; but they should not be divorced from politics. In the past, serving politics was rigidly absolute in the affirmative, but now serving politics is made absolute in the negative, in the expression, the further removed from politics the better. This is going from one extreme to another, and obviously wrong. Chinese painting has a long history, and a profound and unique traditional theory and technique. It is rich in national style and atmosphere loved by the people. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have welcomed our country's best time. We should not fail our times. We must accept the mission which history has assigned to our times and fulfill the people's trust in transforming the ancient national painting into new and modern Chinese painting. This makes new contributions to the culture and art of our socialist motherland, as well as to the world's treasure house of art, so that our art may shine brightly in the world, as do our athletes at present.

RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION METHODS DETAILED

HK120107 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 1, 10 Jan 86 pp 20-22

[Article by BAN YUE TAN political editorial office: "Questions and Answers on Party Rectification in the Rural Area (Part I)"]

[Text] Question: Where does the importance of party rectification in rural areas lie?

Answer : Party rectification in rural areas has been an important stage of the all-round party rectification since 1983. It is also the stage which is the broadest in scale and deals with the widest range of matters. Its importance is reflected in the following:

1. There are more than 25 million party members in rural areas, accounting for more than 50 percent of the total number of party members throughout the country. The number of grass-roots party organizations in rural areas also accounts for nearly 50 percent of the total number of grass-roots organizations in the whole party. To do well in rural party rectification is a matter of primary importance affecting the situation as a whole.

2. Rural party organizations and party members serve as a link and bridge between the party and the masses. The words and deeds of party members will directly affect the implementation of party policy in rural areas. Their state of mind will also have a great influence over the socialist modernization program in rural areas.

3. Only by doing well in carrying out rural party rectification, correcting party work style, and improving the general mood of the society can we say that we have done what is basically important with regard to the building of socialist spiritual civilization in the rural area, and that we have followed a correct orientation in the building of material civilization.

4. The second stage of rural reform is progressing in depth. Doing well in rural party rectification will enable rural party members to deepen their understanding of the reform and rural party organizations to strengthen their leadership over rural reform to ensure its smooth progress.

Question: What positive role have rural party organizations and party members played in the rural reform?

Answer: After the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, rural areas were the first to enact economic reforms. Great success has been achieved in rural economic reforms. This cannot be separated from efforts exerted by grass-roots party organizations and party members in rural areas to conscientiously implement the party's line, guiding principle and policy, and actively carrying out their work among the masses. A great many party members feared neither dangers, rumors, or slanders. They were bold in experimenting and exploring specific forms of the production responsibility system. When the masses still cast doubt on the implementation of the contract system according to output, rural party members took the lead in implementing the party policy, undertaking contract projects, and developing commodity economy. When the masses did not know how to get rich although they wanted to be rich, many party members helped them review experience in getting rich, and guided them on the path of common prosperity. It is appropriate to say that rural party organizations and party members have withstood new trials and tribulations. Most of them are good, or comparatively good. This is the main aspect of things which should be affirmed.

Question: At present, what problems exist in rural party organizations and among party members?

Answer: The main problem is that their ideas and work do not conform with the general tasks of the new period. Ideologically, some party members cast doubt upon the superiority of the socialist system. They lack confidence in the bright future of communism and lack a profound understanding of the party's new economic policy for rural areas.

As far as their work style is concerned, some party members have forgotten the purpose of serving the people wholeheartedly. What is uppermost in their minds is how to build up family fortunes. They have failed to lead the masses on a path to common prosperity. They have failed to correctly handle relations between the state, the collective, and individuals.

Institutionally, their sense of organization is blunted, and their discipline is lax. They do not participate in the activities of the organization and have failed to be in the vanguard for party members. The inner-party life of some grass-roots party organizations is extremely abnormal. Some of these organizations are even in a state of paralysis or semi-paralysis.

A few party members, a few party-member cadres in particular, have followed the bad work style of breaking away from the masses. They pursue a certain extreme individualism, seek private gain at public expense, abuse their power for individual interests, resort to coercion and abuse their authority, and so on. A small number of party members cannot withstand the attack of decadent capitalist ideology and have lost their bearings. Some of them put profit-making first, regard money as everything, violate law and discipline, or even degenerate so far as to commit crimes.

Question: What is the main purpose of party rectification in the rural areas?

Answer: The main purpose of party rectification in rural areas is to enable rural party organizations and the broad masses of party members to further understand the party's general task under the new situation, promote profound development of the rural reform, lead the masses to do well in developing socialist commodity economy, and consolidate and develop the favorable rural situation.

Rural party rectification means that under the guidance of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought, we should expose and solve impurities in ideology, work style, and organization and effect a fundamental turn for the better in party work style so that party organizations in the rural area will be purer, healthier, more vivid, and energetic. Through party rectification, we will help all party members in rural areas further raise their ideological consciousness, and arouse their enthusiasm so that grass-roots party organizations will become a powerfull fighting force. In so doing, we will unite with the broad masses of peasants, work together with them with one heart, and effectively carry out socialist modernization in rural areas.

Question: What the four principal problems which should be solved in the rural party rectification?

Answer: The rural area of our country covers a vast territory, and the conditions of different regions vary widely. On the basis of doing well in conducting investigations and studies, we should grasp the main problems and concentrate our efforts on solving them. During the party rectification this time, we should grasp the following four problems to consolidate our party organizations, and strengthen their building in light of the general conditions in our rural areas:

1. We should try to help our party members enhance their understanding of the basic purpose of the party. Through education, we will enable the broad masses of party members to clarify ideologically that during the new period serving the people wholeheartedly means specifically that they should actively guide the peasants to affluence through hard work, observe discipline and law, make joint efforts to promote the building of the two civilizations, and strive to make our country powerful and our people rich. We should once and for all help them raise their ideological consciousness and strengthen their party spirit.

2. We should further understand various policies of the party for rural reform and economic development, enhance our consciousness of implementing the policy, promote rural reform, and develop the favorable situation in rural areas.

3. We should conscientiously handle the cases of the few party members who have made serious mistakes in order to maintain the purity of the party ideologically and organizationally.

4. We should truly grasp the building of leading bodies. In the meantime, we should improve regular activities of all party organizations, perfect the democratic centralism of the party, strengthen its ideological and political work, recruit new party members, and expand and consolidate the party's ranks.

Question: How should we treat party rectification?

Answer: All party members should actively take part in party rectification. In particular, party-member cadres should take the lead in this regard. The correct attitude for party members to take toward party rectification is: 1) From beginning to end, they should take part in the activities of party rectification, and conscientiously study documents.

2) They should seriously examine their ideas and work, listen to their comrades' criticism with an open mind, and consciously correct their defects and mistakes. 3) Starting from the desire for unity, they should enthusiastically help other people correct their defects and mistakes. They should also dare to fight against unhealthy trends. 4) They should put forward their opinions and suggestions to party organizations on their own initiative in order to do well in consolidating party building.

RENMIN RIBAO STRESSES DEVELOPMENT OF TOURISM

[Editorial: "Tourism Is an Important Component of the National Economy"]

[Text] The State Council recently approved in principle the targets for the development of our country's tourism: By 1990, 5 million foreign tourists will be received a year and $3 billion earned; by 2000, 10 million tourists will be received a year and $10 billion earned. Attainment of these targets will lend great impetus to the development of our country's national economy. The tremendous development of our country's tourism needs the unified thinking of the departments concerned. A full understanding of the important position of the national economy is a prerequisite to concertedly supporting the development of tourism.

In the past, as a result of our country's long closing to the outside world, we knew little about the development of tourism in the world and took no heed of the economic and political significance of tourism. Many comrades held that tourism dealt with feasting and entertainment, and it would be better to build factories with the money earmarked for developing tourism, classifying the investment in tourism as nonproductive investment. It was not until the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee that close attention was paid to developing tourism, a series of tourist facilities were put up and a number of scenic spots opened to tourists, and some results scored in developing tourism. Generally speaking, however, our country's tourist industry is still very backward. Our incapacity for receiving tourists and poor service for tourists are extremely incompatible with our country's rich tourist resources. The tourist industry urgently needs to be developed. Tourism is an important component of the national economy. It is incomparably superior in many aspects to other sectors of the national economy.

-- Enjoying a quick turnover of investment and yielding high economic profits, tourism is a quick way to accumulate funds. Tourism is becoming one of the world's most important trades.

-- Earning foreign exchange at low costs and with low risk, tourism is an important source for earning foreign exchange without having to do foreign trade. Efforts should be made to earn foreign exchange in order to guarantee the four modernizations, to implement the opening up policy, and to support the work of using foreign capital and importing advanced technologies and equipment. To earn foreign exchange, it is certainly necessary, first of all, to do a good job of export trade. However, it is not so easy to earn foreign exchange through exports. Comparatively speaking, tourism can earn foreign exchange more easily and more quickly.

-- Tourism may push the development of other trades. The development of tourism requires the all-round capability of accommodating tourists in terms of food, hotels, transport, sightseeing, shopping, and merry-making. As a whole, tourism also needs investment.

However, the development of tourism will promote the prosperity of many other trades, such as civil aviation, railroads, highways, and water transport, posts and telecommunications, building construction, urban facilities, commerce, light and textile industries, handicrafts, and processing of farm and sideline products. This will doubtless lead to the all-round development of the national economy.

-- Tourism is a labor-intensive trade and requires a great number of personnel. According to the current situation of the development of international tourism, when a tourist department employs one additional person directly serving the tourists, there will be an increase of five people in society indirectly engaged in tourism. With the economic development of our country, labor productivity will be greatly increased and a great number of labor service personnel will turn to the tertiary industry. Tourism and other related trades will serve precisely as a "storage tank" for accommodating this labor force.

Judged from the political viewpoint, the development of tourism is also a bridge for promoting friendly exchanges between the Chinese people and the people of other countries. Through the "window" of tourism, people of other countries may understand China better, and the splendid Chinese culture may spread to foreign countries. It should be clearly understood that supporting tourism means supporting the development of the "two civilizations" and the accomplishment of the "four modernizations."

In view of the importance of tourism, the state has officially included the development of tourism in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. In drawing up the national economic plan in the past, the departments concerned did not regard tourism as a comprehensive project of systems engineering. They did not work out a plan for developing tourism as a trade. They did not pay attention to building fundamental urban facilities related to tourism and exploiting tourist resources. This hindered the development of tourism. In many key tourist cities at present, a shortage of water and power supply is felt, the means of transport are in great demand and, in particular, civil aviation transport capacity is insufficient, and planes are seriously overloaded. With tourism officially included in the national economic development plan, the state will give tourism essential support in the form of funds and policy. However, the state at present does not have ample funds and cannot spare much money for developing tourism. How to make good use of the limited investment is an important problem needing solution.

At present, various localities are vigorously developing tourism. This is a good thing. However, they must not ask the state for funds which they do not urgently need. Various localities and departments must bring their economic development plans in line with the development of tourism. Only when they work together concertedly can they implement their plans of developing tourism. At the same time, they must actively train management and service personnel for the tourist trade and improve their political and professional qualities. In conducting modern tourism, it will not suffice to stress only material conditions. Without competent managers, qualified personnel, and first-rate service, a tremendous development in tourism is not possible. In short, in developing tourism, it is imperative to adhere to the policy that the state, localities, departments, collectives, and individuals forge ahead together, emphasizing positive factors in various quarters.

With a long history, our country has many historic sites and scenic spots, studded with famous mountains and crossed by great rivers. It has unique natural landscapes and historic and cultural spots. Its tourist resources are the best in the world. Our country's firm open policy is another important guarantee for developing tourism. As long as we unify our thinking, advance in step, and concertedly support tourism, our country will become one of the countries with developed tourism by the end of this century.

PROSPECTS FOR ECONOMIC REFORM REVIEWED

HK100747 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 25 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by Xue Muqiao: "Retrospect and Prospects of the Reform of the Economic Structure in Our Country" -- originally published in January 1986 in issue No 1 of ZHONGGUO JINGJI TIZHI GAIGE [CHINA'S ECONOMIC STRUCTURAL REFORM] and reprinted here with some revisions by the author]

[Text] It has already been 7 years since the reform of our economic structure began at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. It has scored obvious achievements.

Our reform was first carried out in our rural areas where the economic structure is relatively simple. In order to give full play to peasants' initiative and fully tap rural production potential, we have bravely broken the old pattern of the "three levels of ownership with production teams as the basis" in our people's communes; basically implemented the contract production responsibility system geared to families; encouraged the specialized households that carry out diverse undertaking; developed town and township enterprises in diverse lines of trade; broken the monopoly of supply and marketing cooperatives in commerce; switched to diverse sectors, including public, collective, and individual sectors operating in the commercial sphere in order to meet the demand of the development of commodity production; and expanded commodity exchange in our market. We can say that our country's rural economic structural reform has already made a radical breakthrough and is continuing to vigorously develop and become more commercial, specialized, and scientific. Our tasks in the future are to do a good job of drawing up all-round economic development plans in light of local conditions, continue to consolidate the leadership position of the local and rural public-owned sector in the rural economy, and adopt methods of indirect regulation to continue to strengthen the state's planned management over the rural economy.

Owing to the complicated situation, our urban economic structural reform began relatively slowly. The focus of the reform is to expand the decision-making power of our state-owned enterprises, put an end to the practice of enterprises "eating out of the same big pot" of the state and of staff and workers "eating out of the same big pot" of their enterprises, and turn our enterprises into relatively independent commodity producers and operators that are managed independently and that shoulder sole responsibility for their profits and losses. This reform involves reforms in our planning, financial, banking, commercial, material circulation, price management, and wage systems, and therefore encounters relatively great difficulties. We have already done a large amount of work in reform in the above-mentioned fields, but all these reforms are still at a transitional stage and have not been basically completed. We have also failed to satisfactorily coordinate these reforms. Therefore, except for a very small number of enterprises in which reform experiments have been carried out and which are satisfactorily administered and managed, no radical breakthrough has yet been made. We have already somewhat relaxed our control over and invigorated our urban and rural collective enterprises, and the pace of development in these enterprises has exceeded by far that in our thousands of large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises. The latter are the backbone of our national economy.

If we continue to fail to entirely overcome the stagnation in their development, they will not only develop relatively slowly; it is also possible that their leadership position and backbone role in our national economy will be weakened. That is why the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee decided to switch the focus of our economic work from readjustment to reforms, switch the focus of reform from rural to urban areas, and regard as the focus of the reform the transformation of thousands of state-owned enterprises into economic entities full of vitality and vigor which can be managed independently.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, the pace of our urban economic structural reform has been quickened and a lively new situation has begun to emerge. The growth rate of our industrial production last year was among the best in the world, as was also rare in our country's history, except in the restoration period in the first 3 years after the founding of the People's Republic and in the 3 years of the "Great Leap Forward" in the late 1950's. (That "Great Leap Forward" has caused great retrogression in our industrial and agricultural production.) In spite of a relatively big rise in prices of goods, living standards have still improved substantially. The excessively quick development of our industrial production was caused by the runaway scale of our capital construction (which was caused by runaway bank credit) and by runaway wage funds which began in the fourth quarter of 1984. It has given rise to an unprecedented prosperity in our national economy. It may also be caused by an eased shortage of the supply of production means and the sufficient supply of consumer goods, a situation developed through years of readjustment (and which is an important condition for us in having a free hand in our structural reform), and thus creating difficulties for future structural reform. Therefore, since the first quarter of 1985, the State Council has called several meetings of provincial governors to resolutely overcome the runaway phenomena. By the third quarter of 1985, this began to achieve results. In light of the experience that we gained in 1981 in slamming the brakes on, last year we adopted the method of applying the brakes slowly and strove to keep the year's credit supply within the planned target. In the coming 2 years, we should do our best to prevent our capital construction from exceeding the scale of 1985 in order to prevent the emergence of another dislocation in the basically harmonized proportional relationship in our national economy and in order to avoid being forced to carry our further readjustment.

Looking back, we see that since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have always called for the reduction of our capital construction scale. In 1979, as work was already started in the construction projects, we failed to fulfill the set plan for investment reduction. In 1980, the planned investment was reduced, but as the financial and banking management systems were reformed, the extrabudgetary investment made by spending funds at enterprises' disposal and borrowing from banks greatly increased and exceeded the state's set plan. In the first quarter of 1981, we slammed on the brakes, and the growth rate of our industrial production dropped suddenly; there was a negative growth rate for our heavy industrial production. Although we began to gradually relax our control over bank credit in the second quarter, capital construction investment that year did not exceed the state plan and the growth rate of our industrial production only slightly exceeded the state planned target (4.5 percent), the lowest in the past 7 years. In slamming the brakes on that year, we paid dearly by having a slow industrial growth rate and a drop in our heavy industrial prodction. However, in exchange, we got a rough balance in the supply and demand of the means of production and a buyers' market for many kinds of consumer goods. This provided fine conditions for the construction and economic structural reform later. From 1982 to the third quarter of 1984, our capital construction scale again exceeded the planned target and both wages and bonuses rose relatively quickly, but as the growth rate of industrial and agricultural production greatly exceeded the state's planned targets, there was no great shortage of the supply of the means of production and a sufficient supply of commodities on our market. There was a surplus of grain, cotton cloth, and other consumer goods that are most indispensable to people's lives, and we had to market these goods abroad. Therefore, the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee pointed out that at that time we have the most favorable chance to speed the economic structural reform, and decided to speed the urban economic structural reform. This was a timely and entirely correct decision.

In the fourth quarter of 1984, we started to reform our bank credit and enterprise wage systems, expand locality and enterprise decision-making power over using bank credit to conduct construction, and expand our enterprises' decision-making power in wage reform.

As we lacked experience while enlivening our microeconomy, we failed to correspondingly strengthen our macroeconomic control. As a result, runaway bank credit and wage funds emerged. In the fourth quarter, bank credit rose sharply, by 164 percent, over the same period of 1983. The total wages for the fourth quarter of 1984 rose by over 30 percent over the same period in 1984, and the total bonuses rose by over 100 percent, exceeding by far the growth rate of industrial and agricultural production. The volume of currency issued rose sharply (this was partly due to the sharp increase in the purchases of agricultural products because of bumper harvests), and our foreign exchange reserve dropped. The CPC Central Committee and the State Council promptly discovered this problem and held several provincial governors' meetings to correct the "overheated" tendency in production and construction. Of course, it took time to reduce construction projects and it was difficult to reduce the wages that had already risen. Moreover, owing to the reform in our wage system, wages could not help but continue to rise last year. As a result, an excessive supply shortage in production means emerged last year and the prices of the portion of rolled steel and other production means sold by negotiation rose sharply. Although there was no shortage of consumer goods, as purchasing power rose too quickly, there were relatively large increases in commodity prices on our markets, and the quality of certain products dropped because they sold too well. In order to solve these problems, in addition to strengthening market control, the fundamental method is to control the excessive expansion of purchasing power (consumption funds). In the coming 2 years, we should regard strengthening our macroeconomic control as the focus of our reform. As we strengthen our macroeconomic control, we will continue to enliven our microeconomy (in particular the management of our thousands of large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises).

Some comrades view new problems with old ideas and think that over the past year we have set overly ambitious reform requirements. They regard the rise in the prices of the means of production as the consequence of the implementation of negotiated purchases and sales policy and uphold the restoration of the system of centralized distribution of production means. Our experience in the past over 30 years has repeatedly told us that the excessive scale of capital production is the fundamental cause for the supply shortage of production means. In the past we relied on financial allocation for our investment in capital construction. Under such circumstances it was relatively easy to centralize the distribution of means of production (but we all know that various defects have still emerged). Now, the investment in the capital construction projects relying on financial allocation within the budget only accounts for one-third of our total capital construction investment. The extrabudgetary capital construction relying on borrowing from banks and on funds in the hands of our enterprise accounts for two-thirds of the total investment. If we restore the previous practice of centralizing the distribution of all the means of production and eliminate the practice of negotiated purchases and sales of production means, then most of the extrabudgetary construction and the production of most local medium-sized and small factories will be paralyzed. This will cause inestimable losses.

Negotiated purchases and sales of coal began the earliest. Over the past 2 years, as the extrabudgetary coal supply increased, negotiated prices dropped. Now rolled steel is in the shortest supply. However, as people have vied with one another to purchase and store rolled steel, rolled steel is most seriously stockpiled at various levels. Centralized distribution cannot increase the supply of steel, but it may cause small local steel plants to reduce their production. Only by establishing rolled steel trade markets widely and unblocking the channels of its circulation can we attract stockpiled rolled steel back into the market, alleviate somewhat the supply situation of rolled steel, stop the continuous rise in negotiated prices, and even cause prices to fall a little. Of course, the fundamental method for reducing the negotiated prices of rolled steel is to reduce the scale of capital construction.

In 1981, we reduced the scale of our capital construction and substantially reduced steel imports in 1981 and 1982. At that time, the stock of steel in our warehouses also dropped substantially. Only under such conditions can the prices of rolled steel stabilize.

Last year the state took the initiative to decontrol food prices and implemented market mechanism regulation in the state commercial sector. This was a brave move in our structural reform. Many foreign specialists have pointed out that the question of whether we are able to readjust our irrational prices is a key to the success or failure of our country's economic structural reform. According to the experience gained by Eastern European countries in their reform, decontrolling food prices is risky business in price reform. As soon as food prices are decontrolled, they will rise by 100-300 percent and thus cause social turbulence. Our country started relatively early in this area. In 1979, it took the initiative to readjust food prices. This has played a certain alleviating role in reducing the rise in food prices when they were decontrolled this time. In both 1979 and 1985, the state paid subsidies to staff members and workers as compensation for the rise in food prices and raised the wages of staff and workers, thus preventing most urban people's living standards from being lowered because of the rise in food prices. The decontrol of prices has resulted in a substantial increase in the supply of food. In the coming few years, the supply will continue to increase, which is the most fundamental guarantee for improving living standards. As the prices of foodstuffs rose and as the sharp increase in purchasing power pushed up the prices of certain articles of daily use, the general price level rose by 9 percent in 1985. The prices even rose greatly in our large and medium-sized cities. This was rare in our country, but it was understandable. Many experienced foreign specialists hold that by smoothly decontrolling the prices of foodstuffs, we have scored a heartening achievement in our country's reform.

In 1985, in addition to price reform, our country carried out a reform in its wage system and thus relatively increased the wages of the staff and workers who were promoted to posts of great responsibility for many years but whose wages had not been correspondingly raised. This enabled our country's wage system to break away from many years of egalitarianism and begin to embark on an orbit of distribution according to labor. Because of runaway wage funds in 1984, we had to avoid an excessive expansion of wage funds in 1985. Therefore, like our price reform, wage reform was only a partial reform and could not be carried out to such an extent as to make our wage system entirely rational. The irrational price and wage systems are two "focuses of infection" in the body of our country's economy. They hinder the healthy development of our national economy. Last year we took heartening steps forward in these two areas and thus opened up ways for deepening future reform. The runaway bank credit and wage funds in 1984 created some obstacles to reform in these two areas in 1985, in particular to reform in our price management system; otherwise we would have been able to make even greater progress. In the coming 2 years, we should strive to improve our macroeconomic control, perfect the reform measures already adopted, enable our national economy to continue steady and harmonious development, and create even better conditions for deepening reform.

Over the past few years, we have not only enlivened our rural economy, but also invigorated our urban collective economy and a fairly large portion of our small state-owned enterprises. However, most of our thousands of large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises, the backbone of our national economy, are still encountering difficulties. Their growth rate has been substantially lower than that of our urban collective economy and even lower than that of our rural collective economy. It is a heartening fact that our urban and rural collective and individual economies are developing very quickly. This is an important reason for the economic prosperity in our urban and rural areas in the past few years.

However, if the development of our state-owned economy lags behind for a long time, it will be detrimental to consolidating its leadership position in our national economy. In order to solve this problem, we should unbind the hands and feet of our state-owned enterprises rather than binding the hands and feet of our collective and individual economies. In terms of funds, machinery, equipment, and technological and management personnel, our state-owned enterprises are far superior to the collective and individual economies. As long as we grant them the necessary decision-making power, they will have sufficient strength to compete with our collective and individual econmies and will be able to develop at roughly the same growth rate as that of the collective and individual economies. This will play an important role not only in harmonizing the development of our entire national economy, but also in consolidating the dominant role of our state-owned economy.

In order to further promote our country's all-round economic structural reform with the focus on urban reform, I think that it is necessary to solve the following problems:

First, we should continue to perfect reform in our planning, financial, banking, material, price, labor, and wage systems; coordinate these reforms; and ensure the smooth implementation of our plan to expand the decision-making power of our large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises. We have already transferred downward the power over planning, but we have failed to coordinate it with reform in our spheres. Since the implementation of the second stage of the substitution of tax payments for profit delivery, as we have not yet completed the readjustment of prices, we still must frequently apply the means of tax readjustment to reduce the irrational phenomena of unequal burdens. Therefore, it is still hard to avoid punishing faster workers. Heavy taxes are imposed on our state-owned enterprises, light taxes are imposed on our collective enterprises, in particular town and township enterprises, and no taxes are generally imposed on most of our individual economic sector. This is a major reason why our thousands of large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises are developing slowly. In regard to material management, we continue to stress administrative distribution and neglect market exchanges. There is still too great a disparity between planned allocation of prices and prices based on negotiated purchases and sales. We have not yet widely established means of production exchange markets to facilitate the circulation of materials and goods. Some investment funds, some foreign exchange, and most allocated materials and goods are still controlled by relevant central departments. When allowing enterprises greater decision-making power, the localities and enterprises do not dare receive the power transferred to them for fear that they will not get their necessary share of investment funds, foreign exchange, and allocated materials and goods. They are willing to continue reliance on the state and eat out of the same big pot. Because of the two runaway phenomena, we have had to slow the reform in our price and wage systems. This in turn hinders our nations economy from improving its administrative and managerial level in accordance with objective economic laws. It is necessary to strengthen our research into the above-mentioned problems and create conditions for gradually solving them.

Second, since we began enlivening our microeconomy, we have failed to correspondingly strengthen our macroeconomic control, thanks to our lack of experience. In the past, we exercised our macroeconomic control mainly through planning and fiscal policies. But since the implementation of the structural reform, we have relied on bank loans and funds in the hands of localities and enterprises (which should also be spent through the banks) for two-thirds of the investment in our fixed assets. Therefore, our banks have become the most important means of macroeconomic control. We have established a central bank in order to control the volume of currency issuance and the supply of bank credit and in order to prevent inflation. As our central bank is not yet perfect, in the fourth quarter of 1984 various specialized banks vied with one another to expand credit supply. This credit was mainly supplied to fund capital construction.

In 1985, we began to tighten credit and thus caused a lack of floating funds and difficulties to many enterprises. Therefore, we should not adopt the method of slamming the brakes on. While strictly controlling the investment in fixed assets, we should continue to ensure the normal operation of our industrial and agricultural production and normal commodity circulation. The central authorities have called on us to continue strict control of the scale of capital construction in the coming 2 years and also to appropriately control the growth of consumption funds in order to avoid the reemergence of a dislocation of the proportional relations of our national economy. This is imperative. We must strive to improve and perfect the means and methods of macroeconomic control.

The 12th National CPC Congress has introduced the magnificent goal of quadrupling our industrial and agricultural production in 20 years and pointed out that during the first 10 years, the growth rate should be a little lower in order to satisfactorily lay a foundation for economic reinvigoration in the latter 10 years. During the first 4 years, the growth rate of our industrial and agricultural production was already at least 8 percent, with an industrial growth rate greater than 10 percent. This was substantially higher than the growth rate (7 percent) required by quadrupling in 20 years. Because of the macroeconomic runaway phenomena, in the first three quarters of 1985 industrial production rose by over 20 percent. The town and township industry in southeastern coastal areas rose by 30-50 percent in 1984 and by an even greater percentage in 1985. This made the eastern areas where economic development was relatively slow feel uneasy and want to compete for a higher growth rate with eastern areas. This "overheated" development cannot last long. We should gradually reduce the "excessively high growth rate" to the normal level.

Third, if we take a deeper view, we should also point out that our economic management cadres (including central, local, and enterprise management cadres) still have inadequate quality and still fail to meet implementation demands of the two basic state policies of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. It is entirely understandable that many localities, departments, and enterprises demand quicker development in their economy. However, on the whole, this will cause the total demand to exceed the total supply. As a result, it is impossible to realize this subjective desire and will moreover give rise to a certain degree of confusion in our economic order. We should carry out widespread propaganda and education about this in the future. In the past, many leading cadres in our large and medium-sized enterprises were used to "eating out of the same big pot" and were unwilling to undergo the risk of blazing new trails. Now they have been replaced by a number of young cadres who have greater courage to explore the way. However, it is still possible for some of the young cadres to act rashly and blindly because of their lack of experience and thus cause losses to the state. As a result, practicing the idea of "enterprises shouldering sole responsibility for their profits and losses" will in fact end up in enterprises shouldering responsibility only for their profits but not for their losses. In addition, since they were granted decision-making power, some cadres have not striven to reform the internal administration and management of their enterprises or open up markets for their products abroad, but have taken advantage of the loopholes in our financial system, made private profits at the expense of public interests, or indiscriminately increased prices to harm consumer interests. Therefore, from a long term point of view, in order to complete the economic structural reform, we must strive to improve the quality of our economic cadres at all levels. Of course, we cannot achieve this within a couple of years. However, we should not stop making progress because of this. While stepping up the selection and training of our cadres, we should allow them to learn to swim in the great oceans. Our leading organs should give them correct guidance in a timely manner.

It is inevitable that an all-round reform in our economic structure will encounter many difficulties, but a small number of comrades doubt the reform measures in the past year and a small number of comrades even think that our reform has been a failure.

Our country's current economic situation has been much discussed abroad, and generally speaking, foreigners are relatively optimistic about our reform. In early September 1985, the Chinese Economic Structural Reform Research Institute, the China Academy of Sciences, and the World Bank cooperated with one another to invite economists and economic specialists from Western countries and Eastern European countries to hold an "international symposium on macroeconomic management" on board the yacht Bashan, along the Three Gorges of the Chang Jiang. Before the symposium, Premier Zhao Ziyang kindly met specialists and scholars from various countries and very frankly briefed them on the achievements scored and difficulties encountered in our country's economic structural reform, thus providing a good beginning for the symposium. During the week of discussions, all the scholars and specialists from various countries spoke highly of our country's reform achievements and unaminously held that it was to certain extent unavoidable for the recently emerging economic difficulties to occur. Almost all countries have encountered such difficulties at home during the periods of their major reform. They pointed out that in the economy of a socialist economy, there is always a tendency of "overheated" development and at all levels of the economy of the country there is an "investment hunger." This tendency is often aggravated by the excessively high growth targets formulated in its plan. As a result, it often pushes up inflation and causes a shortage of materials and goods and an imbalance in economic growth. In handling the current situation, we should see the fundamental cause for the "overheated" development. Some administrative measures are indispensable in the short run, but we should take care not to let them hinder the progress that will enable us to radically solve the problems.

In spite of their different experiences and understanding, the 10 scholars from countries of different social systems, all people of authority in their countries and even in the world, held basically identical opinions on the economic problems that China is faced with at present. This can be regarded as a most noteworthy phenomenon in this discussion. The scholars from Eastern European socialist countries frankly admitted that they had encountered even more serious difficulties than ours in their reform, but difficulties have not wavered their resolution to carry on with reform. Except for the United States, all Western countries encountered serious economic difficulties after World War II. At that time, there was a materials and goods shortage, and they also adopted administrative methods of control such as supplying goods by rationing and paying subsidies. Therefore, they have personally experienced the difficulties that may emerge when such administrative measures are abolished.

The scholars from various countries made many valuable suggestions concerning our country's macroeconomic management, financial policies, wage control, money and credit control, financial market, and so on. These suggestions are worth our reference. This symposium strengthened the confidence in our country's structural reform among attending Chinese scholars; it may very well have strengthened the confidence of scholars from various countries in China's structural reform.

The path is arduous, but the prospects are bright. We will surely be able to achieve a victory of historic significance in the world. This is our conclusion.

LIAOWANG OUTLINES MAJOR ECONOMIC TASKS FOR 1986

HK110433 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 4, 27 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Lu Zhongyun: "The principal Tasks of Economic Work for This Year"]

[Text] This reporter has learned the following from the national economic work conference.

According to the arrangement of the CPC Central Committee and State Council and the principle of "consolidation, digestion, supplementation, and improvement," our country's economic goals for this year are: to improve our macroeconomic control, adopt appropriate policies of relaxation in the light of different conditions in different areas, satisfactorily arrange production, and ensure the continuous, sustained, stable, and harmonious development of our national economy. Following are the five major aspects of this work:

1. Persist in carrying out reform and further invigorate our enterprises.

Invigorating our enterprises is a major step in expanding the state's financial resources, increasing its strength, stabilizing the economy, and harmonizing development. Major indicators for the invigoration of enterprises are: satisfactory economic results and large contributions to the state; fine product quality, low consumption, a relatively large contribution by technology; and the production of marketable products that meet demand in the market; an ability to undertake self-transformation and development and to reserve strength; adherence to socialist orientation, a correct work style, good prevailing practices in factories; and a corresponding improvement in the livelihood of staff and workers based on the development of production.

From the point of view of the whole country, only a small number of enterprises have actually been invigorated thus far. We should continue to implement the State Council's "provisional regulations on certain questions concerning invigorating large and medium-sized state-owned enterprises," and further enliven our large and medium-sized enterprises. The State Council has decided that this year we should appropriately reduce the enterprise readjustment tax and increase the rate of depreciation. The increased depreciation funds are to be spent mainly in enterprise technological transformation and should not be used to increase consumption funds. We should firmly put an end to the incorrect practice of indiscriminately apportioning expenses to, imposing charges on, and fining enterprises. In the future, whenever an area or department issues a mandatory planned production target to an enterprise, it should correspondingly provide the major raw materials, energy, and transport facilities needed.

2. Satisfactorily organize production and circulation.

In the future, we should continue to satisfactorily handle relationships between growth rate and economic results, output and quality, production and market, and domestic sales and exports. This should be done around the central task of improving our economic results. There should be a gradual process of alleviation for our country's economy in order to switch from an excessively high growth rate to a normal growth rate. Under the precondition of continuing to maintain our production growth rates and achieving a coordinated increase in tax payments, profits and financial revenue, all areas and departments should organize their production and set their growth rate in the manner of seeking truth from facts, taking into consideration both state plans and actual conditions in their areas and departments.

Over the past few years, our urban and rural purchasing power has risen relatively sharply. There has been a relatively great disparity between the volume of commodities that we are able to supply and our social purchasing power. This year we should adopt diverse measures to solve contradictions between supply and demand. Our industry should vigorously increase production of marketable consumer goods for daily use, do its best to develop more high-grade durable consumer goods of fine quality and well-known brands and pay particular attention to the production of small commodities. Our agriculture should satisfactorily grasp the production of meat, eggs, poultry, vegetables, and other foodstuffs in order to satisfy urban demand.

Our electric power, petroleum, and coal industries should strive to tap their potential, increase their production capacity, and further ease the energy shortage in our country. We should step up our production of iron, steel, nonferrous metals, chemicals, building materials, and other raw materials. In accordance with the principle of "making all-round arrangements, taking into consideration both passenger and cargo transport and satisfying the demand of key projects while not neglecting normal demands," our communications and transport industry should conscientiously develop coordinated transport, container transport, heavy-load train transport, and lighter transport and fulfill its passenger and cargo transport tasks in an all-round manner.

3. Continue to satisfactorily do work related to the technological progress of our enterprises.

In carrying out technological transformation, we should focus on our large and medium-sized enterprises, the backbone enterprises that play an exemplary and leading role in the technological progress of their lines of industry, and the enterprises that undertake export tasks. In the coming 5 years, we should strive to gradually carry out technological transformation in more than 50 percent of our large and medium-sized enterprises. This will be a major step bearing on our reserve strength for economic development in the nineties.

We should complete on time the technological transformation projects that we have already decided to implement and obtain a return on the investment as soon as possible. We should satisfactorily grasp new products, regard them as a leading factor, and promote the substitution of a new generation of products through the development of technology by developing technology in production processes and popularizing the application of new technology. In light of our capacity to handle foreign payments, we should continue to do a good job of importing advanced technology and key equipment, switch our focus to assimilating, developing, and popularizing imported technology and hasten the process of substituting domestic products for exports.

4. Strengthen enterprise management.

We should conduct all-round quality control and strive to make it truly effective. We should strive to reduce our consumption of energy and raw materials, establish modern management in a planned and systematic manner, impose technological, labor, financial, and economic discipline, and do a good job in prodcution safety and labor and environmental protection. We should continue to grasp the work of switching from losses to profits, eliminate losses caused by poor management, and pay attention to applying legal means in managing our economy.

5. Persist in simultaneously grasping the construction of the two civilizations and improve the quality of our contingent of staff and workers.

In order to build a revolutionary modern contingent of staff and workers, we should adhere to the principle of giving priority to ideological work, strengthen our ideological and political work, and earnestly solve actual work and living problems of our staff and workers. We should also do a good job of training staff and workers in the light of actual needs.

Starting this year, we shall spend about 3 years training by rotation members of leading groups in our large and medium-sized enterprises. We should continue to satisfactorily grasp the rotation training of the directors of economic committees of our various provinces, regions, and municipalities and of our major industrial cities.

We should persist to the bitter end in conducting unified examination of our factory directors (managers) and step up the training of the chief engineers, chief economists, chief accountants and party committee secretaries of our large and medium-sized enterprises. At the same time, we should do a good job of providing technological and vocational training for staff and workers with clear aims and gradually restore and perfect the promotion systems for technicians and workers, including unified examination for the latter.

STANDARDS FOR DRAFTING ECONOMIC LAWS OUTLINED

HK120125 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 4, 27 Jan 86 pp 9-10

[Article by Wang Zhengming, responsible person of the General Office of the Economic Law and Regulations Research Center under the State Council and secretary general of China Economic Law Research Society: "China is Drafting an Economic Legislative Program During the Seventh 5-Year Plan"]

[Text] The CPC Central Committee proposal for the Seventh 5-Year Plan for national economic and social development explicitly points out that we should strive to establish a comparatively complete economic legislative system during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

The Economic Law and Regulations Research Center under the State Council is organizing experts of the relevant fields and cadres in charge of economic legislation to study the problem of drafting the economic legislative "program" during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. At present, the state is gradually turning direct control over economic management into indirect control. Such a "program" aimed at establishing a comparatively complete economic system will lay down more principles governing economic relations and economic activities in legal terms so that various economic activities will be based on law. In so doing, law and regulations will become important means for regulating economic relations and activities. This will also ensure the smooth progress of economic structural reform during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the successful accomplishment of the economic development targets for the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

At present, a method of integrating the views of leaders with the opinion of the masses is being adopted in the process of drafting such an economic legislative "program." On the basis of widely carrying forward democracy and pooling the wisdom of the masses, people are encouraged to repeatedly discuss and amend the draft. The third draft has now been completed. The draft "program" emphasizes the following three aspects:

Promoting and Ensuring a Profound Development of the Economic Structural Reform

Economic laws and regulations are important tools used by the state to lead the reform and ensure its smooth progress. Though enacting relevant laws and regulations, the state will make clear which kinds of work are allowed and protected by the law, and which kinds of work are prohibited and should be punished according to the law. Due to the normal functions of the law and regulations, people will consciously carry out various kinds of economic activities in accordance with the requirements of the state. On a macroeconomic level, this will ensure the success of management and administration, and microeconomically guarantee the achievements in opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy. In so doing, reform will progress in an orderly way.

Various departments and localities have put forward many proposals on legislation in this regard.

For example, as far as agriculture is concerned, during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should continue to improve and develop management methods such as household contract responsibility system according to output, and others, and expand various kinds of cooperative and joint business operations. We should promote the rationalization of rural production setups, and maintain the steady increase of grain output. We should encourage peasants to run town and township enterprises. We should promote the continuous enhancement of the level of agricultural production technology and economic results. We should increase the supply of chemical fertilizer, farm chemicals, and agricultural machinery. We should also do well in water and soil conservation, the improvement of agricultural ecological environment, and so on. To this end, we should study the problems of enacting regulations on the rural contract responsibility system according to output, regulations on agricultural contracts, law on town and township enterprises, and regulations on the rural cooperative economic organizations, agricultural mechanization. administration of farm chemicals, administration of fertilizer, agricultural enterprises (farms) grain law, the protection of cultivated land, the development, administration, and protection of the mountain regions, the administration of the fodder industry, and so on.

As far as industrial enterprises are concerned, during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan we should take both internal and external measures to invigorate enterprises, large and medium-sized enterprises in particular, and further streamline administrative organizations and delegate power. We should gradually improve the tax system to create relatively fair conditions for competition among various kinds of enterprises. We should improve various kinds of internal responsibility systems in enterprises. We should strengthen technical reform in existing enterprises and equip various national economic departments with advanced technology and facilities. Some small-scale enterprises under ownership by the whole people can be transferred to the collectives or individuals through contracting or leasing. For this reason, it is necessary to study the problem of enacting the law on state-operated industrial enterprises, the law on enterprise bankruptcy, and regulations on the economic responsibility system inside enterprises, the administration of trades and services, administration of public bidding, transferring small-scale enterprises under ownership by the whole people to the collectives or individuals based on leasing or contracting, technical reform of enterprises, awarding technical progress of enterprises, awarding manufacturing of new products, and so on.

With regard to the planning system reform, we should consciously use the law governing planned and proportional development and the law of value in order to keep in line with the requirement of gradually working out a completely new planning and administrative system during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We should also study the problem of enacting regulations on mandatory planning, regulations on guidance planning, the law on investment in fixed assets, and so on.

With regard to gradually improving the socialist planned commodity market system, during the Seventh 5-Year Plan we should not only continue to expand and further enliven the consumer goods market, but also further relax and do well in promoting a market for means of production. In the meantime, we should gradually open up and develop the capital and technology markets to exert the pressure of the market competition on enterprises. We should improve the socialist planned commodity market, and give play to the role of competition in selecting the best and eliminating the worst, and the role of various economic levers. In this connection, we should amend regulations on the administration of the industrial goods and means of production markets, and study the problem of enacting law on prohibiting illegal transactions, law on protecting the interests of consumers, on the responsibility of manufacturing products, regulations on the administration of the technology market, and so on.

Promote and Further Ensure the Implementation of the Policy of Opening Up to the Outside World

During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should further implement the policy of opening up to the outside world. In accordance with the principle of independence, equality, and mutual benefit, we should strengthen and develop economic and trade contacts and technical exchanges with foreign countries, actively make use of foreign capital and import advanced technology. We need to enact a number of laws and regulations in this regard in order to promote and ensure further implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world.

For example, with regard to economic and trade relations with foreign countries, during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should actively open up new markets and establish and expand trade contacts with various countries in the world. We should actively organize and expand sources of goods for export and establish various kinds of export-oriented commodity bases. In this connection, we should study the problems of enacting law on foreign trade, law on inspecting and examining import and export commodities, and the issues of amending the regulations on the administration of compensation trade, and regulations on the administration of processing on order.

With regard to the import of foreign capital, we should welcome foreign firms to China to run Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperative enterprises and wholly foreign-owned enterprises, especially those technology-intensive enterprises and export-oriented enterprises which can earn foreign exchange. We should exert more effort to make use of foreign capital in a balanced and systematic way, guide the correct use of foreign capital, and create a still better investment environment for foreign investors. For this reason, we should firmly grasp the work of enacting law on Sino-foreign cooperation in running enterprises, law on foreign-owned enterprises, and regulations on material supply and labor administration of Sino-foreign joint ventures and foreign-owned enterprises.

As far as technical exchanges are concerned, during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan we should continue to actively import foreign advanced technology, strengthen macroeconomic guidance and administration of the import of technology and do well in absorbing imported foreign technology. We should avoid blind or overlapping import of foreign technology, and change the situation where the import of foreign technology is out of step with research work and actual development at home. We should also promote exporting our technology. In this connection, we should study the problems of enacting administrative regulations on importing foreign advanced technology, administrative regulations on the import of intellectual resources, administrative regulations on the export of technology, and so on.

With regard to doing well in administering forward regions for opening up to the outside world, during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan special economic zones, and cities and regions opening up to the outside world should readjust their industrial set-ups in accordance with the needs of export so that more commodities will be exported to the international market. We should do well in the construction and development of these areas. We should study the issue of enacting the law on special economic zones, regulations on the regions for economic and technical development, and so on.

Support and Speed the Development of Some Key Projects Decided by the State

Economic law is a fundamental law. It directly governs the economic base and is an effective means for promoting the development of productive forces.

To ensure priority and rapid development of the key projects during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, it is necessary to enact laws on vigorously developing and supporting these projects.

For example, as far as the development of the consumer goods industry concerned, it is necessary for us to study the work of enacting regulations on supporting the food industry, clothing industry, and durable goods industry, because they are key industries which bring along the development of the production of consumer goods industry as a whole.

With regard to the development of energy, communications, and raw and semifinished materials industries, we should arouse the enthusiasm of the departments concerned in developing these industries. We should study the issues of enacting the new regulations on the development and utilization of energy resources, developing products which can conserve energy, promoting electric power industry, promoting automobile industry, railway law, aviation law, highway law, and so on.

With regard to the development of tertiary industry, we should study the issues of enacting regulations on promoting information services, commercial law, and regulations on supporting the development of commerce and service trades in the regions inhabited by minority nationalities.

As far as technical progress in concerned, we should study the issues of enacting regulations on promoting the development of the integrated circuit industry, and the computer industry, regulations on the development of astronautics technology, and so on.

Apart from the legislation on the three main aspects mentioned above, we should enact relevant laws and regulations governing important economic regulating means such as credits, price, tax and so on, as well as important supervisory means including auditing, industrial and business administration, statistics, measuring, standardization, and so on. In so doing, we will ensure that these economic regulatory and supervisory means will play their effective roles.

During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, apart from strengthening the work of economic legislation, we should also grasp well the work of popularizing legal knowledge, strengthen the implementation of economic law, administer well various links such as judicature, supervision, feedback, research, and so on. We should establish a relevant comprehensive system. We should strengthen the work of examining the results of enforcing the laws and regulations, follow the recent trends of development, and promptly analyze and study the information and feedback. Therefore, noted scientist Qian Xuesen's idea of establishing a systematic Chinese legal system based on the systems, control, and information theories is completely correct.

HISTORY OF LEARNING FOREIGN SKILLS DISCUSSED

HK120935 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 31 Jan 86 p 5

[Article by Xia Dongyuan: "On 'Learning Foreigners' Skills'"]

[Text] The Change From Opposing "Learning Foreigners Skills To Invigorate China" to "Learning Foreigners Skills"

"Learning foreigners skills" originated from Wei Yuan's statement "Learning the strong points of foreigners skills with an aim to check the foreigners." This slogan was first proposed through political and military practice in the course of the Opium War when resisting British invasion.

On the eve of the Opium War, the emperor and ministers of the Qing Dynasty were used to presenting themselves as the greatest in the world. They resolutely opposed "learning foreigners skills to invigorate China," and always held that the Chinese should be an "example" for "foreigners" to follow. Should anyone want to "learn foreigners skills," that would be regarded as treason and heresy. During the Opium War, foreign rifles and guns dealt heavy blows to the archaically equipped Chinese Army. This caused Lin Zexu, who fought at the front and was a rather enlightened man, to come to see that the main causes of their defeat were the "poor weapons" and the "lack of skills" of the Chinese Army. In order to conquer the enemy, it was imperative to acquire "good weapons" and "skillfulness" apart from "boldness and unity." He believed that if the Chinese had acquired munitions on a par with the foreigners, "there would not be any problems in overcoming the enemy."

Thus progressive politicians and thinkers such as Lin Zexu and Wei Yuan, gradually formed the concept: In order to "check" the foreigners, it was imperative to rapidly catch up with them in weaponry. The only way was to "learn foreigners skills," by learning from Western capitalist countries their advanced science and technology and military technology in particular. The change from closing the country to international intercourse, to the proposal of "learning foreigners skills" should be considered an important ideological one, in which progressive Chinese gave expression to their desire to change China's backwardness, and to change China's poverty and weakness into prosperity and power. Of course, people would welcome the idea of "checking the foreigners," but to "learn foreigners skills" to achieve that end would mean to violate the traditional, long-standing practice of closing the country, and the conceitedness of the Qing Dynasty. Such a concept was inevitably looked upon as departing from the classic and rebelling against orthodoxy and came under attack from all the stubbornly refused any international intercourse," holding themselves in high esteem while looking down upon others. However, learning the advanced science and technology of foreign countries in order to change the backward features of China was, after all, an irresistible trend of historical development. An ideological trend of learning foreign knowledge gradually took shape in Chinese society.

"Sizhouzhi" [0934 1558 1807], edited and translated into Chinese by Lin Zexu in 1840 and "Haiguo Tuzhi" [3189 0948 0956 1897], written by Wei Yuan in 1842 were representative of enlightened works during this ideological trend. In both their books, the idea of "learning foreigners skills" was stressed. Wei Yuan, in particular, even assumed: it is necessary to import western technical equipment, and to build shipyards. While building warships, merchant ships should constantly be built. It is necessary to build ordnance factories and, apart from manufacturing munitions, equipment for civilian use should also be manufactured. At the same time, merchants should be encouraged to make investments in building factories to produce industrial goods. If Wei Yuan's tentative ideas had been put into practice, not only would the enemy have been overcome on the battlefields, but competition with foreigners would also have been carried out on the world markets.

In the wake of "Sizhouzhi" and "Haigou Tuzhi," works on foreign affairs and western capitalism kept emerging, for example, Liang Tingtong's "Haiguo Sishou" [3189 0948 0934 6141] written in 1844, Yao Ying's "Kangyou Jixing" [1660 ---- 4764 5887] written in 1986, Xu Jishe's "Yinghuan Zhilue" [3467 1403 1807 3970] written in 1848, and, a little later, Xia Xie's "Zhongxi Jishi" [0022 6007 4764 4764 0057]. These books cover a rather wide scope, such as social custom, political systems, culture and education, but focus mainly on introducing western technologies, and stress that China should hurry to learn them. That China must change and must "learn foreigners skills," was the conclusion. However, it was not until the rise of the Westernization Movement in the early 1860s that such an understanding and conclusion came to be put into practice.

It was then that the entrepreneurs of the Westernization movement began to build industrial enterprises for military and civilian use with imported technological equipment, such as Jiangnan manufacturing bureau and Fujian shipyard, as well as other industrial enterprises such as steamship, telegram, textiles and mining. In the course of the Westernization movement, the Westernization school felt deeply that through practice in developing modern industry, nothing would be accomplished without iron and steel.

Therefore, in the early 1890s, apart from a new-type converter built in the steel workshop under the Jiangnan manufacturing bureau, an iron and steel combine industry, with Hanyang iron works as the center, engaged in coal and iron mining and iron smelting, the first of its kind in Asia, was initiated at the same time. (It was not until 1897 that Japan set up its first iron workship) Between 1893 and 1904, when the former was put into production, the highest annual output was 2,059 tons, and the lowest annual output was 10 tons. While the latter had a production capacity of 30,000 tons, its actual annual output never exceeded 10,000 tons between 1893, when it was put into production and 1896, when it became civilian-run. The Westernization movement was the first modernization movement in modern Chinese history which promoted the creation and development of capitalism, and has been universally acknowledged by academic circles. Despite its successes in some respects, the Westernization movement did not fulfill the expected targets and therefore, generally speaking, it was a failure.

From Learning Western Skills to Learning From Japan's Experiences in Learning From the West

The tentative idea of "learning foreigners skills" inevitably leads to the pursuit of keeping abreast of Western advanced countries. That was the ideal Wei Yuan had dreamt of and mentioned in "Learning the Strong Points of Foreigners Skills" -- the "people's wisdom will become greater and greater with the atmosphere of opening up getting stronger, then people in the East will be on par with those in the West" ["Chou Hai, Chapter Three: A Debate," "Haiguo Tuzhi" Vol II]. Here, the "East" referred chiefly to China, but not restrictively. At least, countries such as Japan were included. When the idea of "learning foreigners skills" was on the agenda for being put into practice, there was also an upsurge of learning from Western advanced countries in Japan; the 1868 Meiji Restoration was a symbol of this. Practice has proven that in learning from the West, Japan had more marked results than China, the more so at the turn of the century. Therefore, some progressive Chinese thinkers and politicians with keen political insight further proposed the idea of learning from Japan.

What were the results of Japan's learning from the West? Apart from the fact of setting up a political assembly, somewhat resembling to the parliaments of Western capitalist countries, their economic system and the principles for learning science and technology were comparatively rational. Those people who cared for national affairs, such as Shen Yukuei, who was in charge of Zhongxi College, Shanghai and the newspaper WANGUO GONGBAO, noted the results of Japan's assemblage "for the discussion of important affairs," and showed admiration that "everything thrives in Japan, and the country has gradually become modernized:. Other thinkers and entrepeneurs of the modernization movement were trying to find the root causes of Japan's economic prosperity. Among them were some who made rather systematic and incisive observations; the most representative among them was Zheng Guanying, a patriotic thinker and enterprise manager. Based on his own experiences in running a modernized enterprise, Zheng believed that there were many relevant things in Japan's experiences.

First, the relationship between the authorities and the merchants. He said: "In studying Japan's conditions... it has followed the example of Western countries, trying hard to invigorate itself.

"The authorities have ordered their local officials to do their best to imitate the production of all foreign goods, and to encourage the merchants to collect funds in shares to build factories to manufacture them... the merchants have the initiative in their hands concerning all regulations, and they are protected by the authorities from interference. Thus full-scale reconstruction is under way." In short, this encouraged the merchants to collect funds in shares and to run the enterprises by themselves, while the authorities protected them, fulfilling the target of "following the example of Western countries." Second, the principle of "following the example of the West." Zheng Guangzhong made a comprehensive generalization. He said: "Japan has drawn every lesson from China in commercial affairs, while following the example of Western countries in everything. Japan has taken China as a negative example, while giving preference to the West. The Western countries have expended great efforts in research and experiments to accomplish their results in science and technology, and it was easy for Japan to copy them" ("Shangzhan," Vol III). For these reasons, Japan scored remarkable results in learning from the West.

In Zheng Guanying's opinion, if Japan had scored such marked results, why should China not "change its usual practice and learn foreigners skills as a temporary measures'? If we should learn from foreigners skills, discarding their shortcomings while adopting their strong points, it would be very easy to surpass them with China's vast territory, rich natural resources, large population, and tremendous wealth" (ibid.) At that time, the level of Japan's economic development was not much higher than China's. Zheng might have underestimated the difficulties by saying "it would be very easy to surpass them." However, it would not be too difficult to keep abreast of them. Zheng's reference to Japan, his advocation to learn from the Japanese, and the idea that "the Western countries have expended great efforts in research and experiments to accomplish their results in science and technology, and it was easy for Japan to copy them" is commendable. China might take the easy way of "copying" the West as did the Japanese. Of course, learning from Japan means learning chiefly from its experiences in scoring accomplishments when following the example of the West, but not "learning their skills."

Zheng Guanying's contemporaries and the progressive thinkers and politicians who came after him, such as Wang Tao, He Oi, and even those representatives of the 1898 reformists such as Kang Youwei and Liang Qichao of the modernization group, had all shared the concept of learning from Japan in "following the example of the West." Thus, an upsurge of going abroad to study in Japan gradually took place. The number of students going to Japan at the turn of the century was a s great as over 10,000. Sun Yat-sen expressed his view of "turning to learning foreigners skills" at a welcome meeting in his honor held by Chinese students studying in Tokyo, Japan, in 1905. He said: "The purpose of your coming to Japan is to absorb its civilization. However, Japanese civilization is not innate in itself. Japanese civilization was first taken from the Chinese. Later, Japan followed the example of the Western countries. If China is capable of applying its own civilization, it will not be surprising for it to surpass Japan" ("Minbao" issue No 1, pp 70-71). This is in unanimity with Zheng Guanying's statement, namely that of learning from Japan with an aim to "surpass Japan." That was both practical and feasible at that time.

The Wish of "Surpassing Them" Was Far From Being Fulfilled

"Surpassing them" has two implications. First, it refers to "learning from Japan," as in the statement of Zheng Guanying and Sun Yat-sen. Second, it refers to catching up with and surpassing Western capitalist countries. Japan at that time was more advanced than China, but was falling far behind Europe and the United States. "Surpassing Japan" was only the first step; the target was surpassing the West.

All the thinkers and politicians who were bent on invigorating the Chinese nation in modern Chinese history shared the same wish. Wei Yuan's dream that "people of the East will be on a par with those in the West" has served as a typical illustration for "catching up with the West." The explicit proposal of "learning foreigners skills" was first put forth by Feng Guifen. He said: Regarding foreigners skills, "First, we will learn from them, then we will be on a par with them, and lastly, we will surpass them," was that China abounded in intelligent people. Feng had a clear idea of the purpose of "learning foreigners skills," namely," using foreigners skills for the sake of resisting foreigners." This was in unanimity with Wei Yuan's view "we want to learn foreigners skills because they are strong. In other words, we must check the foreigners because they are strong."

The modernization school held the same view. Among them was Zuo Zhongtang, universally acknowledged by academic circles as a patriot despite his suppressing the people. When initiating the Fujian shipbuilding administrative bureau, he drew up a practical plan for "learning foreigners skills," and "surpassing the Westerners." The first step was imitation in production, order to gain technical expertise. According to him, "it is better to hire than to borrow, better to buy than to hire, and better to build on one's own than to buy." This is because either hiring or buying "would only help the moment's needs," while building one's own was a lasting principle. Zuo Zhongtang saw clearly that foreigners would often "be proud of themselves for their merits in comparison with our shortcomings, for what they have in comparison with what we have not." He believed that only by building on our own what we did not have would it be possible to change this situation. The second step was "surpassing Westerners" through creation. Zuo Zhongtang came to understand that imitation was like "holding an axe-handle to make the handle of another axe." One got nothing more than both axe-handles the same length. If one wanted to master the complete principles of production, one must master mathematics, and the knowledge of science and technology (quoted from "Collected Works of Zuo Wenxianggong, Letters" Vol 8 p 63). Only when we have a command of the knowledge of science and technology will it be possible for us to practice and to be able to create. And only with creation will it be possible for us to "surpass the foreigners." Therefore, as soon as the shipbuilding administrative bureau was set up, a shipbuilding administrative school was instituted, and people were sent abroad to study.

He said really: If we go on like this, "we can master what Westerners are capable of doing," and "practice makes perfect; who knows if we are to surpass the Westerners?" Zuo Zhongtang did have extraordinary foresight and intelligence on "learning foreigners skills." Regarding "surpassing the Westerners," if we say Feng Fuifen was the first to advocate it, Zuo Zhongtang was the first to attempt to put it into practice.

At the turn of the 20th century, "surpassing the Westerners" became the universal wish to advanced personalities, and Sun Yat-sen in particular. In his speech delivered to Japanese students studying in Tokyo on 13 August 1905, he said: "China is not only capable of surpassing Japan," and he believed that it would not be too difficult to "surpass" Europe and the United States based on his personal experiences traveling in those parts of the world. According to him: "In a decade or two, China will master all the civilizations of the West, and it is not entirely impossible to surpass them" ("Minbao" issue No 1 p 71).

At that time, it was not too difficult to "surpass" Japan, but to surpass Europe and the United States in a decade or two, would be impossible from an economic angle alone, not to mention the political factor; anyway it was a beautiful wish from Sun Yat-sen.

However, the history of the 110 years since the Opium War has demonstrated that the beautiful dream of advanced personalitis is far from being fulfilled. Regarding the West, the gap is too great for China "to be on a par with them," and it is even more remote to "surpass" them, while the gap between China and Japan has become wider and wider. What were the causes? There were many; basically, it was a failure in realizing reform of the social system, mainly the political system. On this issue, advanced personalities in modern Chinese history were aware of it. Wei Yuan and Liang Tingtong showed their admiration for the United States' democratic system saying that "it will pass on from one generation to another, doing no harm." Feng Guifen drew the comparison that "the ruling and the rules are not so separated; in this aspect, China is falling behind the foreigners." And Zheng Guanying made the strong demand that "it is imperative to set up a parliament if China is to become prosperous." Public opinion on this issue, brewed over several decades, led to the 1898 Reform Movement headed by Kang Youwei and Liang Qichao, aiming at implementation of a constitutional monarchy, but this movement lasted only 100 days and failed. It was followed by the revolution of 1911 led by Sun Yat-sen. Although that revolution overthrew the autocracy of the Qing Dynasty and founded a republic, the semicolonial and semifeudal social system did not change. Then, there were the wars of the warlords, the fascist rule of the KMT reactionaries, and the grave impedence to the development of productive forces of imperialism, feudalism and bureaucrat-capitalism. It was impossible to do a good job in "following the Westerners example," not to speak of "being on a par with them" and "surpassing them." Historically, this mission has fallen to the Marxists.

Led by the CPC, the Chinese people overthrew the three big mountains weighing on them and founded the PRC. Over the past 3 decades and more, China has made great developments in its economic construction and science and technology. Under the guidance of the party's correct line and principles, we are certainly able to gradually realize the magnificent target of socialist modernization.

OFFICIAL REVIEWS SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY REFORM

OW132122 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0804 GMT 13 Feb 86

[By reporter Zhang Jimin]

[Text] Beijing, 12 Feb (XINHUA) -- The first year of our comprehensive reform in the science and technology management system was 1985. How did we do in this year? A responsible person of the State Science and Technology Commission recently told this reporter that the practice over the past year shows we have already taken a major step forward in reforming the science and technology management system, that the reform's direction has been correct and its course wholesome, and that an unprecedentedly lively situation, in which the scientific and technological work is oriented to the economic construction, has emerged. He reviewed the following remarkable changes occurring in scientific and technological work as a result of the reform:

-- Technology markets are thriving across the country. Technological achievements are universally acknowledged by society and circulated as commodities. This has not only changed the old concept that belittled knowledge, but also facilitated the transformation of scientific research projects into production. As of the end of 1985, the total transactions in trading technological achievements stood at 1.77 billion yuan, and most of the deals were made between scientific research institutions and small and medium-sized enterprises or village and town enterprises.

-- Scientific research institutions have increased their own income while trying to provide more social benefit through transferring technologies and offering technological consultations. According to statistics, in 1985 there were 1,900 research institutions throughout the country engaged in technology development through contracts, constituting 40 percent of the independent scientific research institutions at and above the prefectural or city level, and topping the 1984 number by 27 percent. Among them, 360 were able to independently support their expenditures, doubling the number of those who did in 1984. A sample survey shows that scientific research institutions at and above the prefectural or city level throughout the country earned 900 million yuan through technology transfer, technological consultations, and development of new products last year. This figure, which is double that of 1984, constitutes 47 percent of the operational expenses appropriated by the state of these research institutional in 1985.

-- A large number of important scientific and technological achievements have received awards. Last year, a total of 10,476 projects were appraised as important scientific and technological achievements and given awards by all provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities, and ministries and commissions under the State Council, whereas during the first 4 years of the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, only an average of 5,631 projects with the same level of achievements recieved awards annually. Besides, the State Science and Technology Commission presented the state invention award of 185 scientific and technological research projects, and it approved and issued the state scientific and technological progress award to 1,772 projects last year. The direct benefits earned by these projects totalled 33.4 billion yuan.

-- Great headway has been made in combining scientific research with production. More and more scientific research institutions and production units have carried out technical co-management or formed all kinds of combinations of scientific research with production for the purpose of developing new technologies, thus promoting closer contacts between research and production units. As of the end of last year, there were 9,768 associations throughout the country that combined research with production, nearly quadrupling the figure of those in 1984. Among them, 778 were joined by research institutions affiliated to ministries and commissions under the State Council, and 8,990 by local scientific research institutions.

-- The movement of scientific and technological personnel has become more rational. According to surveys, as of the end of last year, research institutions of local departments [min kou 3046 0656] at and above the prefectural or city level released a total of 20,602 staff members and workers while absorbing 17,295 during the whole year. Although the net release was a small number of 3,307, the trend was heartening, as big cities released more and absorbed less, while countries, townships, and towns released less and absorbed more.

-- The average age of members of leading bodies of research institutions has become younger. Surveys indicate that 49.7 percent of the members of leading bodies of research institutes are in their 40's, and large numbers of young and middle-aged scientific and technical personnel have assumed leading posts in scientific research.

HU YAOBANG LAUDS PLA FOR DEVELOPING DACHEN DAO

OW131141 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0755 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Newsletter by XINHUA reporter Wu Dongfeng: "Dachen Dao and the People's Army"]

[Excerpts] Hangzhou, 13 Feb (XINHUA) -- On New Year's Eve, Wang Qichang, a resident of Dachen Dao, sobbed when he heard the voice of his sister, from whom he had been separated for 30 years, coming from the other side of the Pacific, the United States.

As he picked up the telephone, he might not have known that the People's Army had braved stormy waves and had worked a whole year to install a submarine cable connecting the island with the mainland.

Last year, a new generation of People's Army personnel threw themselves into construction projects for developing Dachen Dao. Last year, when word spread that preparations were under way to build a tidal power station, artillery troops immediately offered their observation records on tidal conditions; the model airplane squad sent in their hydrological survey data; and technicians of the infantry unit helped in a topographic survey.

Toward the end of December 1985, Comrade Hu Yaobang made an inspection tour of Dachen Dao. He said: The credit for the prosperity on Dachen Dao goes first to the PLA and second to the veterans of the land reclamation teams. The general secretary's words represent praise and encouragement for the commanders and fighters stationed on the island.

FUJIAN CONGRESS SESSION STRESSES LAND CONTROL

[Text] Indiscriminate occupation and abuse of lands has become a serious problem in our province, and strengthening land control is a task of great urgency. This important subject was discussed at the 17th Session of the 6th Fujian Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee.

Lin Guitang, director of the provincial Agricultural Department, said in his report to the session: By the end of 1984, the province had only 19,194,000 mu of cultivated area, a drop of 3,325,000 mu from 1956, a peak year in terms of cultivated area. This means that since 1957 the province's cultivated area has been reduced by 111,600 mu annually, which is equivalent to the cultivated area of a small county. By the end of 1984, the province's cultivated area was only 0.72 mu per capita, less than half of the national average and ranking second from the bottom in China. He said that the cultivated area was reduced partly because of lands requisitioned for necessary construction projects. However, a considerable part of the land has been indiscriminately occupied or used. Major forms of illegal occupation and wasting of lands are: illegal buying and selling of lands for extraordinary profits; occupying more land than requisitioned and allowed or requesting land without putting it to good use; using lands without prior requisition procedures; exceeding one's authority in approving land requisition or dispensing with requisition procedures altogether; and so forth.

After hearing Lin Guitang's report, members of the Standing Committee earnestly discussed land control in our province. The session pointed out that land occupation exists to a serious degree in our province. Leadership at all levels should pay serious attention to and solve this problem without delay. Our province has insufficient grain, so land protection is most important. We should make greater efforts to publicize the importance and urgency of land protection to arouse the attention of all of society. We should halt indiscriminate occupation and use of land as well as illegal buying and selling of land in the course of rectifying party work style and social conduct.

The session stressed: With regard to land control, we should currently pay special attention to solving the problem that laws are not observed or enforced. Selling or buying land violates the Constitution and law. This must not be treated as ordinary unhealthy tendencies are. Instead it should be dealt with in accordance with the law. Efforts should be made to perfect local land management regulations at an early date. At the same time, we should also adopt supplementary administrative, economic, and technical measures.

Members of the Standing Committee held that it is necessary to strengthen organizational leadership over this work. A unified land management organ should be set up at an early date to take charge of survey, development, utilization, planning, and management of land resources. We must change the situation in which authorities in many departments and at various levels have the right to approve land requisition but not one takes any responsibility when something goes wrong.

The session also contended that efforts should be made to raise the land utilization rate and to avoid requisitioning cultivated land as much as possible. Requisitioning land is an objective requirement for the development of various undertakings. However, we can improve planning and make careful calculations. In housing development, we should use hillsides or build high-rise apartments. Moreover, the various localities should also try to expand areas under cultivation and transform low-yielding lands.

LI PENG VISITS JIANGSU MICROELECTRONICS COMPANY

OW131411 Nanjing XINHUA RIBAO in Chinese 1 Feb 86 p 1

[By reporter Guo Zujin]

[Text] (XINHUA RIBAO report) The state has approved expansion of the Wuxi Microelectronics Research and Production Corporation and decided that a microelectronics industrial base should be built in Wuxi City during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, recently inspected this corporation. During his visit, he urged cadres, workers, scientists, and technicians to chart a new course for the development of China's electronics industry and strive to gradually achieve the goal of producing electronics parts domestically.

The Wuxi Microelectronics Research and Production Corporation was set up in June 1985 under the sponsorship of the Jiangnan Radio Equipment Plant and the Wuxi Microelectronics Research Center under the Ministry of Electronics Industry. Because of their technical resources, production equipment, and good geographical location, the corporation, in addition to producing calculators, communication apparatus, and consumer electronics goods, has achieved fairly good progress in carrying out technical research for the mass production of large integrated circuits. In accordance with the state's needs and the principle of importing, digesting, and developing foreign technology and bringing forth new ideas, the corporation is a complex for research, development, production, and education and consists of major semiconductor equipment plants and relevant institutes of higher education in Jiangsu. It hopes that, with the combined resources of electronics and associated industries in Jiangsu and Wuxi, all forms of cooperation can be organized to study and develop large or very large integrated circuits. The corporation has also decided that it will develop a number of new products that can be used in production and daily life and will strive to attain advanced world level in terms of the rate of finished products as well as the quality, reliability, and competitiveness of their products.

JIANGSU CUTS POPULATION GROWTH, ILLITERACY RATE

OW140812 Beijing XINHUA in English 0724 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 14 (XINHUA) -- The annual population growth in Jiangsu Province has fallen by 0.25 percent to 0.75 percent -- well below the national average -- over the past three years, according to HEALTH NEWS. And the province's illiteracy rate (the proportion of people over 12 years old who cannot read or write) has been lowered from 27.3 percent to 24.6 percent, said the newspaper, quoting Jiangsu Provincial Statistical Bureau figures.

China's overall population growth rate was 1.45 percent in 1981, and 31.9 percent of people over 12 were illiterate. Since then, the authorities have taken steps to cut both rates.

In Jiangsu, the proportions of people working in agriculture, industry and service trades are also changing quickly. The proportions in the three sectors were 56:32:12 last year compared with 66:25:9 in 1982 as a result of rapid economic growth and industrial readjustments.

Jiangsu Province has a population of more than 60 million people. Statisticians believe that population patters in Jiangsu might indicate national trends.

JIANGXI'S WAN SHAOFEN GREETS SPRING FESTIVAL

OW090809 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 8 Feb 86

[Spring Festival radio talks by Wan Shaofen, secretary of the Jiangxi Provincial CPC Committee: "Vigorously Accomplish the Goals of Struggle for 1986"]

[Excerpts] The 1986 Spring Festival has arrived. While bidding goodby to the old year and welcoming the new one, I would like, on behalf of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government, to extend my holdiay greetings to the province's workers, peasants, intellectuals, cadres, and PLA commanders and fighters who are working hard on the forefront; to the veteran comrades, retired cadres, families of servicemen and martyrs, and disabled revolutionary soldiers who have made positive contributions to the revolution; and to the Taiwan compatriots in our province, the family members of people who have gone to Taiwan, returned Overseas Chinese, families of Overseas Chinese, and the foreign experts and scholars and their families who have come to Jiangxi to help us. I would also like to extend my greetings to those comrades who are working at various posts during the holidays.

In the past year, our province, as the entire nation, has been both stable and united politically; our economy has achieved sustained, steady, and coordinated growth; our economic construction has taken a giant step forward; and our industrial and agricultural growth rates have for the first time slightly surpassed the national average.

These achievements were the fruits of party and government departments, military personnel, and the people of the entire province in resolutely implementing the party's line, principles, and policies; in persistently carrying out reform: and in uniting to work hard under the leadership of the party Central Committee. We are happy to see a sharp decline in the passive and pessimistic attitude among cadres and masses of underestimating their capabilities and thinking that Jiangxi can never catch up with other regions. We are also happy to see a vigorous strengthening of the attitude and viewpoint of loving Jiangxi and building and revitalizing Jiangxi, and that Jiangxi has great potential, prospects, and hopes. This is a valuable ideological foundation and a great spiritual force for revitalizing Jiangxi.

Jiangxi is endowed with rich natural resources, a glorious revolutionary tradition, some 34 million industrious and brave people, and a firm foundation, all of which have enabled us to fulfill our Sixth 5-Year Plan. In the next 5 years, we will accelerate our pace of construction.

Nineteen eighty-six is a year for laying the foundation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. We must continue to implement the guidelines of the eighth provincial conference of party delegates, and Comrade Hu Yaobang's general guiding ideology and principle of "one 'slightly higher' and two 'more bolds'" for our province. Our province's economic growth rate this year must continue to be a notch higher than the national average.

Our province's total industrial output and gross national product must increase 7 percent over the previous year. We must persist in reform and implement the eight-character policy of consolidation, digestion, supplementation, and development of various undertakings in our province.

Comrades, while promoting socialist material construction, we must also do a good job in promoting socialist spiritual construction, particularly in correcting our party style. We must resolutely put an end to and correct unhealthy tendencies within the party. Our party has confidence, determination, resources, and courage in correcting unhealthy tendencies. Since the National Conference of Party Delegates, the party Central Committee has issued a series of important documents and regulations. Party organizations, party members, and cadres must seriously study the important directives and talks of the party Central Committee and the leaders of the central organs, enhance their understanding, take positive action, and make concrete efforts in correcting unhealthy tendencies. We must advocate using one's authority to work for the good of all but must resolutely oppose the abuse of power to seek private gains. We must always put the interests of the party and the people above everything else, and firmly establish the concept of serving basic-level units and the masses. We must take the initiative in rendering high-quality and effective service to others. We must eliminate bureaucratic practices. Party organizations at all levels must do a good job in promoting education concerning the legal system and in inspecting the implementation of the legal system and discipline. We must dare to investigate and handle cases violating law and discipline, particularly major ones. It does not matter who is involved; we must never tolerate them. Everyone is equal before party discipline and state law.

Our party cadres, especially leading cadres and those of provincial-level organs, must set a good example in fostering new customs and habits, in handling matters impartially, and in improving party work style. I hope that all comrades inside and outside the party will boldly contribute to improving our party work style and social conduct.

Comrades, we must firmly carry out the party Central Committee's line, principles, and policies. We must further expand our achievements, rectify our shortcomings, keep in mind the interests of the whole, promote unity, upgrade work efficiency, and compete with one another in making contributions. We must carry forward the spirit of boldly overcoming difficulties and making sacrifices, carry forward our good work style and fine traditions, strive to accomplish our tasks for 1986, and work very hard to build a new Jiangxi that is economically, culturally, scientifically, and technologically developed.

Comrades, I call on those who wish our motherland to be strong and its people prosperous, and wish to invigorate Jiangxi, to display their talents to realize their ideals.

HUBEI RURAL BANKING SYSTEM BEING AUDITED

HK120926 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Text] Special auditing organs are being gradually set up and perfected in the province to standardize the management of the province's rural banking system.

Over the last few years, because of their failure to follow credit rules and regulations and to act according to the examination and approval limits, some agricultural banks and credit cooperatives have found it difficult to recover the excessive loans they extended. Some agricultural banks practiced fraud to varying degrees, illegally retained profits and used the profits that ought to have been handed over to the state for other purposes, ran their own independent businesses without authorization, wantonly distributed allowances both in cash and in kind, and carried out capital construction projects by abusing their power, thus expanding the scope of capital construction.

In order to rigorously enforce financial rules and regulations and to ensure the normal operation of the rural banking work, the provincial agricultural banks and credit cooperatives and their related agencies conscientiously reviewed both positive and negative experiences and began to set up special rural auditing organs. They also instituted and perfected the job responsibility system for auditing personnel and rules and regulations concerning joint meetings, reports, and the management of files of auditing work.

At present, agricultural banks at the provincial, prefectural, and county levels have set up 49 independent auditing organs with a staff of more than 1,900 auditing personnel.

We should do a good job in party rectification to bring along the building of the two civilizations and further consolidate and develop the excellent situation.

HEBEI ARTICLE ON PARTY MEMBERS' ERRONEOUS THOUGHTS

SK130702 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 28 Jan 86 p 3

[Article by contributing commentator: "Earnestly Remove the Inner Party Erroneous Thought of 'Distant Hope' and 'Practical Benefit'"]

[Text] At present, our party has found a way, in both theory and practice, through which communism can be realized in China. The way is to build socialism reflecting Chinese characteristics, with the overwhelming majority of party members able to exert all-out efforts to wage struggles by integrating theory with practice. However, there are few comrades whose communist ideals have weakened. The concrete indicators in this regard are as follows: 1) One is the thought of the so-called "distant hope" in which some have regarded communism as "unattainable" and "distant fancy" and have not known "when it can be realized." 2) The other is the thought of "practical benefit" in which some have said that "all ideals should be motivated interest," and that "all futures and plans should be aimed at making money." Some have even sought personal material interest unscrupulously by harming others and the public interest to benefit themselves, and have pursued personal gain by violating the law and discipline and bringing damage to personal and national prestige. The appearance of such a state of affairs is not accidental. Fundamentally speaking, it represents the reflections of some comrades who have been weak in theoretical preparations for the current historic period and not been able to withstand the ideological change cropping up in enforcing the open policy.

The two indicators of the weak theoretical preparations are as follows: 1) Some have not correctly understood the socialist society, and 2) they also have not correctly discerned the capitalist society. Following the victory in the democratic revolution, our party immediately led the people to carry out socialist revolution and construction. Therefore, a number of party members did not have much time to study the theories concerning socialist construction and incurred serious prejudices in understanding socialism and communism. Some have even harbored the native idea that all work and things will be ideal and smooth if we reach socialist society, and the beautiful heaven of communism can be realized without the least effort. Therefore, when our party has incurred setbacks and faults, particularly the serious setback of the "Great Cultural Revolution," these comrades have been seriously criticized ideologically because they thought that the Communist Party and the socialist society can incur such problems. As a result, they have doubted the realization of communist ideals. On the other hand, we knew so little in the past about the actual situation of the capitalist world. Some comrades learned about the corrosive dying imperialism only by reading books on Marxism and Leninism. As soon as the open policy was enforced a few years ago, and as soon as they discovered that the capitalist world is far different from what they have known, and can still make progress, they immediately started to doubt the scientific nature of communist theories. The two indicators of doubt mentioned above fully reflect the seriously poor approach to theories on the part of these comrades.

In eliminating the thought of "distant hope" in order to foster the firm ideals of communism, efforts should be made to earnestly study Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought and to foster the firm world outlook of dialectical and historical materialism. By integrating theories with practice, we should be truly clear about the objective law in which social development toward communism is independent of man's will. Communism is our longer-term target, and, judging from the current development of socialism, it is by no means distant and indistinct. Only by dealing with this ideological problem can we constantly maintain a firm confidence in communism under any difficult circumstance and setback, and can the socialist society pave a broad way for realizing a communist society. However, socialist society still has the contradiction between productive forces and production relationships, and between the economic foundation and the superstructure, a contradiction that is complicated and sometimes becomes very sharp. Therefore, socialist society, as other human societies in the world, can still achieve progress, albeit along a tortuous road. We should also correctly sum up our experience gained in the past.

In building socialism in our country, we committed mistakes in the past and will still make mistakes in the future. However, the party and the state have always been able to discern and correct their mistakes and to push the socialist cause forward, no matter how serious the mistakes they have committed and how many complications they have encountered. This is because our party is a proletarian political body, is guided by Marxism, and engaged in the revolutionary movement by adopting communism as its ideological system and as its guidance. Only by persistently waging this movement will we be able to realize communism with certainty. Therefore, by no means should we lose our confidence in it just because the realization of the communist social system is a matter of the future, and regard communism as a "distant hope" just because the party has incurred serious inner problems and mistakes.

Capitalism still can make progress at present, particularly with regard to progress in the productive forces. However, the enhancement of monopoly undertaken by the capitalist countries and individuals has all the more shown that the private ownership of capitalism has become increasingly unsuitable to the development of the productive forces, and it will certainly be replaced by socialist public ownership. The productive forces of the major capitalist countries are greater than those of socialist countries, and such a state of affairs is caused by long-standing historical reasons. The lower productive forces of some socialist countries is the outcome of the unsound newly emerged socialist systems. Judging from this point, we cannot prove that capitalism is more superior than socialism. Lenin once said that capitalism and imperialism were corrosive and dying; by this, he meant the trend of development, and did not mean the date of capitalism's demise. Since the Renaissance, the capitalist thinkers have repeatedly pointed out that the feudalist system will die out and that there will be a capitalist society after several hundred years. As of now, there is still feudalism in the world. In line with the facts, can we regard the prediction of bourgeois thinkers as unsuitable to the reality? The answer is no. Using the same line of reasoning, we cannot negate the scientific prediction on realizing communist systems, while capitalism is still making progress at present. The appearance and development of a series of socialist countries in the world and the communist movements that have occurred in capitalist countries have repeatedly shown the scientific character of communist theories. Therefore, suspicions regarding their character are unreasonable.

The appearance of the idea or thought of "practical benefit" is based on the ideological change cropping up in developing the commodity economy. In the past, our party was short of experience in leading the people to develop the commodity economy. During the democratic revolutionary period, the inner party life was a military type life. After beginning the building of socialism, our country has constantly enforced the intensively centralized and planned economy and never allowed the commodity economy to appear. The broad masses of party members, including cadres, have been short of the necessary study and knowledge of developing the commodity economy. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party has acknowledged that the socialist economy also comprises the planned commodity econony, begun to enforce the open policy in order to enliven the domestic economy, and enabled the law of value to play its important role in daily economic life. All of this has naturally affected the members of the party. Upon seeing a number of persons in the society rapidly become wealthy, some party members, therefore, have turned out the thought of "practical benefit" because they also intended to become wealthy.

The thought of "practical benefit" runs against the fundamental purpose of the party, which is to serve the people wholeheartedly and to realize communism in China. The basic character of Communist Party members is to be utterly devoted to others without any thought of self. Communist Party members should not seek personal gain and undue interest at any time. When encountering the contradiction cropping up between the interest of the individual and the interest of the party and the people, these members should sacrifice their personal interest without the slightest hesitation and sincerely abide by the interest of the party and the people.

Therefore, they should not seek personal enjoyment at any time. Communist Party members should not seek undue personal interest by turning a blind eye to the interest of the masses. In line with this principle, the thought of "practical benefit" is totally wrong. Comrades who have harbored such a thought should do a good job in thinking it over and reviewing the pledge they made upon entering the party. They should think over whether such thoughts and acts are in conformity with the glorious title of Communist Party members. Frankly speaking, our party does not need such members. If they do not earnestly correct their mistakes, these comrades can be very dangerous.

The ideological foundation of the idea of "practical benefit" is ultra-individualism, and represents the influence of bourgeois corrosive ideology. Persons, particularly the party's leading cadres, who have harbored such a thought and idea will naturally commit serious mistakes and even crimes. Leading cadres without communist ideals, who cannot make use of the communist world outlook to direct their own acts, will not be able to correctly implement the party's line, principles, and policies, and to successfully lead the masses in engaging in the program of building the four modernizations. Therefore, leading cadres must set forth strict demands for themselves in ideology and action and act according to the party's Constitution and the several guiding principles of inner-party political life.

HEBEI SECRETARY ON ENHANCING CADRES' QUALITY

SK140720 Shijiazhuang HEBEI RIBAO in Chinese 31 Jan 86 pp 1, 2

[Text] The 5-day conference of the prefectural and city CPC Committee secretaries concluded on the morning of 29 January. During the conference, the guidelines of the Central Rural Work Conference were relayed and implemented, and the participants discussed and studied the outlines of the guidelines for the 1986 work of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government.

Xing Chongzhi, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a speech entitled "Make the Greatest Efforts To Upgrade the Quality of the Cadre Ranks" at the conclusion of the conference. He said that making efforts to upgrade the quality of the ranks of cadres is an important task facing the CPC committees at all levels as well as an important guarantee for a smooth implementation of the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan and for further progress of the "two civilizations."

After reviewing the gratifying political, ideological, organizational, and practical changes which have taken place in the ranks of cadres, Comrade Xing Chongzhi pointed out that viewed from the historical experiences of the party, the party cadres should confront the tasks of carrying on restudies and upgrading their understanding in a transitional period of historical development. Instead of following established forms, we should bravely make explorations and carry on restudies with regard to the ongoing four modernizations and economic reform which are regarded as brand-new undertakings in human history. Some new problems incompatible with the new situation have cropped up over the past few years since a large number of new cadres were admitted into the ranks of cadres. Simultaneously the ranks of cadres have confronted a new trial since our country carried out the policy of opening to the outside places. Comrade Mao Zedong called on us to guard against the bourgeoisie's attack with sugarcoated bullets at the Second Plenum of the Seventh CPC Central Committee. This passage is still of practical significance for guiding the current work of opening to the outside world and reform work in the new situation. At present, some political and ideological problems which should not be ignored still exist among the ranks of cadres. Some comrades with a bad mental attitude lack lofty ideals and show indifference to the party spirit. Some comrades fail to firmly foster the thinking of serving the people wholeheartedly, and take masters for public servants and public servants for masters. The ideological individualism, bureaucratic work style, and political liberalism of some comrades still find certain markets. Some comrades administratively seek good relations with everyone at the expense of principle.

Some of these comrades publicly ask for official titles, rights, and benefits from the party. If the party does not comply with their requests, they will make trouble. If they do not have chances to make trouble, they will lodge complaints against the party. If they have no chance to lodge complaints against the party, they will throw up their job. Some even regard the power entrusted by the party and the people as a means to unscrupulously seek private gains by cheating the state and damaging the collectives. Some seek honor, official positions, and money by making false reports and holding back unpleasant information. Some cadres have given up the party's principles to seek good relations with all and sundry. Some leading organs and leading cadres carry out bureaucracy to different degrees. Without knowing much about or having a thorough and correct understanding of the new situation and the new problems cropping up in the reform work and the work of opening to the outside world, some issue orders according to their imaginations. Some have brought great economic and political losses to the state and the people by neglecting their duties. Some cadres who are lax in organizational discipline seriously indulge in liberalism. Some cadres stick to their old ways of doing things to the neglect of the instructions, criticism, and persuasion of higher levels. Some cadres let out the party secrets, spread hearsay, and even start slanderous rumors. In addition, because some cadres pay no attention to the study of basic Marxist theory, their political and ideological level cannot be upgraded.

In his speech, Comrade Xing Chongzhi emphatically pointed out that the unhealthy practices of cadres may directly affect the party style. He said: Straightening out the cadres' thinking and work style is of decisive significance for effecting a fundamental turn for the better in party style. We must take effective measures for upgrading the quality of the ranks of the cadres to a new level.

First, the training and education of cadres should be carried out with great efforts. Cadres can be trained and educated chiefly through two ways. One is to study knowledge from books, and the other is to learn from practice. The propaganda and organization departments of the provincial CPC Committee and other CPC committees at various levels should formulate plans for the political and theoretical study of cadres, and all trades and professions should also work out their own training plans. Measures for the training should be flexible and based on reality. All levels should also map out lists of books, set forth requirements, and grasp well the daily study of cadres. The study of theory should be integrated with practice. On the basis of the actual conditions in the modernization drive, we should observe, analyze, discuss, and solve the realistic problems existing in reform and construction with the Marxist stand, viewpoint, and methods, and pay attention to transforming our world outlook. At the same time, we should guide the masses of cadres to actively plunge into the building of the two civilizations. to conduct investigations and study, and to receive training at selected units. The provincial CPC Committee has decided to organize and send office cadres to grass-roots levels to receive training. This system should be carried out persistently.

Second, we should enforce discipline strictly, and dare to pay attention to and cope with problems. To improve the competence of cadres, we should rely on both education and strict enforcement of discipline. Enforcement of discipline is also a means of education. A failure in enforcing discipline strictly, criticizing what should be criticized, and handling in a timely manner or with due sternness what should be handled is one of the important reasons for the problems, in particular unhealthy trends, presently existing in the cadre contingents, to which solutions have not been found over a long period of time. For this reason, we must persistently pay attention to education and discipline. Cadres, at whatever levels, who violate party or administrative discipline or laws must be duly punished, and never be tolerated. With regard to economic crimes, we should start with major and appalling cases, be all the more brave in uncovering, investigating, and handling those involving leading cadres and their children, and never be softhearted toward them.

Those who have continued to engage in unhealthy trends and have violated laws and discipline from 14 November 1985 when the provincial CPC Committee announced the "10 prohibitions" at a rally of cadres of organs should be dealt with sternly.

Third, the key to upgrading the competence of the cadre contingents lies in the attention to leading bodies. Leading bodies are the backbone of the cadre contingents. Only when leading bodies enhance their competence can they cultivate competent cadre contingents. Leading bodies at various levels, in particular those at and above the county level, should have both cadres proficient in the economy and managment, and cadres familiar with the work concerning party affairs so that leading bodies as a whole can be upgraded. Members of leading bodies should be politically firm, have a strong sense of policies, possess correct party style, and a down-to-earth work attitude, be truly exemplary in every field, and set a good example for cadres with their exemplary deeds. In succeeding old comrades, young cadres should mainly take over their heroic spirit in struggles, and carry forward the party's fine traditions. In view of the situation in which leading bodies were getting older and had a rather low education level, we stressed the need to promote a group of young cadres with a college education level to leading bodies at and above the county level in the past 2 years, and this is totally necessary. In the future we will continue to pay attention to age and education. However, we should not one-sidedly emphasize diplomas and schooling, and mechanically apply the same age limit to all cadres. We should attach importance to shcooling, but not to schooling alone, and should also emphasize acutal work ability and performance. When using people, we should also pay attention to giving full play to their strong points and avoiding their weaknesses, and refrain from arbitrary "matchmaking," doing such a silly thing as to let "Li Kui plant flowers and Daiyu do carpentry."

Fourth, the cadre system should be further reformed and improved. Improvement of the cadres' competence depends on the guarantee provided by corresponding systems. Organization and personnel departments should have courage to explore, and push forward the reform of the cadre system. The systems governing the tenure of office, election, exchange, and personal responsibility of cadres, and the party's democratic life system should be established and gradually improved. From now on leading cadres should be promoted, retained, transferred, demoted or dismissed on the basis of their political integrity and ability, their performance, and levels. Old cadres should be able to assume higher or lower posts as required, and new cadres should all the more be able to do so, and the demands on them should be stricter. We should seize opportunities to establish the new practice of assuming higher or lower posts as required. Leading cadres that should be elected as stipulated in regulations must be elected. The system of fixed term of office should be experimented at pilot units and then gradually be applied widely. Some localities of our province have already tried out the cadre exchange system and achieved very good results. This year we should continue to carry out this system in a planned manner.

Fifth, actual merits should be emphasized when we promote and evaluate cadres. By emphasizing the acutal work contributions of cadres, we mean to uphold the criterion of putting practice in the first place when promoting and evaluating cadres. The purpose of our launching the activities of making contributions among the cadres throughout the province is precisely to lead them to emulate scoring actual achievements in their work. At present in promoting and evaluating cadres, some units make decisions on praise or censure on the basis of their likes or dislikes, favor or resentment, and gains or losses. Some appraise cadres on the basis of their old impression about these cadres, the superficial phenomena without examining to see whether they are true or false, and gossip. Some shelve the cadres about whom there are so-called disputes instead of distinguishing right from wrong, showing a "cold shoulder" to those who should be used. Some pursue personal relations, deliberately promoting those within their "network of personal relations," and arbitrarily demoting those outside.

All these phenomena are a reflection of disregard for the actual contributions of cadres and violation of the principle of appointing people on their merits, and should be conscientiously corrected. There is also another phenomenon in which some cadres try only to avoid mistakes and not to score achievements, and, therefore, fail to make contributions to their work and open up a new prospect. Although these cadres are different from those who commit serious mistakes politically and economically, and in their lives, their acts represent a dereliction of duty, and they should be criticized and educated. If they assume leading posts, they should be removed, and never be allowed to sit tight on their "iron armchairs."

Comrade Xing Chongzhi concluded in his speech: The provincial CPC Committee urges other CPC committees at various levels to foster a strong sense of responsibility and urgency toward upgrading of the cadre contingents, be farsighted, and truly regard the building of the cadre contingents as the center of party building, and grasp it well. Organization, personnel, propaganda, and discipline inspection departments at various levels should consider the upgrading of the competence of the cadre contingents as their important task, serve as good advisers to CPC committees, and carry out their work in a down-to-earth manner. All deparments and units should also exert concerted efforts to improve the competence of cadres.

HEILONGJIANG MAKES PROGRESS IN MANAGING LAND

HK120217 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 2 Feb 86 p 2

[Report by XINHUA correspondent Xu Jiangshan: "Heilongjiang Province Makes Achievements in Managing Land According to Law"]

[Excerpts] The regulations and ordinances on land formulated by the state and local authorities have been resolutely implemented throughout Heilongjiang Province. Land control has been tightened and the illegal use of cultivated land for other purposes has basically been brought under control. The majority of over 1,500 land dispute cases have been settled in accordance with the law. Compared with 4 years ago, the amount of land used for other purposes last year declined, on the average, by 50 percent. The area of formerly abandoned land which was turned into farmland once again, and used for afforestation and fish breeding last year, amounted to 20 million mu.

While cracking down on malpractices in indiscriminately using land for other purposes, Heilongjiang Province also paid close attention to the standardization of land management and constantly improving its competence in managing land according to law. The province concentrated on conducting surveys on land resources, registering landmarks, and working out general plans for land use and for controlling land for rural residential use.

RENMIN RIBAO Commentator

[Commentator's article: "Treasure Each Inch of Land"]

[Text] "Farmland cannot give birth to a child." The peasants of Shanduo village plainly stated the inability of cultivated land to regenerate this means of production, by using the term mentioned above. For this reason, they have greatly treasured land and adopted effective measures to put land under strict control. Although they have built hundreds of new houses, they have never ever used cultivated land for that purpose.

Man must have food to eat and food crops, melons, fruit, and vegetables are all products of the land. Both villagers and city dwellers understand this truth. However, understanding it is one thing and practicing it is another. When using cultivated land for house building, many localities, units, and individuals more often than not forget the truth, which is known even to women and children, about China's basic national condition; namely, that it has a huge population but limited usable land. Despite repeated injunctions by departments concerned the phenomena in which some localities indiscriminately use cultivated land for other purposes is getting more serious day by day rather than being checked. According to statistics, over the last 2 years cultivated land used for construction amounted to tens of millions of mu each year. If things are allowed to go unchecked, the consequences will be disastrous.

With the growth of the urban and rural economies, and the expansion of the scope for construction, it is impossible not to use cultivated land for other purposes. However, it is necessary to bring the reduction rate of cultivated land under strict control and to treasure and rationally use each inch of land. To achieve this objective, it is imperative to handle the relationship between feeding the population and construction, so that people will really understand the truth that only when people have enough to eat can construction be carried out. At the same time, it is also necessary to restrain the practice of indiscriminately using land resources for other purposes or wasting them, in accordance with the regulations and ordinances of land management as Heilongjiang Province has done.

Some people ask: Have new things not emerged in the world, such as cultivating crops in workshops without soil? This is true. However, it will take a considerably long time to apply advanced science and technology from laboratories to mass production. Even if this is achieved in the distant future, human beings always need large tracts of vast green country. Now and in the future, we must take effective measures to strictly control the arbitrary use of cultivated land for other purposes and protect cultivated land as far as possible. We must make vigorous efforts to spread the use of advanced science and technology and encourage the peasants to use well each inch of land and to continuously improve the output rate of land so as to make up for the losses of cultivated land which has to be used for construction.

HEILONGJIANG: PROBLEM OF EXCESSIVE BURDENS VIEWED

SK130341 Harbin HEILONGJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 29 Jan 86 p 2

[Article by Zhao Guozhen, director of the Heilongjiang Provincial Township Enterprise Bureau: "The Problem of Excessive Burdens on Township Enterprises Awaits an Urgent Solution"]

[Excerpts] In our efforts to lighten the burden on peasants, reducing the burden on township enterprises is also a major issue that should be carried out urgently in the current rural work. This is because reducing the burdens on township enterprises is an important component part of the endeavor to reduce the burden on peasants. Compared with the advanced provinces of the country, the township enterprises of our province are only in the initial stage. With a poor foundation to start with, they lack a solid base and the reserve strength for continuous development; and, moreover, their growth rate is far lower than the national average, is incompatible with the large-scale agricultural and forestry development of our province, and hinders the overall revitalization of the rural economy. It should be noted that some localities, instead of actively supporting township enterprise development, often impose a large irrational burden on township enterprises in disregard of their capability to bear it. In violation of the provincial government's regulation on the distribution of the profits of township enterprises, some have collected profits from enterprises in advance, or collected much more than they should.

Because of the numerous irrational burdens and poor management, township enterprises have very little funds of their own, yield small benefits, and are even heavily indebted. At present the fixed assets of the industrial enterprises at township and village levels are valued at merely about 1.2 billion yuan and their output value is less than 2 billion yuan, but their total amount of debts and credits is as high as 1.1 billion yuan, of which nearly 500 million yuan should be collected but have not been collected becasue most of it is occupied by townships, villages, and some cadres for a long period of time. According to an investigation of Tangyuan County, in 1984 their township enterprises had 3.7 million yuan of credits which could not be recalled. Of the sum, 1 million yuan was forcibly appropriated by towns and townships, and 1.2 million yuan in cash or materials was occupied by some township and village cadres. Township enterprises throughout the province have more than 600 million yuan of debts, of which 530 million yuan are bank loans. As a result, the circulating funds for their own use account for 16 percent of the total, and most of them support their production with loans. Among the 105 enterprises run by townships in Tangyuan County, only 21 have a small amount of circulating funds. This has seriously affected the sound development and the economic results of the township enterprises of our province. According to statistics, from 1980 to 1984 the average growth rate of the enterprises at the town and township, and the village levels throughout the country was 21 percent while that of our province was only 15 percent; the average increase in per-capita productivity of the country was 16.8 percent while that of our province 10.8 percent, ranking second from the bottom; the average amount of taxes and profits created by per 100 yuan in output value of the township enterprises throughout the country was 16.4 yuan while that of our province was 11.6 yuan; and the average turnover period of the circulating funds of the township enterprises throughout the country was 114 days while that of our province was 270 days. This showed that the development of our township enterprises lags far behind that of the country. We can imagine what the consequences will be if this situation is left unchanged.

As township and village enterprises are developed by townships and villages, it is only natural for them to provide a certain amount of profits to townships and villages. However, it must be clarified that enterprises run by townships and villages are not possessed by townships and villages, still less are they the "countryyard economy" of township and village governments. They represent an economic undertaking jointly possessed by township and village peasants. Therefore, no township or village government should limitlessly, arbitrarily appropriate money or materials from enterprises. The provincial government has stipulated in explicit terms that the net profits of township enterprises should be distributed in such a way that 50 percent of them goes to enterprises, 30 of them goes to township governments, and the remaining 20 percent goes to township enterprise offices. It also clearly pointed out that the profits retained by enterprises themselves should be used chiefly in expanding production, and that township governments and township enterprise offices should also set aside a considerable amount of the profits they share for use in developing township enterprises in addition to supporting agriculture and developing other welfare undertakings.

Developing township enterprises has become a road we must take in revitalizing our province's rural economy. Their further development will bring about a marked social benefit to all fields. We should adhere to the principle of "actively supporting, correctly guiding, working out rational plans for and strengthening the management of" township enterprises as set forth by the CPC Central Committee to support their sustained, coordinated and sound development.

QINGHAI LEADERS CALL ON PEOPLE IN NEW YEAR

HK121548 Xining Qinghai Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Excerpts] On the first day of the Year of the Tiger, the first day of the lunar new year, provincial party and government leaders went to the countryside, factories, hospitals, and armed police units to extend season's greetings to the masses, cadres, and soldiers and wish them vigor and vitality in the Year of the Tiger so as to create a new situation in all fields.

Comrades Yin Kesheng and Bian Yaowu went to (Shangwuzhuang) Township, Huangzhong County, to call on more than 10 peasant households. In (Puai) Village, they were very interested in the Spring Festival couplet posted on gateposts of (Zhang Shenghai's) house. The couplet read: Facing the mountain which is our ready source of money; greeting the river which is our treasure bowl. Yin Kesheng said: This couplet is well written. To become rich, peasants must first rely on the party's policies and secondly on their ambition. They must take the road of becoming rich through their own efforts and according to local conditions. Yin Kesheng said: This year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. While grasping grain production, it is necessary to vigorously develop a diversified economy. When learning that peasants at (Nafuzang) Village sold all the gold they extracted last year to the state, Yin Kesheng said delightedly: Good! You peasants are the masters of the country, and extracting gold should benefit the people.

Comrade Song Ruixiang went to the Xining steel plant to call on the workers who insisted on working during the Spring Festival.

On the first day of the lunar new year, Comrades Liu Feng, Huanjue Cailang, Zhao Haifeng, Han Fucai, Bainma Dandzin, and Wu Chengzhi also went to factories and transport companies to call on those who were on duty during the Spring Festival.

XINJIANG REPORT ON RURAL WORK, REFORM -- PART I

HK120915 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 3 Feb 86

[Excerpts] The regional CPC committee held a rural work conference in Urumqi from 22 January to 2 February. At the conference, the participants listended to a report given by Zhang Sixue, deputy secretary of the regional CPC committee, on relaying the spirit of the central rural work conference; studied the central leadership Document No 1 and important speeches given by central leading comrades Zhao Ziyang, Wang Li, Tian Jiyun, and Du Runsheng; and held enthusiastic discussions.

In connection with reality, they analyzed the current situation in the region's rural reform, rural economic situation, and the existing problems; and studied the tasks in the region's work in 1986 and the principles, policies, and important measures for fulfilling those tasks. At the conference, Tomur Dawamat, deputy secretary of the regional CPC committee and chairman of the regional government delivered a report entitled: "Further Implement Policies, Continue to Conduct In-Depth Reform, and Promote the Rural Economy To Develop Continuously, Steadily, and in a Coordinated Way." This report covers 11 issues. This Nongjiale [Peasants' Happiness] program will broadcast his report in four sections from today. In today's broadcast, we shall cover the first topic: the region's rural situation and tasks, and the second topic: further strengthen the fundamental role of agriculture and animal husbandry in the region's economy.

I. The Region's Rural Situation and Tasks.

Over the past few years, under the guidance of four No 1 central documents, we have earnestly implemented a series of policies of the central leadership on rural reform, greatly unleashed the initiative of the broad masses of peasants, promoted the development of rural productive forces, and speeded up rural construction. The current situation in the region's rural areas is excellent. In 1985 we took a bold and steady step in the second-step reform in the region's rural areas. Great achievements have been made in the reform. The rural economy is moving toward comprehensive operation and coordinated development, and has switched from self-supporting and semi-self-supporting production to a relatively large-scale commodity production, and from the previous closed-type economy to the current open-type economy. The continuous growth of the rural economy has created favorable conditions for the reform and development of the whole economy. The characteristics of the region's rural economic development in 1985 are:

1. The rural production structure has been greatly readjusted. The farming structure is becoming more and more reasonable, which not only ensures a steady increase in the grain output, but also gives play to the region's superiority and develops the diversified economy. The percentage of grain-growing area in the total growing area decreased from 76 percent in 1978 to 64 percent in 1985. Despite a reduction of 7 million mu in grain-growing area in recent years, the per unit area grain yield increased by 145 jin or 67.7 percent. Therefore, the total grain output increased by 2.4 billion jin or 32 percent. The percentage of economic crop-growing area in the total growing area increased from the 12.5 percent in the past to 22.7 percent at present. In particular, the production of fruits and melons and horticulture developed rapidly. Animal husbandry has now been put in an important position in agriculture.

2. The system of monopolized and assigned purchase of agriculture products has been reformed. The rural economy has been enlivened and new development has been made in commodity economy.

3. Cooperative economy has been further consolidated and developed.

4. Marked progress has been made in science and technology in agriculture and animal husbandry. The level of scientific farming, scientific husbandry, and [words indistinct] has been upgraded.

It must particularly be pointed out that there were various serious natural disasters in the region last year. From winter 1984 to autumn 1985, the region was hit by storms, snow, frosts, floods, hailstones, sustained drought, and earthquake, much to the detriment of agricultural and animal husbandry production. Some 3.8 million mu of crops were affected by these natural disasters. About 1.1 million cattle were killed between winter 1984 and spring 1985. However, due to the party's policy for enriching the people, to the production responsibility system linked to output, to the consolidation and development of cooperative economy, to the progress in science and technology related to agriculture and animal husbandry, and to the joint efforts made by cadres and peasants of various nationalities, we have minimized the losses caused by the natural disasters and reaped bumper harvests for 8 years in succession. According to initial statistics, the region's total agricultural output value for 1985 is expected to reach some 5.02 billion yuan, an increase of 470 million yuan or 10.4 percent over 1984. Despite a reduction of 2.2 million mu in the grain-growing area, the region's total grain output for 1985 was about the same as 1984. The region's total cotton output for 1985 was about 4 million dan, an increase of 4 percent over 1984. The region's oil crop output for 1985 was 6 million dan, an increase of 38.8 percent over 1984. The region's water melon and muskmelon output for 1985 was 1.6 billion jin, an increase of 39 percent over 1984.

The total amount of livestock at the end of 1985 was 30.41 million head, an increase of 0.51 percent over 1984. The region produced 180,000 tons of beef, mutton, and pork in 1985, an increase of 5.6 percent over 1984. The region's fish output for 1985 was 9,000 tons, an increase of 27 percent over 1984. The region planted trees on 1.2 million mu of land, in 1985, an increase of 84.6 percent over 1984. The total income of the region's town and township enterprises for 1935 is expected to reach some 900 million yuan, an increase of 270 million yuan or 42.8 percent over 1984. The per capita annual income of rural people was 380 yuan and the region's total rural saving deposits amounted to some 1.35 billion yuan, both registering an increase over 1984.

The current situation in the region's rural areas is indeed excellent, but we should not overestimate the situation. On the whole, the region's agricultural foundation is poor; we cannot effectively resist natural disasters; and our production level is very low. Although peasants have upgraded their livelihood over the past few years, only a few of them have really become rich. Quite a number of peasants did not have enough to eat and wear. Peasants and herdsmen have heavy burdens. The phenomenon of arbitrarily apportioning and charging peasants can be seen everywhere. Some of the party's rural policies have yet to be implemented, perfected, and carried out in coordination with other aspects. We have failed to bring into full play the overall effect of policies. The meeting of urban and rural reforms have resulted in some disharmony. All the problems which we met in reform must be solved in further developing reform. The general requirement for the region's rural work this year is to implement policies, conduct in-depth reform, consolidate, digest, and supplement the achievements made in rural reform, preserve the good and remove the bad, and properly solve some prominent problems in the reform so as to achieve better results in the reform. It is necessary to further improve production conditions, and properly arrange pro-production and post-production service work. Meanwhile, it is necessary to conduct serious research and investigation to make various preparations for the next reform in rural areas and to promote continuous, steady and coordinated development of rural economy. The main tasks for the region's agricultural production in 1986 are: The region's grain output should exceed 10 billion jin or strive to reach 10.4 billion jin; the cotton output should reach 4.5 million dan and output of oil crops should reach 6 million dan; the region's beet output should reach 13 million dan; the region's livestock numbers should reach 40 million; the region's meat output should reach 215,000 tons; and the region should strive to grow grass or improve grassland on 5 million my of land; the region should plant trees on 1.2 million mu of land; the total income of the region's town and township enterprises should reach 1.2 billion yuan; and the region should attempt to reap a bumper harvest for the 9th year in succession. This task is very glorious and arduous.

II. Further Strengthen the Fundamental Role of Agriculture and Animal Husbandry in the Region's Economy

Treating agriculture as the basis in developing the national economy in China's long-term and unshakable strategic principle. This reflects not only the law of economy, but also the law of nature. This applies particularly to our Xinjiang, which is an underdeveloped area. Of the 13 million people in Xinjiang, more than 70 percent are peasants and herdsmen. Without the development of agriculture and animal husbandry, there will be no substantial economic development in Xinjiang, and it will be impossible for the people of various nationalities in Xinjiang to become really rich. The per capita arable land area of the region is much higher than the national average. The per capita grassland area of the region is more than 57 mu. The region's abundant natural resources in agriculture and animal husbandry are our biggest advantage. If all these natural resources can be effectively exploited and the region's resources superiority can be transformed to economic superiority, this will certainly create enormous material wealth for the people of various nationalities in Xinjiang and bring prosperity and plenty to Xinjiang.

PUNISHMENT OF SENIOR OFFICIALS' CHILDREN REPORTED

["Special Dispatch From Beijing": "Beijing Punishes Wicked Children of Senior Officials; Two Sons of Senior Cadres Sentenced to Death"]

[Text] "If a prince violates the law, he must be punished like an ordinary person." In order to consolidate the party's work style and social ethics, the CPC [crackdown] has "started in real earnest," as Hu Qili put it. The son of Hu Lijiao, chairman of the Standing Committee of Shanghai Municipal People's Congress; and the son of Chen Qiwu, former head of the Propaganda Department of Shanghai CPC Municipal Committee, have been sentenced to death for committing rascalism. Their appeals have been rejected.

At a meeting of the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau held on 17 January, CPC founding member Deng Xiaoping said that in order to rectify the unhealthy tendencies, "we should mainly rely on two means: first, education; and second, the law." In a speech delivered at the CPC Central Party School, Hu Qili also said that the promotion of the party's work style should not remain a slogan. It is imperative to act in earnest and not to be softhearted. We should arrest those criminals who should be arrested and put to death those who should be put to death according to law. At present, we should begin by cracking the major and important cases. In particular, we must break down resistance and carry the work through to the end in handling cases involving senior cadres and their children. We must punish one in order to warn many, so as to save a number of cadres.

Recently, in investigating and handling the major and important cases in every locality of the country, some high-ranking and powerful cadres have been punished according to law. It is learned that Wang Chun, the former vice mayor of Beijing, is now under investigation for economic problems. A number of suspect children of senior cadres have also been investigated by judicial organs. In addition to the recent widely rumored investigation of the children of General Ye Fei and Xiao Jingguang, the son of Hu Qiaomu was also investigated recently.

ZHONGGUO FAZHI BAO published by the Ministry of Justice has highly praised the actions being taken by the CPC, saying that it tallies with the party and people's feelings and deserves commendation. This newspaper also said that some leading party cadres who abominably abuse their power to seek personal gains and cause serious consequences must be punished severely without mercy, in the same way we brought Liu Qingshan and Zhang Zishan to justice in the 1950's. If we fail to do so, we cannot rectify the party's work style, warn others against following bad examples, and inspire the enthusiasm of the vast numbers of people for construction.

PAI HSING INTERVIEWS SHENZHEN'S LIANG XIANG

HK120111 Hong Kong PAI HSING in Chinese No 13, 1 Feb 86 pp 3-6

["Special Topic" by Zhang Jiefeng: "An Interview With Liang Xiang, Secretary of the Shenzhen City CPC Committee, on Shenzhen's Yesterday, Today, and Tomorrow" -- first three paragraphs are PAI HSING introduction]

[Text] We planned to interview Shenzhen City CPC Committee Secretary Liang Xiang a long time ago. Liang had an interview with our reporter in February 1985, giving an overall briefing on the development of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone. At that time, Liang Xiang seemed proud and full of confidence. However, a few months later, Shenzhen experienced unprecedentedly strong influences.

As the state tightened control over the overheated economy and the import craze, Shenzhen's prosperous commerce, tourism, and catering industry were affected. In the wake of the Hainan Island incident, there were doubts about the continued existence of the special economic zone. Then, in September last year, Liang Xiang was appointed to the post of the city CPC Committee secretary and removed from the post of Shenzhen mayor, with former State Council Deputy Secretary General Li Hao taking his place. In the past few months, Shenzhen Special Economic Zone has stood the test, and Liang Xiang has also stood the test!

Our reporter requested an interview with Liang Xiang in early December 1985. But Shenzhen Special Economic Zone was then at a critical moment in determining its destiny. The 29 ministries and commissions under the central authorities held a special conference on the work concerning the special economic zones in late December, then followed a drive launched by Shenzhen City itself to readjust its work.... Liang Xiang had no time to spare for an interview with our reporter until 21 January this year. During the interview, Liang Xiang continued to show his confidence. But, when talking about outsiders' criticism of Shenzhen, he, as a man who had witnessed the "growth" of Shenzhen, could not help but complain about the lack of information on the part of these outsiders. From what he said one can feel his deep love for Shenzhen. His conversation with our reporter was as follows.

Dependence on the Hinterland Is an Old Idea Which Is To Be Emphasized in the Future

Zhang: Secretary Liang, the "conference on the work concerning the special economic zones" which closed on 5 January must have touched on many issues? What is this conference's decisive significance to Shenzhen Special Economic Zone?

Liang: The conference on the work concerning the special economic zones has laid down a guideline on development. However, it would be more appropriate if we talk about some questions in a month's time when the official documents are issued. The conference has closed, but the documents concerned are still subject to revision, approval by the departments concerned, and, finally, examination and ratification by the central authorities. By and large, the conference is very successful, and will surely be advantageous to the development of the special economic zone.

Zhang: It does not matter. Let us start with the guideline on development. The guideline on the future development of Shenzhen is "dependence on the hinterland, serving the four modernizations, keeping up with the development in Hong Kong and Macao, and marching on the world." Of this guideline, the idea of "dependence on the hinterland" seems to be a new one. Could you tell me how this idea was shaped?

Liang: We have had this idea all along. You just have not paid attention to it. How can we run the special economic zone without depending on the hinterland? We have strengthened our cooperation with other parts of the country since 1981 and we call it "holding hands with the hinterland."

Zhang: Really? Since 1981?

Liang: Oh yes, we put forth the idea in 1981, but now we are reiterating it more definitely: The special economic zones are the special economic zones of the whole country. The slogan, "The whole country supports the special economic zones, and the special economic zones serve the whole country," is a brief interpretation of this idea. Since the very beginning we have pointed out: The most obvious difference between the special economic zones run by China and those export processing zones established abroad is that we are relying on the socialist motherland and have strong economic forces as our powerful backing. Special zones run by capitalist countries are definitely not the same.

But, here we can integrate the advanced technology, industrial basis, and raw materials available in the hinterland. How could the special economic zones develop so rapidly without the support of the hinterland? Shenzhen was a small border town in the past. It is said that there were only five technicians in the town at that time. Therefore, the idea of dependence on the hinterland is merely an old idea which we have mentioned before, only it is going to be restated in more definite and concrete terms.

Zhang: Now that this old idea, which has been mentioned before is restated in more definite and concrete terms, does this not mean that the idea of "dependence on the hinterland" has failed to be implemented so smoothly as expected, and that some places do not support the special economic zone?

Liang: No. What you have mentioned indicates that outsiders are not well informed and mistakenly think of it as new development. Speculation and comments on our policies are nothing strange because everybody is concerned about the special economic zone. Speculation is inevitable, this is just normal.

Zhang: Being ill-informed is something that can hardly be avoided.

Liang: As a matter of fact, we, on our part, have failed to do a good job in publicizing our policies.

Zhang: But, from now on, the special economic zone's direction of development is to promote an export-oriented economy which takes industry as the key link and mainly depends on foreign capital. Then, under the slogan of "dependence on the hinterland," what ratio is to be maintained between "cooperation with establishments in the hinterland" and "introduction of foreign advanced technology"? Which is to retain a higher proportion and which is to retain a lower one?

Liang: We do not necessarily need to have a set proportion. It must be very flexible. While depending on foreign capital in the main, we do not mean that aid from the hinterland should be reduced. This will depend on the specific circumstances and specific projects. Why do we say that we depend on foreign capital in the main? Because the kernel idea of the establishment of the special economic zones is to draw in foreign capital; and, in promoting cooperation with establishments in the hinterland, we are aiming at increasing the special economic zone's attraction to foreign investors. To draw in foreign capital, we must prepare the necessary conditions. Otherwise, how can we expect others to cooperate with us? In brief, we must give full play to the favorable conditions of all three parties, but especially the special economic zone's own favorable conditions. The special economic zone's favorable conditions are that it has a relatively good environment for investment and convenient communication facilities, it adjoins Hong Kong, it has quick access to information, and it enjoys preferential treatments in terms of policy.

Zhang: Other open cities also enjoy preferential treatment in terms of policy. These are not the special economic zone's exclusive privileges.

Liang: But it makes a difference when the favorable conditions of the three parties are added together. For example, our city adjoins Hong Kong, hence our geographical conditions are different from those of other cities. Second, it is necessary to give full play to, and make use of the hinterland's favorable conditions, since the hinterland's technical force is pretty strong. Third, it is necessary to make use of foreign funds. Funds, technical force, and Shenzhen's geographical conditions, three aspects added together, will be a great advantage.

Several Special Economic Zones With Different Characteristics Play Different Roles

Zhang: There is no doubt that import of foreign funds needs some basic conditions. However, as we can see now, to support Shenzhen alone, the state has to make a tremendous investment. How can the state support so many special economic zones and open cities simultaneously?

Liang: It is true that the state has great capabilities. But, after all, we cannot rely on the state in everything. Just 1 percent or so is enough. For example, a few percent to support Xiamen, a few percent to support Zhuhai....

Zhang: Is there such unified planning and allotment?

Liang: No, there is no need. What we have to do is to find out which project is suitable for which places in accordance with the different conditions of different places. But we do practice unified planning regarding the number of projects to be run by each ministry or commission.

Zhang: You have worked out the thing in this way before?

Liang: Everything must be accomplished step by step. You cannot plan so many things perfectly all at once. You must sum up experience through practice and find out how to do it more reasonably. We have heard many opinions. A small number of people just sit and think in their offices, comparing our specific case with a single pattern they choose. Their way just will not work. They think that something will be up to their standards only if it fits their conventions. Everything develops step by step, and nobody can reach this goal in one move!

Zhang: How do the different special economic zones share out their work?

Liang: As far as this is concerned, the State Council has worked out in principle a plan on division of labor. There is a unified planning program to figure out which project fits which special economic zone.

Zhang: Let us go on with the export-oriented economy. What is the genuine definition of the export-oriented economy? State Councillor Gu Mu said that reported products must account for 60 percent. Am I right?

Liang: For the time being, we are not sure of the definition of the export-oriented economy. Anyway this is a topic to be discussed by academic circles. In brief, it means that after industrial enterprises are set up, the majority of their products must be exported and thus earn more foreign exchange for the state. As far as the percentage is concerned, there are different opinions. So far no criterion is available to figure out which percentage is too high and which is to low.

Zhang: But have you set any target? How high a target are you expecting to reach by 1988 and by 1990?

Liang: I believe such a target will be set. For the time being it does not seem possible to fix a definite figure, because there are a lot of changes in the objective circumstances....

Zhang: There must be some target to be aimed at!

Liang: This is a very complicated question. Generally speaking, all projects relating to import of technology which are submitted for approval are required to produce exported products. Whether these projects are to be run by foreign investors or by enterprises from other parts of the country, their approval depends on whether the technology involved is advanced and whether their products are mainly to be exported.

Every application is subject to careful examination. Those projects solely producing goods to be marketed at home and involving backward technology will not get approval.

Zhang: Do you mean that an enterprise, when handing in a project proposal for approval, must submit itself to a commitment in the form of contract that its products must be exported?

Liang: Principally you are right. Of course, subject to approval, part of those products which involve advanced technology and are cheap but in demand in the domestic market are allowed to be marketed in other parts of the country.

Zhang: Apart from the procedure of approval, are there any other measures to encourage export and discourage domestic marketing?

Liang: The other measures are mainly related to the taxation policy, say a longer tax exemption period.

Many Difficulties Are To Be Dealt With in the Effort To Step Up Import of Foreign Technology and Encourage Export

Zhang: It will certainly be advantageous to the state if the special economic zones' products can be exported and thus earn foreign exchange. However, from many foreign businessmen's point of view, they come to invest in China just because of the attraction of the Chinese market. Now that China does not allow them to sell their products in China's domestic market, will they not be disappointed?

Liang: This is an actual problem at present.

Zhang: Then how are you going to solve it?

Liang: Economic problems are not as simple as ABC. On the contrary, they are very complicated and involve many contradictions. Foreign capitalists surely wish to get access to the Chinese market, but, as I have just said, those products with reasonable prices which involve advanced technology and are in demand in the domestic market are allowed to be marketed in other parts of the country. We have put forth the policy of "exchanging market for technology," have we not? We are studying how to implement this policy.

Zhang: You mean to carry out the policy of "exchanging market for technology" toward foreign countries?

Liang: Yes, this is one of the solutions. On the other hand, we may also purchase technology or patent and then produce the goods on our own. We are doing this in some projects. There are many different cases with different solutions.

Zhang: How about the current structure of imported foreign capital? It was reported last year that most funds available were drawn from Hong Kong, most projects were small-scale, and most projects involved ordinary technology, while the number of foreign businessmen coming to open talks on investment projects decreased. Is this still the case?

Liang: We made great progress in drawing in foreign capital last year. Both the numbers of big projects and big consortia to run investment projects increased, and the situation was quite satisfactory. As for the report that most funds available were drawn from Hong Kong, I think one should not evaluate the achievements by simply considering the proportion of Hong Kong funds. You cannot deny that funds from Hong Kong are funds from the outside, can you? In fact, many Hong Kong companies are backed up by foreign consortia.

Moreover, some transnational corporations have also come to invest in Shenzhen. We just are not sure which are Hong Kong funds and which are foreign funds. Therefore, the remark that most funds available are drawn from Hong Kong is not so reasonable. Actually many foreigners set up companies in Hong Kong before investing in China. Many reporters asked me this question, I just answered that I was not sure, because a great deal of Hong Kong funds are from abroad.

Zhang: You, yourself, are not sure about this?

Liang: No. As for the question about the size of the projects, it is true that most projects are of medium and small scale. This is a phenomenon common to special zones abroad. There are only a few large projects, while most are medium and small size. This is because medium- and small-sized projects can display a great flexibility and can readily keep up with changes in the market. An excessively big project may mean lower efficiency! Most plants in Hong Kong are small, each plant has only 20 workers on the average. There are also many small plants in the United States as well. The crux of the problem does not lie in the size but in technology.

The Special Economic Zone Is Also Affected by the Nationwide Macroeconomic Control Which Is Under Way

Zhang: Apart from industrial development, how are things with trade?

Liang: We are now studying what structure would suit the development of the export-oriented economy. To be more precise, the state has drawn up the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," and we are working out a suitable structure in accordance with the guideline provided by the plan and in light of the local conditions in the special economic zone.

Zhang: The reason I ask about the development of trade is because some people have criticized Shenzhen before, saying that Shenzhen has devoted a lot of effort to developing trade and tourism but has overlooked industry, therefore now it is forced to put forth in definite terms the principle of taking industry first. Moreover, our country began to take many measures to cut down expenses last year, for example, the decision-making power on importand export has been curtailed and therefore, foreign trade has been affected. Did this change have an impact on Shenzhen's trade development?

Liang: I believe that Shenzhen's economic development has been comparatively harmonious in the past few years. Some criticisms on the special economic zone are due to lack of information. In my opinion, Shenzhen has just made a start in every aspect, in tourism, commerce, foreign trade, or other fields. It is not a matter of the degree of development. After all we have just made a beginning!

Zhang: But the question concerning the proportion between different sectors does exist.

Liang: Yes, every sector needs to develop and to coordinate with others. This is a more comprehensive point of view. Some people said we had paid attention to tertiary industry but overlooked secondary industry. This is not true. Everything develops along a certain course. The history of Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is very short, only 5 to 6 years. It is still immature. Is it realistic to expect a 6-year-old child to run very fast? It is just impossible! In the initial period of the construction of the special economic zone, our main task is to prepare a good environment for investment. Now that both the investment environment and the conditions for industrial development are available, we are to appropriately readjust the production structure and vigorously develop industry during the period of the "Seventh 5-Year Plan."

Other sectors, such as tourism and trade, also have to develop accordingly. We do not mean to ignore one aspect while concentrating our attention on another.

As for the state's strengthening macroeconomic control, of course this has affected the special economic zone somewhat. As the whole country is engaging in the effort to bring the flow of funds under control, cut down money supply, and promote foreign trade, the special economic zone of course must follow suit. But the impact is moderate, the state has after all taken the situation in the special economic zone into consideration and has given preferential treatment. I am confident that the situation will be better this year, the door will be open wider, the policies will be more clearly defined, and the special economic zone will enjoy more preferential treatment. Although Shenzhen Speical Economic Zone encountered tremendous difficulties last year, the economy as a whole developed very rapidly. For example, industry....

Zheng: The gross industrial output value amounted to 2.5 billion yuan.

Liang: Yes. Although Shenzhen Special Economic Zone encountered many difficulties in its construction last year, all difficulties were overcome and great success was achieved due to the support by the central authorities and the province, as well as the concerted efforts by cadres and the masses. The gross industrial output value totaled 2.5 billion yuan, an increase of 48 percent over 1984; the national income totaled 2.5 billion yuan, and increase of 23 percent; the total value of retail sales of commodities amounted to 2.3 billion yuan, an increase of 12 percent; and the financial revenue totaled to 2.3 billion yuan, an increase of 12 percent; and the financial revenue totaled 860 million yuan, an increase of 59 percent. The development displayed three characteristics: First, the industrial structure has been gradually rationalized, the proportion of exported products has been raised, exported products and those used to substitute imported products accounted for 57 percent of all the products, an increase of 9.5 percent; second, import of foreign funds was progressing smoothly, the amount of invested funds totaled more than $270 million, an increase of 46 percent, and the number of key projects and those involving advanced technology also increased as compared with 1984; third, the economic results have been improved, the amount of tax payment due to industry totaled more than 260 million, an increase of 52 percent, implying a synchronous growth of output value and tax payment.

The special economic zone underwent severe tests and faced many criticisms last year. In my opinion, however, these are natural things in the course of a reform. If one does not dare take any action after hearing irresponsible criticisms, one will achieve nothing. So, we had better follow the state's policies and the central authorities' directives, do more actual work, and avoid indulging in idle talk. Practice will prove everything. The conclusion, favorable or unfavorable, can be made later. No work is completely free from shortcomings. How can one never make mistakes? A great cause like ours will inevitably encounter many difficulties and obstacles, and we should not be afraid of them. We are now in the Year of the Tiger, and all of us must be full of confidence and stride forward as boldly as a tiger does!

Zhang: Some people have said: The special economic zone was initiated by the state, and the state just laid down the policy while granting no funds. So, to pay back all the loans as soon as possible, the special economic zone is forced to develop commerce and landed properties which are more profitable. As a result, industry which needs long-term investment cannot develop. Do you agree with this analysis?

Liang: According to my practice rather than analysis, this is not the case. Things always develop along a certain course. In the case of Shenzhen Special Economic Zone, do you believe it is possible for us to develop industry first? Can we build plants in paddy fields which have not been leveled yet and where there are no electricity, water supply, and telephones? We have been quite clear about what is to be done in which year, we are not acting recklessly. We first drew up a development plan, then we selected a site to start development. We started with construction of infrastructure. Plants can only be built after a good environment for investment is available. This is a very simple rule. To build plants we need to accumulate funds, therefore we launched some projects to promote tourism and build up some residential buildings and shopping arcades.

Zhang: Observers in Hong Kong are probably not well informed of the development in the special economic zone. But some people from the central authorities have also criticized the special economic zone for failing to attach importance to industrial development.

Liang: I have never heard any comrades in the central leadership criticizing the special economic zone for this. To be sure, there have been different criticisms. Obviously you are ill-informed if you just visit Shenzhen once, and then compare Shenzhen with Shanghai and Guangzhou and ask why there are so few industrial enterprises in Shenzhen.

Zhang: Well, you went to Beijing in December last year to give detailed reports on the development of Shenzhen, are they better informed of the situation after that?

Liang: They should be better informed. In fact my trip helped to clear a lot of doubts.

Zhang: You have just said that the state has given especially preferential treatment to the special economic zone, could you cite some specific measures that have been taken?

Liang: As far as fund allocation is concerned, the special economic zone has been given preferential treatment regarding credit quotas, although money has been tightened up throughout the country and fewer loans are being given. We have also been given preferential treatment regarding foreign exchange control and foreign trade quotas.

Liang Xiang Thinks Gu Mu Had a Reason for Criticizing Shenzhen

Zhang: When state Councillor Gu Mu said that Shenzhen Special Economic Zone had promoted its program on too large a scale, what did he mean in specific terms?

Liang: He said the scale of capital construction was a little too large. I agree he had reasons for saying so. Well, what should I say? On the one hand, the state is strengthening macroeconomic control, tightening up money, and reducing the scale of capital construction nationwide; on the other hand, the current situation requires us to advance more steadily with the aim of consolidation, digestion, and improvement of the achieved results, and then seek further development and advance wave upon wave. The process is like the long jump, you have to retreat a little bit so that you can jump further. Therefore, we are better to exert a moderate control over the scale of capital construction in Shenzhen rather than expand it abruptly.

But, to prepare a good environment for investment in Shenzhen, our supporting facilities are still not complete and need to be further improved. We must devote more effort to strengthening communications, energy supply, and telecommunications.

Zhang: Then it is true that the state did cut down investment in capital construction last year?

Liang: It was not investment but credit. As soon as you mention investment, some people would say this is a "blood transfusion" to Shenzhen!

Zhang: Were any capital construction projects suspended because of cutting down of credit?

Liang: No. You can visit construction sites everywhere in person and have a look. No construction projects have been suspended. To be sure, the scale of capital construction must be kept under control, but so far no capital construction projects have been suspended.

There Is a Change in Retention of Foreign Exchange and Illegal Purchase and Resale of Foreign Exchange Have Been Basically Kept Under Control

Zhang: Is it true that there is some change in the proportion of foreign exchange retention?

Liang: No, we are still practicing the system of contracting for financial revenue quota. The only change in the procedure of profit retention is: If a product is imported from the hinterland to Shenzhen for processing and packing and its value increases by over 30 percent afterward, then this product will be counted as a product of the special economic zone. In such a case, 75 percent of the revenue in foreign exchange arising from this product will be kept by the special economic zone. Otherwise, the ratio will be reversed, that is to say, 75 percent of the foreign exchange revenue arising from the products will be turned over to the state. In the past, the foreign exchange revenue arising from products imported into Shenzhen for processing was all kept by the special economic zone. Now this practice has been changed. This is because some enterprises jointly run by Shenzhen and hinterland enterprises used to evade turning over foreign exchange revenue to the state by importing their products into the special economic zone and making some minor changes without adding value to the products. This did not affect the special economic zone very much since products like these were few; and, strictly speaking, these enterprises were taking advantage of the state in doing so.

Zhang: But, after all, foreign exchange remains a major issue. Imagine what will happen if a foreign businessman coming to invest in China finds no way to exchange his earnings for foreign currency....

Liang: We are still practicing the method of "not settling foreign currency account" [bu jie hui 0008 4814 0565], the three types of enterprises (namely, those run by foreign businessmen, joint ventures run with Chinese and foreign capital, and those run in a cooperative form) are still practicing the old method.

Zhang: It is reported that the illegal purchase and resale of foreign exchange in the black market have been brought under control. Has it?

Liang: Illegal purchase and resale will exist all the time, it will exist even after 100 years, and the complete elimination of these kinds of activities is impossible. Just like smuggling which exists everywhere in the world, these activities will continue to exist so long as the price difference exists. But I would like to make one thing, clear; that is, now we have already basically brought large-scale illegal purchase and resale of foreign exchange involving enterprises under control. However, small-scale and individual illegal purchase and resale of foreign exchange will continue to exist for a certain period, and you may come across someone in the street asking: "Do you have Hong Kong dollars?" These are illegal activities which are strictly banned.

Zhang: Apart from illegal purchase and resale of foreign exchange, we have seen various forms of Hong Kong-type "spiritual pollution" in Shenzhen. Do they still exist? For example, some people planned to build a race course in Shenzhen. Will they be allowed to build?

Liang: Shenzhen's standard of spiritual civilization is, after all, fairly high. Many people visiting here admitted that the general social mood and public security are pretty good here. Young people are eager to learn, and many people are studying in classes and correspondence universities. As for gambling, it is only an accidental phenomenon. That casino set up in Shenzhen Bay Hotel only existed for 10 days. That was a problem involving an individual unit and, moreover, we dealt with the problem as soon as it was exposed. But some people are still obstinately quibbling over this case as if something very serious had happened in Shenzhen. In fact it was only a minor matter.

Zhang: Is Shenzhen seriously influenced by Hong Kong?

Liang: Generally speaking, the influence is slight. People going to discos and singers swaying on the stage, these are nothing surprising and we do not have to bother about them. In Shenzhen there will be no red light districts and no casinos. The government's attitude is firm on this. All these pollutants are not allowed to exist in Shenzhen.

Zhang: Then, are there especially frequent economic criminal activities in Shenzhen? It seems especially easy to take advantage of loopholes in Shenzhen.

Liang: Not necessarily. Now that the whole country is implementing the policy of opening up and engaging in the reform, the administrative system will take the time to become perfect, and we are in a process in which the new economic administrative structure is replacing the old one, bad people can easily take advantage of loopholes everywhere, and Shenzhen is not an exception.

Zhang: Do you not think that there are more opportunities in Shenzhen then elsewhere? Many high-ranking cadres' children are doing business in Shenzhen. There is much coverage of this in Hong Kong.

By the way, newspapers reported that Chairman Deng Xiaoping came to Shenzhen to attend the conference on the work concerning the special economic zones. Is this true?

The Reports Were Inaccurate and Liang Xiang Did Not Meet Deng Xiaoping

Liang: A reporter asked me this question 2 days ago. I told him I did not see Chairman Deng Xiaoping and I was not sure whether he had arrived in Shenzhen. Some people asked me whether I had given him a briefing -- how could I give him a briefing without meeting him?

Zhang: But this was a news item filed by some news agencies.

Liang: Then they may have made a mistake.

Zhang: Then Chairman Deng really did not come to Shenzhen?

Liang: I said I did not see him, I did not see him even at the conference on the work concerning the special economic zones. Reports abroad are not necessarily accurate.

Zhang: Inaccuracy is caused by a lack of information. Non-Chinese press cannot easily confirm their news reports here!

Liang: At least, their reports should be properly based.

Zhang: People say you are a member of the reform faction. That Shenzhen can continue to open its door is your victory.

Liang: For one thing, there are no factions. For another, I am not a member of the reform faction.

Zhang: There are no disputes over the opening policy and the conservative policy?

Liang: Sometimes there are different opinions on some work. This is nothing strange but a normal pheomenon. But there are no rival factions. People outside China always divide Chinese into factions. This indicates that they do not know the situation in China very well.

Zhang: People outside China have some basis for this point. Last year, Deng Xiaoping said: The establishment of the special economic zones is an experiment which may succeed or fail. It seemed that he had somewhat lost his confidence. At the very beginning he had fully affirmed the achievements made by the special economic zone. So people outside China wonder if Deng Xiaoping has been faced with pressure.

Emphasizing That There Are No Factions and the Opening and Reform Policy Will Be Upheld

Liang: Different statements are made under different circumstances and on different occasions. Comrade Deng Xiaoping made that statement before foreign guests who had just visited Shenzhen and kept on praising the special economic zone. The special economic zones were set up based on Comrade Deng Xiaoping's suggestion and the CPC Central Committee's decision. Anyway, he could not say: Yes, Shenzhen Special Economic Zone is good indeed. So he had to answer in a modest manner. In fact, he has been appreciating the achievements of Shenzhen Special Economic Zone all along. Last year, Shenzhen achieved tremendous success in economic construction, building of spiritual civilization, and party rectification. The opening policy and the reform are our long-term and steadfast national policies.

Zhang: Everybody hopes so. Thank you for granting me the interview.

Liang: I have been very frank. I hope you do not mind.

Zhang: It does not matter. I like to be frank. I have also been very frank, I'm afraid. Good-bye!

ENVOY ADDRESSES GENEVA DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

OW141720 Beijing XINHUA in English 1702 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Geneva, February 13 (XINHUA) -- China today urged the United States and the Soviet Union to conduct disarmament negotiations in real earnest and reach agreement on the drastic reduction of nuclear armaments and the cessation of the arms race in outer space.

Speaking at the U.N. Conference on Disarmament here today, Qian Jiadong, China's disarmament ambassador and leader of the Chinese delegation, said that both sides have expressed their willingness "to assume their special responsibilities for disarmament and have agreed to take the lead in reducing arms," though their positions remain apart. "They have both stated as an ultimate goal to completely eliminate nuclear arms everywhere and set a 50-percent as their first target." However, he pointed out, the improvement of the situation "is still limited and falls far short of the world people's aspiration and the desire for peace and security." The arms race is continuing, the root cause of tension remains and the danger of war has not been removed, he added.

Ambassador Qian said that in order to achieve a genuine relaxation of the world situation and guarantee world peace and security, the United States and the Soviet Union "should take concrete actions, arrest their rivalries in the 'hot spots', conduct disarmament negotiations in real earnest and reach agreements on the drastic reduction of nuclear armaments and the cessation of an arms race in outer space, so as to create conditions for the realization of a world without nuclear arms." He reiterated China's view that "the fundamental approach to the prevention of nuclear war lies in the complete prohibition and total destruction of nuclear weapons", and recalled a proposal put forward by China at the U.N. second special session on disarmament with the aim of achieving this goal step by step.

Since the nuclear capabilities of both the USA and USSR have long since exceeded the level of "over-kill," the ambassador noted, "there will still be enough nuclear weapons to destroy the world more than once even if their arsenals are cut by half." Therefore, he said, China has proposed that all nuclear states, the two big nuclear powers in particular, "should undertake not to be the first to use nuclear weapons in any circumstances and should unconditionally undertake not to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear states or nuclear-free zones. Proceeding on such a basis, an international convention prohibiting the use of nuclear weapons should be concluded, with the participation of all nuclear states."

On the issue of a nuclear test ban, the Chinese ambassador announced that if an ad hoc committee on nuclear test ban is established this year, "the Chinese delegation will participate in its work." On the arms race in outer space, Ambassador Qian said that development of space weapons can only further aggravate and escalate the arms race, bringing greater instability to the world. "The efforts to stop an arms race in outer space has reached a crucial juncture when something must be done. Otherwise, there will be no end of trouble for the future," he declared. Therefore, he added, China has proposed that "the United States and the Soviet Union should immediately stop the arms race in all its forms in outer space. All countries with a space capability should refrain from developing, testing or deploying outer space weaponry. An international agreement on the complete prohibition and destruction of outer space weaponry should be concluded as soon as possible."

Ambassador Qian suggested that at the present stage, the "de-weaponization of outer space" be made the primary objective in the efforts to prevent an arms race in outer space.

On chemical weapons, Qian said that it has entered the stage of developing and working out a draft convention on the complete prohibition of such weapons. However, he noted that "tremendous work has yet to be done, and divergences on some key issues still remain".

On conventional disarmament, he said that a conventional war is the most real threat and there exists the danger of a conventional war escalating into a nuclear war. Therefore, "the efforts for nuclear disarmament should be combined with that for conventional disarmament," he added. The Chinese ambassador concluded that "the danger of war still exists, but the forces deterring war are growing. We are confident that so long as the people of all countries united, cooperate and make joint efforts, world peace can be preserved."

DELEGATION ATTENDS UN CONFERENCE ON DRUGS

OW151602 Beijing XINHUA English 1433 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Vienna, February 14 (XINHUA) -- The 9th special conference of the U.N. Commission on Narcotic Drugs today approved a resolution, proposing new measures to prevent drug abuse and combat drug trafficking in the world. The resolution on the drafting of the document "Guidance on the Drafting of an International Convention to Combat Drug Trafficking" covers 14 aspects concerning punishment to drug smugglers, supervision and management of narcotic drugs and cooperation among countries concerned. It includes identification, tracing, freezing and forfeiture of proceeds of drug trafficking; measures to monitor or control specific chemicals, solvents and precursors used in the illegal processing or manufacture of controlled drugs; and strengthening cooperation among countries to provide mutual legal and judicial assistance in cases relating to drug trafficking, and promotion of mutual assistance in investigative and presecutorial matters.

The resolution will be submitted to the 32th U.N. Commission on Narcotic Drugs for approval. Delegates from the 40 member countries of the commission including China pointed to the aggravating drug abuses and the new means of drug smuggling. They agreed that a new treaty on combating drug trafficking is necessary as the basic contents of the "treaty on narcotic drugs, 1961" and the "treaty on psychological drugs, 1971" are no longer sufficient to cope with the present situation. The Chinese delegation, which attended the conference for the first time, expressed its support for the drug control efforts, proposing that supervision and control on some chemical products related to drugs should also be applied and the cooperation between judicial departments and commercial companies should be strengthened. The conference is scheduled to close on February 21.

PRC, INDIA TO HOST FOOD POLICY WORKSHOP

OW171338 Beijing XINHUA in English 1321 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 17 (XINHUA) — A workshop will bring 25 African food policy specialists to India and China for the first two weeks in May, announced Alain Vidal-Naquet, head of the office of the World Food Council, at a press conference here today. The workshop, to be organized by the World Food Council, will enable African food policy-makers to review the experience of their Asian counterparts in the area of food production and consumption issues. It is arranged "in the light of the remarkable progress made by Asian countries in increasing their food output and the ongoing efforts of the African countries to overcome their food crisis and move progressively toward food self-reliance," said Alain Vidal-Naquet. China and India have invited the World Food Council to hold a workshop in their countries and will provide a forum for a frank exchange of views between food policy-makers of the two regions.

The two countries have taken policy measures leading to a dramatic increase in food production. India, which had to import ten million tons of grain in 1966 to avert food disaster, now possesses substantial food reserves (30 million tons). In China, grain production went up from 304 million tons in 1978 to 407 million tons in 1984. Topics at the workshop will include agricultural research, training, price policies, producer incentives, water management and irrigation technology, and special programs to reach vulnerable groups still facing malnutrition or hunger. The workshop was called for at the eleventh ministerial session of the World Food Council (Paris, June 1985) as part of inter-regional co-operation among developing countries. The workshop will also be attended by Asian experts and representatives of international organizations concerned with food issues.

FORMER U.S. ENVOY ON 'STABLE BASIS' OF TIES

OW170800 Beijing XINHUA in English 0735 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] New York, February 16 (XINHUA) -- Former U.S. Ambassador to China Arthur Hummel said today that U.S.-China relations had entered a more mature stage and future ties would be marked by continuing stability. Addressing the closing session of the China-in-Transition conference being held in Columbia University, New York, the former ambassador said: "We are now on a sounder and more stable basis in our bilateral relations than we have ever been," and, "we are understanding each other better than we've ever been. Consequently, we are less likely to make mistakes, and mistaking judgement about consequence of our actions and our demands on each other. We are freer from illusion."

He went on to trace the causes of the changes. China, he said, has been pursuing an independent foreign policy for many years. The parallelism manifested in the U.S. and China policies in 1970s "is now less visible, as China largely supports the Third World policies and therefore often is sharp and vocal disagreement with some of the policies of the United States," he explained.

China is now seeking normal relations with the Soviet Union and reduction of tension following 25 years of confrontation, he said, adding, "We do not see that the U.S. interests are threatened by this. China is far away from a policy of equal distance between Moscow and Washington, as some have asserted."

Hummel told the conference that Chinese are now determined to reform and revitalize their country, they need outside capital, managerial skills and technology as well as a peaceful environment. It is in the U.S. interest that "we want to see China integrate with the West economically, and we see opportunity for mutually beneficial trade," he said.

The three-day conference was sponsored by the Columbia University in association with other institutions including the Asia Society. Speakers at the conference focused on China's social, economic and political development over the past few years. Hummel said he was encouraged by the flourishing economic and cultural exchanges between the two countries. At present, he said, the United States is China's third largest trading partner, next only to Hong Kong and Japan, accounting for about 15 percent of China's total foreign trade a year. Future prospects are bright as the two countries have many areas that offer opportunities for cooperation. But he conceded, that there are still obstacles that should be overcome. He shared the widespread Chinese complaints that the U.S. Government has failed to fulfill its promise to liberalize export control with regard to China. "I am sure," he said, "U.S. interest is served by further liberalization." Hummel did not agree with some in Washington who believed that if U.S. does not sell a particular piece of advanced hardware, China then can not acquire it from any other country.

One disagreement between China and the United States is Taiwan. He said the issue of Taiwan should be solved by the Chinese themselves. The U.S. should abide by the relevant joint communiques. He said the Taiwan issue has proven to be manageable and would not get out of hand. Commenting on China's reform, Hummel noted that the reform was successful and progress visible. "It was natural that in such a far-reaching effort to reform China's system there will be some unseen problems, corrections and strains," he added.

Hummel did not agree with some foreign commentator who, he said, "exaggerated the significance of the different point of views in China. I know of no person or faction in China who is willing to proceed in a fundamentally different direction -- a direction that would close the Chinese door to the outside world." "I believe that we will continue to see steady and stable Chinese policies and there is agreement among all the Chinese leaders that the main lines of the present reform should be continued." Hummel concluded.

INVESTORS PROFIT FROM XIAMEN ECONOMIC ZONE

OW151752 Beijing XINHUA in English 1626 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Xiamen, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Investors from the United States have found that they can make profits in the Xiamen Special Economic Zone (SEZ), Fujian Province. Four Sino-U.S. joint ventures or cooperative businesses have gone into operation since Xiamen became an SEZ six years ago to offer foreign firms preferential treatment, local official Li Changjiang said here. He cited the Xiamen tobacco factory, a joint venture with the Reynolds Tobacco International Company of the U.S., as one of the successful ones. The factory has sold 30 million yuan (about 10 million U.S. dollars)-worth of "Camel" brand cigarettes in China since its inauguration in October 1980, said factory official Hong Guoxun.

Reynolds has decided to invest 10 million U.S. dollars in a new joint venture -- the Huamei (Sino-U.S.) Cigarette Company -- with the Xiamen authorities. The new company is to open later this year and will produce 30,000 cases of "Camel", "Winston" and "Salem" brand cigarettes a year, one-sixth of which will be for export. The Xiamen beverage factory, a cooperative business with the Coca-Cola company, has turned out 27 million bottles of soft drinks since going into operation in October 1984. As a result, it earned 800,000 U.S. dollars in profits in the first year, a factory official said. The Xiamen pleasure boat comapny has co-produced 32 yachts for export with the Celestial Yacht Company, earning 4.? million U.S. dollars. Another Sino-U.S. cooperative business building radar equipment has earned more than half a million U.S. dollars in profits in 18 months.

"U.S. firms had invested about 21.7 million U.S. dollars in 10 joint ventures and cooperative businesses by the end of last year," Li Changjiang said. Areas of cooperation include production of microprocessors, cancer testing agents, dinner sets, bricks and paint, as well as international technical consultancy services. In addition. U.S. firms have transferred 20 items of technology to Xiamen, Li said. The biggest deal, woth 134 million U.S. dollars, involves technology for making color-sensitive materials transferred by the Kodak company, he added.

CRITICISM OF POPULATION POLICY REFUTED

OW161343 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 0130 GMT 16 Feb 86

["State Affairs Forum" talk by (Liu Wei)]

[Excertps] Listeners and friends: Planned parenthood is an issue that affects not only women's rights but also determines the rise or fall of a nation and the future of a country. Therefore, the government of our motherland regards planned parenthood a basic national policy.

China's policy on planned parenthood has won wide acclaim the world over. However, it has been distorted and attacked by the United States. The U.S. International Development Agency issued a statement on 25 September 1985, distorting China's population policy and falsely accusing it of practicing forced abortion, and announced its decision to withhold $10 million of its pledged contribution to the U.N. fund that year. A spokesman of the Chinese Foreign Ministry and China's State Family Planning Commission strongly condemned the United States for wantonly interfering in China's internal affairs. World public opinion also expressed dissatisfaction over the U.S. action in this regard. (Zaitons), general secretary of the UN Fund for Population Activities, issued a statement refuting the U.S. attack on China's population policy. UN Secretary General Perez de Cuellar also openly expressed disappointment over the U.S. decision.

I am sure that you listeners are also concerned about this sensitive issue.

China has made rapid progress in the development of its national economy. Total grain output in 1985 reached 650 billion jin, a 94 percent increase over 1953. However, the per capita grain share increased by only 14 percent during that period. Although China's total grain output exceeds that of the United States, its per capita grain share is much lower.

China's rural population has increased every year, but the acreage of arable land remains the same. The increase of urban population has brought many problems in housing, transportation, education, employment, and public health. Bitter facts have made people realize that solution of the population issue brooks no further delay.

Listeners and friends: China has promoted family planning since the beginning of the 1970's, suggesting that a family could have only two children. After that, population experts conducted a study showing that China's population would reach 1.3 billion by the end of this century if a family has two children on average and that population growth like this would continue for another 70 years. This estimate forced China to readjust its policy on planned parenthood. At the end of 1979, it put forward its policy of one family, one child. In areas inhabited by people of minority nationalities, flexible family planning policy can be implemented according to local economic and social conditions.

Listeners and friends: China's policy on planned parenthood has been formulated on the basis of ideological education among the masses. In order to achieve the planned parenthood goal, China has mobilized all forces in society and made use of all kinds of propaganda to give wide publicity to the significant meaning of birth control and to disseminate theories on population and common knowledge on childbirth, birth control, and eugenics.

At the same time China has adopted a number of specific measures giving preferential treatment to families with one child only. For example, the government provides single-child families with a monthly subsidy. Preferential treatment is given to children from single-child families for entering childcare centers and schools, receiving medical treatment, and looking for jobs. Right now, the policy on family planning is known to every family throughout the country. It has become the conscious action of the broad masses of young people.

KANG SHIEN AT OIL EXPLORATION SIGNING CEREMONY

OW180758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0736 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 18 (XINHUA) -- The China National Offshore Oil Corporation (CNOOC) signed a contract here today with Amoco Orient Petroleum Company for oil exploration and development of a block in the Pearl River mouth basin of the South China Sea.

It is the sixth contract signed since the second round of bidding for Sino-foreign joint oil undertaking offshore China began in November, 1984. The contract area covers an area of 639 square kilometers, and is about 220 kilometers off the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone in Guangdong Province. Water depth is about 120 meters. Amoco Orient also participated in China's first round of bidding for its offshore oil program (1982-1983), and a contract area awarded to the company then is adjacent to the area awarded today.

The signing ceremony was held in the Great Hall of the People. The contract was signed by CNOOC President Qin Wencai and Amoco Corporation President H. Lawrence Fuller. The ceremony was attended by State Councillor Kang Shien, Petroleum Minister Wang Tao, and U.S. Ambassador to China H.E. Winston Lord. Kang Shien met with Mr. Fuller and his party prior to the ceremony. Six petroleum contracts signed with 12 companies from five countries in the second round of bidding cover a total area of 34,012 square kilometers.

REAGAN'S ADVISERS ARGUE RESPONSE TO GORBACHEV

OW152108 Beijing XINHUA in English 1909 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 15 (XINHUA) -- President Ronald Reagan's arms-control advisers are urging him to respond positively to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's initiative on nuclear disarmament, but they remain divided over what new elements to include in the positive response. According to today's WASHINGTON POST, Reagan's senior advisers met yesterday but remained divided over the elements of the "positive" response to Gorbachev's latest arms control proposal.

Yesterday's meeting was called at the State Department to hear reports from special U.S. envoys Paul Nitze ar Edward Rowny on their recent consultations with some West European and Asian countries on possible U.S. response to Moscow. The Soviet leader urged in a statement on January 16 that both countries reduce the number of missiles in Europe to zero, linking the reduction to a freeze of British and French nuclear systems and a U.S. pledge not to transfer nuclear systems to European allies. The ASSOCIATED PRESS today quoted a senior U.S. administration official as saying that disagreements among the Pentagon, the State Department and the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA) remained but an agreement on recommendations to the President was reached.

The State Department and ACDA were reported to stand for a U.S. proposal to eliminate U.S. Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles and Soviet SS-20 and SS-4 intermediate-range missiles in Europe. The Defense Department, however, was reluctant to make any positive response to Gorbachev's proposals, arguing that they are linked to unacceptable provisions and thus have only propaganda value. Nevertheless, the official said, "there is general agreement, without getting into the details, we should respond in a positive vein to the Gorbachev initiative."

SOVIET JOURNAL CITED ON SOCIALIST STATE RELATIONS

HK141023 Beijing WENZHAI BAO in Chinese No 283, 2 Feb 86 p 4

[Article from 13 January LILUN XINXI BAO [Theory Information Journal] by Li Fangzhong: "Soviet Union Studies New Trends in Relations Between Socialist States"]

[Text] The No 5 issue of the magazine RABOCHIY KLASS I SOVREMENNY MIR, published in the Soviet Union last October, carried an article entitled "Political Relations Among Socialist States." After dwelling on the process of development of the relations among socialist states, the article pointed out, with the current situation in mind: "In interstate relations among fraternal countries, we must correctly understand and acutally realize the socialist principle of relations among partners. It is very important that we clearly recognize the fact that, in our approach to the establishment and perfection of democratic principles in this area, we must follow a pattern different from that in the domestic field. It is common knowledge that, given a new system, a reliable guide to the development of the whole system of social relations is democratic centralism. But such an interpretation is correct only within the confines of a society. In the field of interstate relations between socialist countries, democratic centralism does not determine the nature and future of such relations."

In light of relevant writings in the Soviet Union, the article also pointed out: "To attempt putting the essence of socialist internationallism in terms of the relations between what is more important or less improtant, or to put forward something like subordinating the principle of respect for the sovereignty of socialist states to another, more exalted principle concerning their mutual relations -- the principle of unity -- this, it seems, is open to doubt. Such an interpretation smacks of not having seen or of having overlooked those processes that have taken place in the world socialist system and in new international relations. These processes call for harmoniously combining the national and international factors in the development of socialist countries and especially in their mutual coordination, and not doing so with distinction between what is more important or less important."

BEIJING RUSSIAN CRITICIZES USSR ON AFGHANISTAN

OW141157 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Unattributed commentary]

[Text] Recently, Soviet offfials have said in relation to the Afghan question that supposedly the situation has already returned to normal, and that the Afghan question will disappear naturally within 3-5 years. This is an unadulterated lie. By fabricating these lies the Soviet Union is pursuing a goal that will extricate it from growing isolation on the Afghanistan question and create an excuse for continuing its military presence there.

According to this statement by the Soviet Union, the serious question of Soviet aggression against Afghanistan no longer exists, the struggle of the Afghan people against aggression has ceased, and the people of the world no longer have any cause to watch this world hotspot. However, this statment by Moscow officials is without foundation, for the situation in Afghanistan is far from normal. There is only one criterion for normalization in this country: Has the indepdence, sovereignty, and nonaligned status of Afghanistan been restored? The Afghan question arose as the result of aggression by and interference of the Armed Forces of the Soviet Union, a superpower against one of the weak, independent, sovereign, and nonaligned neighboring countries of the Third World.

The exceptionally abnormal and serious situation in this country threatens security and stability in this region and Asia as a whole. The armed aggression of the Soviet Union brought unprecedented calamity to the Afghan nation. Hundreds of thousands of Afghans were brutally murdered, numerous villages were turned into ruins, a large part of peasant lands were laid waste, and the people are suffering. Moreover, nearly a quarter of Afghanistan's population was forced to leave their homeland to escape abroad and become a heavy burden to neighboring countries. Today, 120,000 Soviet troops are still in Afghanistan. With the help of airplanes, tanks, and cannons they daily exterminate the peaceful inhabitants of Afghanistan, violating the independence and sovereignty of this country. Can this sad situation in Afghanistan be called normalized? The protrayal by the Soviet authorities of their aggression and murder as a normal course of events was the very thing that betrayed their hegemonic nature.

Insisting that the Afghan question will resolve itself in 3-5 years, the Soviet Administration wishes only to suggest that its forces of aggression will not only remain in Afghanistan in the future, but will also be able to destroy the Afghan resistance forces in a short period of time. All aggressors always underestimate the strength of the people and overestimate their own strength. From the first day of the Soviet Union's armed invasion, the Afghan people rose to struggle against aggression. They did not bow their heads before the tyranny of hegemony.

The flame of the resistance struggle is raging across Afghanistan. The resistance of the people has caused great manpower and material losses to the aggressors. Now there are only some large and medium-size cities and main communication lines remaining under their control, and even in these places they often suffer partisan raids. Afghan resistance forces have not been destroyed and are even constantly growing in strength and size. They now number over 100,000 persons. The solidarity of resistance organizations is growing stronger. Resistance organization leaders and fighters have often firmly said they will continue to struggle in the name of the country's independence until the last drop of blood is shed, or until Soviet aggressors are expelled from Afghan territory.

The Soviet Union failed to subdue Afghanistan in the past and it will not achieve this aim in the future. If the Soviet Union does not stop armed intervention, the Afghan problem will not be solved and it will not disappear on its own. The only way to restore a normal situation in Afghanistan and solve the Afghan problem is through immediate, complete, and unconditional withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan in accordance with UN General Assembly resolutions and with Afghan people deciding their own destiny.

The Soviet Union has also spoken of its readiness to solve the Afghan problem through political means. But it obstinately refuses to withdraw its troops. If the Soviet Union is sincere, it should take practical steps on this issue and not resort to fabricating lies and deceiving itself and others.

TASS ON U.S. ATTEMPT TO ANNEX TRUST TERRITORIES

OW150758 Beijing XINHUA in English 0746 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 14 (XINHUA) -- The official Soviet news agency TASS today accused the United States of attempting to annex two parts of its trust territory in the Pacific by approving an agreement on "free association" of Washington with them. TASS said that the signing of a congressional bill by U.S. President Reagan on "free association" between the United States and the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia in the Pacific concluded its four-decade-long "forced transformation" of Micronesia into its "neo-colonial possessions." The move is "in evident violation of international law," it said.

Located in the west Pacific, Micronesia consists of more than 2,000 isles. In 1947, the United States was granted a mandate to administer Micronesia as a U.N. trust territory. The mandated territory is composed of four political entities -- Marshall Islands, Federated States of Micronesia, the Marianas Islands and the Palau Islands. Of these, the Marianas opted to become a U.S. commonwealth. The other three initialled a compact of free association in 1980. The compact gives self-government to the peoples of the islands, but the U.S. retains absolute authority over defense.

The United States, TASS charged, instead of promoting the political, economic and social progress of Micronesia, "has done everything to deny the Micronesian people independence, sovereignty and the possibility of self-determination." It complained that Micronesia's "self-sufficiency is currently far lower than during the initial period of the trusteeship and that the United States had transformed the territory into a "military place d'armes." It said that the agreements give Washington exclusive control of the territories' military, external and economic affairs. "Any change in the status of a strategic trust area" should be made only by a decision of the U.N. Security Council, TASS stressed,adding that it therefore "cannot be effected by the administering power." The United Nations, the statement said, should ensure the exercise by the Micronesian people of their natural right to establish a united independent state.

PRAVDA ANSWERS LETTERS ON 'UNHEALTHY TENDENCIES'

OW141134 Beijing XINHUA in English 1118 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Many Soviets have sharply criticized the unhealthy tendencies within the CPSU including the special privileges enjoyed by high party officials. The Communist Party organ PRAVDA published today a roundup of readers' letters in the columns "preparing for the Party's 27th National Congress" which is to open on February 25.

A worker said in his letter that between the party Central Committee and the working masses there is "an inert, sluggish and sticky administrative stratum" which is opposed to any fundamental changes. Some readers pointed out that special shops, restaurants and hospitals for high officials "in fact exacerbate social inequality." They claimed that "leaders can enjoy higher salary but no other privileges." They held that these leaders will not easily give up their privileges. Therefore, it is necessary to have a "fundamental purge" of the Soviet apparatus.

Referring to readers' criticisms of bureaucracy and cases of corruption by party and government officials, PRAVDA said that "it is a very difficult thing to change our life. There are and will be diehards and backward elements, gossipers, bureaucrats and corrupt officials on our way ahead. These people pay lip service to party resolutions but are actually afraid of reforms. So they are trying by hook or by crook to slow our movement ahead."

["Round Up: South Korean Opposition Parties Call for Revision of Contitution (by Gao Haorong)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Pyongyang, February 15 (XINHUA) -- South Korean opposition parties have recently initiated a campaign to collect ten million signatures to press for revision of the constitution enacted by the Chon Tu-hwan authorities on October 22, 1980. The current Constitution was put into force at a time when the emergency martial law, enforced after the assassination of "President" Pak Chung-hui, had not been lifted. Earlier, on May 18, an uprising broke out in Kwangju City. Some 200,000 people demonstrated against the emergency martial law. In the nine-day struggle, 170 people were killed, 380 others injured and another 1,000 were arrested. Meanwhile, many people in the political circles were purged and prohibited from taking part in all political activity.

Under the Constitution, the administrative, legislative and judicial powers were placed in the hands of the "president". On February 25, 1981, Chon Tu-hwan was elected "president" by the so-called presidential electoral college. Ever since its adoption, the Constitution has been rejected by opposition parties and the majority of people in South Korea. The New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), the No 1 opposition party, has been calling for "direct presidential elections" since its founding on January 18, 1985. On February 12 this year, the NKDP and several other democratic groups launched a signature drive as part of the efforts to press the Seoul authorities to revise the Consititution. Democratic personages Kim Tae-chung, Kim Yong-sam and NKDP President Yi Min-u were among the first 300 people to sign their names.

A joint statement issued by the NKDP and the Council for the Promotion of Democracy said that the Consititution was drawn up and promulgated in an undemocratic way and therefore lacked legitimacy. The signature campaign has won wide support from other opposition parties and students. Seoul University and many other schools of higher learning have established Constitution revision organizations. On February 4, more than 1,000 students from 14 universities in Seoul set up an alliance in support of the signature drive. However, the requests by the opposition parties and the public have been rejected by the ruling Democratic Justice Party headed by Chon Tu-hwan. In his new year speech, Chon said the discussion of the Consititution revision issue would be postponed until 1989, and claimed that direct presidential elections did not fit in with South Korea. Therefore when the signature campaign started last Wednesday and tended to spread to other parts of South Korea, the Seoul authorities began to crack down on the campaign. They put Kim Tae-chung under house arrest and forced Kim Yong-sam to leave the place for signature. The police ransacked the sponsors' offices and confiscated documents there. The people in charge of the campaign were also arrested. In addition, the authorities claimed that they would make an investigation on all the people involved in the campaign and punish them according to "law." The Seoul authorities have been intensifying their control over universities these days. The schools' contacts with outside are banned.

Despite the authorities' measures of suppression, opposition parties refuse to give up their struggle for democracy. Kim Yong-sam, who condemned such suppression as the same as "imposing martial law," told reporters that in fighting for democracy, he fears neither imprisionment nor death. After Kim Tae-chung was arrested, hundreds of people from various circles including his brother demonstrated against the "government's" atrocity. The NKDP demanded that the authorities stop persecuting Kim Tae-chung and declared that it would continue its struggle for "direct presidential elections."

JAPAN'S MIYAKE ISLAND PROTESTS U.S. BASE

OW151754 Beijing XINHUA in English 1633 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Tokyo, February 15 (XINHUA) -- About 1,500 Miyake islanders today protested against the government's efforts for constructing a night landing practice base for the U.S. Navy, according to the local press.

A group of Diet (parliament) members of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party (LDP) were met by about 500 local protestors when they arrived at Miyake airport this morning on mission relating to the base project. The Diet members led by Masayuki Fujio, chairman of the LDP Policy Affairs Research Council, later inspected the Ako District of the island, where the planned base is to be constructed. About 1,000 people staged a second protest. The mayor of Miyake, Harno Terasawa, is a prominent opponent of the project.

Fujio said at a press conference today that the government and the LDP "are ready to do anything" for local people in exchange for construction of the base. 100 billion yen (about 53.7 million U.S. dollars) will be made available if necessary. He hoped the issue could be settled before the Tokyo summit of seven industrialized countries scheduled for May when U.S. President Ronald Reagan comes. Miyake is a small Pacific Island located about 180 kilometers south of Tokyo. The United States has been asking Japan for a new airport for night landing practice as the present U.S. Atsugi Base in Kanagawa Prefecture is "unsuitable." Japan pledged to make an alternative base.

[Text] Tokyo, February 17 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Ground Self-Defense Force (GSDF) and the U.S. Army today began a nine-day joint maneuver on snow-covered ground at a training field in Kamifurano on the Japanese island of Hokkaido, the Japanese KYODO NEWS SERVICE reported. This is the second winter drill for the GSDF, following a joint drill with the U.S. Marine Corps last winter.

Participating in the drill are a GSDF company of about 170 men from Rumoi, Hokkaido, a company of about 130 U.S. soldiers from Hawaii and 11 U.S. Green Berets from Okinawa. The maneuvers include ski training, live shell firing, liaison, and outdoor survival training. Meanwhile, the report said, the Japanese Air Self-Defense Force and U.S. Air Force units stationed in Japan also began a five-day joint exercise at the Japanese military base of Nyutabaru.

'VIETNAMIZATION' OF CAMBODIA SINCE 1979 OUTLINED

OW171444 Beijing XINHUA in English 1431 GMT 17 Feb 86

["Roundup: The Vietnamization of Kampuchea" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, February 17 (XINHUA) -- Although the Vietnamese have failed to wipe out the Kampuchean resistance forces on the battlefield during the past seven years, they have tried all means to Vietnamize the country.

In 1979, a "Kampuchean Workers Committee" was installed by the Vietnamese authorities to control various government and party organs of the Heng Samrin regime. Since 1980, Vietnam extended its control to the provincial level by sending a division of troops to each of the 19 Kampuchean provinces and adopting them as "sisters cities". In recent years, the Vietnamese have trained officers of the Heng Samrin regime in an effort to win their loyalty and purged dissidents in the government and party organs. Hanoi has also encouraged mass emigration to Kampuchea in an attempt to change its population structure. At present, the Vietnamese emigrants number in excess of 700,000. Further emigration of several hundred thousands is planned. Vietnamese in Phnom Penh make up more than 60 percent of the population.

Shops, companies and other services run by Vietnamese can be seen everywhere, especially along some key roads and some fertile areas. The Vietnamese occupation troops often force local people to share their houses and farmland with emigrants. The Vietnamese have also been forcibly indoctrinating Kampucheans into unconditional subservience to Vietnam. This is done by sending youths and children to Vietnam; forcing all schools to follow Vietnamese style education; and forcing Kampuchean students to study the Vietnamese language as the first foreign language and as a condition for entering a high school. The Vietnamese are also encouraging mixed marriages, especially among high ranking officers. The Battambang and Siem Reap Provinces alone are reported to have 10,000 persons of mixed blood.

A large amount of natural resources and products including rubber, lumber, grain, fish and pepper have been plundered by the Vietnamese in the past seven years. The Phnom Penh regime is virtually a branch institution of the Vietnamese Government, implementing the Vietnamization of Kampuchea.

SIHANOUK VOWS TO MAINTAIN UNITY WITH DK SIDE

OW160843 Beijing XINHUA in English 0835 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, FEbruary 16 (XINHUA) -- Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea [DK], said he will maintain brotherly unity with the Democratic Kampuchea side, Radio Democratic Kampuchea reported today. In a letter sent by Sihanouk from Beijing on February 12 to Khieu Samphan, vice-chairman of Democratic Kampuchea and chairman of the Democratic Kampuchea side, and Son Sen, vice-chairman of the Democratic Kampuchea side, he said: "I pledge to maintain brotherly unity with the Democratic Kampuchea side in the sacred common struggle to liberate Kampuchea from the Vietnamese aggressors and colonialists."

The letter is in reply to the statement released by Khieu Samphan and Son Sen on the same day. The statement reiterated that the Democratic Kampuchea side's position on the roles of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and his National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Kampuchea is unchanged. It reassured that Sihanouk is president of democratic Kampuchea and will remain so even after an eventual Vietnamese military pullout.

THAILAND TO DEPLOY NEW RADAR SYSTEM ALONG BORDER

OW150842 Beijing XINHUA in English 0815 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Thai troops will soon deploy a new radar system along the Thai-Kampuchean border, the local newspaper BANGKOK POST quoted informed sources as reporting today. The U.S.-made computerized equipment, called counter battery radar or "firefinders", can accurately pinpoint enemy guns and destroy them with just a few shells. It is capable of detecting mortars as well as artillery rounds fired from 105mm, 130mm, 150mm, 155mm, 175mm and eight-inch guns. By using the new mobile radars, Thai gunners will be able to pinpoint enemy artillery positions before the first wave of shells hit their targets.

The sources said that Thailand had ordered a number of firefinders last year and they would be delivered within the next two months. Thailand would be the first country in Southeast Asia to have such kind of sophisticated equipment. The sources also disclosed that 200 anti-tank missiles, launchers and other equipment were delivered to Thailand from the United States last January. The sources noted that the sale of advanced weapons to Thailand showed how much importance the United States placed on Thai security.

THAI MINISTER QUESTIONS VIETNAMESE GOOD WILL

OW161316 Beijing XINHUA in English 1301 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Bangkok, February 16 (XINHUA) -- Thai Deputy Prime Minister Sitthi Sawetsila has pointed out that Hanoi's moves towards a political settlement of the Kampuchean issue are aimed at getting the world to accept the Vietnamese-installed Heng Samrin regime as a fait accompli. Sitthi, also foreign minister, made the remark in a recent exclusive interview with THE NATION REVIEW here.

"On the surface, Vietnam looks flexible, but as far as substance goes we have detected nothing new from the latest joint communique of the three Indochinese foreign ministers who met recently in Vientiane," Sitthi said. The Vietnamese "continue their military efforts to score further results but they are in a difficult situation in the field," he added. "The only thing we are concerned about now is the Vietnamization of Kampuchea," the minister stated. However, he noted, the longer the Vietnamese stay in Kampuchea, the stronger the anti-Vietnamese sentiment among the Kampuchean people will grow.

Sitthi said one of the reasons why the Vietnamese failed to launch a large-scale offensive against Kampuchean resistance along the Kampuchean-Thai border is that there are no targets on the border for the Vietnamese to attack as the resistance guerrillas have moved into the interior around Tonle Sap Lake. Other reasons included that Vietnam has sustained considerable damage and casualties as a result of the resistance activities and that it is waiting for an opportunity to negotiate a political settlement through diplomatic exercise.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PHILIPPINE ELECTIONS

Marcos Proclaimed Winner

OW151809 Beijing XINHUA in English 1707 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 15 (XINHUA) -- President Marcos and his running mate Arturo Tolentino of the ruling party were proclaimed by the National Assembly tonight as the winners in the February 7 elections. According to the tabulation of votes cast in the elections, Marcos garnered 10,807,197 votes against opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino's 9,291,716, and Tolentino garnered 10,134,130 votes compared to opposition candidate Salvador Laurel's 9,173,105.

Before the proclamation, the opposition members of parliament walked out of the chamber after they failed to stop passage of the motion proclaiming the two winners.

Dispute With Catholic Bishops

OW151815 Beijing XINHUA in English 1656 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 15 (XINHUA) -- President Marcos today termed the Catholic bishops' accusation of the government's fraud in the elections "most distrubing" and "truly regrettable", the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reported. The Catholic Bishops Conference of the Philippines (CBCP) issued a statement yesterday condemning the "unparalleled" fraudulence and irregularities in the polls and calling on the people to carry on "non-violent struggle" in the wake of the results of the elections.

In his letter to Ricardo Cardinal Vidal of Cebu, CBCP chairman, Marcos asked the CBCP to provide the government with a bill of particulars of charges raised by the church group. He said, "none of us can close our eyes to the dangerous implications of the biship's proposal for the people to carry out a non-violent struggle against the government." However, if in the effort to list down irregularities the government is forced to take action against any member of the church, that does not mean the government is fighting the church itself, the president said. "It is important to bear this in mind because of the great phenomenon during the recent elections of members of the clergy and the religious traversing the bounds of the law because of their partisanship," he said.

Minority Leader on Results

OW152123 Beijing XINHUA in English 1843 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Minority Floorleader Jose Laurel Jr. (opposition, Batangas), tonight told a news conference that the opposition is not happy with the proclamation of the two winners in the February 7 elections, the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reported. Laurel claimed that Mrs. Aquino actually won by 2.5 million votes and said he has documents to prove it. He added that the opposition will appeal to the Presidential Electoral Tribunal and is considering initiating impeachment proceedings against the officials of the Commission on Elections (Comelec). When asked whether the opposition would go back to the assembly after staging the walkout, Laurel said the opposition assemblymen are still entitled to this move. But he added they will consult first with their constituents, the PNA reported.

Opposition To Stage Protest

[Text] Manila, February 15 (XINHUA) -- The Philippine opposition is scheduled to stage a big rally for non-violent protest at the Rizal Park here at 3:00 p.m. tomorrow while Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Fabian C. Ver today called an emergency meeting of all the major service commanders to discuss plans to deal with it. Lawyer Rene Saguisag said Mrs. Aquino will present a program of non-violent protest at the rally. He denied that the rally is intended to proclaim Mrs. Aquino president. "The rally is simply a people's victory rally and not a proclamation rally," Saguisag said.

Saguisag's denial came in the wake of reports that Mrs. Aquino is going to proclaim herself president, though her opponent of the ruling party, President Marcos, will be proclaimed officially by the National Assembly the winner in the February 7 elections. Earlier, President Marcos had said the government would continue to adopt a policy of maximum tolerance towards mass protest actions poised by the opposition. However, he warned that people committing such violations as stopping the delivery of goods or blocking traffic flow would be arrested and charged in court.

In an interview with newsmen upon his arrival from Baguio City, where he was guest of honor at the 81st anniversary of the Philippine Military Academy (PMA), Ver said one of the main issues in the meeting is to make plans for diffusing postelection tension prevailing in the country. He also reminded the major service commanders to alert their respective Civil Disturbance Control (CDC) units and contingency forces in connection with the scheduled opposition rally. An intelligence briefing was held "to assess the situation in view of the mounting tension" sweeping the country, particularly in Metro Manila, the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY reported. Meanwhile, Ver instructed contingency elements and CDC units in Metro Manila not to bring guns during deployment and avoid confrontation with rallyists even as he placed all CDC elements under red alert. Ver denied the reported deployment of tanks and additional troops in Metro Manila as claimed by some opposition leaders.

Reagan Comments

OW160329 Beijing XINHUA in English 0313 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 15 (XINHUA) - President Ronald Reagan today called on the people of the Philippines to avoid violence and seek peaceful ways to bring about stability in their society, according to reports from Santa Barbara, California, where Reagan is having his holidays.

This was the U.S. President's first official reaction to the result of the Philippine election, which was announced yesterday by the Philippine National Assembly, declaring current President Ferdinand Marcos winner of the election. On the other hand, the Philippine opposition presidential candidate, Corazon Aquino, also claimed victory in the election and said that she would call a mass rally in Manila on Sunday to launch a nationwide campaign against President Marcos.

President Reagan said in a written statement, "We have followedwith great interest and concern over the presidential and vice-presidential elections in the Philippines. As the Philippines is a close friend and ally, what happens to this nation and its people if of great importance to the United States." He reaffirmed that the United States maintains "strict neutrality" in the Philippine election. He appealed to both Marcos and Mrs Aquino to "work together" to make reforms in order to insure a "stable democracy" in the country.

While claiming the elections were marked by "heartening evidence of the continuing commitment of the Filipino people to the democratic process", he said: "It has already become evident, sadly, that the elections were marred by widespread fraud and violence" perpetrated largely by Marcos' ruling party. It was so extreme that the elections' credibility has been called into question both within the Philippines and in the United States," he said. In the last few days, many political figures and public opinion in the United States have voiced complaints and criticisms against the reported widespread fraud in the Philippine election.

Habib Meets Marcos, Aquino

OW171712 Beijing XINHUA in English 1631 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 17 (XINHUA) -- Philip Habib, special envoy of U.S. President Ronald Reagan, met here today with President Ferdinand Marcos and opposition leaders separately to discuss the conduct of the February 7 presidential election in the Philippines. In a two-hour closed door meeting with Marcos, according to a presidential press, Habib told the president he is here merely to "make observations" especially on the information which both the administration and the opposition may be willing to give him on the matter of violence and fraud alleged to have marked the polls. In a statement, Marcos said he was assured by Habib that he was here not to render judgement on the conduct of the polls nor to make any suggestion on the running of Philippine internal affairs.

Later, Habib met behind the closed door opposition leaders Corazon Aquino and her running mate Salvador Laurel. Mrs Aquino's spokesman Rene Saguisag said the two opposition leaders impressed upon Habib that they won the election but Marcos and the ruling party cheated them of their victory. They also told Habib that the massive fraud and terrorism that characterized the election has converted the country into a virtual tinderbox which can explode any time in protest to the Marcos continued rule, Saguisag said. "The crisis can only be resolved by a swift and orderly transition to the Aquino presidency, which the Filipino people have chosen in the polls," Saguisag quoted the two leaders as saying.

SOVIETS' WINTER CAMPAIGN IN AFGHANISTAN VIEWED

HK170506 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 16 Feb 86 p 6

[Report by RENMIN RIBAO correspondent Shi Zongxing: "Our Correspondent Analyzes Winter Fighting in Afghanistan"]

[Text] Islamabad, 14 Feb -- The fighting in Afghanistan this winter has been marked by the following characteristics compared with the six previous winters: The Soviet Army has stepped up its military assaults, the Afghan guerrillas have courageously resisted them, the two sides have fought at close quarters, and fighting has gone on continuously. In the words of a man in the Afghan resistance: "The fighting this winter has been fiercer than in any previous winter."

There has been no marked increase in the number of Soviet troops sent to commit aggression against Afghanistan, but many advanced weapons have been shipped in, including new types of aircraft, long-range artillery, and heavy tanks. Tactically, apart from continuing to take advantage of its "air superiority" to bomb and indiscriminately strafe areas of rebel activity, the Soviet Army has, beginning last year, frequently sent small groups to make shock attacks against the guerrillas. People in the Afghan resistance say that the Soviet Army often first sends in special agents to make a reconnaisance. After they have gathered intelligence, they rapidly transport the well-equipped shock forces to the battle areas by helicopter. These "shock" tactics caused losses among the guerrillas for a time.

The spearhead of the Soviet assault this winter remains directed at the areas around major cities and major military bases, areas close to the eastern and western frontiers, and major lines of communications. However, they have particularly stepped up their attacks on key points in the east and southeast of the country, bordering Pakistan. The Soviet Army has both military and diplomatic aims in doing this. Militarily, it is attempting to blockade the border and increase the winter supply difficulties for the guerrillas, with the aim of trapping the guerrillas in the ice and snow. Diplomatically, it is putting pressure on Pakistan in a vain bid to force its government to give up its principled stand in the political negotiations. The recent move of the Soviet Army and the Karmal authorities in sending a large number of agents to infiltrate Pakistan and carry out terrorist activities is also a part of their military attack plans.

In the face of the enemy's military pressure and winter supply difficulties, the guerrillas remain in high spirits and have scored new success in launching widespread and ingenious guerrilla warfare. Daily battle reports received here since the beginning of winter indicate that guerrillas are active throughout the whole of Afghanistan, and from the central provinces, always relatively peaceful before, reports are continually coming in of guerrillas inflicting heavy casualties on the enemy. As far as the guerrillas are concerned, a notable feature this winter is that they have stepped up their fighting in the northern provinces close to the Soviet border and attacked military installations in the enemy's rear. This tactic of "harassing the enemy's rear" has to a certain extent checked the Soviet attacks in other areas of Afghanistan. Another special feature is that, while wiping out the enemy's vital forces, the guerrillas have attached great importance to capturing battlefield booty. Guerrilla attacks are largely concentrated on enemy supply columns, barracks, and warehouses, and the large amounts of weapons, ammunition, and food taken from the enemy have eased the guerrillas' winter supply problems. In addition, the guerrillas have made further progress in coordinating their actions and launching joint operations. They have also gained more experience in waging guerrilla war.

A Kabul radio broadcast at the beginning of this month confirmed in a back-handed way that the Afghan guerrillas' fighting this winter has been highly effective. The radio acknowledged that in 6 provinces alone, more than 500 Soviet-Karmal troops were killed by the guerrillas in January, while several hundred were taken prisoner. Although these figures have been understated, they still indicate that the guerrillas have inflicted tremendous losses on the enemy.

At present the Soviet winter offensive is still under way, and preparations for the spring offensive are also in progress. It is expected that when the winter is over, Soviet military attacks on the resistance forces will become even more intense and the guerrillas will face even more severe tests. However, the experiences of the past 6 years show that no matter how rabid the aggressors, it is impossible for them to subdue the entire Afghan nation by force of arms. The fighting in Afghanistan will remain stalemated for quite a long time to come, but its basic trend will be favorable for the resistance forces and unfavorable for the enemy.

Soviets Step Up Operations

OW171633 Beijing XINHUA in English 1530 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Islamabad, February 17 (XINHUA) -- Afghan guerrilla commander Hakio Aryubi has said that the Soviets, while talking about troops withdrawal from Afghanistan, are stepping up military offensives in various parts of Afghanistan. In an exclusive interview with XINHUA here today, Aryubi said despite the severe winter, the Soviet troops have intensified their attacks on the Afghan mujahidin (holy war fighters) in Qandahar, Helmand, Herat, Balkh, Nangarhar and Paktia Provinces of Afghanistan since the beginning of this year.

The staunch guerrilla commander came from Jaji District of Paktia Province just one week ago, where he had led a successful operation to repulse a large-scale Soviet thrust to the district early this month. He said a big Soviet force pushed forward to 'Ali Khel, the district town of Jaji on February 2 in a bid to provide food, arms and ammunition for the Soviet-Karmal troops beleaguered there by guerrillas for a long time. After getting the information of the Soviet invasion, he said, over 1,000 mujahidin converged on the Jaji battlefield from different parts of Paktia Province. They succeeded in fighting back the Soviet troops after destroying 18 Soviet tanks and military vehicles at Hasan Khel and Skander Khel with mines and rocket fire. Aryubi said the fierce fighting lasted for several days. Many Soviet soldiers were wiped out, lots of food and military supplies captured by the guerrillas while 8 mujahids laid down their lives and a few others sustained injuries.

The current winter, the commander said, witnessed no slackening of Soviet operations even in the hilly regions where snowfall is up to one metre thick. However, they have failed to achieve their objectives. He said the guerrilla bases in Paktia Province have been strengthened and expanded. The guerrillas under his command are now equipped with more anti-aircraft guns and six wireless sets recently captured from the Soviet troops. Looking into the future course of the war in Afghanistan, the commander noted that it would be a protracted war. The Soviets will quit Afghanistan only when they are bled more on the battlefields, Aryubi observed. He also called for more international support to the Afghan mujahidin, both political and material, so that they can resist the Soviet troops more effectively.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES YOUTHS TO MAKE CONTRIBUTIONS

[Commentator's article: "Make Contributions in the Practice of Four Modernizations"]

[Text] The times produce their heroes. The Chinese youth of the 1980's are a lucky generation. They are living in the great era of building the four modernizations, and the motherland calls on them to become useful people as early as possible. All ambitious young people would wish to make great contributions in the great drive of invigorating the Chinese nation and building the four modernizations.

Hown can the young become useful people? There have been many heated discussions of this question in recent years. Some stress young people's own efforts, while others stress objective environment. All their arguments are reasonable, but it seems that they have failed to stress one important aspect, that is, to become useful people, youths must have a correct political orientation and have a work style of closely linking themselves with practice and masses.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, encouraged by the CPC Central Committee, "respecting knowledge and talented people" has become a prevailing custom of our times and a "study fever" and "attending school fever" has arisen among young people. This is an extremely good thing as well as a sign of our national invigoration, where the success of the four modernizations lies. However, the change from denigrating knowledge to respecting knowledge has just started, some necessary systems and measures have not yet been formulated; some people unduly stress diplomas or even equate diplomas with ability; and "study fever" became "diploma fever" for a while. Some young intellectuals have also been influenced by this practice. After they were assigned to their posts, some university graduates expended their main efforts not on their own work, but on studying foreign languages in order to study in graduate schools or abroad.

True, the construction of our country needs a great number of senior professionals. Studying in graduate schools to obtain a master's degree or a doctorate is a way to become useful, but not the only way. Only a handful of university graduates can attend graduate schools at present or in the future. Most university graduates have to study and upgrade themselves in their work and practice. In fact, many great scientists or scholars, ancient or contemporary, foreign or Chinese, achieved success by studying, researching, and struggling in practice. Even if one attends graduate school and obtains a masters degree or doctorate, he has to come back to practice, to continue his struggle, and to make contributions to the four modernizations. Only thus can he become a genuinely useful person. If a university graduate neglects his own work and pursues a higher diploma after being assigned to a practical post, it will be harmful to both the four modernizations and his own improvement.

Studying abroad and learning more advanced foreign science, technology, and management skills to serve the motherland is a good thing. As part of opening up to the outside world, we have sent students to study abroad in recent years, and great achievements have been made in this respect. In the future, we will continue to send some people to study abroad in a planned way. But only a handful of people have the chance to study abroad. The main duty of the inservice university graduates and graduate school students is to properly do their own work and earnestly study their own professions. This in the only correct road.

Young intellectuals have a feverish thirst for knowledge and wish to become useful people. This is very precious. But many people have been living among books, from primary school to secondary school and university to graduate school. What they know most is the achievements of famous people and the creation of individuals. They are thus apt to turn respecting knowledge into adoring famous people and ignore the role of the masses and practice. This shortcoming of young intellectuals can only be overcome when they go to the grass roots, go to the midst of practice, and go among the masses. Only by overcoming this shortcoming will they become genuinely useful people. A handful of university graduates now are unwilling to work in grass-roots units, believing that they cannot play their role there. In fact, no grand undertakings can dispense with grass-roots work. The grass-roots work in the four modernizations is an especially big furnace for tempering people and a good place to make contributions.

The motherland is calling, the times are calling, and the four modernizations cause is calling. High-minded young people -- go and practice, go among the masses, and go to the grass roots. China's new great scientists, inventors, politicians, economists, and other useful people will certainly emerge today. They are deeply rooted in practice, in the masses, and in the younger generation with ideals and knowledge.

ANTHICHEMICAL CORPS STEPPING UP MODERNIZATION

HK160600 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1218 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 14 Dec (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- China's antichemical corps has built an integrated Army organization with its own special school and research institute and has developed considerable antichemical warfare capability. At present, all combined military units at and above the division level have their antichemical branches.

The antichemical corps (in foreign countries, they are called the chemical corps) is a military branch shouldering the task of guaranteeing the conduct of military actions under the conditions of a nuclear, chemical, or biological battle. This military branch was established in 1950 in China. It has been maturing over the past 30 years and more. All equipment for observation, reconnaissance, protection, cleaning, and disinfection is produced by China. The properties of such equipment has reached an advanced level. In particular, convenient and well-ventilated protective clothing can be made by only a small number of countries.

The antichemical corps has participated in all of China's nuclear tests and has also successfully fulfilled the tasks of guarding the test plots and conducting various surveys and tests. During the self-defense battles against Vietnam, the antichemical troops effectively cooperated with the infantry troops in wiping out the enemy at short range. They destroyed more than 1,500 forts and strongholds of the enemy. After the Tanshan earthquake in the summer of 1976, the antichemical corps sent some 200 soldiers and 4 disinfecting cars to participate in the rescue action. They effectively controlled environmental pollution and prevented pestilence after the serious natural disaster.

At present, the antinuclear, antichemical, and antibiological training of China's combined military units is undergoing three major changes: They have shifted the emphasis of their training from learning general knowledge about nuclear and chemical weapons to mastering the tactics and techniques of resisting attacks by those weapons; from studying the organization and equipment of the enemy to studying the enemy's principles, methods, and opportunities for using nuclear and chemical weapons; from training in personal protection skills to training in organizational protection actions of whole Army units.

China is now reducing the number of ordinary troops and strenghtening special troops in order to raise the combat capacity of its Army. This is one of the purposes of the Chinese Army's streamlining and reform. As a special military branch, the antichemical corps is stepping up its modernization and the training of its commanders and soldiers. Sources in the antichemical corps said that they are making efforts to apply scientific achievements and new technologies and new materials to the development of highly efficient protective equipment, and they will intensify antinuclear and antichemical training so that the troops will be able to effectively fulfill all battle tasks in a future antinuclear war.

PLA DEPARTMENTS COMMEND AIR FORCE REGIMENT

OW161845Beijing XINHUADomestic Service in Chinese 1545 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 16 Feb (XINHUA) -- The PLA General Staff and General Political Departments recently issued an order commending the commanders and fighters of an Air Force transport regiment for taking part in an emergency airlift to deliver relief goods to armymen and people stranded in Xizang's Medong Prefecture.

The order, signed by Chief of General Staff Yang Dezhi and General Political Department Director Yu Qiuli, said: Due to successive torrential rains and snowstorms since last fall, roads in Xizan's Medong Prefecture were cut off, and the grain supply was running out. Many places in the prefecture lost communication with the outside world, and the people of various nationalities suffered all sorts of hardships. Upon receiving an order from higher authorities, the Air Force transport regiment immediately formed a group to deliver relief goods to Xizang. Using helicopters, the group continuously performed their mission in Medong Prefecture. Displaying the heroic and tenacious style of defying fatigue and struggling unswervingly, the commanders and fighters overcame altitude sickness, adverse weather conditions, and dangerous terrain to deliver large amounts of relief goods and personnel to areas stricken by disasters, thereby successfully accomplishing the mission.

The order pointed out: By using their helicopters to deliver disaster relief to the roof of the world, the regiment commanders and fighters have fully demonstrated the kind concern of the party Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission for the armymen and civilians in the frontier areas. It is hoped that units that have taken part in delivering relief goods will earnestly review their experience and work harder to contribute more to safeguarding and building the frontier.

BAN YUE TAN ADDRESSES RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

HK130311 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 2, 25 Jan 86 pp 26-28

[Article by BAN YUE TAN political editorial office: "Questions and Answers on Party Rectification in Rural Areas (Part II)"]

[Text] Question: What are the requirements for a qualified party member? Whey must special emphasis be placed on the exemplary vanguard role of party members in the new historical period?

Answer: The requirements for a qualified party member are simply those set by the party Constitution. The exemplary vanguard role of party members is important in the new historical period. The major tasks of our party, which is in power, are to develop the economy and the forces of production. In daily work and life, party members endure contradictions between: overall and partial interests; collective and personal interests; long-term and immediate interests; and between becoming rich themselves and leading the masses to strive for common prosperity.

Party members must play an exemplary vanguard role in correctly solving these contradictions. Meanwhile, in the new historical period, another task of our party is to carry out reform. Under such circumstances, the situation is always changing; new problems crop up one after another and have to be tackled. Party members should, therefore make unceasing efforts to acquire new knowledge and stated at the forefront of reform. Only by so doing will they be able to guide the masses in the correct direction. This is why we must lay special stress on the exemplary vanguard role of party members in the new historical period.

Question: Why should we say that guiding the masses to strive for common prosperity is the main manifestation of the party's goal in the new historical period?

Answer: "Serving the people" should not merely be hollow words. They should be concretely manifested in many aspects. In different historical periods, the central task of our party is different, so the content of serving the people is also different. In the new historical period, the central task of our party is to lead the people of the whole country to build socialism, and the central task of primary party organizations and party members in rural areas is to build socialist modernization in the countryside. Changing the face of the rural areas as quickly as possible and leading the masses to strive for common prosperity are essential ingredients in serving the people in the new historical period. If a party member can set a good example in implementing party policies in rural areas and lead the masses to strive for common prosperity, this shows that he always thinks of the people's interests. His political consciousness is well-founded, and he is highly capable; thus he is qualified to be a party member.

Question: What should we do to acquire a correct party work style?

Answer: To this end, what is most important is that all party members, regardless of their position, should handle matters impartially and regard the interests of the party and the people above all else. Moreover, party member cadres in particular should take the overall interests into account and set an example within the party. Not only should they fully understand the importance of serving the people, but they should really do good turns for people. On the other hand, they should also have the courage to fight against all unhealthy tendencies and should not allow them to spread unchecked. Nor should they follow these tendencies at the expense of party principles.

Question: What should a party member do when trying to become a real model?

Answer: To achieve it, he should act in accordance with the following points:

1. Study hard, emancipate his mind, and work according to objective law. This requires a party member to fully understand Marxist-Leninist theory; acquire more cultural and scientific knowledge; regularly study party policies and current affairs; and have a good grasp of all necessary information. If not, he will have difficulty distinguishing between right and wrong under the new situation, and will fail to push reform and the commodity economy forward.

2. Attach importance to investigation and study and have a clear understanding of the situation so as to identify and tackle problems in good time. The situation in the rural areas changes very often, and we cannot size up the situation and do work well without investigation and study.

3. Dare to speak the truth. A party member should not tell lies under any circumstances. He should dare to report the real state of affairs to party organizations and have the courage to fight against the unhealthy trend within the party of failing to seek truth from facts. Those who hurt the interests of the party and the people through tellings lies in the past should make a conscientious self-examination and correct their mistakes in party rectification.

4. The aim of seeking truth from facts is being responsible for the people and the party. In terms of serving the people, this means that a party member should do the people more good turns. If a party member knows the actual conditions well and what measures should be taken, but he does not take any action, then his work style is by no means practical or realistic.

Question: How should party members play an exemplary role in observing discipline?

Answer: 1. Party members should always keep the interests of the party and the people in mind and safeguard party unity. They should be fair and square and observe discipline and state laws.

2. Party members should conscientiously study party policies and state laws so that they know what they ought and ought not to do, and what they can and cannot do. This will help them to judge what is right and what is wrong.

3. Party members should uphold the truth, cast away all considerations of pride, and dare to wage resolute struggle against all malfeasances. They should not act as those who try not to offend anybody and those who do everything through back-door relations.

4. Party members should deal with cases of malfeasance without delay and according to law and commend good observers of discipline and state laws so as to cultivate a strong sense of discipline and law. This is particularly important to leaders at all levels.

Question: Why should we say that the consolidation of leading bodies is the key to the building of primary party organizations in the countryside?

Answer: Apart from the might of its policies, the militancy of our party depends mainly on the strength of party organizations, and particularly the role of leadership. Long historical experience tells us that a good leading body has a direct bearing on whether the role of a primary party organization as a fighting bastion can be given full play or not.

Question: How shall we establish a perfect system of developing inner-party democracy?

Answer: We must first follow the principle of democratic centralism within the party, namely, centralism on the basis of democracy and democracy under centralized guidance. This facilitates the emergence of a strong democratic atmosphere within the party. Party members must be encouraged to speak out freely, and their correct viewpoints should be adopted through unanimous approval.

Furthermore, a system of ensuring that party members regularly participate in the activities of party organizations should be established within the party. These activities include meetings of party groups; membership meetings of party branches; meetings of party branch members; meetings of party committee members; meetings for maintaining the normal practice of democracy within the party; attendance at party lectures; elections within the party; reading party journals and inner-party documents; and other political activities within the party. In particular, primary party organizations which were paralyzed or almost paralyzed before party rectification should gradually institute the system of ensuring that party members regularly participate in the activities of party organizations in the course of party rectification and adhere to the system. They must make efforts to educate and supervise party members and build themselves into strong militant bastions.

CENTRAL CHINA DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM VIEWED

HK130811 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 pp 6-7

[Article by Li Shiyi and Wu Ming: "China Prepares a Major Program for Economic Development of Its Central Areas -- First Forum on Strategies for Economic and Social Development in Central China Held in Wuhan"]

[Text] China's economic structural reform has induced a great change in the operation of its economy, namely, the increase in local economic strength and of horizontal economic ties among provinces, cities and autonomous regions. Under these circumstances, the Academies of Social Sciences of Henan, Hunan, Hubei, and Wuhan City held a forum in Wuhan earlier this year to discuss strategies for economic and social development in central China. The meeting has aroused people's interest about the economic development trends in central China.

Before now, China's economists have only discussed strategies for economic and social development in east Cnina. Consequently, the Shanghai economic area, the Beijing-Tianjin-Tangshan economic area, the Bohai economic area, and the northeast China economic area emerged in turn as the times dictated, and economic and technological cooperation between local governments and civilian units became very active. After that, Yunnan, Guizhou, Sichuan, Guangxi and Chongqing held a joint meeting to discuss economic cooperation in southwest China following the forum on strategies for northwest China's development. As a result, economic relations and trade between these local governments has been strengthened. Many new signs indicate that China's policy of invigorating the domestic economy and opening up to the world has begun enlivening its economy from east to west.

Three Major Economic Regions and Development at Three Levels

After more than 30 years of economic construction, the unbalanced layout of production forces in China has changed greatly. In the past, 70 percent of the country's industries were concentrated along coastal areas. Now, a well-laid industrial foundation has been built in the hinterland of our country. However, the nation's economic development as a whole remains irrational. According to the level of China's economic development, natural and social resources, and the layout of its production forces, some experts have classified China's general economic trend into three different development levels represented by the following three economic regions:

The developed region in eastern China, which includes Liaoning, Hebei, Tianjin, Beijing, Shandong, Jiangsu, Shanghai, Fujian, Guangdong, and Zhejiang comprises 11.1 percent of the country's area and 37 percent of the nation's population; its industrial and agricultural output value constitutes 55.7 percent of the China's total output value.

The developing region in central China covers Heilongjiang, Jilin, Ningxia, Sichuan, Shanxi, Anhui, Jiangxi, Henan, Hunan, Hubei, Shaanxi, and Gansu. It comprises 30.9 percent of China's area and its population accounts for 49.1 percent of the nation's total. Its industrial and agricultural output constitutes 37.19 percent of the national gross output value.

The under-developed region in western China which includes Nei Monggol, Xinjiang, Qinghai, Xizang, Yunnan, Guizhou, and Guangxi covers 57.9 percent of the area of China and has a population of 13.4 percent of the nation's total. Its industrial and agricultural output makes up only 7.08 percent of the country's total output value.

Each of the three major economic regions has its own superiorities and inferiorities. The developed region in eastern China has a solid economic foundation and a higher degree of science and technology. It enjoys close ties with foreign countries in economic and technological fields but is short of energy and natural resources. There is a strain on transport, excessive development of urban construction, and a dense population. The under-developed region in western China is vast in areas, sparsely populated, and rich in natural resources. However, it has a weak economy, poor transport conditions, insufficient funds, and lacks good technological and social conditions. The developing region in central China has the strong points of both the other regions without their weak points. It is a very important strategic point for China's future economic development. Although China is concentrating its efforts on further developing the developed region in the east, it has begun to shift the focus of its economic development from the east to the central regions. China's economic experts attach great importance to the move.

Henan, Hubei and Hunan Are Richly Endowed by Nature

Henan, Hubei, Hunan, and Wuhan City are located in the central part of our country. People like to call them central China. They are bounded to the east by the Shanghai economic area, to the west by the southwest and northwest economic cooperation regions, and to the north by the Beijing-Tianjin-Tangshan economic cooperation region. Generally speaking, it is vital to China's overall economic layout.

Central China is one of the birthplaces of China's ancient culture. It covers an area of 560,000 square kilometers with a population of over 180 million. The nation's five railway arteries, the Beijing-Guangzhou line, Longhai line, Jiaozuo-Zhicheng line, Wuhan-Chongqing line and Hunan-Guizhou line crisscross central China. Air-freight terminals in Buhan, Zhengzhou, and Changsha radiate in all directions. The Chang Jiang and the Huang He run across the region from west to east. Shipping on the Han Shui, Xizang Shui, Zi Shui, Yuan Shui, Feng Shui and other tributaries of the Chang Jiang is well developed. Thanks to the development of the transport network, central China has become the crossroads of the country, and its economic development can radiate in different directions. It is an outlet for transporting grain from south to north, a transfer station for shipping coal from north to south, and a network for transmitting electric power from west to east. Wuhan City, historically known as the "thoroughfare to nine provinces," remains a much-used inland commercial port in China today.

A geological survey shows that in central China there are over 100 minerals useful for industrial development, and the deposits of most of these minerals rank first on the country's list. For example, proven deposits of coal, oil, natural gas, and bauxite in Henan Province place seventh, sixth, third and second in the country respectively. Reserves of phosphorus, rutile, woolastonite, and marlite in Hubei province all occupy first place in the country, and its deposits of iron, copper, gypsum, halite, gold, limestone, and fire clay rank sixth. Hunan Province enjoys a great reputation as a "land of nonferrous metals" and its reserves of wolfram, bismuth, antimony, and fluorite rank first in the country. In addition to its abundant waterpower resources, it is conducive to building industries whose manufacture entails high energy consumption by the state.

Describing central China as China's granary is an apt appraisal. The Jianghan plain in Hubei Province and the Dongtinghu area in Hunan Province are usually called the "land of fish and rice." There is a saying that "two crops a year in both Hunan and Hubei can meet the needs of the whole country." Henan Province, situated in the south of the north China great plain, is rich in wheat, cotton and soya bean. Central China covers only 5.8 percent of the country's area, but its grain output in 1984 made up one fifth of the nation's total output; cotton output constituted 26 percent; and the gross output value of agriculture accounted for nearly 14 percent.

Thanks to rural reform carried out in recent years, the rural economy in central China has been moving toward specialization and large-scale commodity production from a small-scale peasant economy. Developed agriculture has provided highly favorable conditions for developing a variegated economy.

Central China has been built into an industrial base for steel, nonferrous metals, machine-building, power, textile, coal, oil, and building materials. Its industrial output value in 1985 was over 90 billion yuan, accounting for 12 percent of the nation's total. The well-known heavy machine-building base in Luoyang, the industrial base for textile and machine-building in Zhengzhou, the industrial base for steel, ship-building and machine-building in Wuhan, and the industrial base for motor vehicles in Shiyan are all located in central China. A number of large construction projects, such as the Zhongyuan oil field and the Yuxi coal base, will start very soon. Meanwhile, the Gezhou dam power station, the largest in the country, has basically been completed.

With expanded industrial production, a rural economy network is taking shape with the backing of the largest city, Wuhan, and other large cities such as Zhengzhou, Luoyang, Zhuzhou, and Changsha, as well as 40 small and medium-sized cities. The network includes three city groups such as the Zhengzhou-Luoyang-Wuhan City group and the Changsha-Zhuzhou-Xiangtan City group.

Scientific, technological and educational undertakings are fairly developed in central China. There are more than 120 universities and colleges with an enrollment of 200,000 students, and over 1,200 scientific research offices with a total of 1.36 million scientists and technicians.

This has all laid a good foundation in the material and technological fields for economic development in central China. Through an analysis of the aforementioned situation, experts believe that the three provinces and one city in central China, have paved the way for shifting the focus of the nation's economic development to the region. A top priority task is to make concerted efforts to adopt strategies and measures for economic development which are compatible with the actual situation of the region.

To Effect Full Cooperation in Developing Central China

After analyzing the present situation in central China, experts believe that central China combines the advantages of all the economic zones in potential and strength and enjoys comprehensive superiority in resources, technology, energy, water resources, communications, science, and so on. In order to make rational use of the objective production factors, the three provinces and one city in central China must develop "east-west convection," effect "mutual supplementing of production factors," and strengthen horizontal economic ties between the eastern and western part of China, so as to spur development of the region. As central China is in the center of commodity exchanges for the whole country, developing commodity and material exchanges with every key city in all directions will be conducive to its economic and technological cooperation with the outside world and the expansion of its markets.

Therefore, some experts have proposed: Make use of the Chang Jiang and base central China on Wuhan to promote the introduction of advanced foreign technology and strengthen cooperation with units in the interior; take as an aim the bolstering of central China's economic strength so as to vigorously develop the Chang Jiang and its tributaries together with southwest China; and develop interregional trade. With a view to achieving this strategic objective, we must adopt two countermeasures: First, implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world in Wuhan, maintaining river and sea transportation there and making it a commercial port opening up to both foreign countries and other parts of the country, and creating the biggest trading port in central China and the interior; second, relax transportation policies to promote economic ties within the region and with other regions.

Experts have pointed out that for a long time, under the administrative structure of departments and regions at different levels, every province and city followed the practice of "being big and complete" and "small but complete" centering on self-circulation, thereby seriously restricting the display of the overall superiority of central China. For example, although Wuhan has many schools of higher learning, scientific and technological units, and all kinds of talented people, and although its scientific and technological strength ranks third among major cities in the country after Beijing and Shanghai, its overall superiority is not noticed, its scientific inventions are not outstanding taking the country as a whole, and it is less advanced than other localities in applied technology. Another example, despite its transportation superiority, is how central China has many goods in transit but few of its own. Notwithstanding its superiority, central China has not yet properly developed its natural resources. Therefore, in developing the economy, every province and city should not by any means neglect economic combination. Only by strengthening horizontal economic ties and making regions both cooperate with and supplement each other can central China produce greater overall economic results and serve "as a link" between the eastern and western parts of China.

In order to promote the alliance of the three provinces and one city in central China, some economists have proposed the breaking of the administrative boundaries of provinces and cities to establish a central China economic zone. Thus, a joint conference of all the provincial governors and mayors of the three provinces can form a coordinating organization to supplement each other with needed resources, and to develop reciprocal trade. They can hold consultations about issues of common interest such as jointly developing transportation and communications, setting up circulation, finance, and foreign trade networks, and so on. Meanwhile, consideration can be given to establishing a multilevel "association for cooperation between trades" to promote economic combination; opening up commodity and labor service markets in the three provinces and one city to effect reasonable accommodation of capital; developing the exchange of scientific and technological information; and jointly exploiting water and mineral resources, harnessing lakes and rivers so as to complement each other and bring fully into play every locality's advantages in industry, agriculture, science, technology, and so on.

Everything is ready and all that we need is an east wind. In the next 5 to 10 years China has decided to stress building up energy and raw material industries in central China while accelerating development in the eastern part of the country. Undoubtedly, this message caused a great shock wave in the three provinces and one city in central China. The symposium on economic development strategies held for the first time by members of economic circles in central China serves only as a prelude to the establishment and prosperity of the economic zone. In the immediate future, people can see that central China will play an important role on China's economic stage.

MACROECONOMIC MANAGEMENT, OPENING UP OUTLINED

HK110727 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 3 Feb 86 p 5

[Article by Zheng Ning, Han Jidong, and Tang Jianyu: "Strengthen Macroeconomic Management, Promote Economic Opening Up to the Outside World"]

[Text] Strengthen Macroeconomic Management Over the Work of Opening Up the Economy to the Outside World

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, China has attained great success in implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world.

However, lack of experience and failure of macroeconomic management to keep pace with the situation have also given rise to some problems. We should conscientiously study countermeasures and strengthen macroeconomic management in order to stimulate the sound development of opening up to the outside world.

Strengthening macroeconomic management over the work of opening up the economy to the outside world is aimed at solving current existing problems. Fundamentally speaking, it is also the objective demand of developing the socialist planned commodity economy. The extensive development of the socialist commodity economy may also lead to certain disorder in production. It is therefore necessary to carry out planned guidance and adjustment, as well as necessary administrative management. The more the economy is invigorated, the greater importance we should attach to macroeconomic management. Opening up the economy to the outside world is an organic component of the socialist planned commodity economy. It is likewise necessary to have the overall situation of the national economic development in mind and, in line with the requirements of the planned commodity economy, to apply various management methods and economic levers to strengthen macroeconomic regulation and unified planning in the work of opening up the economy.

It is also necessary to keep this in mind to correctly handle various complex relationships in opening up the economy, such as relationship between various open cities and zones in the coastal areas, relationships between these open cities and zones and the vast interior, relationships between the eastern, central, and western regions, relationships between imports and exports, relationships between using foreign capital and importing technology on the one hand and developing the national economy on the other, relationships between the long- and short-term strategic objectives of opening up the economy, and relationships between centralism and decentralization in foreign economic work and trade. In this way is it possible to conform the work of opening up the economy to the general requirement of developing the national economy and to develop foreign economic work and trade in a balanced and steady way. It is also necessary to point out that foreign economic work is, to a large extent, a point on which both the socialist and capitalist economies converge. Its development is restricted not only by the development of the domestic economy but also by the development of, and changes in, the international economy. In order to bring into full play our strong points, to steer clear of our weaknesses, and to take the initiative, it is also necessary, on the basis of stepping up the work of investigating, analyzing, and scientifically forecasting the international economic situation and the world market, to strengthen macroeconomic management over the work of opening up the economy.

Some Problems We Should Concentrate on Solving While Strengthening Macroeconomic Management

In our view, in order to strengthen macroeconomic management over the work of opening up the economy, it is necessary to proceed from the overall situation of national economic development and to concentrate on solving the following problems:

I. The development scope of the work of opening up the economy should be confined within a proper limit so that it can be suited to the development of the national economy.

1. Basing ourselves on the overall situation of national economic development and the financial capability of the state, we should correctly define the investment scope of economic and technological development and construction in the special economic zones and open coastal cities and zones.

Some time ago, there was excessive growth in the scope of investment in fixed assets and the contradiction between aggregate supply and aggregate demand was acute. Under the circumstances, it is necessary to properly control the investment scope of economic and technological development and construction in open coastal cities and zones and to concentrate our financial and material resources on the development and construction of key localities and projects.

2. It is necessary to correctly define the scope of using foreign capital and importing technology in line with our capability to earn foreign exchange through exports and to coordinate domestic funds and goods. The scope of using foreign capital and importing technology depends not only on our capability to digest and absorb foreign capital and technology but also on our ability to meet international payments and to coordinate domestic funds and goods. Regarding our ability to meet international payments, we must define the amount of foreign capital to be used on the basis of achieving a balance between international receipts and payments and maintaining a proper amount of foreign exchange reserve; we must also regard the work of increasing foreign exchange earnings through exports as a basis in opening up the economy. Moreover, the import of foreign capital should generally be coordinated with domestic funds and goods. For this reason, for a certain period the amount of foreign capital that can be used is also restricted by our ability to coordinate the necessary domestic funds and goods. Therefore, we should take into consideration foreign exchange receipts and payments and the comprehensive balance between funds and goods, satisfactorily handle the relationship between necessity and possibility, and define the proper scope of foreign capital to be used and technology to be imported. Only in this way can we attain good results.

II. It is necessary to correctly handle regional economic relationships in opening up to the outside world and to do a good job of rationally distributing the economy and technology. The regional economic relationships in opening up to the outside world are chiefly manifested in the relationships between the economically developed coastal areas in eastern China and the central and western regions, between the open coastal cities and the vast hinterland, and between the open coastal cities and zones on the one hand and the special economic zones on the other. In handling these regional economic relationships, we should abide by the principles of giving play to the superiority of each region, making allowance for the gaps between different regions, giving play to their strong points, steering clear of their weaknesses, laying particular emphasis on certain aspects, having a rational division of labor, and coordinating closely with one another. On the one hand, we should pay attention to arousing and bringing into play the initiative of various regions so that they can develop their foreign economic and trade relations in light of their superiorities and according to the times and local conditions. On the other hand, we should strengthen overall planning and centralized leadership and define different development priorities and targets for different regions in light of the different economic and technological levels between different regions and according to the principle of rationally distributing productive forces. In developing foreign economic relations, it is necessary to strengthen combination and cooperation between different regions.

III. Conscientious efforts should be made to improve economic results in using foreign capital, importing technology, and conducting foreign trade. Achievements in opening up cannot be judged solely by quantity or by a single aspect. They should be comprehensively judged from various aspects, such as quantity and quality, micro and macro points of view, and economy and society. To improve the macroeconomic results, we should correctly guide the investment direction of foreign capital so that the use of foreign capital and the import of technology can be combined with efforts to develop export trade, to improve foreign exchange earning capability, to raise our technological level, and to improve and adjust the structure of the national economy, as well as the structure of import and export trade.

Ways and Means of Strengthening Macroeconomic Management

The ways and means of strengthening macroeconomics are different in different periods. At the moment, they are chiefly as follows:

1. We should work out national plans for using foreign capital and importing technology on an industry or department basis. Then, based on these plans, we should work out regional plans for various open cities and zones. Next we should work out phased plans according to the development targets in different phases. Industrial plans, regional plans, and phased plans must be defined according to the long- and short-term strategic targets of national economic development. The principal task of the national industrial plans is to make unified arrangements for the technological transformation and import tasks and measures for some key industries or departments vital to the overall situation of national economic development, to clearly define the development orientation and regional distribution of various key industries or departments, and to call for a high degree of unity and self-discipline. The principal task of the regional plans and phased plans is to arrange the development tasks and measures in a certain region or phase. Both plans should submit themselves to the requirements of the industrial or departmental plans. Moreover, we should pay attention to the actual conditions in various regions and departments and allow numerous development patterns and targets.

2. We should adopt various policy measures, such as dealing with each case on its merits, selecting and supporting the superior ones, giving specific encouragement, and placing certain restrictions. It is necessary to adopt proper policy measures to restrict those projects which have been imported in duplicate, which yield low socioeconomic results, and which are blindly developed despite the lack of necessary conditions. However, it is necessary to adopt appropriate preferential measures to encourage the open zones with relatively good conditions, the industries or departments the development of which should be given top priority, and the projects which are technologically advanced, which have remarkable ability to earn foreign exchange, and which can yield better economic results. We should make full use of economic levers, such as pricing, credit, taxation, foreign exchange, interest rates, tax rates, and exchange rates, to increase foreign exchange earnings through exports, to improve the export structure, and to reduce the costs of commodities exported for foreign exchange. At the same time, we should adjust the import structure, bring excessive imports of high-grade consumer goods and parts under control, and improve the economic results in using foreign exchange. It is necessary to step up the building of the legal system and to strengthen the functions of the legal means in order to overcome such phenomena as having no laws to go by and failing to observe the laws. At the same time, it is also necessary to correctly handle the inconsistencies between existing policies and relevant regulations and to solve the contradiction characterized by various judiciary departments and management organs acting on their own and their failure to coordinate among themselves.

3. We should vigorously establish an interlocking network of economic and technological information involving foreign trade, finance, banking, economic commission, planning commission, foreign economic relations and trade commission, and other departments concerned. This economic and technological information network should be highly efficient, have multiple functions, and fan out in all directions. Not only should it exchange economic and technological information between various open cities, regions, and departments, but it should also study and forecast the international economy and market and conduct various activities, such as conducting an investigation or consulting services among foreign investors. In this way it can serve the work of opening the economy to the outside world in various open coastal cities and zones and the interior.

4. It is necessary to reform the economic administrative system and to strengthen the necessary centralized management. There are a few problems and contradictions either in the use of foreign capital, the import of technology, foreign trade, or the foreign exchange management system. This finds concentrated expression in excessive centralized management, administrative intervention, and management departments and levels, thus fettering the initiative of the localities and enterprises. Moreover, numerous departments at various levels have their own decision-making power, thus bringing about the problem of numerous departments borrowing money, importing technology, and carrying out foreign trade on their own. In order to solve these problems, it is necessary to continue a comprehensive and well-coordinated reform of the administrative system. While extending the competence of various localities and departments in using foreign capital and importing technology, we should apply various management methods and economic levers in order to strengthen indirect control. While bringing into full play the initiative of various trade, we should adhere to the principle of developing a unified approach in our external dealings and strengthen necessary centralized management. On the basis of upholding centralized and unified management over foreign exchange, we should reform the existing foreign exchange planned management system, administrative system, and operation and management system. We should arouse the initiative of various localities in earning foreign exchange through exports by appropriately increasing their foreign exchange retention ratios and expanding their powers in using foreign exchange. We should also strengthen macroeconomic control and correctly guide the use of foreign exchange in order to attain better economic results in using foreign exchange.

PLANNING FOR FOUR MODERNIZATIONS DISCUSSED

HK130801 Beijing QUN YAN in Chinese No 1, 7 Jan 86 pp 21-23

[Article by Feng Zhijun, deputy director of the Shanghai Institute of Science Study: "Study Strategic Plans, Offer Advice to the Great Cause of the Four Modernizations" -- a speech delivered at a meeting held by democratic parties and the Federation of Industry and Commerce to commend advanced collectives and individuals in serving the four modernizations program]

[Text] As a research worker in the soft sciences who regards strategic planning as a field of study, I have joined research into several strategic plans in recent years and have attained positive social benefits in providing the leading departments with scientific bases and reference material for policy decisions.

First, strategic studies have become an important aspect in offering advice to the cause of the four modernizations.

With the development of production, the advance of science and technology, and the growth of the economy, modern social activities have been provided with new characteristics. The scale of social activities is larger, their changes more rapid, and their influence more extensive. A situation whereby "a slight move in one part may affect the situation as a whole, and an error the breadth of a single hair can lead one a thousand li astray" has emerged. The characteristics of modern social activities have brought about great changes in social macrocontrol mechanisms, making it necessary to give priority to strategic studies.

That is why there has been an "intense popular interest in strategic studies" in the world in recent years. From different angels and by different methods people have engaged in multi-pattern and multilevel strategic studies in various fields, such as economics, science and technology, and education, at the global, state, regional, and enterprise levels.

Many new branches of learning have emerged, such as "developmental economics" specializing in the strategy of developing countries, "growth economics" specializing in the strategy of developed countries, the "science of enterprise strategy" specializing in the development strategy of enterprises, and "global strategic studies" specializing in the development strategy of the world as a whole. We can thus see that strategic studies have drawn the universal attention of all countries.

In China's socialist modernization drive, all business develops and flourishes. With the four modernizations task so formidable, the time so short, and the scale so large, it is even more necessary to have the support of strategic research. Comrade Chen Yun pointed out: I think we still need people to "walk with measured steps" and to take the whole situation into account. Our economic institutions should have groups of such strategists. It can thus be seen that the CPC Central Committee attaches great importance to research and strategic consulting. The State Council and local authorities have set up numerous forms of strategic research institutions. These institutions have attained gratifying results in their own fields of study and have vigorously stimulated the development of China's strategic studies.

Science study is a very vast field. In line with the need of social development and my own qualifications, I have selected as the focus of my studies the "theory, methods, and practice of strategic studies." I actively engage in strategic studies, applying the method of alternating natural science and social science, and adhering to the principle of integrating qualitative with quantitative analyses, foreign with national conditions, and national traditions with modern science. I firmly believe that there are bright prospects for strategic studies in China.

Second, study strategic plans and offer advice to the cause of the four modernizations.

In recent years I have participated in, and presided over, research into strategic plans. I have been responsible for various research projects, such as "overall pattern for Shanghai's technological transportation in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period;" "structure and benefit of investment in China's intellectual resources;" "studies on the new technological revolution and Shanghai's strategic countermeasures;" and "Shanghai in the year 2000." The "overall pattern for Shanghai's technological transformation in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period" was listed as a research topic by the State Council's technological and economic center and, after appraisal, was accepted by the Shanghai Municipal Planning Commission, Economic Commission, and Science and Technology Commission. In the "studies on the new technological revolution and Shanghai's strategic countermeasures" we submitted a study on developing Shanghai's economy with the readjustment of the production structure as the core. This was accepted by the leading department concerned. The research into the "structure and benefit of investment in China's intellectual resources" was conducted at the request of the State Council's Education, Science, Culture, and Public Health Committee. In our study we put forward a "benefit pattern for investment in China's intellectual resources" and provided a basis for policy decisions regarding the investment in, and the ratio of, educational expenditure.

Moreover, in developing and reforming education, we submitted a consultancy reported entitled "Several Questions on the Reform of Higher Education as Viewed from the Development of Modern Science and Technology," which was well received by some central leading comrades. One of the leading comrades concerned wrote the following instruction: "After reading this material, the Secretariat thinks it is pretty good. The policy research center of the Secretariat is advised to study it and to see whether it is acceptable."

In the course of making a medium-term policy decision on the Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex, I worked as a member of the complex's advisory group under the leadership of Professor Li Guohao.

We submitted a study entitled "Follow-up Policy on the Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex Project." This study drew the attention of the relevant quarters and some of its basic concepts have been accepted.

In doing strategic research, we have always adhered to the principle of attaining excellent economic results as a whole. By and large, the objects of strategic planning are very complicated. Therefore, when doing research, we should have strategic foresight, the ability to make a systematic analysis and review, and pioneering spirit. Strategic foresight calls for firm and revolutionary objectives and realistic steps. A pioneering spirit calls for the continuous elimination of outdated concepts, the establishment of innovative ones, and the constant development of the new situation. The ability to make a systematic analysis and review, however, calls for the establishment of an overall point of view in order to attain the best overall results.

For a long time people have paid attention only to the constant improvement of departments, units, and components. They consistently believe that by turning out good components and accumulating them, it is definitely possible to get a complete whole. This method of thinking may still be desirable under the small production conditions characterized by a small-scale social activities and a small number of units. However, this "simple addition" type of thinking is harmful when the social activities scale is larger, their changes more rapid, and their influence more extensive.

Practice tells us: Although the quality of our components, units, or departments is good, an irrational structure may lead to a heavy loss in the overall results of the system. Conversely, if the structural design is rational, we shall still be able to attain good economic results as a whole, even though the component performance is not quite perfect. Naturally, reliable components and a rational structure will yield better economic results as a whole. We can thus see that it is difficult to attain the best overall results by paying attention only to components and not to structure. This makes it necessary for us, when engaging in large-scale strategic research involving rapid changes and extensive influence, to attach importance not only to the planning of components, units, and departments but, more importantly, to a systematic and macroanalysis of the structure. Only when we have a rational structure is it possible to attain the best overall results.

In drawing up city or regional strategic plans, it is necessary to stress the analysis of the overall structure. If a city or a locality intends to achieve quadruplications, does it mean all departments and trades of the city or locality should indiscriminately achieve quadruplication? If all departments or trades are urged to achieve quadruplication uniformly, quadruplication, taken as a whole, may not be achieved; it will get worse and worse as attempts are made, because the development levels of the departments or trades are uneven. The objective or quadruplication can be achieved as a whole only when rational plans are worked out. For example, key development trades are encouraged to achieve more than a four-fold increase, subsidiary development trades to achieve less than that amount of increase, and ordinary development trades to achieve quadruplication. Trades kept at the present development level are not allowed to aim at quadruplication, and trades which ought to be abolished or shifted to other types of production are even permitted negative growth. In this way an overall rational structure can be achieved and all trades can be developed in a coordinated way. In our study of Shanghai's economic development strategy, we have concentrated on the analysis of the overall structure. Production patterns in Shanghai have been irrational for quite some time. Central leaders pointed out: China has typically labor-intensive, capital-intensive, and knowledge-and-technology-intensive trades. However, they are highly disproportionate. Shanghai's present ratio of trades of these three types is 4:4:1. Because of irrational production patterns, Shanghai has many serious problems such as obsolete equipment, aging technologies, shortage of energy and funds, overexpansion of population, and environmental pollution.

To invigorate and transform Shanghai, it is necessary to readjust and gradually rationalize production patterns in accordance with the principle of attaining excellent economic results as a whole. At present the State Council has approved the strategic objective of Shanghai's economic development, namely, turning Shanghai into an open, modern economic center with rational production patterns and multiple functions. The formulation and implementation of this strategic objective will certainly attain very satisfactory economic results as a whole.

Over the last few years, in collaboration with related comrades, I have been writing theoretical treatises and lectures on strategic studies, apart from studying topics concerning strategic planning. Such works as "Soft Science," "Fundamentals of Science Study," "Fundamentals of Leadership Science," "Modernization and Science Study," and "Leadership and Strategy," have been published in succession. At the same time, I also made reports, by invitation, to the vast numbers of leading cadres and scientific and technological personnel of the "study class for party government cadres," "study class for mayors throughout the country," "study class for Army commanders throughout the Army, and of 21 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions. Moreover, I went to Mexico, the United States, and the FRG by invitation to conduct academic and teaching tours.

Third, organizations involved in the united front work should take strategic consulting as one of the important tasks of "democratic consultation" work.

Consulting has existed since time immemorial. As it is today, consulting work has become a multi-tier, multi-channel, and multi-form research undertaking. In terms of its nature, content, and scope, generally speaking, consulting work can be divided into strategic consulting, technical consulting, engineering consulting, and management consulting. As far as organizations involved in the united work front are concerned, as I see it, strategic consulting should be given first priority. The reasons for my argument are as follows:

First, judging from the tasks of organizations involved in the united front work, their fundamental tasks, whether to carry forward the four modernizations program, to achieve the reunification of the motherland, to oppose hegemonism, or to safeguard world peace are a comprehensive topic which is of overall and strategic importance. Furthermore, these fundamental tasks are centered on carrying forward the four modernizations program and accelerating the liberation of productive forces, because without a high growth of productive forces and vigorous development of economic construction, it will be unable to fulfill the other tasks. Therefore, in doing their consultancy work, organization involved in united front work should put strategic consultancy in first place, study the strategic matters relating to the coordinated development of science and technology and economics on the one hand and society on the other, and explore the study of regional comprehensive development and related comprehensive policies. The conducting of consultancy work in this category is undoubtedly of great use in carrying out "democratic consultation and supervision" in-depth work, extending the influence of the united work front, and in creating a new situation in the united work front.

Second, viewed from the actual conditions of organizations involved in the united work front, they have an abundance of capable people who have mastered complete multi-disciplinary sciences, have rich experience, and are highly patriotic. Just as Comrade Deng Yingchao said: "We must see the important role nonparty personages play. They are relatively knowledgeable and have extensive social connections and influence as well as fairly rich political experience." Therefore, with their superior talent, organizations involved in the united work front can most favorably provide comprehensive strategic consulting services, fostering strengths and circumventing weaknesses, bringing their favorable conditions into play, and in suggesting ways and means for the general principles and policies of the four modernizations.

Third, in terms of the developments of consulting work carried out by organizations involved in the united work front over the last few years, great achievements have been made in consulting work in organizations involved in the united work front since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Many of them have been in the strategic consultancy category.

In brief, both the time and conditions are ripe for organizations involved in the united work front to carry out strategic consulting work. So long as they strengthen leadership, have a clear orientation of endeavor, work out plans, and continuously review experience, they will surely achieve gratifying results in their strategic consultancy work.

REGULATIONS ON HIGHER EDUCATION FOR ADULTS

OW141301 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0806 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 14 Feb (XINHUA) -- The State Education Commission and the Ministry of Finance recently issued a joint document, setting specific regulations for nationwide unified enrollment of adult students by schools of higher learning in 1986.

The "regulations" point out that enrollment of adult students by various schools of higher learning in 1986 will be handled in a unified manner throughout the country. The State Education Commission will set unified questions, time, and evaluation criteria for the test. Various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities will organize the test and grading of test papers in a unified manner and set mininum points for admission. Various schools will enroll students according to the results.

The "regulations" say: All kinds of schools of higher learning for adults set up with the approval of various provincial, autonomous regional, municipal, and city governments or ministries and commissions under the State Council and registered with the approval of the former Ministry of Education or the State Education Commission through their respective channels for the national plan of enrollment of adults for higher education. Those schools include radio and TV universities, advanced vocational schools for staff members and workers, advanced agricultural schools for peasants, institutes for the training of management cadres, teachers' colleges (advanced schools for teachers), specialized classes and correspondent classes for cadres and teachers sponsored by independent correspondence colleges and regular schools of higher learning, night universities, and other schools of higher learning for adults which provide professional or regular college level training for staff members and workers who are released from their work for more than 2 years or study in their spare time for more than 3 years. The state will not recognize diplomas issued by those schools which enroll students independently.

The adult students applying for admission to various schools of higher learning must possess an educational level of senior middle school graduate or the equivalent.

The age of those who apply for release or partial release from their work in order to take part in study must be under 40. Staff members and workers on their jobs should apply to study related subjects and be reviewed and approved by their respective units. There will be no age limit or working years limit for those who apply for study in their spare time. However, they should also be reviewed and obtain written comments from their respective units. Intellectual youth and individual workers who apply for the unified test should be reviewed and obtain written comments from local township governments (or neighborhood committees).

Staff members and workers on the job who apply for release or partial release from their work for study at workers' universities or workers' sparetime universities must have more than 2 years of work experience.

The correspondence departments and night colleges run by regular schools of higher learning will mainly enroll staff members and workers on the job. They may also admit intellectual youth but the state will not be responsible for assigning jobs to them after graduation. They will be employed by requiring units on their own merits.

Cadres on the job who apply for studying at institutes for the training of management cadres or cadres training class run by regular schools of higher learning must have 5 years of work experience.

Staff members and workers who apply for release or partial release from their work to study at radio and TV universities should have more than 2 years of work experience. Radio and TV universities may also admit intellectual youth, but the state will not be responsible for assigning jobs to them after graduation. They will be employed by relevant units on their own merits.

Advanced teachers' colleges and institutes (advanced schools for teachers) will admit only teachers of various kinds of secondary schools and a small number of cadres in charge of educational administration.

The regular and special classes run by regular schools of higher learning and teachers' institutes will admit teachers who have been on their jobs for more than 5 years at various kinds of secondary schools and a small number of cadres in charge of educational administration who will be released or partially released from their jobs.

Students who are currently studying at various schools and whose academic records will be recognized by the state on graduation will not be eligible for studying at various schools of higher learning for adults.

The "regulations" point out: The scope of questions in the current test will be within the "review program for the national enrollment of adult students by various schools of higher learning in 1986," formulated by the State Education Commission. Subjects for the test will be classified in two main categories. One for industrial agricultural, and medical subjects, and the other for literary and historical subjects. Individuals who take part in the test will be notified of their test results. However, results will not be publicly announced, nor will checking of test papers be allowed.

The "regulations" emphatically point out that no schools of higher learning for adults are allowed to admit provisional students or auditors.

The "regulations" call on all units to firmly oppose and resist all kinds of unhealthy practices, such as favoritism, fraud, or "getting in by the back door." Cases in violation of law and discipline in enrollment must be seriously investigated by various localities, and the responsibility for such wrongdoings must be affixed. Admission will be withdrawn if students are accepted in violation of the regulations and the violation is proved after investigation.

The dates of examination of this year's enrollment of adult students by schools of higher learning are 10 and 11 May.

RENMIN RIBAO CARRIES WENYI BAO ARTICLE ON LU XUN

HK180314 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Feb 86 p 1

[Article by Chen Shuyu, reprinted from 1 February WENYI BAO: "Do Not Lightly Disparage Lu Xun"]

[Text] Lu Xun was a great and modest man. He believed that there was no perfect man or book, including his own literary creations and theories. To make an analysis of Lu Xun or even criticize him has never been prohibited. His viewpoints, if biased, are open to question, and the historical facts, if wrongly recorded, can be revised. If the critics can hit the nail on the head and suit the medicine to the illness, Lu Xun would feel contented even in the nether regions.

To disparage Lu Xun willfully in a frivolous manner is diametrically opposed to normal academic research and literary criticism. It is not at all surprising for disparaging remarks to come from enemies. If disparaging remarks about Lu Xun come from our own ranks and appear in revolutionary papers and periodicals, we cannot regard it as a normal phenomenon. We must give guidance to put the matter right.

Remarks disparaging Lu Xun have emerged time and again over the past 2 years or so. During the spring and autumn of 1984, when some newspapers criticized a young writer for plagiarizing literary masterpieces, someone courageously defended him saying: "In an analogy of this, can we say that Lu Xun plagiarized Gogol's 'Save the Children?'" Consequently, the demarcation line between "use for reference" and "plagiarize" was obscured and Lu Xun became one of the plagiarists. Last May, an associate professor issued an article in ZA WEN BAO [JOURNAL OF SHORT ESSAYS] saying that "it is imaginative" rather than "a great mistake" to translate "the Milky Way" into the "milk way." He brought up the old scores of Lu Xun criticizing Zhao Jingshen's translation theory which "preferred smoothness to trueness" "half a century ago" in an attempt to prove that Lu Xun's remarks "were not always correct," though Professor Zhao Jingshen admitted the mistake he made from 1931 to 1983 in translating "the Milky Way" into the "milk way."

The disparaging remarks about Lu Xun reached a "high tide" in August last year. On 6 August, ZA WEN BAO carried an article by Li Bushi entitled "Why Should Lu Xun Be Quoted So Often?" Which said: "Whenever short essays are discussed, Lu Xun's name is mentioned in every chapter and paragraph." He raised an alarm: "Having been exposed to so much Lu stuff, I am afraid I might have become Lu Xun-ized." Deriding Lu Xun's cultural legacy as "Lu stuff" and calling being influenced by Lu Xun's theories and writings "Lu Xun-ized" are really "unprecedented" in the study of Lu Xun over the past 80 years. Everyone knows that Lu Xun was the founder of the modern Chinese essay, and his essays are the quintessence of this field. The link between short essays and Lu Xun resembles that between the Renaissance and Dante, Boccaccio, Petrarch, and other precursors of that period. Why should this be surprising?

If Li Bushi's disparaging remarks about Lu Xun are just abuse, an article entitled "On Lu Xun's Creative Profession" published by the magazine QINGHAI HU [QINGHAI LAKE] the same month added a thin theoretical veil to the disparaging remarks about Lu Xun. The article provided a grim picture of Lu Xun's "creative profession." It said: During the "period of preparation" (1906-1919), Lu Xun's "literary career was unsuccessful" because his works in those days were "experimental and exploratory." During the "creative period" (1918-1925), he produced only four or five stories, which was not particularly impressive. The 1924-1936 period was a "period of decline" in Lu Xun's creativity, during which he wrote essays "primarily for the purpose of feeding himself." His involvement in translation was "a failure." The only thing worthy of the name of creation was his "Stories Newly Told," "which, however, has little artistic value."

For people with a minimum of common sense, it is completely unnecessary to refute these arguments individually. The appearance of these disparaging remarks about Lu Xun is not accidental. These remarks show that some people considered it quite stylish to be fastidious about "teeny-weeny bits of dust" on heroes' bodies, and to dig out any "redeemable intuitive knowledge" from villians, with the mistaken idea that slinging mud at Lu Xun was a "fashionable," heroic undertaking. Moreover, the editors of certain papers and journals, in order to have greater "economic returns," were particularly fond of publishing sensational articles, thinking them an effective means of increasing their readership. That was why they were interested in publishing anything which either mythologized Lu Xun (like "Mao Zedong's Courtesy Call on Lu Xun") or cooked up false charges of Lu Xun's "crimes." The infiltration of certain misconceptions from overseas was also a cause not to be overlooked. As far as researchers of Lu Xun's works are concerned, the argument in the article "On Lu Xun's Creative Profession" was nothing but a rehash of what had already been written.

We are glad to see that the disparaging remarks about Lu Xun have evoked strong repercussions among the comrades in the literary circles. They believe that the rich cultural legacy and thought created by Lu Xun through unremitting struggles all his life are a treasure of China's cultural heritage as well as the Chinese people's precious contribution to world culture. The study of Lu Xun should be an organic component of the strategic study of China's socialist cultural construction. According to the Greek myth, there was a man called Tantalus who stood in a stream until the water rose to his throat. But he was at the end of his wits and did not know how to quench his thirst. This story gives much food for deep thought to those who disparage Lu Xun on the one hand and advocate the building of socialist spiritual civilization on the other.

PENG ZHEN INSPECTS SHANGHAI ENTERPRISES

[By reporter Chen Maodi]

[Text] Shanghai, 15 Feb (XINHUA) -- Peng Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, inspected Shanghai's Baoshan iron and steel complex and no 1 television assembly plant from 13 to 15 February. He encouraged the cadres and workers to display the self-reliant and hard-working spirit in continuously improving production techniques in order to turn the plants into first-rate modern enterprises.

Comrade Peng Zhen received a warm welcome from the cadres and workers when he visited the Baoshan iron and steel complex on 14 February. During his first inspection tour of the iron and steel complex on 20 January 1980, while still under construction, Peng Zhen said: "The construction of such a large modern enterprise as the Baoshan iron and steel complex is indispensable. It should play an exemplary role in producing good products, accumulating useful experience, and training skilled personnel." Revisiting the complex today 6 years later, Peng Zhen was gratified to see a large modern iron and steel joint enterprise already standing firm as a rock on the banks of the Chang Jiang.

During the day-long inspection tour, Peng Zhen earnestly listened to briefings concerning the construction and production of the complex. He said: "It requires concerted effort by people across the country and vigorous support from all trades and professions in building such a large enterprise as the Baoshan complex." Turning to the subject of conducting strict operational and technical training among the staff members and workers, Peng Zhen stressed: "This is a very important field. Strengthening the sense of organization and discipline is an important matter concerning the quality of the nation." He also inquired about the progress in the second-phase construction of the iron and steel complex and encouraged all staff and workers to do a solid job in the second-phase construction on the basis of smooth progress in the first phase. Then, Peng Zhen toured the raw materials pier, coke plant, no. 1 high furnace, steel mill, preliminary rolling mill, and seamless steel pipes plant. He shook hands with the cadres and workers present on the occasion and wished them successes in the construction. Comrade Peng Zhen also wrote an inscription for the Baoshan iron and steel complex.

On the morning of 15 February, Peng Zhen inspected the Shanghai no. 1 television assembly plant, which manufactures Jinxing brand television sets. While hearing briefings and touring the plant, he praised its successful experience in applying foreign technology and relying on its own strength in producing color television sets. He encouraged the plant staff members and workers to strive to produce more television sets for overseas markets.

On the evening of 15 February, Comrade Peng Zhen met with Shanghai municipal party, government, and Army leaders, as well as veteran comrades.

ANHUI OFFICIAL ON RURAL ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT

OW161415 Hefei Anhui Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Radio talk by Jiang Chunsheng, director of the Anhui Provincial Administration of Rural Enterprises: "Make Overall Planning and Provide Guidance According to the Nature of Operation So That Anhui's Rural Enterprises Can Be Developed Actively, Steadily, and in a Coordinated Manner" -- recorded]

[Text] The general guideline for the development of rural enterprises in Anhui in 1986 is: Make overall planning, provide guidance according to the nature of operation, give priority to major projects, pay attention to economic results, enlist the support of key enterprises, focus on production of lead products [long tou chan pin], and pay special attention to family or neighborhood-operated undertakings so that Anhui's rural enterprises can be developed actively, steadily, and in a coordinated manner. According to this year's plan, Anhui's rural enterprises will turn out 12 billion yuan, make a profit of 1.6 billion yuan, and provide jobs to 4.4 million people in the rural areas. To reach this target, we must do several things well:

1. We must have a consensus on the speed of growth, which is the central issue. Since Anhui's rural enterprises have just started to develop, they do not have to worry about excessive growth. First of all, this is because the development in this area is still slow. In terms of the rural areas' growing social output, proportion of the total output of Anhui's rural enterprises is below the national average, ranking fifth in eastern China. Secondly, Anhui's rural areas abound with surface and underground resources and mineral deposits in many areas have not been tapped. Such being the case, there is still much room for growth. Third, the development of rural enterprises is particularly essential today when the second-step reform is underway, production structure is being realigned, and small towns are appearing in the rural areas. Fourth, the restructuring of the urban economic system also (?calls for faster growth of) the rural enterprises. Thus, no matter from which angle we see the issue, Anhui's rural enterprises should have a faster growth.

2. We must have a better understanding of the course of development. Although located in the countryside, rural enterprises should gear their production to the needs of cities and the market at home and abroad. Since the situation in different places could be vastly different, there should not be only one single way to be followed. Anhui's situation shows that it should give first priority to [words indistinct] by going all out to process agricultural and sideline products into marketable commodities. The second priority should be given to tapping and utilizing Anhui's rich mineral resources in a way appropriate to the local conditions. It should also continue to develop the construction materials industry. The third priority should be given to enlisting the assistance of cities and tapping local potential so that the processing of industrial goods can be (?decentralized). The fourth priority should be given to broadening the ways of developing tertiary industry according to society's needs and provide the masses the needed services, such as garment-making, dining, housing, transportation, and recreational facilities. The fifth priority should be given to investigating the needs of the international market and developing merchandise that can earn foreign exchange. [Words indistinct]

3. We must persist in carrying out reform and effectively improve our management. Anhui now has 870,000 rural enterprises. The management of this fairly large number of rural enterprises must be further improved.

We must have a better plan this year for the production of goods and quality control, improve the management of investment in fixed assets, and institute regulations and rules for quality control and management of the investment in fixed asses. Rural enterprises themselves must improve their management of contract responsibilities in production. Special attention must be paid to three issues in this respect: 1) Choosing the right contractors; 2) improving contract policies and refusing to sign any contracts that benefit individual households at the expense of state and collective interests; and 3) instituting the system of charging directors and managers of enterprises, with the exception of the very small ones, to be responsible for the performance of their enterprises. [Sentences indistinct]

4. We should provide guidance and the needed services according to the nature of operation. This year, we must provide better [words indistinct] and guidance for the development in mountainous areas, [words indistinct], hilly areas, plains, suburbs, and tourist spots. [Sentences indistinct] consider enlivening the rural economy as a major task of protecting the peasants' interests, Anhui's rural enterprises certainly will significantly grow in the future.

FUJIAN DEVELOPS RADIO, TELEVISION SERVICE

OW160617 Fuzhou Fujian Provincial Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, Fujian Province made gratifying progress in radio and television broadcasting. As of the end of 1985, the total transmission power of radio stations in the province increased by 12.5 percent over that of 1980; while the total transmission power of television stations in the province was up 400 percent from 1980. The radio broadcast service reaches 55 percent [as heard] of the province's population, while the television service is available to 77.5 percent of the population.

In the development of radio broadcasting, medium-wave broadcasting, and relay stations, since 1983 the province has expanded relay stations in Fuzhou, Xiamen, Quanzhou, Zhangzhou, Nanping, Sanming, Longyan and two other cities, thus enlarging the coverage of medium-wave broadcasting and giving these cities better reception for the programs of the central and the provincial radio stations.

Wire-broadcasting service covers all urban and rural areas in the province. There are 70 city and county wire broadcast stations, some 59,200 kilometers of wire-broadcasting transmission lines, and some 1.6 million loudspeakers.

Television service has developed even faster. The Xiamen television station and the Fuzhou television station were inaugurated in 1983 and 1984 respectively. The television and FM relay stations in Xiamen, Futian and Yunxiao were expanded in 1984. At the same time, the province has built 620 kilometers of microwave tru. line connecting 15 microwave stations in 7 prefectures and cities. Now some relay stations have changed the plug-in relay method [cha zhuang fang shi] to microwave transmission and thus improved the relay quality. The provincial television station has continuously improved its program production. Now it has 30 color television cameras, 12 electronic editing systems, and equipment for 24-hour broadcasting on two channels. It has enhanced its program production capability by 380 percent since 1981.

JIANGXI CRACKS ARMS THEFT CASE, ARRESTS CRIMINAL

OW160542 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] After 3 years of investigation, Hengfeng County's extraordinarily serious arms theft case was cracked on 21 December 1985.

The criminal (Chen Xiaoyong) was arrested and brought to justice. On the morning of 14 February, the Shangrao Prefectural Party Committee and Administrative Office held a meeting in Hengfeng County to commend 12 units and 35 personnel that contributed to this case and conferred the title of young security activist on (Guo Jianjun), a pupil of the Peiyang Town No 1 Elementary School in Hengfeng County.

Late in the night of 3 December 1982, the criminal (Chen Xiaoyong) sneaked into the armory of Hengfeng County's People's Armed Forces Department after climbing over a wall and picking a lock and stole four type 56 light machineguns, one type 63 full automatic rifle, and one type 54 pistol. After the theft was discovered, the Hengfeng County Public Security Bureau, under the county party committee's leadership, mobilized the masses to inform against and expose the criminal.

On the afternoon of 14 December 1985, (Guo Jiangjun), a pupil of the Peiyang Town No 1 Elementary School in Hengfeng County, accidentally discovered the stolen arms hidden in the attic of the Hengfeng County movie theater and immediately reported the case to the county Public Security Bureau. As a result, a breakthrough was achieved in the investigation of the case. That same afternoon, carrying a type 55 pistol and three bullets, the criminal (Chen Xiaoyong) fled to (Hencuo) Village in the suburbs of Xiamen City to avoid punishment. On 21 December 1985, he attempted to go to sea and flee to Taiwan to go over to the enemy but was caught by fishermen. The pistol and ammunition he stole were also seized at the same time.

Wang Zhaorong, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial party committee and secretary of the provincial Political and Legal Committee; Shen Shanwen, deputy commander of the provincial Military District; and responsible comrades of the Shangrao prefectural party committee and Administrative Office, the Shangrao Military Subdistrict, the Hengfeng County Party Committee and Government, and the provincial, prefectural and county departments concerned attended the meeting.

Comrade Wang Zhaorong spoke at the meeting. He said: The extraordinarily serious "3 December" arms theft case in Hengfeng County was finally cracked. This proves the power of the party's leadership, the masses, the organs of dictatorship and the legal system. Whoever dares defy the law is ultimately unable to escape the net of justice spread by the people and will be punished in accordance with state law. The appearance of this extraordinarily serious arms theft case once again tells us that under the new circumstances, although class struggle is no longer the principal contradiction at home, there still exist counterrevolutionaries, enemy agents, and criminals who sabotage the socialist order. Therefore, class struggle exists within certain limits. We must keep a clear head and uphold the people's democratic dictatorship. At present, our province's social order has clearly improved, but it has not yet fundamentally taken a turn for the better. We must follow the party Central Committee and the provincial party committee's directives and promote both material and spiritual civilization at the same time. To improve social order, we must deal stern blows to serious criminal activities and economic crimes on the one hand, and enact various measures to maintain security on the other.

SHANDONG CONDUCTS TOWN-LEVEL PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK151354 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Excerpts] In line with the arrangement made by the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification and the provincial CPC Committee, our province has carried out, in an all-round way, the party rectification work at the township and town level since late January this year.

Units that should take up the work this time include the party and government organs of rural townships and towns; the county's enterprises, establishments, and units; the neighborhood party organizations in urban areas; and a number of rural party branches. These units have 710,000 party members.

In carrying out the party rectification work, the province has adopted the experience gained by the prefectures, cities, and counties in this regard and paid great attention, at the beginning, to conducting education on the fundamental purpose of the party under the impetus of the central authorities with regard to consolidating the work style of organs. It has also regarded as a breakthrough the work of straightening out party style, thus bringing about a strong atmosphere in party rectification and a good start in the drive. The city, prefectural, and county party committees have enhanced their leadership over the work and put forward the striking problems that need to be solved in the drive by conducting investigation and studies over the ideology, work style, and organizational status of party members. The leading bodies that have not been suitable in the party rectification work have been readjusted. The province has also trained a number of support personnel in charge of this work. A large number of principal responsible comrades of the county and city party committees have gone to the townships and towns to personally conduct party rectification mobilization, to give guidance to party members' study, and to help them deal with their problems. In order to enhance the guidance over the party rectification work, localities have reinforced their setups in charge of party rectification and have assigned their able cadres to take charge of inspection and liaison work. According to statistics, party organizations at all levels throughout the province have dispatched more than 15,000 personnel in charge of the inspection and liaison work.

In order to ensure that the party rectification work is carried out successfully, the party committees of various localities have adopted some effective measures in line with their own situation for upgrading the quality of study activities and the effect of educational methods.

The striking characteristics cropping up in the party rectification work at the township and town level are the firm and realistic grasp of the work of correcting mistakes while conducting the party rectification drive and the rapid handling of the problems causing serious complaints among the masses. First of all, the units that have taken up the work have vigorously blocked the malpractices of indulging in extravagant wining and dining and presenting gifts using public funds. They have never held receptions for the leading personnel of their higher organs. The comrades who have gone to townships, towns, and villages have never accepted invitations or drunk wine, and have taken ordinary meals and paid for the meals at the standard price. Therefore, they were highly praised by the masses and the local cadres.

Judging from the current situation prevailing in the party rectification work at the township and town level, we should further strengthen leadership over the work. The principal responsible comrades of the county and city party committees must take personal charge of the work, conduct concrete guidance, do a good job in further studying the documents in order to understand the principal problems needing to be dealt with in the drive, and stress practical effects in order to correct the mistakes while conducting the drive. Efforts should be made to conduct education in a down-to-earth manner on party spirit and on the principle of serving the people wholeheartedly, and to closely integrate the work of studying the documents and upgrading the effect of study with that of solving practical problems. We should pay great attention to the problems cropping up among the units of supply and marketing cooperatives, grain supply, banks and credits, industry and commerce, tax affairs, education, public health, post and telecommunications, communications and transportation, and public security.

The township and town party committees should make concerted efforts with the country-level departments in order to do a good job in earnestly carrying out the party rectification drive.

ZHEJIANG NUCLEAR POWER PLANT UNDER CONSTRUCTION

OW120512 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 10 Feb 86

[Excerpts] The construction of China's first self-designed nuclear power plant is speeding up at (Qinshan), Haiyan County, Zhejiang Province. Recently, station reporter (Liu Yijuan) and (Yu Guangfu) visited the construction site at (Qinshan), and sent in a number of reports on construction. The following is one of their reports entitled "Build Up Our Own Contingent by Self-Reliance."

Dear listeners, the (Qinshan) nuclear power project has progressed smoothly since construction first started in June 1984. On the eve of the Spring Festival, these reporters visited the construction site. We witnessed that the concrete shield around the reactor inside the plant's main [words indistinct] building has already risen 8 meters. An 1,800-meter dike to keep out the sea has been basically completed outside the plant compound. A 10-meter thick foundation for the auxiliary building of the first boiler [yi hui lu] has been completed. The steam turbines in the main building for the second boiler [er hui lu] had been installed.

We interviewed (Yu Hongfu), director of China's first nuclear power plant. This young and energetic director has worked in nuclear chemical engineering and nuclear chemical engineering for over 20 years.

He said to these reporters: [Begin recording] "In developing nuclear power, China must rely on its own equipment. This requires us to garner our own practical experience. At the same time, we must absorb advanced foreign technology. The significant benefit in building the (Qinshan) nuclear power plant lies in that it can train our own contingent, enables us to gain experience, and lays a good foundation for China's nuclear industry. In building a 300,000-kilowatt nuclear power plant, using our own design and home-made equipment, we are also building up our own contingent for designing, building, installing, operating, producing equipment for, and managing more nuclear power plants. I can say that if this project succeeds, we can mainly rely on our own strength in building a second or a third nuclear power plant of still larger capacity; and our country can also open up new vistas in the peaceful use of atomic energy." [end recording]

GUANGXI VIGOROUSLY DEVELOPS GOLD MINING EFFORTS

HK141147 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0233 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Nanning, 13 Feb (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- It has been learned from departments concerned that Guangxi has adopted measures to vigorously develop the production of gold in an effort to double the present gold output by the end of the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Guangxi is one of the important gold-producing areas in China, with gold mines widely dispersed over 46 counties and cities within the autonomous region. Its resources are abundant, and include both gangue and alluvial gold. As some old gold mines do not have much potential to tap now after being exploited for several decades, in recent years departments concerned have paid more attention to the prospecting of new mines. It has been learned that ideal new mines have been found in eight counties, including Rongxian County, which is the hometown of many Overseas Chinese. The gold reserves of the biggest mine are around 20 tons. Of these new mines, the Zhanggongling gold and silver mine in Hexian County and Shuitai gold mine in Shangling County have been put on the list of state construction projects. The state has decided to invest 5 million yuan this year in the Zhanggongling gold and silver mine to prepare to construct a mine capable of exploiting 150 tons of deposits per day. The other mines will also be established and put into production one after another in the coming 5 years.

In order to exploit gold mines, Guangxi will continue to encourage peasants to collectively or individually develop scattered small mines. At present there are already over 20,000 peasants in Guangxi engaged in mining gold. With a view to better promoting the production of gold, departments concerned in Guangxi have decided to strengthen control over gold work, including reforming the management structure and setting up central gold ore dressing plants, instituting a system to award miners selling gold to the state, conducting education for miners who hide and sell gold in secret, and severely punishing according to law those lawless persons who illegally purchase, sell, resell, and smuggle gold.

HUBEI REDUCES RURAL MANAGEMENT PERSONNEL NUMBERS

HK131308 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Text] Since 1985, all places in our province have seriously implemented the spirit of the relevant documents of the central authorities and vigorously reduced the number of the rural management personnel to lighten the burden of peasants.

According to statistics, the number of rural economic and general affairs management personnel in the whole province by the end of 1985 was 33,000, some 3,700 less than in the corresponding period of preceding year. Calculated on the basis of each person's annual wages as 600 yuan, the peasants' burden was lightened by at least 2.22 million yuan.

The reduction in the number of district and township general affairs management personnel by Jingzhou Prefecture is the largest. Jingzhou Prefecture originally has some 7,400 general affairs management people and later reduced them by some 1,400. It now has about 6,000 general affairs management people.

The reduction in general affairs management people not only lightens the peasants' burden; the redundant personnel can be sent to reinforce all trades and professions in rural areas. This is beneficial to the promotion of the still faster development of the rural economy.

GUIZHOU MEETING DISCUSSES PRODUCTION PROBLEMS

HK150249 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Excerpts] The provincial people's government held a telephone conference on industrial production on 14 February, which reported on the January production situation and demanded that the staff and workers of the industrial and communications system urgently mobilize and work in concert to promote production as quickly as possible and strive to fulfill the first quarter production tasks. Governor Wang Chaowen and Vice Governor Liu Yulin took part in the meeting and spoke. The meeting pointed out that due to shortages of electric power, fuel, and raw materials, and also to objective reasons, the province failed to achieve the January industrial production plan. It is essential to attach great importance to this situation. All areas and departments must immediately carry out a serious analysis of current industrial production and review experiences and lessons. In particular, they must discover the objective reason, see the favorable factors and the potentials, and study and decide on corresponding effective measures to rapidly promote production. The meeting put forward the following demands on current production:

1. Brace spirits and unify understanding. Comrade Hu Yaobang recently came to Guizhou and delivered instructions on the province's industrial and agricultural production, specifically setting out the province's goals of endeavor in economic development. The cadres at all levels must apply these instructions to unify their thinking.

2. Persevere in reform and further mobilize the enthusiasm of the enterprises and the staff and workers.

3. Focus on the key points. On the basis of getting a clear idea of the situation, it is necessary to arrange work in order of priority and put all measures on a sound basis.

4. Work hard to bring into play the benefits of those projects that have gone into production.

5. Improve leadership style and work efficiency. It is essential to devote great efforts to achieving a better level of production in February and March and ensure a certain growth rate under the premise of improving economic results.

GUIZHOU PEASANTS PER CAPITA INCOME INCREASES

HK130703 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 12 Feb 86

[Excerpts] According to a recent sample survey conducted by the provincial rural sampling survey team on the income and expenditure of 2,240 peasant families in 32 counties, cities, districts, and special districts, including Zunyi, Tongzi, Sinan, Puan, (Hezhang), Yongan, Majiang, Huaxi, and Liuzhi, the per capita income of the peasants in 1985 was 397.58 yuan, and their net per capita income was 287.41 yuan, increases of 12 and 14 percent respectively over 1984.

The survey indicates that, except for a reduction of 13.14 yuan in the per capita income from grain due to the decrease in grain output in 1985 through natural disasters, their income increased over 1984 in forestry, animal husbandry, fishery, the building industry, transport, commerce, the catering industry, service industry, industry, the handicraft industry, and labor services. The peasants' main source of cash income was in selling commodities. Their per capita income from selling grain, pigs, poultry, and eggs alone amounted to 129.58 yuan, an increase of 18.8 percent over 1984. As a result of the development of commodity production, the number of poor households decreased while that of better-off households increased. Of the over 2,000 peasant households surveyed, there are 1,385 households whose per capita income is less than 300 yuan, marking a decrease over 1984, and 855 households whose per capita income is more than 300 yuan, marking an increase over 1984.

GANSU CIRCULAR CALLS FOR FIGHTING DROUGHT

HK160323 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Excerpts] The provincial government recently issued a circular calling on the province to base its spring farming efforts on taking precautions against and fighting drought.

The circular said: There has been very little precipitation since last winter, and temperatures have been higher than normal. Soil moisture is rather low in most places. There is also less water in the reservoirs in the Hexi area than in normal years. Autumn and winter irrigation in some places was not done as well as in the past. At the same time, according to meteorological departments, rainfall in March, May, and June this year will be less than normal, and some places will suffer spring and summer drought. This is particularly likely in the central part of the province. In addition, due to the dry winter and spring drought, there will be a medium infestation of plant diseases and insect pests.

The circular demands that various localities act in light of local conditions in taking precautions against and fighting drought, and make a success of spring farmwork.

XINJIANG REPORTS ON RURAL WORK, REFORM

Part 2

HK130340 Urumqi Xinjiang Regional Service in Mandarin 1300 GMT 4 Feb 86

[Report by Tomur Dawamat, deputy secretary of the regional CPC Committee and chairman of the regional government, at rural work conference in Urumqi from 22 January to 2 February: "Further Implement Policies, Continue To Conduct In-depth Reform, and Promote the Rural Economy To Develop Continuously, Steadily, and in a Coordinated Way" -- recorded]

[Excerpts] III. Continue Reform; Carry Out Reform in Depth

The in-depth development of rural reform in vast areas involves the relationships between the city and countryside, between workers and peasants, and between supply and demand. This will inevitably affect the traditional management system and be tied more and more closely to the overall national economy. After the meeting of urban and rural reforms, there may be increases or decreases in the prices of a handful of commodities this year in accordance with the market demand and the ability of factories, commercial, and financial departments and on the premise of maintaining the prices of most commodities. The initial idea is to reasonably increase the purchase prices of wool and other livestock products and grain; to reasonably decrease the sale prices of chemical fertilizer and other means of agricultural production; to reduce unreasonable price increases for electricity; and to appropriately widen the price differences of different commodities in accordance with the principle of high prices for fine products. The price of wool should be calculated in [words indistinct] in accordance with the spirit of the document issued by five central ministries and commissions. It is necessary to instruct the regional planning committee, the regional economic committee, the regional price bureau and other departments concerned to formulate concrete plans for implementing the above measures and then report them to the regional people's government for approval and implementation.

State-run commerce must play an active role in market regulation so as to stabilize the relationship between supply and demand.

Therefore, it is necessary to speed the reform of state-run commerce, to give new vitality to state-run commerce, and to thoroughly change aspects of the situation unsuited to opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy.

Supply and market cooperatives, as the main channel in rural circulation, must speed reform and change themselves not just in name but in reality from officially run organizations into cooperative economic organizations run by peasants.

In circulation, we must emancipate our minds to add some new channels. We must boldly try new types of commercial enterprises involving different areas which either combine agriculture and industry, agriculture and commerce, or industry, agriculture and commerce, so as to solve the problem of poor circulation in all fields. Meanwhile, we must further perfect the economic contract system in accordance with the principle of voluntary participation and mutual benefit so as to coordinate peasants' economic activities and to bring rural commodity production in line with the state plan.

It is necessary to further develop and perfect local cooperative economic organizations which combine centralized and decentralized operations, and various specialized cooperative organizations. It is particularly necessary to encourage peasants to cooperate in the processing, storage, delivery, and sale of agricultural products.

IV. Never Relax Grain Production; Continue To Develop Diversified Economy

In accordance with the principle of carrying out small readjustments while retaining overall stability, the region must, on the basis of ensuring a steady increase of grain output, develop diversified economy in 1986. The grain-growing area must not be further reduced, but must be rationally increased. In particular, it is necessary to expand the area for growing [words indistinct] and other forage, and for growing green manure crops. On the premise of ensuring grain production, we must go all out to develop diversified economy according to the needs of market and natural resources. We must stress upgrading the average operation level, increasing the yield per unit area, and upgrading product quality. We must gradually set up commodity bases to produce fine quality grain, cotton, melons, and fruits so as to have good, diverse commodity production.

Grain is a commodity subject to planning. The target set by the region for grain purchase by contract is a mandatory one. Government at all levels must assign the task level by level to peasant households and production units that really have the ability to sell grain. Purchase units can thus directly negotiate with peasant households and sign grain purchase contracts directly. Each party to the contract must understand the reasonable demands and practical difficulties of the other side. The means of production to be requisitioned for use at low prices as stipulated by policy must be included in the contracts. Once signed, all contracts must be properly executed by both sides. In order to arouse the enthusiasm of peasants for producing grain, it is necessary to adopt different grain purchase policies according to different conditions. Grain purchase contracts must be signed before the Spring Festival.

V. Put Animal Husbandry in a More Prominent Position

Putting animal husbandry in a more prominent position is a great transformation in the region's rural economic structure and strategic layout. To achieve the transformation, the essential thing is that we deepen our understanding of animal husbandry and strengthen our leadership over animal husbandry and work in pastoral areas. The development of animal husbandry is an important issue concerning whether or not rural and pastoral areas can become rich.

The regional CPC Committee and people's government have decided to implement Comrade Hu Yaobang's instruction on putting animal husbandry in a more prominent position, adhered to the principle put forth by the central leadership on vigorously developing animal husbandry, and done their utmost to change the long-standing situation of underdeveloped animal husbandry. Principal party and government leaders at all levels must attach importance to animal husbandry production, and promptly and properly solve various problems arising in the course of developing it. Planning, financial, and materials departments must treat animal husbandry as an important issue and vigorously support its development. In doing so, we must proceed from the region's reality, adhere to the principle of laying equal stress on animal husbandry in rural areas and animal husbandry in pastoral areas, and developing animal husbandry in rural, pastoral, and city suburban areas simultaneously.

As there are abundant forage resources in the region's rural areas, there are good prospects for developing animal husbandry. Experience in many areas indicates that developing animal husbandry in rural areas can not only increase peasants' income, promote the development of the processing industry, and make peasants rich at an earlier date, but can also alleviate the burdens on pastoral areas and provide pastoral areas with a chance for rehabilitation. To develop animal husbandry in rural areas, we must first change the previous practice of treating it as a sideline production and make it one of the main rural products. Farming and animal husbandry depend on and promote each other. Without farming as a foundation, it is impossible to develop animal husbandry; likewise, without the support of animal husbandry, it is also impossible to continuously and steadily develop farming in rural areas. We must properly combine farming on the first line with animal husbandry production on the second line, and establish a farming-breeding type agricultural structure so as to achieve better economic results and improve ecological balance.

It is necessary to further implement various policies on animal husbandry. More than 90 percent of livestock owned by collectives in the region has now been sold to peasant households on the installment plan. Most grasslands have been contracted for by individual households. This should be continuously consolidated and perfected through investigation and study. Payment of livestock sold to peasants should be spread over 10 to 15 years. The money received for payment of livestock sold to peasants and grassland fees collected must be properly controlled. The money should be used for developing animal husbandry, not for other purposes.

[Excerpts] VI. Town and Township Enterprises Must Develop Rapidly

In 1985 town and township enterprises in the region earnestly implemented the spirit of Document No 4 of 1984 and Document No 1 of 1985 issued by the central leadership, thereby achieving relatively good results. The total income of the region's town and township enterprises for 1985 is expected to reach 900 million yuan, an increase of 42 percent over 1984 and attaining the target of an annual increase of 200 million yuan. The industrial output value of the town and township enterprises is expected to reach 400 million yuan, an increase of 87 percent over 1984. More than 260,000 people were employed by the region's town and township enterprises in 1985, an increase of 55.7 percent over 1984. What is gratifying is that the total income of town and township enterprises in Changji Autonomous Prefecture, Kashi Prefecture, and Urumqi County exceeded 100 million yuan. This is a big breakthrough. The number of counties whose town and township enterprises' income exceeded 10 million yuan increased from 19 in 1984 to more than 30 in 1985.

Practice has proven that developing town and township enterprises is the road the region must follow in invigorating its rural economy, and is of great importance to promoting the readjustment of the region's rural production structure, to [words indistinct], to making peasants and herdsmen affluent as soon as possible, to doubling and quadrupling the region's agricultural output value, and to building a new socialist countryside with Chinese characteristics. We must fully understand this.

Town and township enterprises in the region are only in an early stage, and the region lags far behind other provinces and regions in this respect. Therefore, the region must rapidly and vigorously develop town and township enterprises. On one hand, it is necessary to properly consolidate and improve existing enterprises, tapping their potential; on the other hand, it is necessary to develop some new projects in a planned way and adhere to the principle of townships, villages, combined households, and individual households developing projects simultaneously. We must stress developing agricultural and sideline products and the food and plastics industries, in line with the principle of using agriculture as the base and serving agriculture.

In addition, we must pay particular attention to introducing investment from other provinces and autonomous regions and establishing lateral ties within the region; extensively and widely carry out economic and technological cooperation; encourage lateral economic combinations involving different areas and trades; and actively bring in technology, funds and talented people from other provinces and regions.

VII. Increase Investment; Continuously Improve Conditions for Developing Agriculture and Animal Husbandry

This year's Central Document No 1 pointed out that to maintain a balanced development of industry and agriculture, from the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the state will reasonably increase its investment in capital agricultural construction and agricultural administration costs. Increasing investment and continuously improving conditions for developing production of agriculture and animal husbandry is not only necessary for current production but also for the vigorous development of agriculture and animal husbandry in the last 10 years of this century. Without this, there will be no future benefits in the development of agriculture and animal husbandry. We must realize that the relatively high growth rate in the region's agriculture and animal husbandry over the past few years is mainly due to the contract responsibility system on a household basis and the accumulated achievements in capital agricultural construction over the past 30-odd years. The existing foundation cannot maintain a protracted and steady growth in agriculture and animal hunbandry, and give special consideration to the more vigorous development of agriculture and animal husbandry in the future. We must increase investment. The central leadership has decided to increase investment in agriculture, and the regional authorities will also reasonably increase investment in capital construction in agriculture and animal husbandry and administration costs for agriculture and animal husbandry. It is hoped that all prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and counties follow suit. They must do their utmost to increase investment in agriculture and animal husbandry.

Water conservation is a prerequisite for developing the region's agriculture and animal husbandry. Comrade Wang Enmao has always paid serious attention to this. His 5-year policy on rural construction with water conservancy as its central point is a scientific summary of the focus and target of the region's capital agricultural construction, and is characterized by a distinctive Xinjiang style. We must firmly and properly grasp water conservation work.

According to weather forecasts, there may be serious droughts in the region this year. All localities must properly carry out anti-drought work. In addition, we must exert more efforts to improve saline-alkaline soil. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, we must strive to fulfill the plan of improving 1 million mu of saline-alkaline land each year.

Water conservation construction in pastoral areas is a weak link in the region's water conservation work. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, we must grasp the building of grasslands. While preserving and improving natural grassland, we must vigorously build bases for producing man-made forage grass, installations for processing forage grass, and livestock sheds and pans. Water conservancy departments must pay serious attention to water conservancy construction in pastoral areas and give support in organization, technology, and funds to grasp the work effectively.

Developing afforestation for our motherland is China's basic policy and an important measure for improving production conditions and ecological environment. The region has a poor foundation in forestry production and ecological environment. Serious natural disasters often occur in the region. It is therefore necessary to persevere in vigorously developing forestry. We must further implement policies on forestry and arouse universal enthusiasm for planting and raising trees. We must continue to grasp the construction of shelter-forests in farm land so that more counties can achieve the target of all farmland protected by shelter-forests. Low-yield farmland should be converted to forests according to local conditions.

VIII. Rely on Science and Technology To Develop Productive Forces

The fundamental solution for agriculture lies in technological transformation. Experience in agricultural development both at home and abroad indicates that the economic results per unit area yielded by labor force and funds are restricted by backward science and technology. Without development of science and technology, some day we shall [words indistinct]. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, along with the in-depth development of rural reform, the region has strengthened scientific and technological work in agriculture and animal husbandry. The promotion of some new scientific and technological achievements and the wide use of fine varieties have produced good economic results.

The successive years of bumper harvest in the region were closely related to the hard work of scientific and technological personnel, those on the agricultural and animal husbandry fronts in particular. The current problem is that in order to continue developing the excellent rural situation and to further develop the rural economy, merely arousing peasants' and herdsmen's enthusiasm is insufficient. We must arm peasants and herdsmen with science and technology. Only by strengthening work in scientific and technological resources is it possible to make new and greater developments in agriculture and the whole rural economy. This is the key to further development of the region's rural economy. Party and government cadres at all levels must further understand the importance of science, technology, business management, knowledge, and talented people, and must firmly grasp the matter with their practical action.

On the issue of using science and technology to serve the rural economy, we must stress the following at present and for a relatively long time to come:

1. We must rely on science and technology to upgrade yield per unit area, to improve the variety and quality of agricultural and livestock products, and to promote the production of agriculture and animal husbandry at a relatively high technological level.

2. We must arm town and township enterprises with science and technology and actively train and dispatch management executives to town and township enterprises.

3. We must continue to properly investigate agricultural resources and carry out agricultural zoning, make full use of the achieved results, and properly readjust the rural production structure.

4. We must pay serious attention to training talented people for rural areas.

Two problems now exist in the region's science and technology of agriculture and animal husbandry:

1. Some scientific and technological research achievements have not yet been promoted due to lack of technological coordination and effective organizational guidance.

2. Production and management departments in agriculture and animal husbandry have failed to closely cooperate with scientific and technological research departments in agriculture and animal husbandry. They have separate systems. The problem of separation between scientific research and production has not yet been properly solved.

Therefore, we must adhere to the principle that economic construction should rely on science and technology, and science and technology must serve economic construction; strengthen the cooperation between [words indistinct] and actively promote the existing scientific research achievements and trial technology.

[Excerpts] IX. Properly Carry Out the Work of Supporting Poor Areas; Effectively Alleviate Peasants' and Herdsmen's Burden

Although the region's rural economy has developed greatly and the livelihood of peasants has been upgraded, peasants and herdsmen in some areas are still poor. Twelve percent of peasant and herdsmen's households have a per capita annual income of less than 100 yuan. The poor areas are mainly in Hotan Prefecture, Kashi Prefecture, Kizilsu Autonomous Prefecture, and some pastoral areas in central and eastern parts of Tianshan. There are also one or two poor townships and villages in prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and counties in which the economy is relatively developed and the per capita income is high. Due to historical reasons and the disparity in natural conditions, economic structure, foundation, and implementation of policies, there is uneven economic development in southern and northern Xinjiang and in rural and pastoral areas. We must correctly analyze and appraise this.

Helping poor areas to change their circumstances is an important matter with great political and economic significance. When inspecting the region last year, Comrade Hu Yaobang pointed out that making our country powerful and prosperous and the people rich is our goal for building socialist modernization. Cadres at all levels and party members must think and do everything with this goal in mind. This is also our guiding thinking in carrying out the work of supporting the poor. In this year's rural reform we must implement the party's policy of making the people affluent in all-round way. While encouraging some areas and peasants and herdsmen to become rich first, we must also help poor areas and households to change their situation so as to attain the goal of common prosperity.

In helping poor areas to be rid of poverty and become affluent, on the one hand we must adopt an active attitude; on the other, we cannot expect too much but must proceed from reality, act in accordance with the laws of nature and the laws of economy, and solve the problem in groups and by stages.

According to conditions, poor areas can pay less agriculture and animal husbandry tax or town and township enterprise tax or be exempted from the taxes. Collectives should reserve as little retention money as possible and spend less on administration. All unreasonable charges on peasants should be cancelled to alleviate their burden.

On the use of funds for supporting the poor, it is necessary to review previous experiences and draw lessons so as to use the funds concentratedly and appropriately. It is necessary to thoroughly check the previous funds for supporting the poor and let all prefectures and autonomous prefectures arrange and use the funds in a unified way.

On the issue of supporting poor areas and households in science and technology, in addition to giving them specific technological guidance, it is necessary to train technological personnel for poor areas in groups, by stages, based on the county unit, so as to upgrade the scientific and technological level of poor areas. We can also select some outstanding cadres of the third echelon from prefectures, autonomous prefectures, and counties and dispatch them to poor areas to carry out work and temper them in rotation. They should be given preferential treatment in wages.

Party and government organs at all levels must put supporting the poor high on their agenda, formulate feasible plans for getting rid of poverty, make concrete arrangements, be determined to carry out the plans and arrangements, and strive to achieve better results within 3 to 5 years.

On the issue of the peasants and herdsmen's burdens, as instanced in reports from all areas in the region, units and departments in some areas arbitrarily charged peasants and herdsmen and wantonly raised funds and collected various fees from them. Peasants and herdsmen complained bitterly about this. The main reason for this is some departments and units have overestimated the degree of wealth of peasants and herdsmen. They want to do everything in a big way and apportion charges to, and raise money from peasants and herdsmen far beyond the latter's means.

Just like the issue of helping poor areas, alleviating the peasants and herdsmen's burden is an important rural policy of the party. The CPC Central Committee and State Council have given repeated injunctions and specially issued a document on this. The regional authorities will also issue a document on it. All prefectures, autonomous prefectures, cities, and counties must seriously implement the documents and carry out the work in a down-to-earth manner.

X. Bring Into Full Play the Role of the Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps in Building Agricultural Modernization in the Region

The Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps is a powerful force for consolidation, for developing stability and unity in the region, and for safeguarding the motherland. Farms under the corps are state-run agricultural enterprises which develop agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, and fishery in an all round way and engage in comprehensive operation of agriculture, industry, and commerce. With a relatively developed commodity economy, the farms under the corps are driving forces in building agricultural modernization in the region.

It is hoped that the Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps will make continuous efforts, take new steps in reform and production, achieve greater results, and play a more important role.

The farms must resolutely implement the spirit of Document No 1 of the central leadership, put reform above all else, continue to review the experiences of running household farms, and solve new problems which may arise from time to time. In particular, they must properly solve the problem of alleviating the burden of their staff and workers, so that the system of dual operation of big farms and household farms can be perfected.

As in the past, the region must vigorously support the economic development of the Xinjiang Production and Construction Corps, highly value the corps, an important force, and bring into play the role of the corps in exploiting and building Xinjiang. All localities must support the corps and the corps must support all localities. They must promote each other and develop jointly.

XI. Strengthen Leadership Over Rural Work; Attach Importance To Building Spiritual Civilization in Rural Areas.

The in-depth development of rural reform has resulted in changes in the contents and forms of rural work. Leaders at all levels are thus required to adopt themselves to the new situation. They must study not only the internal relationships of agriculture but also the relationship between supply and demand. They must know the law of commodity economy and take an overall view of the economic situation.

Leaders at all levels must earnestly study and implement the spirit of the speeches delivered by Comrade Hu Yaobang and other central leading comrades at the central organ cadres meeting, correct malpractices, oppose corruption, overcome bureaucratism, seriously improve leadership style, and set an example in correcting party style.

Strengthening the building of rural grass-roots party organizations and rural grass-roots structures and upgrading the quality of cadres at all levels are the foundation for properly carrying out rural work. The vast majority of grass-roots party organizations, party members and cadres in the region are good. They work hard on the first line of production of agriculture and animal husbandry and have made great achievements. On behalf of the regional CPC Committee and the regional people's government, I hereby extend thanks to them.

However, in the preceding stage, quite a few areas neglected the building of rural grass-roots party organizations and ideological and political work. The phenomenon of lax organization and poor work can be seen in many places. Some party member cadres engaged in malpractices and were divorced from the masses.

This year we must properly consolidate, upgrade, and train grass-roots leadership groups in connection with party rectification in rural areas and upgrade the cultural level and political quality of grassroots cadres. Through party rectification, we must strengthen the fighting power of grass-roots party organizations and bring into full play the role of party members as pioneers and vanguards. We must encourage those grass-roots party member cadres and party members who led the masses in getting rich and who took the lead in becoming affluent through labor, and guide them to help and lead the masses to get rich jointly. Those who got rich by taking advantage of their power must be criticized and educated. Those who violated law and discipline must be severely punished.

Our region is a big family inhabited by many nationalities. We must fully understand the importance of unity of nationalities, deeply conduct education in unity of nationalities and nationality policies, and firmly establish the idea of inseparable relations between the Han and minority nationalities.

Rural work organs under CPC committees and governments at all levels are concrete work departments through which the party and government exercise their leadership over rural work. Under the current situation of rapid development in rural areas, we must pay particular attention to building rural work organs, strengthen our leadership, transfer competent persons to rural work organs, and fully exploit their role.

Comrades, this year is the first year of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, as well as a year for further in-depth development of rural reform. We must seriously implement the spirit of the central rural work conference and Document No 1, adhere to reform, carry out reform in depth, do rural work in a down-to-earth manner, strive to reap bumper harvests for 9 years in succession in the region, promote a continuous, steady, and coordinated development in the region's economy, and make greater contributions to making our country prosperous and powerful and the people rich.

BRIEFS

XINJIANG EDUCATION BOOST -- Urumqi, 17 Feb (XINHUA) -- More than 2,800 college and middle school teachers from Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region have been trained in other parts of China over the past 2 years. The remote north-western region has established links with colleges in Beijing, Shanghai, and 15 provinces and regions since 1982, a local education official here said. These colleges sent more than 300 professors and lecturers to teach in Xinjiang, and enrolled 2,160 ethnic minority students from the region. They also provided schools in Xinjiang with books and teaching facilities worth more than 5 million yuan. Last year, the region signed agreements with 10 universities in Beijing, Shanghai, and other big cities to train 180 graduate students from Xinjiang in the next 5 years. COMMENTARY LABELS REUNIFICATION TALK 'PROPAGANDA'

OW140829 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] On the eve of the Chinese lunar new year, which began on Sunday [9 February], Peking expectedly launched another propaganda barrage to sell its peaceful reunification plan. The official PEKING REVIEW even promised that the Chinese people in Taiwan could retain their present system until at least 2047, the year Hong Kong guarantee has expired under the 1984 pact between London and the Chinese Communist regime. The XINHUA NEWS AGENCY claimed that the ROC people are defying the government policy of no contact, no negotiations, and no compromise, citing as evidence some unauthorized private visits to the mainland by ROC citizens and indirect trade between Taiwan and the mainland. It must be pointed out that those who have visited the mainland against the government advice are extremely small in number. Furthermore, the action has nothing to do with politics. They took the trip only to meet their relatives, not as a gesture in support of Peking's call for reunification under communism. The fact that none of the visitors stayed on the mainland or paid a second visit is positive proof that they don't like what they saw and heard on the mainland.

As for indirect trade, it has even less bearing on the reunification issue. To begin with, there is no way for the ROC Government or manufacturers to prevent goods already exported from being shipped to the mainland. Peking's claim that indirect trade shows the mutual economic dependence between the two parts of China is equally absurd. The Republic of China became prosperous without getting any help from the mainland. Besides, the volume of indirect trade accounts for only a fraction of 1 percent of the Republic of China's total trade, far too insignificant to make any difference to its economy.

As for Peking's guarantee that the ROC may keep its present system as long as Hong Kong does, it is worth nothing. Even a fool would not trust it. Even the PEKING REVIEW admitted that most people are concerned about whether the Communist Party will swallow up or assimilate Taiwan within the next 62 years. As a matter of fact, the concern has already been justified as far as Hong Kong is concerned. Developments of the past several months have amply revealed Peking's plan to seize the control of the territory long before the 1997 takeover. If the Republic of China were to agree to the Hong Kong formula, it would certainly be swallowed up in no time. Only an idiot could place trust in Peking's promises and pledges.

U.S. RELATIONS WITH TAIWAN, PRC DEBATED

OW130841 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Station commentary]

[Text] U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Paul D. Wolfowitz told the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee earlier this week that U.S. ties with the Republic of China do not conflict with U.S. relations with Peking, and the United States has been much more respected in the world as a result. Reaffirming the U.S. commitment to the defense of Taiwan, Wolfowitz said: We will keep this commitment. He said he sees no conflict between the Taiwan Relations Act and the 1982 Joint Communique.

Seven years after the U.S derecognition of Taipei, Washington-Peking ties are once again causing worries to the people of Free China and their friends in the United States, as the United States appears moving steadily to form a quasi-ally relationship with Red China.

The relaxation of restrictions on technology transfer to Peking and the decision to sell military equipment to Red China are instances that stand out sharply in contrast with Washington's reluctance to sell more sophisticated defense weapons to the Republic of China.

However, ROC-U.S. ties on the whole are on an even scale. Despite the absence of diplomatic representation, these ties are so close that they can be even between two formal allies. The government and people of Free China also have an implicit trust in President Ronald Reagan in his pledge not to betray the 19 million Chinese on Taiwan. Taipei can draw comfort from the fact that Washington has refused to stop arms sales to the ROC or to apply pressure on the Chinese Government to enter peace talks with Peking. It shows the Reagan administration is aware that the last line of retreat has been reached so far as Taipei-Washington ties are concerned.

Still, one cannot help wondering how the U.S. commitment to the security of Free China can be sustained if Washington continues to uphold the August 17 Joint Communique more than it does the Taiwan Relations Act. As an American congressman recently pointed out, the two documents do contradict each other. The Taiwan Relations Act calls for sales of weapons to the Republic of China sufficient for its defense, whereas the Joint Communique obligates the United States to gradually reduce its arms sales to the ROC. The only thing that mitigates the contradiction between the two is the proviso in the Joint Communique that the reduction of arms sales is based on the assumption that Peking will not resort to force to achieve reunification. The trouble is that Washington has taken Peking's so-called peaceful intentions for granted. Well, the Chinese Communist regime has adamantly refused to rule out the use of force to bring the Republic of China to its knees.

KMT SECRETARY GENERAL ADDRESSES OVERSEAS CHINESE

OW150349 Taipei CNA in English 0239 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 14 (CANA) -- The nation has overcome many difficulties and made remarkable achievements in various fields in the past year, Mah Soo-lay, secretary general of the Central Committee of the ruling Kuomintang, told a group of Overseas Chinese visitors and scholars Friday. Speaking at a New Year party in honor of Overseas Chinese representatives and scholars, Mah said that the nation encountered some problems last year as the world economy remained sluggish and the local industry underwent transformation. Thanks to right government policy and concerted efforts of the public and private sectors, the nation managed to tide over the difficulties and made steady progress on different fronts.

Politically, the government successfully held fair local elections. Economically, the government has drawn up a blueprint for future development. Technologically, local researches have scored some significant breakthrough in certain strategic industries.

On the mainland situation, Mah asserted that Peiping's current economic reforms can never succeed and that power struggle in the Communist Party will become even fiercer in the future. The democratic movement staged by mainland students in recent years also would pose heavy pressure on the Peiping regime, the ranking KMT official noted.

On Overseas Chinese affairs, Mah stressed that the government will continue offering services and care for Chinese nationals residing abroad and returning Overseas Chinese scholars and their dependents.

Tseng Kwang-shun, chairman of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Commission, also spoke at the occasion. Tseng said Overseas Chinese people have expressed loyalty and firm support for the national cause in past years. He called on Chinese people both at home and abroad to dedicate themselves to the mission of national recovery in the coming years.

The New Year gathering was co-sponsored by the Overseas Chinese Affairs Commission and the KMT Central Committee's Department of Overseas Affairs. Hundreds of Overseas Chinese representatives and scholars, as well as government and party officials attended the gathering.

PREMIER COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH LATIN AMERICA

OW151415 Taipei CNA in English 1354 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb 15 (CANA) -- Premier Yu Kuo-hwa said Saturday that the Republic of China maintains good relations with many Latin American nations and hopes to strengthen cooperation with them in the future. In an interview with Regino Diaz Redondo, director of the influential Mexican newspaper EXCELSIOR, Premier Yu said that the political and social instability in many Central and South American countries, caused by the economic problem due to huge foreign debts, could make them vulnerable to infiltration by international communists.

The premier reminded Latin American nations that communism can bring nothing but poverty and disasters to human beings. He called on nations in that part of the world to cooperate closely among themselves and develop their own political and economic systems in order to achieve progress and prosperity. In the interview, Premier Yu, on behalf of the government and people of the Republic of China, extended regards to Mexican people. He also expressed the hope that the two countries will expand cooperation in cultural and technological fields in the coming years.

On the China unification issue, Yu pointed out that reunification is a common wish of Chinese people on both sides of the Taiwan Straits. He told the Mexican journalist that the principal obstacle to the reunification of China is the Chinese Communist tyrannical rule on the mainland which deprive mainland people of freedom and other civil rights. Yu predicted that China will be reunited as soon as the Peiping regime give up communism and opt for democracy and freedom. He also stressed that a free, democratic and independent China will benefit not only Chinese people but also Asian and world peace.

EXCELSIOR is one of the largest newspapers in Mexico, with a circulation of more than 350,000. Diaz arrived in Taipei Monday. He is scheduled to leave here Sunday to continue his Asian and European tour.

CHIANG ORDERS 'REASONABLE' NEW OIL PRICES

OW150247 Taipei CNA in English 0235 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 14 (CAN) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo, concerned about the adjustment of the domestic oil prices, has ordered related government agencies to decide reasonable new oil prices as soon as possible so as to enable the public to enjoy cheaper energy. Vice Economics Minister Li Mo said Friday that the preparatory work on the oil price adjustment is under way and if everything goes smoothly, a new price system will be put into force beginning March 1. Li said the Chinese Petroleum Corporation [CPC] has suggested that gasoline price be lowered by NT dollar 2 (US dollar 0.5) per liter. The new prices for diesel, industrial oil and natural gas will be decided in the next few days, Li added.

Meanwhile, Economics Minister Lee Ta-hai said that the government is managing to maintain the stability of domestic oil prices so as to prevent the possible unfavorable influence on the competitiveness of this nation's products in the world market. Lee so indicated he foresees international crude oil prices fluctuating in the second and third quarters of this year, since the prices fell drastically in the first quarter.

Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, the two main crude oil suppliers to the nation, have agreed to cut the prices of their crude oil sold to the ROC by US dollar 3.6 per barrel, enabling CPC to save about NT dollar 17 billion (US dollar 425 million) in its oil purchasing expenditures annually. If the domestic gasoline price is cut by NT dollar 2 per liter, CPC will have a loss of NT dollar 6 billion (US dollar 150 million) in its revenues yearly.

MINISTER SAYS PROSPECTS BRIGHT FOR 1986 ECONOMY

OW171019 Taipei CNA in English 1010 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 17 (CNA) -- Barring unexpected developments, all indicators show the Republic of China's economic growth will exceed the targeted level this year. Economics Minister Lee Ta-hai expressed this optimism when commenting on current economic development. He said January trade performance was exceptional. If that should continue into March or April, the whole picture will be clear whether Taiwan will have a good year for 1986. According to government statistics, Taiwan exported US $3.09 billion worth of goods in January, registering a 13.3 percent growth compared with that of the same period last year. On imports, the January figure was US $1.03 billion, or a hike of 5.5 percent from that of the same month in 1985. Meanwhile, Chen Chao-wei, deputy executive secretary of the Commodity Prices Supervisory Board, said the softening of the American dollar and the decrease in oil prices will help boost the nation's economic recovery.

CHENG MING VIEWS LEADERS' CHILDREN IN BUSINESS

HK130247 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 100, 1 Feb 86 pp 6-11

["Notes on a Northern Journey" by Luo Ping: "Children of the Highest Authorities in the Business Fever" -- capatilized passages published in boldface -- first paragraph is CHENG MING introduction]

[Text] Children of influential families do business at four levels: The highest level means Western countries, the second highest means Hong Kong and Macao, the third highest means Shenzhen, and the lowest means Guangzhou. All of them want to do business in Western countries and Hong Kong; many of them are caught up in this business fever. Even the central authorities have failed to prohibit their involvement. The problem is becoming increasingly serious. The higher ranking an authority is, the more disobedient his children are.

"RECENTLY, HONG KONG'S MASS MEDIA HAVE BEEN VERY EXCITED. FOREIGN NEWS AGENCIES AND THE NEWSPAPERS HAVE BEEN STEADILY FILING OR PUBLISHING REPORTS CONCERNING THE ISSUES DISCUSSED IN THE TWO ARTICLES UNDER THE HEADING 'NOTES ON A NORTHERN JOURNEY' IN THE JANUARY ISSUE (NO 99) OF CHENG MING. THE CPC AUTHORITIES CONCERNED HAVE FOR THE FIRST TIME ON THREE OCCASIONS DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY CRITICIZED CHENG MING FOR 'SPREADING RUMORS' AND 'VILIFYING THEM.' THIS HAS DRAWN MUCH ATTENTION FROM THE LOCAL PRESS AND THE PUBLIC...."

The above is part of a letter dated January 9 from the editorial board. The letter continues:

"THE JANUARY ISSUE OF CHENG MING WAS PUT ON SALE ON 31 DECEMBER, 1985. THE HONG KONG BRANCH OF THE XINHUA NEWS AGENCY HAS BEEN VERY SENSITIVE TO THE NEWS THAT 'XU JIATUN IS GOING TO BE TRANSFERRED TO BEIJING.' ON THE SAME DAY OUR JANUARY ISSUE WAS PUT ON SALE, IT ISSUED A PRESS RELEASE TO DENY IT, DESCRIBING IT AS 'A RUMOR' AND 'VILIFICATION.' IN FACT, THE 'NOTES ON A NORTHERN JOURNEY' ONLY SAID THAT 'XU JIATUN WOULD NOT BE TRANSFERRED IN THE NEXT 1 OR 2 MONTHS' AND THAT 'HIS TRANSFER COULD TAKE PLACE ABOUT 12 MONTHS LATER.' THE ARTICLE WAS NOT SPECIFIC ABOUT PRECISELY 'HOW MUCH LATER.' IT IS STILL EARLY. HOWEVER, SOME PEOPLE HAVE ALREADY THROWN OFF THEIR RESTRAINT. THIS INDEED PUZZLES PEOPLE. THE PUBLIC RESPONSE IS: CAN XU JIATUN'S ASSIGNMENT ALSO 'REMAIN UNCHANGED FOR 50 YEARS?'"

Will Xu Jiatun's Assignment "Remain Unchanged for 50 Years?"

I have nothing to add concerning this news. In fact, the authorities have long given serious thought to the problem of "replacing" the director of the Hong Kong branch of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY. Some favored Qiao Zonghuai. Several years ago, he was ordered to "stay" at the Chinese University of Hong Kong for a half year to "study" (quotation marks by the editor) educational administration. After returning to the mainland, he was not appointed a president or vice president of a university but was ordered to return to Hong Kong about 2 years later to lead the Hong Kong branch of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY. In September of last year, during the CPC National Conference of Party Delegates, he became an alternate member of the CPC Central Committee. However, for various reasons, he still cannot replace Xu for the time being.

Not long ago, word reached me from the foreign service that an important person proposed the replacement of Xu Jiatun by a cadre transferred from Shanghai and that this proposal was shelved. According to Hong Kong visitors in Beijing, although many people in Hong Kong do not like Xu Jiatun very much, they do not want him to leave Hong Kong for home because they are worried that a new director of the Hong Kong branch of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY may not be as "amiable and easy to approach" as Xu Jiatun is. Xu Jiatun does not have much charm, but party officials generally do not give people a good impression.

By the way, it should be mentioned at this point that the higher authorities have decided among themselves to transfer most of those graduates of the University of Hong Kong and the Chinese University of Hong Kong who returned many years ago to the mainland to work back to Hong Kong. Some of these people were born in Hong Kong. This makes them even more useful.

Why Deny Restricting Japanese Consumer Goods Imports?

THE LETTER FROM THE EDITORIAL BOARD CONTINUES "ON 6 JANUARY, A JAPANESE FINANCIAL GROUP ASKED THE PRC MINISTER OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC RELATIONS AND TRADE TO CONFIRM THE NEWS REPORTED IN 'NOTES ON A NORTHERN JOURNEY' THAT THIS YEAR, CHINA WOULD NOT IMPORT ANY MORE JAPANESE 'CONSUMER GOODS IN GENERAL.' THE MINISTRY OF FOREIGN ECONOMIC RELATIONS AND TRADE REJECTED THE REPORT BY CHENG MING. SOME HONG KONG EXPORTERS AND IMPORTERS HAVE VEHEMENTLY REACTED TO THIS. THEIR OPINION IS THAT BEIJING'S DENIAL IS RIDICULOUS. MANY JAPANESE GOODS TO BE TRANSPORTED TO THE MAINLAND (INCLUDING VIDEO RECORDERS AND PHOTOCOPIER MACHINES) CANNOT ENTER THE COUNTRY AND MUST BE SOLD IN HONG KONG AT REDUCED PRICES. THE TRADE DEPARTMENT OF A CERTAIN BANK IS SELLING VIDEO RECORDERS AT ABOUT $1,000 APIECE."

Regarding the issue of Japanese goods imports, we never reported that Beijing "will ban the import of all Japanese consumer goods." We plainly and clearly reported that "it would not import any more Japanese consumer goods in general." Naturally, a country should adopt protectionist measures to protect its industry and to prevent an outflow of foreign exchange. Does this mean that a country should not practice protectionism by levying customs duties? Can the authorities justify themselves by means of official "denials?" Actually, since China tightened its control of its foreign exchange reserves, tried to balance its trade with Japan, and adopted measures to protect its industry, fewer consumer goods have been imported from Japan. Since the beginning of this year, many expensive Japanese consumer goods have been prevented from being sold to the mainland. This is precisely why many Japanese tape-recorders and photocopiers are being sold at reduced prices in Hong Kong. Is this not a fact?

A Repudiation of the Negative Statement by the Spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade

Not only the import of Japanese consumer goods is restricted. Restrictions have also been imposed on goods produced by Western countries and on China's own production of certain consumer goods.

A Beijing economic authority recently told me: Restrictions will be imposed on the production of all expensive consumer goods except some televisions and washing machines. No one is allowed to blindly initiate projects. This "some" implies restrictions. It is said that throughout the country, there are 105 color television assembly lines, some of which are under construction. These assembly lines can produce 7 million color televisions a year. Of these 105 assembly lines, 72 were imported from foreign countries and of the latter, 50 were from Japan. The production capacity of these assembly lines renders insignificant China's capacity for the production of television components and parts. They have exhausted the country's foreign exchange reserves and can make the supply of televisions far exceed demand for them on domestic markets. Thus, the departments concerned have decided to "curtail their production." Under such circumstances, China naturally cannot afford to freely import more televisions from Japan.

In conclusion, the news reported in "Notes on a Northern Journey" that starting from 1 January 1986 China will strictly control consumer goods imports from Japan is 100 percent true. Denying it is just self-deception (editor's note: According to a report filed from Beijing by ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE on 22 January, a spokesman for the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade announced that from this year on, "we must not blindly import consumer goods if we have the proper conditions to produce them.

("Restrictions will be imposed on the import of those lines for the production of color television sets, refrigerators, cassette recorders, and cars, and we must protect our national industry.") This shows that the ministry acknowledges the accuracy of the news reported in "Notes on a Northern Journey" by refuting its own negation of the report in "Notes on a Northern Journey" half a month ago. Perhaps, this could be described as "the negation of a negation."

Repeated Injunctions Indicate the Seriousness of the Problem

The letter from the editorial board of CHENG MING lays special emphasis on the involvement of the sons of Hu and Zhao in commercial activities. "ASKED BY AN AP REPORTER TO CONFIRM THE NEWS REPORTED IN 'NOTES ON A NORTHERN JOURNEY' CONCERNING THE INVOLVEMENT OF HU'S SON HU DEPING AND ZHAO'S SON ZHAO DAJUN IN COMMERCIAL ACTIVITIES, A SPOKESMAN FOR THE PRC FOREIGN MINISTRY DESCRIBED THE NEWS AS 'A RUMOR NOT WORTH REFUTING.' WE THINK THAT HE HAS BEEN TOO INDISCREET. MANY HONG KONG BUSINESSMEN KNOW THAT ZHAO'S SON IS DOING BUSINESS. WITHOUT GOOD GROUNDS, CHEN YUN COULD NOT HAVE EXPOSED THIS. CONCERNING HU DEPING'S INVOLVEMENT, IT CAN BE INFERRED FROM THE PASSAGE 'PEOPLE TEND MORE TO BELIEVE THAT HE WANTS TO MAKE HIS STUDY OF THE "DREAM OF THE RED CHAMBER" AND HIS QINGNIAN LUNTAN [YOUTH FORUM] A SUCCESS THAN TO BELIEVE THAT HE WANTS TO SEEK PERSONAL GAIN AS THE MANAGER OF A CERTAIN COMPANY' IN 'NOTES ON A NORTHERN JOURNEY' THAT IT IS NOT EASY TO GATHER FACTUAL EVIDENCE ABOUT HIS INVOLVEMENT. THE INFORMATION REVEALED BY 'NOTES ON A NORTHERN JOURNEY' IS MAINLY BASED ON CHEN YUN'S DISCLOSURE OF THE CASE. HOWEVER, IF YOU HAVE SOMETHING TO ADD, THE READERS WILL BE PLEASED TO KNOW ABOUT IT...."

The problem of the involvement of the children of senior cadres in commercial activities is increasingly serious. The CPC Central Committee has more than once circulated within the party documents prohibiting senior cadres, spouses, and children from doing business. This shows that many senior cadres and their children are now involved in commercial activities. The higher ranking a cadre is, the more disobedient he and his children are. Otherwise, there would be no need for the CPC Central Committee to repeat its injunctions. In fact, a large number of the children of central, provincial, and city leaders are caught up in this business fever. In recent years, the number of trade firms and development corporations has increased. Beijing alone has as many as 3,000 such firms and corporations. Most of these firms and corporations either are directly run by children of influential families or have connections with them. Thus, they are referred to by the community as corporations run by children of influential families. The transportation of cars and other goods by naval vessels and military aircraft from Guangzhou and Hainan to other parts of the country was, not surprisingly, masterminded by these privileged corporations. Of course, there are many other cadres whose children are involved in commercial activities as employees of state-run corporations. It is possible that they do not seek personal gain by taking advantage of their employment with the state-run corporations. However, it can be seen from the cases exposed that a large number of them have used public office for private gain.

Zhao Dajun Is the General Manager of the Shenzhen New Technology Development Corporation

Indeed, it is an open secret that Zhao Dajun, Zhao's eldest son, is doing business in Shenzhen. On several occasions, some of those "cadres heading for the south" told me in Beijing that on the 8th floor of the Xinghua building, Shennanzhong Road, Shenzhen, there is a corporation occupying the whole floor, which has a total area of about 8,000 square feet, and that this corporation is the "Shenzhen New Technology Development Corporation." The general manager of this corporation is Zhao Dajun, Zhao Ziyang's eldest son. One of the corporation's two assistant managers is a person surnamed Li and the other is surnamed Liu. Shortly after the earth-shaking "Tiananmen incident," on 5 April 1976, the gang of four made this Mr Liu famous by trying to track him down and apprehend him.

The Shenzhen New Technology Development Corporation was founded in April, 1985. Its present office was first occupied by a petrochemical supplies corporation, now being investigated by the CPC.

The Shenzhen Petrochemical Industry Corporation was the parent company of this "petrochemical supplies corporation" and other corporations. The responsible person of this petrochemical supplies corporation was Dong Dabao, who was convicted of economic crimes. After Dong's arrest in April, 1985, a certain person in Shenzhen recommended Zhao Dajun as Dong's replacement. However, Zhao Dajun rejected the offer and proposed the establishment of the Shenzhen New Technology Development Corporation under the leadership of the "Shenzhen Petrochemical Industry Corporation." His proposal won the approval of the authorities and the appreciation of the Shenzhen mayor at the time.

Zhao Dajun's Shenzhen New Technology Development Corporation and the "such and the such technology development corporation" run by a swindler named Liu Haoran are totally unrelated. Our previous report on this might easily lead the readers to confuse Liu's corporation with the coporation of which Zhao Dajun is general manager. This problem must be clarified. Zhao Dajun has never been an honorary chairman (not even in name) of the board of directors of Liu's corporation. Zhao Dajun is the general manager of the Shenzhen New Technology Development Corporation. However, I have yet to find out whether or not Liu Haoran used Zhao Dajun's name to do evil things without Zhao Dajun's consent.

I have a friend involved in the work of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade. Not long ago, he made a long-distance call from Beijing to Shenzhen to talk to Zhao Dajun. According to this friend, Zhao Dajun is as tall as his father. However, the former is skinnier and paler than the latter and is more like a scholar than a businessman.

Hu Deping the Scholar and His Magazine

Hu Deping is even more like a scholar. It was reported in "Notes on a Northern Journey" that some people have exposed Hu Deping's involvement in commercial activities. Hu Deping is Hu Yaobang's eldest son. Regarding this person, "Notes on a Northern Journey" has suggested that "people tend more to believe that he wants to make his study of the 'Dream of the Red Chamber' and his QINGNIAN LUNTAN a success than to believe that he wants to seek personal gain as the manager of a certain company." The author of this article is among the "people" mentioned here. Since I received the letter from the editorial board of CHENG MING, I have been indirectly gathering information about Hu Deping and his deeds. Fortunately, I have a few friends who have contacted Hu Deping before.

Hu Deping, 46 or 47, was born during the war. When he was a small child, he lived with the family of a peasant named Liu Qichang and was renamed Liu Hu. Later, he was reunited with this parents and he resumed his surname, that is, Hu. Since his graduation from a university, he has been interested in the study of the "Dream of the Red Chamber" and the history of the Ming and Qing Dynasties. He is taller than his father and looks like a scholar. Unlike his father, who likes to stress his points with exaggerated bodily movements, he is gentle and suave.

In 1980, Hu Deping was elected deputy director of the Beijing Historical Museum. Two years later, he and some young and middle-aged experts and people interested in the study of the "Dream of the Red Chamber" formed a society for the study of the "Dream of the Red Chamber;" he was its first president. Later, they rebuilt "Cao Xueqin's residence" near the Sleeping Buddha Monastery on Beijing's Xi Shan. This organization is supposed to be a civilian academic organization. However, it is said that the Beijing municipal authorities finance it.

Hu Deping is interested in cultural affairs and the study of the "Dream of the Red Chamber," and he has indicated his desire to work with the China Federation of Literary and Art Circles. However, Hu Yaobang advised him not to study the "Dream of the Red Chamber" any more but to enter the Organization Department or work on the Central Party Consolidation Guidance Commission (under the leadership of Bo Yibo). Finally, Hu Deping became a leader of the Hunan-Hubei Liaison Group.

Later, Hu Deping founded his QINGNIAN LUNTAN in Wuhan. The first few issues of QINGNIAN LUNTAN were indicative of the magazine's unique qualities among the country's more than 3,000 journals and periodicals. In the first issue of QINGNIAN LUNTAN, Hu Deping published an article on freedom. His views were quite liberal. The article was reprinted in RENMIN RIBAO, and it attracted the the attention of Beijing's cultural activists. Liu Binyan has also published an article in QINGNIAN LUNTAN to criticize some authorities for their mistake of regarding their "false principles" as "truths." The views expressed in some of the articles published in this magazine are even bolder and more liberal. These articles could be contributed by some "fearless young people." As a "nongovernmental periodical," QINGNIAN LUNTAN has to raise its own funds. However, this could well be hearsay.

Mrs Hu Is in charge of Foreign Trade and Tourism in Xiamen

Hu Deping's wife is An Li, whose father is An Ziwen. Before the "Cultural Revolution," An Ziwen was the head of the Organization Department under the CPC Central Committee. During the "Cultural Revolution," the gang of four accused him of being a "traitor" and "leader" of one of the 61 "traitors cliques," namely the "An Ziwen traitor clique." After the "Cultural Revolution," he was once a member of the CPC Central Committee. An Li is also a university graduate and her field of specialization is in the natural sciences. However, in March 1985 she was transferred to Xiamen City, where she is now in charge of foreign trade, tourism, and Overseas Chinese affairs. Thus, it was once rumored that Hu Deping would go to Fujian to be Xiang Nam's assistant.

In 1985, Hu Deping visited Shenzhen several times. It is said that Hu Yaobang once said to some "cadres heading for the south: "In Shenzhen, you can enjoy a capitalist material civilization on the one hand and have security with your iron rice bowls on the other. It is also said that after being informed of this, Chen Yun criticized Hu Yaobang: At present, it is necessary to smash the iron rice bowls. However, you are advocating this practice. In fact, Hu Yaobang did not say the above things to Hu Deping. Although Hu Deping could "enjoy a capitalist material civilization in Shenzhen," he did not "have a socialist iron rice bowl." Some people suggest that Hu Deping went to Shenzhen to broaden his mind. Others say that he went there "to play the second banana," that is, to be with his wife, who is in charge of foreign trade and tourism and who was visiting Shenzhen. There are still others who have suggested other things. However, I am afraid that there is no need to devote too much effort to judging these conjectures. A Hong Kong businessman told my friend in Beijing that he had done one piece of business through Hu Deping. I think that this "through" does not imply anything. Playing the role of a bridge in the trade between China on the one hand and foreign countries, Hong Kong, and Taiwan on the other is something praiseworthy provided that the law and discipline are not violated.

Despite the Differences Between Hu Yaobang and his Son, Hu Yaobang Praises His Daughter-in-Law

It is difficult to determine the source of the news that some senior CPC members have exposed Hu Deping's involvement in commercial activities. My subjective opinion is that there are three possibilities:

First, the news may have leaked out in the course of QINGNIAN LUNTAN's fund-raising activities; second, the news may have leaked out in the course of Hu Deping's involvement in a piece of business as a go-between; and third, it may have been revealed by a certain minor report. However, since this issue involves many things and since it is difficult to know the whole truth, I will not comment on it here. I hope the readers will understand my difficulties. Indeed, it is difficult to tell which of these three possibilities can best account for the leak.

According to those friends who have met Hu Deping and his wife, the couple looks honest and decent. It can be inferred from the differences between Hu Deping and Hu Yaobang over a number of issues that the former does not want to seek wealth and power as the son of an influential father. One of my friends said: "If it is inevitable that man should be interested in wealth and fame, then, as far as I can observe, Hu Deping is one who is more interested in fame than wealth." My friend is not a physiognomist. However, it is difficult to foretell whether or not he will yield to the pressure his father puts on him and become a member of the second or third echelon."

Another friend who knows Hu Deping told me: "Hu Deping is amiable and easy to approach. He leaves a good impression with those who work with him. There are many people currying favor with him. I am not sure whether or not he is aware of this." He also told me that An Li was an upright person and that it was she who asked Hu Yaobang not to move to Zhongnanhai. Hu Yaobang took her advice and did not move. Of Hu Yaobang's seven children (including daughters-in-law), six are university graduates. Although Hu Yaobang may not be fondest of Hu Deping (maybe the old man treats all his children "equally and without discrimination"), he praises An Li most often.

The Involvement of Another of Hu's Sons in Commercial Activities

According to information gathered, we can definitely say that Zhao Dajun is involved in commercial activities. As to whether or not Hu Deping is also involved, it is hard to tell. I would like to repeat once again that I "tend more to believe that Hu Deping wants to make his study of the 'Dream of the Red Chamber' and his magazine a success than to believe that he wants to seek personal gain as the manager of a company."

Nevertheless, a younger brother of Hu Deping is very much interested in doing business. Although he holds a mid-level post (something like a director) at an energy corporation in southwestern Guizhou, he is highly authoritarian; even the manager has to obey him. It seems that "your son" mentioned in Chen Yun's letter to Hu Yaobang refers to another son of Hu Yaobang, not Hu Deping.

In recent years, there are too many children of the high-level cadres interested in doing business like the second son of Hu. Xi Zhongxun's eldest son, the former magistrate of Zhengding County, Hebei, expressed dissatisfaction with his job and determined to give up his official post and run a business.

Xie Xingming, second son of the late Xie Juezai, former procurator general of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, sold bicycles in Shenzhen last year. He purchased each bicycle at the price of 160 yuan and sold it at above 200 yuan in Shenzhen. Some people said that he was reselling bicycles at a profit. He insisted that he was doing business by appropriate means. Who is willing to do business without making a profit? Those stricken by business fever include children of influential families as well as spouses of high-ranking cadres. Some widows of deceased high-ranking officials also intend to become entrepreneurs. It has been reported that Mrs Xie Juezai has run a company together with Deng Xiaoping's younger brother in Beijing. The "strong women" of another company include He Long's wife Xue Ming and others.

In a report carried in CHENG MING No 99, I intended to convey the following message to our readers: The struggle between the reformers and conservatives is hanging by a thread and tends to intensify by each passing day. If Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang have given the conservatives a weapon, the conservatives have also in turn given the reformers a weapon against themselves.

Chen Yun's Son Also Has a Record of Engaging in Business

Chen Yuan, former Standing Committee member of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee, is Chen Yun's beloved son. He assumed the post of first secretary of Beijing's Western District CPC Committee. While in office, he did business with a Japanese company with the assistance of a student called he who studied in Japan. It has been reported that he used Western District public funds in doing business. Consequently, he lost money in the business and had to submit himself to investigations by the Discipline Inspection Commissions of the CPC Central Committee and Beijing Municipality, respectively. Regarding the misappropriation of public funds and loss in business, the big problem was turned into a small problem and the small problem into no problem at all. Finally, he was transferred and promoted. Although this report remains to be verified, the information is valid as it has been leaked from the municipal CPC Committee. We do not know whether Chen Yun, who is strict with himself, is aware of the matter or not.

Some people say that if Chen Yuan had not been involved in the above case, he would have joined the secretariat of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee. Others say that Chen Yuan changed his work style somewhat after being transferred from the municipal CPC Committee. The public expects him to learn from the moral character of Chen Yi's son Chen Haosu.

Chen Haosu, a graduate of Harbin Engineering University, was first secretary of Beijing's Fengtai District CPC Committee 3 years ago and was later promoted to the rank of secretary of the Secretariat of the Beijing Municipal CPC Committee.

Probably influenced by his parents, Chen Haosu is interested in literature, art, and culture rather than business. With the rise of Beijing's "new student movement" last year, Chen Haosu, entrusted by the municipal CPC committee to Beijing University, ate and lived together with the students from "18 September" to "9 December" and played the role of mollifier. The leaders of the student movement in Beijing University questioned him face to face: "You are so young. What political and professional qualifications do you have to hold such a high ranking post? After all, you rely on your father's influence! Anyhow, we still respect our revered Comrade Chen." Chen Haosu was not angry at these remarks. He replied: "I have not relied completely on my father's influence. I firmly believe that my father in the nether regions will not feel ashamed of me as secretary of the municipal CPC Committee."

Although Chen Haosu lacks boldness in work, he is upright and diligent in studying. Like Hu Deping, he prefers fame to gain.

Records of Sons of Bo Yibo and Ye Xuanping Involved in Business

Although Bo Yibo, the leader responsible for party rectification, has repeatedly called for checking "unhealthy tendencies," he has failed to be strict with his own children. A son of Bo Yibo is known in Beijing's commercial circles as "persona non grata."

In the autumn of 1985, Bo Yibo's son ran the "White Peacock Arts and Crafts Center" with some of his close friends. He was prosecuted later for engaging in illegal business. However, he escaped by cunning maneuvers. As he resigned from the arts and crafts center, his close friends had to appear in court.

Under someone's recommendation, Bo Yibo's son was to assume the post of mayor of Nanjing. However, a deputy secretary of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission requested the Organization Department of the CPC Central Committee not to make the appointment because Bo Yibo's son had a bad record.

Another son of Bo Yibo, the former director of an enamel factory, was later promoted to the post of manager of the Beijing Arts and Crafts Company. He led a Chinese arts and crafts delegation to Western Europe. On returning home the delegation was suspected of seeking illicit gains and was put under investigation. Some members were removed from their posts, but Bo Yibo's son remained in office.

It has been reported that Ye Weiping, son of Ye Xuanping and grandson of Marshal Ye, worked in a Shenzhen Special Economic Zone exploitation company. This company is probably the state unit that is in the joint venture of the modern Shenzhen Customs Building with Hong Kong businessman Hu Ying-hsiang.

Wang Zhen's Son Cooperates With Deng Xiaoping's Son-In-Law in Macao

Children of senior cadres do business on four levels: The highest level means Western countries, the second highest means Hong Kong and Macao, the third highest means Shenzhen, and the lowest means Guangzhou. All of them want to do business in Western countries and Hong Kong. Figures in Beijing trade circles are quite aware that Wang Zhen's son Wang Jun and He Biao's son He Ping (his wife XiaoRong is Deng Xiaoping's daughter) went to Macao a few months ago to run a firm under the International Investment Corporation. One was managing director and the other was general manager. It is still questionable whether or not they are working as best partners.

A cadre engaged in foreign trade in Beijing said: "Cadres' children working in state-owned commercial organs are different from the businesses undertaken by the collectives or individuals." What he said is positively correct. However, if party work style is not straightened out, privileges are not eliminated, and the legal system is not maintained, cadres of state organs may also engage in private business, use public office for personal gains, and reap exorbitant profits. A son of a cadre spoke contrary to the cadre engaged in foreign trade. He held that doing individual or cooperative business is beyond reproach, provided the law is not violated. He was against broadening the scope of a specific mistake and maintained that all capable people (including cadres' children) willing to engage in business may do so under the circumstances of the establishment and perfection of the legal system.

I think this idea is acceptable. Although the "senior cadres" of a number of Western countries are not allowed to engage in commercial activities, their children have the right to do business. As a matter of fact, British Prime Minister Thatcher's son is a businessman. What harm can he do to Britain by being a decent businessman? Why are the conditions in China special? The main reason is the decadent party style and rule by man under one party leadership in China. In addition, the privileges of cadres can be abused by their children to reap exorbitant profits in business. If party style is corrupted and the legal system is not maintained, the cadres' children, though not apparently meddling in business, can carry out " underground activities." Even if they are completely cut off from the commercial field, they can also make money by other illegal means. Therefore, it is tantamount to turning logic upside down to say that forbidding cadres' children to do business will be conducive to improving party work style.

Deng Pufang Stays in Guangzhou for a Long Time and Plans To Engage in Shipping

In a word, the key to the problem is not doing business in a state-run shop or a shop run by individuals, but whether or not it is appropriate and legal. The son of a cadre continued: "It would be a good thing to do business for the public interest and earn money to support public undertakings." He gave an example of Deng Pufang to explain his viewpoint.

Deng Xiaoping's son Deng Pufang has racked his brains to raise funds for the foundation for the disabled. Now he is living in the Guangzhou Garden Hotel (it is possible that the hotel is entertaining him free of charge), trying daily to collect money for the foundation. Some people say that Deng Pufang is interested in doing ship business. He provided for the disabled by purchasing old ships from some north European countries and dismantling them (some people say that Deng Pufang is taking the opportunity to make a profit) . The magazine SANYUE FENG [MARCH BREEZE], under his direction, carried some outstanding works, including half of Liu Binyan's literary works. Why "half?" Actually, Liu Binyang wrote something for Beijing's BAOGAO WENXUE. When the newspapers carried this reportage, the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee ordered the magazine not to publish it, because Shaanxi had lodged a complaint against Liu Binyan saying that his reportage "undermined" Shaanxi's party rectification work. As a result, the reportage was divided into "The Story of Tang Anhua" and "The Ancient Castle, Past and Present." The two parts were sent to the magazine SANYUE FENG and ZHONGSHAN respectively.

A friend who had some contacts with Chen Yun's sister-in-law (Yu Ruomu's younger sister) Yu Lulin also intended to set up a "Sayuan Exploitation Company" to provide for the Zhonghua Social University run by herself. But the company's application for a business license was withheld for a long time by a vice minister of economy and trade. The people who knew the case showed sympathy for Yu Lulin. Some of them said: "When the party ran the Life Bookstore in Shanghai during the 1930s, did Xu Boxin not do business to support the bookstore?"

False Reports in Party Newspapers and Perodicals

Some overlords of the CPC have arbitrarily regarded news exposing their "domestic scandals" as "rumors" and the facts reported by foreign news agencies as "fabrications." In fact, such a course of action is out-and-out deception. This reminds us of the "Cultural Revolution." When the gang of four discovered news exposing their crimes, they abused them as "rumors" and threatened to "trace the rumors to their sources. " Glossing over faults is not the creation of the gang of four but the common failing of the CPC over decades. Recently, the CPC has called for strengthening party rectification. We hold that vigorous measures should be adopted to check unhealthy tendencies.

Naturally, the news carried in CHENG MING and other overseas periodicals cannot all be accurate. Hong Kong newspapers usually make minor mistakes while reporting Hong Kong news, to say nothing of restricted news. Do the newspapers and periodicals of the CPC never make mistakes? They do and occasionally make many mistakes. Apart from inaccurate reports, they have also been deliberately fraudulent.

Leaving aside past problems, mainland newspapers published a series reports recently. The so-called "Space Visitor," "DDT Mixed With Maotai," "Mathematician Chen Jingrun Giving Guidance to Cui Huaijun in Studying," and 5-year-old Liu Xiaobin who had super-intelligent powers, "used 6 nights to finish his first primary school textbook and the same speed to finish his secondary school mathematics; physics, and chemistry courses" and was "enrolled by the Chinese Academy of Sciences as a student in the preparatory class for youngsters" (dispatched by the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY) were all false reports and sheer fabrications.

The Fake Photograph in JIEFANGJUN BAO and Falsehood to the Utmost Degree

In addition to the false reports, there are also fake photographs. These fake things are nothing new. On 29 May 1985, ZHONGGUO FAZHI BAO carried a picture of a policewoman asking the masses of the Lisu nationality about household registration. A month later the picture appeared in ZHONGGUO FUNU BAO saying that the policewoman was asking about "the progress of family planning. "Later MINZU GONGZUO No 8 also reprinted the picture. This time the policewoman was asking about "the experience of taking the road to prosperity." This is not unique, but has its counterpart. On 28 October the same year, ZHONGGUO FAZHI BAO carried a picture of "a group of young people discussing the question: When soldiers are shedding blood at the front, what should we do in the rear?" When the picture was reprinted in ANHUI FAZHI BAO, it became "a group of young people having a get-together." The most typical case of a "fake picture" was the picture carried in JINGJI RIBAO depicting "Army and people united as one to combat flooding" in Panjing City in the summer of 1985. Actually the picture was reprinted from JIEFANGJUN HUABAO No 10 of 1981. Furthermore, the picture in JIEFANGJUN HUABAO showing a PLA soldier courageously saving an old woman from the flood in Rongchang County, Sichuan, was not genuine. The photographer invited an old woman from the house for the aged. He took the photograph of a soldier carrying an old woman on his back with the collapsed houses as the background. This is the way they implement dual falsehood.

The Party Organ Says There Are Three Kinds of False Reports

The problem of resorting to deception in press reports is so serious that the CPC itself feels ashamed. On 3 January this year, RENMIN RIBAO published an article, saying: "Truthfulness is the life of press reports. This is an old saying repeated over the years. However, some untrue reports are still published from time to time. The first kind of these reports is based on hearsay evidence. The source of the report 'DDT Mixed With Maotai' was from the grapevine 'revealed by local masses.' It passed from place to place, and eventually became 'evidence' on which the reporter based his report. The second kind of false reports are reports based on specious arguments. The peasants of Pingli Village, Shuitou Township, Xinning County, Hunan, caught a stump-tailed monkey. An examination was made by county biology teachers, prefectural and provincial experts, and China's 'Savage' Reserarch Society. They unanimously determined that it was not a 'savage.' However, some newspapers, magazines and broadcasting stations at home gave enormous publicity to the 'living savage.' Some newspapers and magazines abroad run by Chinese also published these reports one after another. The third kind of false reports are reports which are recklessly concocted. The article 'Facing a Fanciful Desire of a Guest From Hong Kong' published by a certain magazine was a inferior product of this kind."

A Funny Mistake of "Putting Lin's Hat on Li's Head" made by XINHUA NEWS AGENCY

"Inaccurate" reports which mislead the readers are published often. Let us take a recent example which is connected with Hong Kong. This was a report by XINHUA NEWS AGENCY putting Lin's hat on Li's head.

The report was carried in CANKAO XIAOXI on 12 December 1985, which is published by XINHUA NEWS AGENCY (General Office in Beijing). This was a report mainly describing how Ji Pengfei was welcomed by Hong Kong press circles. It also said that some newspapers" made use of Ji's visit to attack China." Who used it to attack China?" It only mentioned two newspapers HSIN PAO (HONG KONG ECONOMIC JOURNAL) and TSAICHING HSINWEN (FINANCIAL DAILY). This XINHUA report said: "One day before the arrival of Ji Pengfei, Li I, editor-in-chief of HSIN PAO, used the pen name Chi Hsin to publish an article 'Notes on Director Ji Pengfei's Visit to Hong Kong.' This article...."

Li I is the editor-in-chief of CHIUSHIH NIENTAI. The magazine once revealed that Chi Hsin was Li I's pen name. The editor-in-chief of HSIN PAO writes a commentary almost daily, published in the upper left-hand corner of the front page.

His name, Lin Hsin-Chih, in large characters, is printed in written form. This is known to all people in the press circles. Why did the XINHUA report from Beijing issued on 10 December put "Lin's hat on Li's head?" (Editor's note: We believe that Director Xu Jiatun was not responsible for going over the manuscript. Otherwise, he would have found the mistake, because both Mr Lin and Mr Li were reportedly invited by Director Xu to a simple dinner. He would have known them.)

In recent years, false reports published by newspapers and periodicals on the mainland and by XINHUA NEWS AGENCY have not been regarded as rumors. The malpractice of deliberately publishing misleading reports is not regarded as spreading rumors either. So, why do the CPC departments concerned always regard as rumors those reports on the mainland published overseas which they think are not beneficial to the CPC, whether they are true and accurate, or are sheer fabrications and inconsistent with the facts because of careless mistakes? If these reports are basically consistent with the facts, or are based on certain facts, why do they flatly deny them? Why do they regard them as "fabrications" and "rumors" which are "not worth refuting?" Can they convince people by doing so? This can only aggravate their credibility crisis at home and abroad.

We think that the above-mentioned XINHUA report, which "puts Lin's hat on Li's head" and "misleads people" is a careless mistake rather than a deliberate rumor, although such a report should not have been published. We hope that those party overlords in Beijing and Hong Kong will draw a lesson from this incident. They should overcome their bad habit of randomly putting labels on others. Can they do so?

ARMED FORCES STRAGEGY SHIFT SEEN 'REVOLUTIONARY'

HK160408 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 16 Feb 86 p 1

["Special Dispatch": "Shift in China's Strategy for Building Armed Forces Shows New Evaluation of World Situation"]

[Text] Beijing, 15 Feb -- Li Desheng, political commissar of the National Defense University, says that the shift in building China's armed forces foreshadows the arrival of a golden age for armed forces. The present 1 million reduction in armed forces personnel helps to speed the modernization of the armed forces.

Li Desheng made these comments at a forum convened at the National Defense University by the editorial board of JIEFANGJUN BAO. He was speaking on the question of how to adapt the strategic shift in the guiding idea on building the armed forces. Today's JIEFANGJUN BAO prints the speeches at this forum on the top half of the front page.

Speaking on the objective basis for a strategic shift, Zhang Zhen, commandant of the National Defense University, said that in accordance with its scientific analysis of the international situation, the Central Military Commission has made a policy decision designed to create a strategic shift in the guiding idea for building the armed forces, based on the needs of developing the national economy and strengthening national defense. Zhang Zhen said that, taking an overall view of the world situation, although the danger of war still exists, and small-scale wars are continually breaking out, a world war is by no means imminent, and there may be no major war within this century or for even longer than that. There are hopes that world peace can be preserved. He said: It can be said that the Soviet Union and the United States, which are capable of fighting a major war, have achieved parity of strength, with neither enjoying superiority over the other. Neither of them would dare take reckless action. At the same time, the development of nuclear weapons is changing many traditional concepts of war.

The increase in the number of nuclear bombs has correspondingly made the launching of a war a more complex and serious matter, and the superpowers have no choice but to weigh the pros and cons of launching war. Even more notable is the fact that the growth of the forces for peace throughout the world exceeds that of the forces for war. People throughout the world are demanding peace and opposing war.

He stressed that, judging by the present situation, it is not objective to talk of "the wind rushing through a tower heralding a rising storm in the mountains" and to say that war is imminent. We are in fact faced with a relatively stable period of peace.

Political Commissar Li Desheng said that in making a strategic shift in the guiding idea on building the armed forces, we should switch from basing our work on the war readiness posture of "fighting an early, major, and nuclear war" onto the normal track of building a regularized and modernized revolutionary army during a period of peace. This shift can be described as another fundamental and revolutionary change in the history of our Army, and this policy decision is another epoch-making decision in the building of China's armed forces.

The participants in the forum also reviewed the lessons of history. They proposed that the present good opportunity should not be missed. It is necessary to set our sights on the advanced, redouble efforts, and rouse ourselves in order to catch up. They said it is necessary to focus on the macro, start with the micro, and stimulate all-round implementation of a major shift by creating specific shifts.

NAVY INVESTIGATION TO REVIEW 1985 ACCIDENTS

HK140839 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 14 Feb 86 p 5

[Special dispatch from Beijing: "Authorities Demand a General Inspection of the Chinese Navy Because of Numerous Accidents"]

[Test] A noticeable problem faced by the Chinese Navy last year was numerous accidents, some of which were rather serious. The authorities demand a group-by-group general inspection of the vessels and the ranks of the Navy, as revealed by an enlarged meeting of the Standing Committee of the Navy's CPC Committee.

Held in Beijing from 18 to 26 January, this meeting dealt mainly with two things, namely, reviewing work in 1985 and assigning tasks for 1986. During the meeting, Li Yaowen, Liu Huaqing, and Wei Jinshan gave separate reports on the work in 1985 and the tasks, the building of the Navy, and party rectification in units at and below regimental level for 1986.

The meeting pointed out that in the past year, the Navy was successful in various work, with structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization of the Navy as the kernel of that success. However, the Navy still faced with many problems, the most noticeable being numerous accidents, some of which were rather serious.

As for this year's tasks, the meeting pointed out: The general tasks and requirements are to carry on the reform; continue to implement the "plan for implementation of the structural reforms, streamlining, and reorganization of the Navy;" strengthen the building of spiritual civilization; step up the process of revolutionization, modernization, and regularization of the Navy; and fulfill all assigned tasks.

The meeting emphasized: This year, it is necessary to concentrate our attention on the reform, the party, and work relating to the grass-roots level. In other words, the Navy is to conduct various reforms centering around the structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization of the Navy; to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style within the Navy during this year, with the Navy's leading organs and leading cadres taking the initiative, and to effect radical change in poor conditions of the Navy's grass-roots units within 3 years. To make progress in the building of grass-roots units, the Navy is to concentrate efforts on three aspects this year: First, an extensive group-by-group inspection of the vessels and the ranks of the Navy is to be carried out, with the aim of solving a number of problems, second, efforts will be made to improve the quality of cadres, expecially grass-roots cadres; and third, efforts will be made to improve leadership style and emphasis will be on real actions.

In accordance with the guidelines laid down by the party rectification forum in the PLA, the meeting has mapped out the procedure for party recification in Navy units at and below the regimental level and for review of the condition of those organs at and above the division level which have undergone party recification once. The meeting emphasized that party committees at all levels must earnestly take charge of leadership over party rectification in units at and below the regimental level, and that straightening out party style must be stressed in reviewing the condition of those organs at and above the division level which have undergone party rectification once.

The meeting also discussed the short and long-term goals of coastal defense, the Navy's structure and establishment, development of arms, training of personnel, battlefield works, logistics technical protection, equipment repair, research of naval military technique, and other important questions.

Present at the meeting were members of the Standing Committee of the Navy CPC Committee, the principal leaders of units at and above the Army level and military institutes directly under the Navy, and some leaders of the Navy Discipline Inspection Committee and Navy headquarters.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN HOLDS WEEKLY BRIEFING

SRV Cease-fire Proposal

OW190935 Beijing XINHUA in English 0929 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 19 (XINHUA) -- A Foreign Ministry spokesman today exposed the hypocricy of the Vietnamese so-called proposal for a cease-fire during the Spring Festival. "The Vietnamese troops have made uninterrupted armed provocations against China's border areas by opening gun and artillery fires across the border almost every day and sending armed forces to make harassing attacks on the Chinese territory, which did not stop even during the Spring Festival," the spokesman commented at the weekly news briefing at the request of foreign correspondents.

"All this has laid bare the hypocritical nature of the Vietnamese so-called proposal for a cease-fire during the Spring Festival," he stressed. Confronted with the provocations and incursions of the Vietnamese Armed Forces, he said, "the Chinese frontier guards are justified to make proper counterattacks."

OLYMPIC COMMITTEE THANKS IOC FOR WAN LI AWARD

OW170310 Beijing XINHUA in English 0255 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 17 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Olympic Committee (C.O.C.) sent a telex Sunday to Juan Antonio Samaranch, president of the International Olympic Committee (I.O.C.), thanking him for the awarding of a gold Olympic order to Chinese Vice Premier Wan Li, an Olympic order to Huang Zhong, vice-president of the C.O.C., and an Olympic cup to the committee.

The IOC's decision on the awarding was made at a three-day I.O.C. executive board meeting in Lausanne last week. Samaranch informed the Chinese side in telexes on February 12 and 13. The C.O.C. said in the Sunday telex, "This is an honour not only for our Olympic Committee, but also for the Chinese sports circles, all trainers, coaches and athletes." It said "The C.O.C. will cooperate closely with I.O.C. to make greater contributions to publicizing the Olympic ideal and promoting the development of the Olympic movement."

PRC EMBASSY HOSTS SPRING FESTIVAL PARTY

OW180011 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] The Chinese Embassy in the United States held a get-together on 15 February to celebrate the Spring Festival together with some 400 Overseas Chinese, Americans of Chinese descent, and their dependents, from either the Chinese mainland or Taiwan. During the get-together, a Chinese youth dance school, the American Martial Arts Academy, the (Hongweige) Martial Arts School, the embassy staff, and some American friends performed recreational programs, such as singing, dancing, martial arts, and magic. Their performances were warmly welcomed by the audience.

Before the get-together, Han Xu, Chinese ambassador to the United States, invited some 30 well-known Overseas Chinese and Chinese-Americans to a discussion meeting. He first briefed them on China's achievements and inadequacy in construction last year, and its Seventh 5-Year Plan. He hoped that Chinese in all circles in the United States would show concern for China's construction. During the discussion, more than a dozen well-known scholars and experts expressed their views in connection with China's economic construction, legal system, culture, science and technology, and education.

WEINBERGER INTERVIEWED ON CONTINUING SDI PROGRAM

OW140214 Beijing XINHUA in English 0205 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 13 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger said here today the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger should not block the United States in pursuing the "star wars" program.

In an interview with the ASSOCIATED PRESS, Weinberger said the defense programs could withstand a six-month delay in shuttle operations caused by the explosion of Challenger which killed seven people on board on January 28. If the delays stretch to a year or more, he added, the Pentagon might have to turn to alternatives for launching needed weather, communications and spy satellites for military purposes. However, he did not specify what alternatives might be. It is an open secret that the U.S. space shuttle flights have carried military missions, and some flights were even carried out secretly for mere military purposes.

Weinberger admitted that some "star wars" experiments would undoubtedly be delayed by the loss of Challenger. Asked whether the U.S. will accept an intricate space defense system like "star wars" in view of the accident of Challenger, Weinberger said: "I certainly don't think we should stop working on it because we had a terrible tragedy on the shuttle...There is no way you can have a risk-free environment." He said research is proceeding with the idea of building a "many-layered system" that can catch incoming nuclear missiles at different stages of their flight.

The U.S. Congress has authorized the Pentagon to develop larger unmanned rockets that can boost the same size payload into orbit as the space shuttle, but those rockets cannot be used before 1988. Weinberger also defended in the interview the administration's decision to seek an 11.9 percent increase for the military budget in fiscal 1987.

NO HEALTH HAZARD FOUND IN SOVIET 'SPY DUST'

OW150742 Beijing XINHUA in English 0700 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 14 (XINHUA) -- United States today confirmed that the "spy dust" used by the Soviets to track U.S. personnel in Moscow poses no health hazard, but added that it would continue to object to the use of chemicals against U.S. personnel.

A report released today by the State Department said that the dust is a chemical -- nitro phenyl pentadiene aldehyde, or NPPD. The Soviets had been reportedly using it for several years to help monitor the activities of Americans in Moscow and Leningrad. The State Department said last year that the Soviets had been "dusting" NPPD on Embassy doorknobs, steering wheels of U.S. diplomats' cars and other items commonly touched by Americans. The U.S. Administration protested the action to the Soviet Government. After having conducted extensive tests on this tracking agent, the report said, "The results indicate that it has not been used indiscriminately against American personnel but has been employed by Soviet authorities against a specifically-targeted, relatively small percentage of official American employees." "Although it appears that the use of NPPD and other tracking agents was confined to a small percentage of American personnel specifically targeted by Soviet authorities, we are strongly concerned that any chemical tracking agents have been used against our employees. We will continue to monitor for such chemicals," said the report.

FALLING DOLLAR IMPERILS U.S.-JAPAN RELATIONS

OW170740 Beijing XINHUA in English 0658 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 16 (XINHUA) -- The current trend of dollar falling against Japanese yen, if not handled well, could worsen the economic and financial relations between Tokyo and Washington, a U.S. economist wrote in today's NEW YORK TIMES. Sam Nakagama, chief economist of Nakagama and Wallace Inc., an economic advisory firm, based his warning on the fact that the plunge of oil prices on world markets would be a boon to Japan which depends on imports for all of its oil needs, and an attack on the United States which produces twice as much oil as Saudi Arabia, but at a much higher production cost.

Nakagama said this was the reason behind the current surge of the Japanese yen, and added that if Japan's exports and non-energy imports remain unchanged, its trade surplus will rise from 56 billion dollars last year to about 75 billion dollars in 1986. He thus compared Japan to "the new OPEC of the world financial system," in the sense that it sucks in money from abroad through its powerful export industries and spends even less abroad because of falling oil prices. On the other hand, the economist warned, the dollar will possibly fall to 150 yen, which he described as a dangerous development that would cause "a rebound in inflation.... a flight of foreign capital which would lead to a surge of interest rates and renewed strains on the international financial system." Also, U.S. banks, the largest oil industry lenders, would thus face serious threats, Nakagama said. He suggested that the U.S. Government impose an oil import fee, using the receipts to cover the cuts as requested by the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced budget law passed last year.

To the Japanese Government, he suggested that discount rate should be cut further so as to boost domestic investment. Mr. Nakagama's view reflected the worries here in the U.S. that the dollar may be falling too fast, first due to coordinations between the U.S. and the Japanese Governments, and then because of the precipitous plunge of the world oil prices. As the Tokyo summit of seven industrial nations are months aheads, calls for a reform in world monetary system may become louder.

WORLDWATCH NOTES BURDEN OF MILITARY COSTS

OW160916 Beijing XINHUA in English 0853 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 15 (XINHUA) -- The global military expenditures grew steadily over the last quarter of a century, outpacing the growth of the world economy, according to a new study released today by the U.S. Worldwatch Institute, a Washinton-based research group.

The study, entitled "State of the World 1986," said that between 1960 and 1985, military spending climbed from 400 billion to 940 billion U.S. dollars, increasing every year regardless of economic downturns or of the signing of arms control treaties between the United States and the Soviet Union, the world's two largest arsenals. Global military outlays in 1985 exceeded the income of the poorest half of humanity. It said that the steady expansion of the world economy for most of a generation has permitted both more guns and more butter, but for many countries, this age has come to an end. Environmental decline and economic deficits may now be a greater threat to national security than armed aggression. It went on to say that the principal force driving the militarization of the world economy is the conflict between the two superpowers. The U.S.-Soviet arms race has sapped the energies and resources of both countries, and the entire world is paying the price. Besides the squandering of resources, global militarization has contributed to the neglect of other pressing issues, such as environmental deterioration and growing Third World debt.

For the United States, it said, accelerating the arms race in the early eighties has pushed military spending to a new height, and contributed heavily to the largest fiscal deficits ever recorded. In the Soviet Union, "the arms race is diverting political attention from the economic reforms needed to achieve the modernization that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev has endorsed," it added. It said that while the two military superpowers are preoccupied with each other, Japan is moving toward a position of global economic dominance, surpassing both the Soviet Union and the United States. "If recent trends continue, Japan will supplant the United States by 1990 as the world's leading trading power," it asserted. The Worldwatch Institute's scudy said that partly as a consequence of the arms race, the United States has accumulated almost as much debt over the past six years as during the preceding two centuries. The combination of the growing U.S. federal debt, now in excess of two trillion dollars, and the Third World's external debt, now over 800 billion dollars, is putting severe stresses on the international economy, it added.

AUTHORITIES CALL DUVALIER 'UNDESIRABLE' ALIEN

OW170648 Beijing XINHUA in English 0631 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 16 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government refuses to allow former Haitian president-for-life Jean-Claude Duvalier into the United States from France State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman announced today. The statement came after talks between U.S. and French officials over Duvalier failed. French authorities have been seeking to ship the Haitian president to the United States since Duvalier fled Haiti on February 8 aboard a U.S. Air Force jet to the French town of Talloires.

"Duvalier does not have a visa and would not be allowed in. Our laws and regulations would make him unable to come to the United States. He would be an undesirable and undocumented alien," Stockman said. "There are a large number of exiled Haitians in this country and security would be a major problem for Duvalier here," she added. "In addition, an extradition treaty is in effect between the United States and Haiti. Were Duvalier to come here, he would expect to be returned to Haiti at some future date."

The spokeswoman told reporters that U.S. officials have been working with their French colleagues to find a home for Duvalier. Duvalier has reportedly asked for asylum in a French-speaking country. According to reports from France, Premier Laurent Fabius said yesterday that France had stressed to the United States that Duvalier was accepted only temporarily and that "if no solution was found, it would be normal that he leaves for the United States."

IRAQI DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER ENDS VISIT

OW180256 Beijing XINHUA in English 0234 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 17 (XINHUA) -- Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tariq 'Aziz left Moscow today bound for a United Nations Security Council meeting in New York on the Iran-Iraq conflict, the official news agency TASS reported. In a meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze during a one-day working visit, 'Aziz, who is also Iraq's foreign minister, said that last week's renewed offensive by Iran had created a "dangerous situation."

'Aziz arrived in Moscow Sunday under an entrustment of the Arab League's 7-nation follow-up committee on the Iran-Iraq war. During the meeting, Shevardnadze reiterated the Soviet view that fighting should cease and the conflicts be resolved through negotiation. Shevardnadze expressed concern over the growing scope of military operations, which threatens the cause of peace and stability in the entire region TASS said. "The imperialist forces, which are interested in further heightening tension in the region, should not be allowed to profit from this conflict being dragged out" the Soviet minister added.

XINHUA PREVIEWS UPCOMING CPSU CONGRESS

OW190926 Beijing XINHUA in English 0859 GMT 19 Feb 86

["Soviet Party Congress To Define New Strategy (by Shen Yiming)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, February 19 (XINHUA) -- The upcoming congress of the Soviet Communist Party, the first since Mikhail Gorbachev became general secretary of the party last March, is expected to review the party's activities in the recent years and formulate a new economic and social strategy.

According to the agenda, the 27th congress, due to open February 25, will focus on amendments to the party program and the country's economic plan for the next 15 years. Gorbachev said at a party Central Committee meeting last October that the revised party program will be "a program for planned and all-round upgrading of socialism, for Soviet society's advance on to communism through accelerated national socio-economic development." This contrasts with the previous edition of the program, worked out under the late party leader Nikita Khrushchev in 1961, which predicted that "a communist society will have been basically established in the Soviet Union by 1980, and completely established thereafter." Gorbachev dismissed Khrushchev's ambitious predictions as "groundless fantasies" and said that they had been "doomed to failure."

The new draft edition of the program, published after the October meeting and to be adopted at the coming congress, defines the party's main task through the year 2000 as a struggle for "planned and comprehensive perfection of socialism." It appears that after more than two decades of experimentation the Soviet leadership has returned to a sober estimate of the Soviet reality.

Another major subject to be discussed at the congress will be the country's economic blueprint. Draft guidelines for the economic and social development of the USSR for 1986-1990 and through the year 2000 published last November say the country's national income and industrial output will double by the end of the century through implementing economic system restructure and scientific and technological progress. It is almost certain that delegates to the congress will make a terrific din about the need for the economic system restructure.

S. KOREA'S CAMPAIGN FOR CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION

SK190214 Beijing International Service in Korean 1100 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Summary from poor reception] The New Korea Democratic Party [NKDP], the largest opposition party in South Korea, and the Committee for Promotion of Democracy [CPD], an opposition organization, began the campaign to collect signatures for the revision of the Constitution. "The opposition forces, democratic figures, youths, and students in South Korea have recognized that the current Constitution was (?fabricated) through undemocratic means." Moreover, they have pointed out that this Constitution, which lacks legitimacy, disregards basic democratic principles. "Therefore, rejecting the current Constitution and demanding direct presidential elections are the objective of the opposition forces' continuous struggle and a slogan in their struggle. The campaign to collect 10 million signatures for the revision of the Constitution can be regarded as an important action taken by the opposition forces to realize this objective."

On 12 February, 122 NKDP members, including 42 national assemblymen and 97 members of the CPD, signed the petition demanding revision of the Constitution. "Yi Min-u, president of the NKDP, who enjoys a great influence on South Korean opposition forces, and Kim Tae-chung and Kim Yong-sam, co-chairman of the CPD, were among them. Other opposition organizations, youths, and students in South Korea also support this campaign to collect signatures. Rev. Mun Il-hwan, chairman of the Federation of Democratic Reunification and Mass Movement, an opposition organization, also positively demands the revision of the current Constitution into a democratic constitution. In October of last year, students of some South Korean universities adopted resolutions to organize headquarters for the movement to revise the Constitution for the masses, democracy, and national reunification. As a result, headquarters for the movement to revise the Constitution were successively organized this year at Seoul National, Yonsei, Ewha Women's, and Hongik Universities. On 4 February, in particular, some 1,000 students from 14 universities in Seoul established a joint organization to support the campaign to collect 10 million signatures and decided to conduct the campaign to collect signatures."

"When the campaign to collect 10 million signatures, which began in Seoul on 12 February, began to spread to many local areas, the South Korean authorities hastily took the measure of suppression. That is, on that day, the authorities not only put Kim Tae-chung under house arrest, first, and forcibly took Kim Yong-sam to his home and detained him there, but also subsequently searched the NKDP central headquarters office and the CPD office. At the same time, the South Korean authorities are strengthening control at entrances to universities, banning the entry of outsiders and vehicles, and are checking the identity of the students, blocking the students' participation in the movement to collect signatures. However, such measures of suppression by the South Korean authorities cannot make the opposition forces give in. The large-scale campaign by the South Korean opposition forces to collect signatures for demanding the revision of the current Constitution and direct presidential elections is being continuously and persistently conducted."

[Text] Tokyo, February 18 (XINHUA) -- The China International Trust and Investment Corporation (CITIC) will issue bonds totalling 40 billion Japanese yen (about 219.8 million U.S. dollars) in Japan under an agreement signed today between the CITIC, the Daiwa Securities Co. and the Bank of Tokyo. According to the agreement, the bonds will be sold at 99.7 percent of par value with a yearly interest rate of 6.3 percent. The bonds will mature in 1997. This is the fourth time that the CITIC has issued bonds in Japan and financial sources here regard the new issue as a sign that the CITIC is making greater efforts to enter the international capital market.

Recent speeches by Soviet leaders indicate the restructure is aimed at increasing the decision-making powers of enterprises while strengthening the role of the state plan in the economy. But so far, few concrete and efficient measures have been found to promote the restructure and there are also differing views how much autonomy industrial enterprises should have. This congress is not expected to announce new specific policies or measures on economic system restructure.

There are other indications that the congress, reviewing the party's work in the past, will not only sum up achievements, but will also face up to the mistakes made by former party leaders in the sixties and seventies. The Soviet press has said those mistakes include reliance on "voluntarism," a theory that overemphasizes the role of man's will. Meanwhile "bureaucracy," "sticking to old ways," "indiscipline" and "corruption," which plague party and government departments will also be lashed.

The last major item on the agenda will be election of the new party leadership. A big change is expected to take place in the Central Committee as more than one-third of its 319 full members chosen by the last congress have died or retired in the past five years. Many young, pro-reform, competent people will enter the new Central Committee. Since Gorbachev became top party leader in March, 1985, a third of the 12-member Politburo have been newly elected. The average age of the Politburo members dropped to 63 from 69 in 1984. It is believed that most of the current members will remain in the Politburo, the place where the greatest amount of power lies, and the present leadership headed by Gorbachev will remain unchanged.

GRISHIN 'RELIEVED' OF CPSU POLITBURO POST

OW181721 Beijing XINHUA in English 1650 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 18 (XINHUA) -- Victor Grishin, who was removed as first secretary of Moscow's party committee last December, today was "relieved" of his post as Politburo member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist Party (CPSU). The decision was taken at a plenary session of the party's Central Committee today. The Soviet news agency TASS said that Grishin's relief was related to his "retirement."

The plenum also dropped Konstantin Rusakov as member of the Secretariat of the Party's Central Committee and selected Boris Yeltsin as an alternate Politburo member.

Grishin, 72, became an alternate member of the Politburo in 1966 and has been a full Politburo member since 1971. Grishin is the third member dismissed from the party's highest leading body since Mikhail Gorbachev took power last March. The first and second were Grigoriy Romanov and Nikolay Tikhonov. Yeltsin, 55, was appointed first secretary of the Sverdlovsk regional party committee in 1976 and transferred to the post of the head of the construction department of the CPSU Central Committee in 1985. While holding this post he was elected a secretary of the CPSU Central Committee. Last December he replaced Grishin as first secretary of Moscow's party committee and severely criticized the previous party committee for its "serious mistakes" in the presence of his predecessor Grishin last month.

XINHUA VIEWS SRV COLONIAL RULE IN CAMBODIA

OW190037 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1310 GMT 18 Feb 86

["Roundup" by Zhao Rui: "The Vietnamese Authorities Are Intensifying Their Colonial Rule Over Cambodia"]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Feb (XINHUA) -- Toward the end of 1978, the Vietnamese authorities dispatched an army 200,000 strong to invade Cambodia, using the bayonet to prop up the Heng Samrin regime in Phnom Penh. For more than 7 years, the Le Duan clique has slaughtered the Cambodian people while imposing colonial rule in political, economic, cultural, and other spheres of Cambodian life. The Vietnamese authorities' aim is so treacherous and their means so cruel that people boil with anger.

1. The Vietnamese authorities control all levels of the Heng Samrin regime from central down to local governments. Shortly after taking over Phnom Penh in early 1979, the Vietnamese authorities installed a "Cambodian Workers Committee" as the supreme command for carrying out aggressive activities in Cambodia. Under the "Workers Committee" are a number of branch organizations that control various party and government organs in the Heng Samrin regime. Vietnamese Army Headquarters (code named 719) is responsible for controlling Heng Samrin's troops. Since 1980, the Vietnamese authorities have successively formed "sister" city or province ties between 19 cities and provinces in southern Vietnam and Cambodia in order to intensify control over the local governments of the Heng Samrin regime at and below the provincial level. At the same time, the Vietnamese authorities also dispatched Vietnamese "advisers" and "experts" to all Cambodian provinces and cities to exercise direct control over the organs of the Heng Samrin regime from central down to local governments. The Vietnamese control the decisionmaking powers of the Heng Samrin regime's internal, external, and military affairs policies. The Vietnamese authorities also sent Phnom Penh officials to Vietnam to undergo systematic training in an effort to win their loyalty, and continuously purge "uncooperative elements" in the Heng Samrin regime. More than 20 officials at and above the provincial level in the puppet regime were purged in the second half of 1983 alone. Even former premiers of the puppet Pen Sovan and Chan Si regimes could not escape punishment by the Vietnamese.

2. The Vietnamese authorities encourage mass emigration to Cambodia in an attempt to gradually change its population structure. Over the past 7 years, nearly 700,000 Vietnamese have emigrated to Cambodia. Most of them are from the populated areas in northern Vietnam. They have settled in large cities, towns, and economic zones in Cambodia. The Vietnamese authorities have also encouraged retired Vietnamese Army officers and soldiers in Cambodia to settle in Cambodia and become Cambodian citizens. According to a Vietnamese-Cambodian border agreement signed between Vietnam and Phnom Penh's Heng Samrin regime, Vietnamese people are allowed to freely enter and leave Cambodia. Some Vietnamese have set up permanent businesses in Camboida, especially in large cities. Presently, the Vietnamese make up more than 60 percent of the population of Phnom Penh. "Cooperatives" and "production service companies" run by Vietnamese are seen everywhere, especially along some key roads and in fertile areas. Residents of some eastern towns are mostly Vietnamese. They have forcibly taken away the Cambodian people's farmland and looted their natural resources. For example, Zhupu rubber plantation, Cambodia's largest, has been largely taken over by Vietnamese.

3. The Vietnamese authorities have pursued a policy of national assimilation. The Vietnamese occupation troops have carried out the policy of national assimilation by forcing all schools in occupied areas to follow Vietnamese-style education. Teachers are selected and trained by the Vietnamese; textbooks and teaching programs are drafted and edited by the Vietnamese; and students are forced to study the Vietnamese language, music, and drama.

The Vietnamese occupation troops have also forced middle school students and government and army officials at various levels in the Heng Samrin regime to take up Vietnamese as the primary foreign language and to regard it as a condition for entering higher schools, employment, or receiving promotion. Another method of the policy of national assimilation is to "encourage" mixed marriages between Vietnamese and Cambodians. At present, most of the Heng Samrin regime's government and army officials, especially senior officials, have Vietnamese spouses. It is rather common for officers and soldiers of the Vietnamese Army in Cambodia and Vietnamese advisers and experts to marry Cambodian women. According to reports, by early 1985, there were already some 13,000 Vietnamese-Cambodian mixed blood children in Battambang and Siem Reap Provinces alone.

4. The Vietnamese authorities have wilfully plundered Cambodia's natural resources. Cambodia has always been reputed as the "land of fish and rice." The large number of Vietnamese emigrants occupy the fertile areas in the vicinity of Phnom Penh, along the Mekong River, and around Tonle Sap Lake. Major commercial sectors in large cities are monopolized by Vietnamese. They have looted large quantities of rubber, lumber, grain. fish and shrimps, and pepper from Cambodia for Vietnamese consumption and foreign trade.

Vietnam's savage occupation and plunder of Cambodia has aroused strong dissatisfaction and resistance from people in various places in Cambodia. In areas around the Tonle Sap Lake, along the Mekong River, and in eastern Cambodia bordering Vietnam, where most of the Vietnamese emigrants have settled down, the local people and soldiers from Phnom Penh are cooperating with the patriotic forces in raiding Vietnamese military camps and sentry areas in an effort to dissolve Vietnamese-supported puppet village and town governments. Clashes between Heng Samrin troops and Vietnamese occupation troops have also increased. The Cambodian people's resistance and struggle will make it impossible for the Vietnamese authorities to realize their scheme of annexing Cambodia.

U.S. DELEGATION TO MIA TALKS SHORTENS SRV VISIT

OW151803 Beijing XINHUA in English 1651 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Hanoi, February 15 (XINHUA) -- A U.S. congressional delegation led by Congressman Gerald Solomon suddenly wound up its visit to Vietnam because of its failure to meet with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach. The nine-member delegation, which arrived in Hanoi yesterday, left here this afternoon.

According to the original arrangement, Solomon and his delegation would pay a 36-hour visit for talks with Vietnamese leaders on U.S. servicemen missing in action (MIA) and American prisoners of war (POW) and meet with Nguyen Co Thach this afternoon, but instead, with Special Foreign Minister Vo Dong Giang.

Diplomatic sources here said Solomon might "feel unhappy" about this sudden change of arrangement. Not long after the two-hour talks with Vietnamese Vice Foreign Minister Hoang Bich Son this morning, the delegation declared that it would not go on with the schedule, and left here earlier than planned.

Well-informed sources here said that Solomon had talked with Hoang Bich Son on the MIA and POW issues. But they did not discuss the relations between the two countries or the international siutation, including the Kampuchea issue. When a Vietnamese official was asked about why the delegation left here ahead of schedule, he refused to explain, saying he did not know the reason either. The delegation is the second such group to come here within over a month, and today's was the first such incident in the three-year MIA talks, which had run smoothly.

DISENFRANCHISEMENT IN PHILIPPINE ELECTION RAPPED

OW181637 Beijing XINHUA in English 1453 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 18 (XINHUA) -- Mr. Concepcion, chairman of the National Citizens' Movement for Free Elections (Namfrel), said here today that 3.3 million voters failed to vote in the February 7 poll of the Philippines because they could not find their names in the voters' lists. Namfrel was the citizens'arm of the Commission on Elections during the voting and canvassing period.

Concepcion told a gathering of business executives that the disenfranchisement of 3.3 million voters practically altered the margin and the outcome of the election. Because of the disenfranchisement of voters, Concepcion said, only 76.96 percent of the 26.2 million registered voters cast their ballots, making the voters' turnout "one of the lowest, if not the lowest" in history. He charged the disenfranchisement was done by scrambling the list of voters, slowdown in voting procedures, and late opening and early closing of polling precincts, adding that the political bailiwicks of opposition candidate Corazon Aquino was most hurt.

Civil Disobedience Begins

OW181643 Beijing XINHUA in English 1510 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 18 (XINHUA) -- The nationwide civil disobedience campaign called by opposition presidential candidate Corazon Aquino appeared to have taken its toll here. Hundreds of supporters of Mrs. Aquino today picketed the offices of three pro-government dailies -- BULLETIN TODAY, PHILIPPINE DAILY EXPRESS and TIMES JOURNAL -- to protest what they considered "biased reporting" for President Ferdinand Marcos and the ruling party. The picketers brandished placards, distributed leaflets, and burned copies of the newspapers to dramatize their protest.

Last Sunday Mrs. Aquino called for nationwide protest action against the massive fraud and terrorism in the February 7 polls, including the boycott of crony media and seven banks which have close links with the government. Heavy withdrawals of deposits in the seven banks were reported in the financial districts of the capital. The heavy withdrawals actually started yesterday, according to a bank official.

MARCOS ACCEPTS RESIGNATION OF GENERAL VER

OW161336 Beijing XINHUA in English 1325 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 16 (XINHUA) -- President Marcos today announced that he has accepted the resignation of Armed Forces Chief of Staff Gen. Fabian C. Ver. Marcos made the announcement at a press conference at the presidential palace this afternoon. He said the general had resigned from all his military posts.

The president said that after his retirement, Ver might become a civilian member of the Board of Generals and would be available as a "consultant" to the military. At the same time, the president designated Constabulary and Integrated National Police (INP) Chief Lt. Gen. Fidel V. Ramos as acting Armed Forces chief of staff. Ramos worked at the acting chief when Ver was indicted in the 1983 assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino. Ver reassumed his position as the highest officer in the military after he was acquitted of the charges filed against him last December. Marcos said he might also dismiss other overstayed generals as this had been already recommended. Asked about the incidents of fraud and violence in the Feb. 7 polls, the president pledged to investigate those cases and to prosecute those who had violated the law, whether he is a ruling party member or an oppositionist.

HONG KONG INDUSTRIALIST ON U.S. TRADE TIES

OW151759 Beijing XINHUA in English 1644 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Hong Kong regards the United States as its largest market, as about 40 percent of its exports go to that country, a local leading industrialist said here today. Last year, the territory's exports to the U.S. came to 72 billion H.K. dollars (about 9.23 billion U.S. dollars), S.Y. Chung, chairman of the Hong Kong-U.S. Economic Cooperation Committee, told XINHUA.

Meanwhile, imports from the U.S. were worth 22 billion H.K. dollars, roughly 10 percent of Hong Kong's total, said Chung, who is also the chairman of Sonca Industries Ltd. Chung is leaving here tomorrow for Canada and the U.S. as the head of a top-level Hong Kong economic and trade delegation. He said that the delegation will attend the third joint plenary session of the Hong Kong-U.S. and the U.S.-Hong Kong Economic Cooperation Committees to discuss important bilateral trade and economic issues. Sir David Akers Jones, Hong Kong's chief secretary, will also attend the session of both committees as the guest-of-honor.

Delegation members will also hold talks with U.S. Government officials and explain to the U.S. Government and business community the free enterprise situation in Hong Kong. Chung pointed out that while the U.S. has practised protectionism, such as in the case of the Jenkins Bill, against other countries and regions, "Hong Kong does not impose protectionism, import duties or import quotas." "Hong Kong allows the establishment of foreign banks and insurance companies, and the U.S. has 20 banks in Hong Kong," he added. He said Hong Kong has many advantages for expanding trade ties with the United States.

For example, it is the largest financial center in east Asia, with 350 financial companies and 145 licensed banks, 100 of which are foreign. Its profit tax rate is very low (18.5 percent). Moreover, it is a gateway to the Chinese mainland; an increasing number of provincial and national trade companies from the mainland have offices in Hong Kong. As the largest foreign investor in Hong Kong, the U.S. now has 140 factories employing 40,000 Hong Kong people, Chung said. In addition, the U.S. has great potential to sell more to Hong Kong, since its exports accounted for only 10 percent of the territory's total last year. "U.S. products and service industries can compete freely and fairly in Hong Kong," Chung noted.

PAKISTAN TO OPEN KHOKHROPAR BORDER WITH INDIA

OW050914 Beijing XINHUA in English 0830 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Islamabad, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Pakistan will open Khokhropar border with India to alleviate the difficulties of people travelling to India via the land route, according to PAKISTAN TIMES today. This was announced by Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo while addressing a meeting of Pakistan Muslim League in Karachi yesterday.

The decision, Junejo said, has been taken by the government to meet the wishes of the people living in Karachi and Sind, who have been facing problems in visting their relatives in India. Previously they had to travel a long and expensive route via Lahore to meet their relatives in the neighboring country. A formal announcement will be made by the government after sorting out the legalities involved in opening the Khokhropar border with the Indian authorities and making necessary arrangements regarding immigration posts and other matters, the prime minister said.

The Khokhropar border, linking Pakistan's Sind Province with India's Rajasthan State and further leading to Uttar Pradesh (northern state), has remained closed for the last 35 years. Its opening will reduce the pressure on the Wagah border near Lahore where the traffic of visiting relatives between the two countries are so busy that travellers have to wait for ten hours for clearance of custom procedures. In Pakistan's Sind Province, 40 percent of the population are muslims immigrated from India.

DELEGATION ATTENDS HUNGARIAN TRADE UNION CONGRESS

OW141855 Beijing XINHUA in English 1648 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Budapest, February 14 (XINHUA) -- The 25th congress of Hungarian trade unions opened here this morning with the participation of more than 800 delegates and about 400 representatives from over 30 trade union organizations of foreign countries. Deputy general secretary of the Hungarian Workers' Party Karoly Nemeth and Premier Gyorgy Lazar attended the opening session.

In a report to the congress, Sandor Gaspar, president of the Central Council of Hungarian Trade Unions, reviewed the council's work since the previous congress and its tasks in the future. Gaspar said, "in the practice of workplace democracy the trade unions are to continue to act as the representatives of the working collectives." He pointed out that the unions must take into account the questions of economic policy because the evolvement of economic efficiency can contribute to resolving the contradictions in the building of socialism. "The evolvement of enterprise self-government must run concomitant with the growth in the political and societal significance of the trade unions," Gaspar noted. He stressed the need for the unions to take an active part in formulating and implementing the state economic policies. He said that the international activities of Hungarian trade unions are extensive, many-sided and versatile. The unions not only have close ties with the fellow bodies in the socialist countries, but also pay great attention to the relations with European capitalist countries and developing nations.

Present at the congress was a Chinese delegation headed by Chen Bingquan, vice-president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions. Chen held talks with Gaspar on February 10. The trade union organization of Hungary has about five million members, half of the country's population. It has established relations with trade unions of 104 nations.

Congress Ends

OW170804 Beijing XINHUA in English 0724 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Budapest, February 16 (XINHUA) -- Hungarian trade unions ended their 25th congress today after three days of discussion on economic problems. Sandor Gaspar and Tibor Baranyai were reelected president and general secretary of trade unions respectively at today's closing session.

In his report, Gaspar stressed the need for the unions to take an active part in formulating and implementing the state economic policies. He called for making efforts to boost the economy and fulfil the Seventh Five-Year Plan (1986-1990). He urged workers to better discipline and work harder to increase the country's wealth.

In response to delegates' questions, Gaspar said protecting workers' interests and promoting production are the two major and inseparable tasks of the unions. During the congress, delegates voiced complaints about the declines in real wages and real pensions as well as other social benefits including health care and the provision of flats. The rises of wages and salaries have failed to keep up with inflation in the past five years, they said. Karoly Nemeth, deputy general secretary of the Hungarian Workers' Party admitted that shortcomings in the government work and economic performance had contributed partly to these problems. Vice Premier Lajos Faluvegi, answering questions from delegates, promised to adopt measures to raise wages and pensions and allow local councils to build more flats this year. Nearly 800 delegates from across the country attended the three-day congress.

SFRY, ITALIAN COMMUNISTS HOLD TALKS IN BELGRADE

OW180320 Beijing XINHUA in English 0248 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Belgrade, February 17 (XINHUA) -- The situation in the world is pregnant with tendencies toward wars and other conflicts and threatening world peace and security, leaders of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia and the Italian Communist Party stated today.

A communique on the talks between Vidoje Zarkovic and Alessandro Natta, which was published by the TANJUG NEWS AGENCY, said that "it is necessary to launch an extensive international action for halting the arms race which results from big power ambitions and bloc rivalry." Both leaders stressed that the policy from the positions of strength and interference in the internal affairs of others should be abandoned and an equitable international cooperation based on active peaceful coexistence among all countries should develop. "They in particular emphasized the need for ensuring a peaceful and undisturbed development of Mediterranean countries and preventing outside attempts at interfering in this sensitive region," the communique said.

Zarkovic, president of the Yugoslav Communists League, and Natta, general secretary of the Italian Communist Party, also discussed the current situation of the international workers' movement. They reaffirmed that the working class and other progressive and democratic parties and movements, based on the principles of mutually full respect, independence, equality and non-interference in others' internal affairs, could contribute significantly to the success of the struggle for peace and for the right of all peoples to independently decide on their paths of development, the communique said. Alessandro Natta, who arrived here yesterday, is paying a return visit to the League of Communists of Yugoslavia. Former president of the league Ali Sukrija called on leaders of the Italian Communist Party in October 1984.

POLISH PARTY DRAFT PROGRAM UNDER DISCUSSION

OW180859 Beijing XINHUA in English 0723 GMT 18 Feb 86

["News Analysis: Polish Party Draft Program Urges Taking Socialist Road Under Polish Conditions (by Wen Youren and Shan Xi)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Warsaw, February 18 (XINHUA) -- The draft program of Poland's ruling party, now under discussion before being submitted for approval to the national congress in June, may reveal the present leadership's goals: Poland should follow the road to socialism according to its specific domestic conditions, a sharp contrast with the programmatic documents adopted at the party's seventh congress ten years ago.

The idea of drafting a program, the first of its kind in the Polish United Workers Party's history, was proposed at the party's ninth extraordinary congress in 1981. The congress stressed in its resolutions the need to formulate a "long-term" party program, as the previous congresses only adopted programmatic documents instead of party programs to use as guidelines. In October 1981, a drafting committee was established. The draft program was discussed in detail at a national theoretical meeting last November before it was published a week ago for public debate.

At the party's seventh congress in December 1975, Edward Gierek, former first secretary of the party who took over from Wladyslaw Gomulka after the late 1970 labor incident, delivered a report from the decision-making Politburo. That report and a resolution passed by the congress were seen as the party's action program during the 1970s. Several differences can be found in many major points between the newly-published draft program and the 1975 documents.

The most striking difference deals with what development period Poland is in. This may suggest a significant change in the way the party views the question. In the 1975 documents, Poland is described as a country "of total socialist character." It had entered a new and more advanced stage of building developed socialism, according to the documents. While in the draft program, Poland is defined as in a "long transition period" in which the foundation of socialism is still being laid in all fields. At November's theoretical meeting, Wojciech Jaruzelski, first secretary of the Polish party, also spoke of the "transition period." Poland is still in a class society full of contradictions, he added. The theoretical magazine IDEOLOGIES AND POLITICS put it more unequivocally when it said that the conclusions in the 1975 documents and those of the eighth congress (1980) were "premature" and a developed stage of socialism should only come next.

Another major difference between the 1975 documents and the draft program is on the party's guiding ideology. The 1975 documents emphasize the universality of the Marxist truth and common experience of socialist countries, particularly that of the Soviet Union, in running the country. The draft program, however, stresses integrating the universal truth of Marxism with each nation's actual conditions and practice, and says Marxism itself needs continual enriching. Jaruzelski warned against underestimating or denying the importance of national characteristics and socialist construction, a tendency he said hinders and serves to distort socialist development, resulting in making the working people disapprove of socialism.

The two versions also differ on economic policies. The 1975 documents focus on tighter centralism and discipline in production. The draft program pledges to carry out economic reforms and to grant more decision-making power to enterprises, while maintaining and strengthening the strategic role of the central planning system. Jaruzelski said that in the long-run, reform, instead of being a stopgap measure, will be a bridge leading to a more advanced stage of socialist transformation. While the 1975 documents provide for an accelerated social transformation in Poland's rural areas, the draft program favors an "evolutional transformation" in agriculture, which it says could be effected through free choice by farmers in managing their systems. The program also mentions the "supplementary role" of privately owned businesses in the economy.

Poland's foreign policies discussed in the draft program, if compared with the 1975 documents, can be seen as being oriented to serving the country's domestic development and safeguarding national interests. All these divergent points may reflect the past lessons drawn upon by the Polish leaders who realize that Poland should follow the road to socialism in light of its specific conditions.

LAST OF 22,000-TON GRAIN DONATION ARRIVES IN SUDAN

OW141844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1838 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Khartoum, February 14 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government has donated 22,000 tons of grain to Sudan for helping drought victims in the country. The grain has been delivered in five shipments beginning last June. The last shipment was delivered Thursday.

Sudan and other African countries sustained continuous droughts from 1981 to 1984. Seven million Sudanese have become victims of drought and desertification. A bumper harvest of sorghum in the country last year has somewhat alleviated the calamity, but three million people are still in need of food relief.

NINGXIA STUDY GROUP TO LEAVE FOR EGYPT

OW151547 Beijing XINHUA in English 1537 GMT 15 Feb 86

The Egyptian minister expressed interest in the region's farming technology and signed an agreement on cooperation in economy, technology, science and culture between the two countries.

MUBARAK, 'ARAFAT ON U.S. PALESTINE STATEMENT

OW140220 Beijing XINHUA in English 0210 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Cairo, February 13 (XINHUA) -- Egyptian President Husni Mubarak expressed here today appreciation of the statement issued on Monday by the U.S. State Department spokesman, in which the U.S. Administration admitted for the first time that the Palestinian people's right should be recognized, although it did not mention definitely the Palestinians' right to self-determination.

Following a 30-minute meeting this evening with visiting Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) Chairman Yasir 'Arafat, Mubarak said the U.S. statement "is encouraging and is a good step forward." Mubarak also said that he reviewed with Arafat the latest developments in the Middle East political situation and will meet with 'Arafat again Saturday. Asked about the results of his current visit to Cairo, 'Arafat said that he expected everything to be constructive.

'Arafat arrived here this afternoon for a few day's visit. Upon arrival, he said that he will discuss the U.S. statement with President Mubarak. Meanwhile, he blamed the United States for the stalemate of the Middle East peace process. Saying that the Jordanian-Palestinian talks in the last two weeks stopped without results due to the American intransigence and alignment to Israeli position, which denies the right to exist for the five million Palestinians, he pointed out that the United States used veto (in the U.N. Security Council) three times in one month to shield Israel.

It was reported that Egypt is trying to break the current stalemate by intensively contacting with the United States and the PLO. The United States insists that the PLO recognize the U.N. Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, which imply recognition of Israel, as a qualification for taking part in the peace negotiations. Meanwhile, the PLO demands that its recognition of Resolutions 242 and 338 be based on the condition that the United States and Israel recognize the Palestinian people's right to self-determination, which implies the establishment of a Palestine state.

'Arafat Comments Further

OW151749 Beijing XINHUA in English 1621 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Cairo, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Palestine Liberation Organization Chairman Yasir 'Arafat said here today that the statement made by U.S. State Department spokesman on February 10 on the rights of the Palestinian people is "a step forward" from the United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, according to MIDDLE EAST NEWS AGENCY. 'Arafat made these remarks to reporters after a meeting with Egyptian Premier 'Ali Lutfi today. He noted that the American statement referred for the first time to the legitimate rights of the Palestine people.

Meanwhile, Premier 'Ali Lutfi told reporters that the Egyptian and Palestinian sides are in agreement concerning the recent American statement. He hoped the U.S. statement would be followed by other positive steps so that a just peace might be reached through the Jordanian-Palestinian accord reached on February 11 last year or through the convening of an international peace conference on the Middle East. The spokesman of the U.S. State Department Charles Redman stated on February 10 that the Palestinian people's rights should be recognized, although he did not mention definitely the Palestinian people's right to self-determination as the PLO had demanded.

Yesterday, 'Arafat said in an interview with AKHBAR AL-YAWM newspaper that the U.S. statement contained nothing other than what was forwarded by President Ronald Reagan in his initiative of September in 1982. He stressed in the interview that the statement in its entirety is not new, but a return to the old American stance. Egypt welcomed the U.S. statement soon after it was announced, saying it was positive and step forward.

ENVOY VOICES 'CONCERN' OVER IRAN-IRAQ WAR

OW160745 Beijing XINHUA in English 0720 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Tunis, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Secretary General Chedli Klibi of the Arab League received the ambassadors to Tunisia of the five permanent members of the U.N. Security Council here yesterday and today on the situation of the Iraq-Iran war. The five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council are China, the United States, France, Britain and the Soviet Union.

During the meetings, Klibi briefed the envoys on the current situation of the Iraq-Iran war and the meeting held in Baghdad on February 12 by the Iraq-Iran war follow-up committee, composed of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Jordan, Tunisia, Morocco, Arab Yemen and Iraq. Klibi said that the latest escalation of the war is seriously imperilling peace and security in the Gulf countries. He said that the Iraq-Iran war follow-up committee called on the United Nation to hold an urgent Security Council meeting to discuss the war. Chinese Ambassador Xie Bangding told Klibi today that the Chinese Government is concerned over the current escalation of the war and appealed to Iraq and Iran to cease fire immediately and to resolve their differences and conflict. He reaffirmed that the Chinese Government supported all kinds of efforts by the international community and parties concerned in order to end the Iraq-Iran war.

STALEMATE PREDICTED IN IRAN-IRAQ FIGHTING

OW160848 Beijing XINHUA in English 0816 GMT 16 Feb 86

["News Analysis: Neither Side Can Get Upper Hand in Iran-Iraq War (by Yin Congjing)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Baghdad, February 14 (XINHUA) -- Iran's new offensive against the Iraqi port town of Al Faw is still continuing, with claims of victory by both sides. Observers believe that Iran in its new thrust will face difficulties politically and militarily.

The operation, the third of its kind in the past three years, was a surprise attack launched just one day after the Iraqi revolutionary festival. About 100,000 Iranian troops crossed the Shatt al 'Arab and captured the Umm al-Rasas Island, where an important oil complex is located, and Al Faw, a strategically important port of Iraq in the northwestern Gulf near Kuwait. After two days of fierce fighting, Iraq claimed that it had totally recaptured the Island Umm ar Rasas. But it declined to give a clear explanation about the fate of Al Faw, saying that "the enemy is being encircled." However, Iran hailed the "victory" of the operation. In fact, both sides are busy planning new countermoves as the battle is going on.

On the second day of Iran's offensive, the Iraqi Foreign Ministry said that the Iranians have two possible aims: To threaten Basra, the second largest city in Iraq, which is less than 100 km from Al Faw; and to cut off the transport line between Iraq and Kuwait, which is crucial for Iraq as it gets much of its imports via Kuwait, so as to impose a threat to other Gulf states. But observers do not believe it is easy for the Iranians to hit their targets.

Basra has been a target of Iranian forces in the past four years, but they tried in vain to capture it in several big operations. Now the third corps of the Iraqi Army heavily equipped with modern weaponry is defending the city, thus erecting a powerful barrier against the Iranians.

On February 14, the third corps waged a counter-offensive on the Majnun Island, which has been occupied by the Iranians for more than two years, and recaptured part of it. As for the threat to other Gulf states, it is difficult for the Iranians to cross the large area of waterland to reach the Kuwaiti border. Politically it would further evoke hostilities among the Gulf countries which had openly expressed their support to Iraq in fighting against the Iranian invasion in the past few days. Furthermore, the Iranian threat might arouse opposition from other Arab countries. The 7-nation follow-up committee of the Arab League, which has improved relations with Iran since last year, met in Baghdad on the third day of Iran's offensive. The foreign ministers agreed at the meeting that urgent measures must be taken against the Iran's "new aggression."

In the past few days, leaders of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Arab Yemen, Jordan, Egypt and the Palestine Liberation Organization (PLO) have expressed their support for Iraq in one way or another. But Syria and Libya have stood by the Iranians, voicing support for the offensive. Nevertheless, outsiders see no possibility that either side can get the upper hand by war actions. They believe that the only way out for Iran and Iraq is to stop the hostilities and settle their conflict peacefully.

U.S. SUPPORT 'ENCOURAGING' ISRAELI 'AIR PIRACY'

OW160138 Beijing XINHUA in English 0127 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Damascus, February 15 (XINHUA) -- The Arab Union of Air Transport called on the international community Saturday to undertake practical steps towards curbing incidents of air piracy which imperil the safety of civil aviation and innocent lives. The union said following an urgent meeting of its General Assembly here that air piracy such as the Israeli interception of a civilian Libyan airliner carrying Syrian officials early this month runs contrary to international rules of civil aviation.

"The Union strongly denounces this (Israeli) aggression and all acts of air piracy which threaten the safety of civil aviation and innocent lives," a union communique said. The communique warned of an escalation of acts of air piracy if "the world chose to remain silent and not to take measures to curb these crimes." Meanwhile, the director of the Syrian airlines Adnan al-Jali said American support is encouraging the continuation of Israeli air piracy.

COMMENTATOR STRESSES WATER CONSERVATION PROJECTS

OW161153 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0247 GMT 16 Feb 86

[XINHUA commentator: Further Promote the Construction of Farmland Water Conservation Projects in Winter]

[Text] Beijing, 16 Feb (XINHUA) -- The flooding and drought in some areas of northeast and south China last year brought a sharp drop in grain production. This has once again taught us the importance of water conservation. Since the beginning of winter an upsurge in building farmland, water conservation projects has emerged in many localities. According to incomplete statistics, by the end of last year, more than 39 million people had been working on water conservation projects each day throughout the country and the amount of accumulated earthwork and stonework had reached more than 1.45 billion cubic meters. Such an outstanding achievement is rare in recent years. We earnestly hope that this momentum can be maintained and even further boosted.

The contract responsibility system of linking remuneration with output and other reforms enforced and carried out in China's countryside since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has enabled agricultural production to grow at an unprecedented rate. However, this also gave rise to misunderstanding among some comrades, who consequently thought that they could slacken the construction of water conservation projects. The result was that in many localities water conservation facilities were left unrepaired. This, plus the aging of equipment, caused a gradual decline in efficiency. The irrigated acreage throughout the country decreased by 7 million mu from 1981 to 1984. This situation calls for special attention from all quarters.

This year is the first of the Seventh 5-Year Plan. According to this plan, by the end of the 5-year plan China's total grain output is to exceed the 1984 figure by about 100 billion jin. This is a new level for China's grain production. To reach this level, we must rely on policy and science; we must also properly increase material investment in agriculture, improve the means of production, which include water conservation facilities, and build a strong foundation for further agricultural development. Consolidating and developing the foundation of the national economy and fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan are of strategic significance of us. In this context we should understand the importance of promoting the construction of water conservation projects.

Some people held that since agricultural production had increased in the past few years as a result of implementing the responsibility system, why was it still necessary to emphasize water conservation projects? It is wrong to set the responsibility system against the construction of water conservation projects. Experience shows that the responsibility system could not have boosted agricultural production without irrigation facilities; on the contrary, one of its strong points was that it was able to increase agricultural production by taking advantage of the conditions for agricultural production, including farmland water conservation projects that China had built in the past 30 years and more. China's irrigated farmland only accounts for less than one-half of the country's cultivated land, but its grain output accounts for two-thirds of the total in the whole country, while its output of cash crops accounts for three-fourths of the country's total. This shows why it is necessary to emphasize the building of water conservation projects.

After the contract responsibility system based on the household with remuneration linked to output was put into effect in the agricultural sector, production units became smaller and funds and manpower were fairly scattered. Because of this, some comrades complained that it was difficult to organize the masses to build water conservation projects. However, these comrades failed to see the benefits of the responsibility system: building water conservation projects was more closely linked with peasant interests and manpower, and funds in rural areas were more abundant than before.

These things could not have happened before. If we make good use of these favorable conditions with regional features in mind, formulate a policy stressing mutual aid and benefit, rational burden, and efficiency, and do a good job in organizing the masses, we can certainly start an upsurge in building water conservation projects and can certainly do this job better than before.

CPC OFFICIAL EXPLAINS MANDATORY RETIREMENT RULES

OW181214 Beijing XINHUA in English 1159 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 18 (XINHUA) -- China's mandatory retirement rules pursued since 1982 have become formalized. The rules have "helped abolish lifelong terms of office and in so doing promote reform of the system as a whole," an official of the Organizational Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee said today. The rules generally require top party and government leaders at the ministerial and provincial level to retire at 65, while vice ministers, vice governors, vice mayors and vice secretaries at these levels must retire at 60.

In an interview with XINHUA, the Communist Party official said mandatory retirements will "guarantee the normal development of the political life of the party and of the government" as younger people move through the ranks. Most government and party workers normally must retire at 60 if they are male and at 55 if they are female.

Exceptions will be made for veteran officials in key party and government posts at the national level, according to the rules. "We want to keep leaders with top reputations, who are far-sighted and physically able to do their work," the official said. In China, veteran officials refer to the 2.1 million cadres who participated in revolutionary work before the founding of New China in 1949 and are still alive. So far well over half of them have retired, the official said. "Retirement doesn't always come easy to long-time revolutionaries," said the official. "And China can still want their help."

Nearly 3,000 retired officials in Anyang City, Henan Province, for example, acted as instructors in the city's middle and primary schools, helping with ideological and scientific education. Also in Anyang, retired officials have formed youth redemption groups in which they spend time with delinquents reviewing law and socialist ethics. Last year, the city's youth crime rate dropped 21 percent from 1984, and many officials attribute the drop to the redemption groups.

There are 130 retired officials within China's metallurgical ministry, including former vice-ministers, department directors and division chiefs. These veterans have organized themselves as consultants to more than 40 iron and steel works in ten provinces and municipalities.

To enable the retired officials to continue their work for the country, special centers have been established in government institutions and enterprises. More than 1,500 such centers have been set up in Hebei Province alone.

CIVIL SERVICE IMPROVEMENTS, CHANGES VIEWED

OW150220 Beijing XINHUA in English 0209 GMT 15 Feb 86

["Round-up: China Revamping Civil Service" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, February 15 (XINHUA) -- China is overhauling its civil service by improving the systems of election, promotion, appointment and removal, examination and training of party and government officials. On the whole, the readjustment of the composition of the leading organs at the central and all other levels has been conducted in a normal way, an official from the Organization Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee told XINHUA. A typical example in this regard is the smooth advance of the succession of the new party and government officials, especially in the leading organs.

The readjusted central organs are fully competent to ensure the continuity of the country's policies of enlivening the domestic economy and opening to the outside world, the official said. The current central party and government organs are composed of veteran revolutionaries who are responsible for drawing up major policies, and officials who exercise practical leadership over the country's political and economic affairs. The top central organs have also absorbed numbers of newly-promoted younger cadres.

China began to reform its civil service system in a planned way following the Third Plenary Session of the 11th Party Central Committee in late 1978, along with the switch of the focus of the party and the national work to economic construction. Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, once said "the key to reforming and improving the party and state leadership system lies in the reform and the improvement of various specific systems of the party and state." Two major steps have been taken in the past four years to reform the country's civil administration:

--The government streamlining from February through September 1982, before the 12th national party congress was convened;

--The partial readjustment of the composition of the central and provincial leading organs from the beginning of September last year, when the national party conference was convened.

The streamlining and readjustment were all conducted with the aim of abolishing de facto life tenure of officials and bringing about revolutionized, culturally advanced, professional and younger leaders. The average age of the 64 new members and alternate members of the party Central Committee added to the Committee last September is 50.1 years, and 48 of them have received college education. ABout 113,000 of the 190,000 party and government officials elected to leading posts at the county level last year were college graduates, and over one third of them have professional or technical qualifications.

None of the newly promoted cadres are those who committed mistakes during the "Cultural Revolution" (1966-76) or who disagree with the policies formulated since the Third Session of the 11th Central Committee, which have been proved correct since.

While readjusting the current leading organs, China has also shortlisted nearly 1,000 younger and more capable officials as leaders at ministerial and provincial levels in the future. This is an important measure for guaranteeing the succession of the new cadres, the official said. Some 92 percent of the 1,000, who are 44 years old on the average, have had college educations, and more than 70 are skilled professionals.

ONE MILLION VETERANS REPORTEDLY RETIRE

OW090814 Beijing XINHUA in English 0736 GMT 9 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 9 (XINHUA) -- More than one million veteran officials have retired since 1982 to let younger ones take their posts, accounting for half of those who survived the revolutionary wars prior to the founding of New China in 1949, according to the PEOPLE'S DAILY today. The retirees include 131 former members of the party Central Committee and the Central Advisory and Disciplinary Inspection Commissions, who retired during the national party conference last year. In 1982, the party Central Committee issued circulars calling for veterans to retire to help end the actual life-tenure system.

TIES BETWEEN LITERATURE, MARXISM DISCUSSED

HK180545 Beijing QUN YAN No 1, in Chinese 7 Jan 86 pp 30-32

[Article by Liu Changheng: "Party Spirit of Literature and Freedom of Writing"]

[Text] Because of the influence of Confucius, China was regarded as a feudal and conservative country overemphasizing the "doctrine of the mean." "Being uninclined to either side is called equilibrium; admitting no change is called harmony"; and equilibrium and harmony are regarded as the "right course of the world" as well as the "theorem of the world." But in today's realities, some have failed to distinguish the nature of things and the difference between truth and falseness, while endorsing things metaphysical. They esteem such sayings as "one must exceed one's mark while engaged in reform, otherwise one will fail in reform." Thus, they easily go to extremes in their words and actions...for years, it has been the same in dealing with the relation between the party spirit of literature and the freedom of writing. If such a situation is not changed, it will cause harm to the progress of literature and art.

For a long time, whenever the principle of the party spirit of literature was mentioned, some people would pull a long face like a conditioned reflex. They would interfere roughly and arbitrarily limit the subject matter, the ideological content, and even the artistic forms and styles in literary and art creation, treating that literature and art was something "inferior," pouring exhortations into people's ears and issuing orders, as if that was the only way to express the party spirit of literature and art. Such understanding and existing conditions are doubtlessly a misunderstanding of the party spirit of literature, which should naturally be corrected. At present, the issue of "freedom in writing" is proposed for literature and art. Again some people have regarded "freedom" literally as "doing whatever one wishes." They feel that since the slogan "freedom in writing" has been proposed, they can now write without any misgivings and have their own way. In their opinion, some markedly unhealthy books and journals should also be published arbitrarily, and fill the bookstores and bookstands; some of those unhealthy plays should be performed on stage.

If some of those works or certain literary phenomena are criticized or restricted, and even when it is pointed out that "it is necessary to pay attention to the social effects of literature and art works," there is promptly a chorus of reproach, saying that this is interference with and violation of the "freedom of writing." ...Such a concept setting the principle of the party spirit of literature against the "freedom of writing" does not conform to the Marxist view, and, of course, cannot be favorable to the healthy growth of socialist literature and art undertakings. Therefore, it is necessary to conduct a serious investigation and give a scientific explanation to the relationship between the party spirit of literature and the freedom of writing.

It is known that the party spirit of literature, as a theoretical question in literature and art, was first proposed by Lenin, the teacher of the proletarian revolution in the programmatic document "Party Organizations and Party Publications" published in 1905. "What is the principle for party publications?" Lenin actually answered that question with the following: "The undertaking of writing should become part of The entire cause of the proletariat, the 'gears and screws' of the tremendous machinery of social democracy operated by the whole conscious vanguards of the entity of the working class." Regarding this concept as the focus of the party spirit in literature is entirely correct. In other words, the party's literature and propaganda work, including literature undertakings should, with no exception, "become a component of the unified party work of the social democrats in an organized and planned way." But the important question at present is how our literature and art undertakings should be conducted in order that they may become "a component of party work."

It is a narrow viewpoint to look at the principle of the party's spirit of literature only from the angle of party's leadership and supervision of literature and art undertakings. True, it is necessary to exercise leadership over literature and art undertakings based on certain organizational principles. But, if this is considered as the "central idea and main contents" of the principle of party spirit, it would be too simple and too easy to realize the principle of party spirit of publications or literature in socialist countries -- art and literature undertakings are so long organizationally subject to the party, this would be giving expression to the principle of the party spirit, otherwise, organizational measures would be adopted. Such enthusiasm for adopting organizational measures and organizational means with regard to writing is by no means the main content of the principle of the party spirit of literature.

When the party supervises and leads the entire undertaking of writing, certainly it will not let erroneous or even reactionary ideas go unchecked. Particularly no obvious anti-party views should be allowed within the party, and organizational measures should be adopted when needed. However, regarding writing, the party will not rest satisfied with playing the role of a "firing squad." If corrections are made only when problems pop up, this can by no means be counted as positive method or chief measure for supervising and leading the undertaking of writing.

In fact, the principle of party spirit proposed by Lenin did not aim at too rigid a control over writing, including literature and art; on the contrary, the proposal of this principle was precisely to express that the proletariat wanted to "end" the "hypocritical pretense" and the ugly phenomena that made all lively and new things suffocate in Russia." The method and means of leading literature and art which Lenin stressed and prized was more precisely to arm writers with correct ideology and the Marxist world outlook. Whether it was the hard times of the revolution or those days when victory was won, Lenin always put the solution to ideological problems and problems of world outlook first within the revolutionary context. That had always been his idea.

In the article "Reserved Heroes," Lenin stressed: "The present task, even under the most difficult conditions, is to excavate ore and to extract iron from it in order to cast steel superstructure suitable to this world outlook as well as a Marxist world outlook. That was written in 1910 when Russia was under the reactionary reign of Stolypin. After the victory of the October Revolution, Lenin pointed out in a 1920 draft resolution written for the Congress of Proletarian Cultural Association: "All the experiences in modern history, the revolutionary struggles of the proletariat in various countries throughout the world since the publication of the 'Communist Manifesto' 50 years ago, have indisputably proven that only the Marxist world outlook will correctly give expression to the interests, viewpoints, and culture of the revolutionary proletariat." Neglecting the "instillation" and education in ideology and world outlook would only give rise to "unionism" even if it was the struggle of the proletariat. Lenin always emphasized the importance of solving ideological problems as well as problems of world outlook. How can we think of him neglecting the problems of writers' world outlook when he was discussing publications, including the establishment and realization of the principle of a party spirit of literature and art! So long as we seriously study the full text of "Party Organization and Party Publications," it will not be difficult for us to see how Lenin paid attention to problems concerning ideology and world outlook. It is a pity that many people adhere to rigidly to organizational control and obedience in their understanding of party spirit. Therefore, they have too little concern for enlightenment and education concerning problems of ideology and world outlook. In fact, they lack an all-round understanding of Lenin's original text.

In fact, in order to make sure that writing truly becomes a component of the party's cause, attention must be paid to more than organizational means and measures to bascially realize the principle of party spirit. Only by starting with the solution of problems of ideology and world outlook will it be possible to genuinely give expression to the principle of party spirit in literature.

How can we ensure the healthy development of the freedom of writing? Comrade Hu Qili pointed out in his congratulatory speech on behalf of the CPC Secretariat at the fourth congress of the Chinese Writers' Association: On the one hand, "the party and state must provide necessary conditions, and initiate necessary environment and atmosphere." This refers to society guaranteeing writers' freedom to write and the formation of a bright and healthy political situation to encourage and protect creativity. On the other hand, writers are required to "genuinely enter into conditions for writing freely." To achieve this, the writers must make their thinking and feelings and all their activities in writing harmonious with the free environment provided by the party and the state. The key to the former lies in practicing political democracy and strengthening the socialist legal system.

By no means should we allow a repeat of "leftist" practice, such as "beating others with sticks" and making things hard for others by abusing one's power. The key to the latter lies in the requirement for the writer to have a profound grasp of Marxism, to strengthen his own ideological accomplishments, and to make his thinking and feelings, as well as his activities, in writing throb with the pulse of the times while keeping abreast of the strides of history. In this way he can subjectively exert himself to accomplish the spiritual leap from the realm of inevitability to the realm of freedom. In the final analysis, writers are after all required to establish a Marxist world outlook. Otherwise, it would be impossible for them "to have a good grasp of the interests of the state and the people, the law governing social development and changes, and their own social responsibilities, and to fight against decadent bourgeois ideas and the pernicious influences of feudalism." Marsixm is a thorough materialist theory and doctrine; it is a telescope as well as a microscope. Only when social life is observed and analyzed with Marxism as the guide, and only by adopting Marxist stands, concepts, and methods, will it be possible for us to correctly understand the objective world and give expression to the inner voice of the laboring people.

Based on this, efficient propaganda work may be conducted and truthful and heartbreaking words of literature may be produced. In short, only when writers have genuinely acquired the ideology of the proletariat and established a Marxist world outlook will it be possible to give expression to the principle of party spirit in publications, including literature, and to enable the writers to realize the leap from the realm of inevitablity to the realm of freedom.

Therefore, we can see both the party spirit of literature and the freedom of writing are founded on the same basis of Marxist world outlook. By no means is the relationship between the party spirit of literature and the freedom of writing antagonistic; it is harmonious. Therefore, Lenin repeatedly stressed in this sense that the party's writing is genuinely "free writing." Based on the spirit of Lenin's programmatic document "Party Organization and Party Publications," the CPC Secretariat pointed out in its congratulatory speech: "Lenin said socialist literature is genuinely free literature. Our party, government, and literature and art organizations, as well as the whole society, should resolutely ensure such freedom for writers." Here, the "freedom" referred to is also founded on a Marxist world outlook.

Abstract and absolute "freedom" never existed in the world. Engels said in "Anti-Duhring " that freedom is precisely the understanding of the inevitable. Of course, the accomplishment of such ability in understanding relies on the world outlook of Marxism and scientific socialism. Vice versa, if subjective idealism and metaphysics are adopted for observing problems or in writing rather than ideology and the concepts of scientific socialism, one will run into snags, be foiled at every turn, and never feel genuine freedom ideologically. Therefore, it is also necessary for us to have an in-depth understanding of the "freedom of writing" proposed in Lenin's works and the CPC Secretariat's congratulatory speech. We should look at this from the height of the world outlook of scientific socialism.

It was precisely in the programmatic document on discussing the principle of the party spirit in publications, including literature, but not in any other works that Lenin proposed the slogan, "we should initiate free press." That was not by any means accidental; it was because he had profoundly grasped the inseparable inherent link between the party spirit of literature and the freedom of writing. Therefore, he made the following explanation of "the so-called free press" -- which "refers to the press rid of police oppression as well as capital, rid of the pursuit of personal fame and position as well as the individualism of bourgeois anarchism." It is easy to understand that it is necessary to eliminate "oppression" if we want "freedom," but why is it necessary to "eliminate" "capital," "the pursuit of personal fame and position," and "the individualism of bourgeois anarchism"? Here, it precisely involves the ideology and world outlook of the writers. If these heavy spiritual burdens are not eliminated, while "becoming a captive of bourgeois bargaining in writing," and only "looking forward to money", it will be impossible to "initiate the free press."

In short, only when the writer has established a Marxist world outlook will it be possible for him to go along with the progress of history, so that the work in which he is engaged may keep abreast or history and be closely connected with the people. Only in this way may he be very proud of himself for being able to devote all his efforts to the emancipation and happiness of the people. To achieve this would be like "the same water coming from the same spring, and the same blood pouring from the same vein." He will never find himself deprived of freedom if his writing becomes a part of the party's cause. He will study history, observe society, and understand the inevitability of things in their development. Guided with the ideology and concepts of scientific socialism, he will acquire genuine freedom.

Therefore we can see that the realization of the principle of the party spirit of literature and the freedom of writing can never be separated from solving the writers' world outlook.

Only when one has established a Marxist world outlook and an understanding of various social phenomena from the viewpoints of scientific socialism, will it be possible for one to stand tall and see far, just as Gorki felt with his personal experiences: "Scientific socialism has created for us the highest spiritual peak, from which we can clearly see the past, and it has pointed out the only shortcut leading to the future, the road from the realm of inevitability to the realm of freedom." A writer who has a Marxist world outlook is like one who has put on the wings of wisdom, flying high in the sky and taking a bird's-eye view of the earth. He must have a great feeling like "a fish swimming in the vast sea, and a bird flying freely in the sky," and have experienced deeply that this is genuine freedom of writing. It is precisely in this sense that Lenin stressed: "Indisputably, in this undertaking, it is absolutely necessary to ensure a vast expanse for the creativity and personal interest of the individual, the vast expanse of thought, fantasy, form, and contents."

The practice of equating the principle of the party spirit of literature with the oversimplified, rough, and arbitrary interference in literature and art by sheer organizational means and administrative orders or regarding "the freedom of writing" as a synonym to doing whatever one likes both exhibit a narrow understanding and are erroneous in theory. In practice, it will certainly not help the prosperity and development of the socialist undertaking of literature and art. It is time to basically change such ways of thinking and viewing things metaphysically.

JOURNAL REVIEWS ENTERPRISE LEADERSHIP SYSTEMS

HK140540 Beijing JINGJI GUANLI in Chinese No 12, 5 Dec 85 pp 27-31

[Article by Wu Hanzhou and Yang Jian: "The System of Factory Directors of Enterprises Owned by the Whole People, Concurrently Serving as Party Secretaries" -- edited by Xu Xiaojiu -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] At present, attention has been focused on the question as to how an enterprise owned by the whole people is to implement the factory director responsibility system, and what form of factory director responsibility system the enterprise is to implement. From the point of view of theory and practice, there are now two kinds of opinions and practices. The first is the system whereby a factory director is not concurrently serving as party secretary (the non-doubling system). In other words, the posts of factory director and party secretary are separately assigned to two persons. The factory director is in charge of the production and operational activities of the enterprise, while the party secretary is in charge of party building and ideological and political work among staff and workers. In the other system one person doubles as factory director and party secretary (the doubling system). The doubling system is characterized by the factory director working concurrently as party secretary and shouldering all-round responsibility for the enterprise's production and operational activities, and also for party building and ideological and political work among the enterprise's staff and workers. However, the focus of his work is on the production and operational command system. A full-time deputy party secretary is assigned to specialize in political work. We believe that in light of the requirements of reform in the enterprise leadership system and the reality of our enterprises at present, the doubling system is more scientific and perfect than the non-doubling system, more untenable in theory but more feasible in practice. Compared with the non-doubling system, the doubling system has the following advantages:

1. The Doubling System Conforms Better to the Principles of Enterprise Management

The leadership system of an enterprise is an important component of the enterprise management system and must follow ent prise management principles.

The doubling system conforms to enterprise management principles in the following aspects:

1) THE DOUBLING SYSTEM REFLECTS THE REQUIREMENTS OF THE DUPLICATED NATURE OF ENTERPRISE MANAGEMENT.

According to Marx's view, enterprise management itself has its natural and social characteristics; natural characteristics are determined by objective laws of socialized mass production, and social characteristics are determined by relations between the production and social systems. The factory director responsibility system which we implement should reflect the objective demands of both socialized mass production and socialist relations of production. This requires that a factory director perform not only the functions of leading production and operational activities but also the functions of leading ideological and political work. Moreover, only by effectively combining these two functions can there be effective management. If the non-doubling system is implemented to give the power of production management to the factory director and allow the party secretary to continue to hold the major power over political work, this will not only run against the principle of the duplicated nature of enterprise management, but will also give rise to problems difficult to solve. There is much work to do in an enterprise, such as the selection and appointment of cadres, the formulation of regulations and rules, the training and education of staff and workers, and the implementation of democratic management. These aspects of work involve not only reasonable organization of the work force, but also the task of maintaining and perfecting the relations of production. It is difficult to clarify which of these work aspects will be the factory director's responsibility and which the party secretary will undertake. Therefore, the implementation of the doubling system meets not only the requirements of the duplicated nature of enterprise management, but also the objective requirements of normal management work.

2) THE DOUBLING SYSTEM CONFORMS TO THE PRINCIPLE OF SYSTEMS.

From the point of view of people alone, a socialist enterprise is an integrated system formed from the subsystems party organizations, management, and trade unions. All these subsystems overlap and thus form a complicated matrix of systems. Objectively, this requires that each subsystem has one, and only one, leader, and that the system formed by many subsystems also has one, and only one, leader. This leader is the top leader of the system, in charge of directing and controlling the whole system, coordinating the vertically interacting and complicated system, maintaining the integrity of the system, and effectively giving play to the functions of the entire system. There are three subsystems in our enterprises: the production, administrative and command system; the system of party organization; and the system of trade union organization. If there is not a leader to exercise centralized leadership over these three systems and coordinate relations between them, certainly these subsystems will each go their own way, conflict with one another, and give rise to disharmony. This will affect the integrity of the system and make it impossible to effectively give play to the functions of the entire system of the enterprise. Obviously, only by implementing of doubling system can a factory director really become the effective leader of the enterprise system and best bring its functions into play.

3) THE DOUBLING SYSTEM CONFORMS TO THE PRINCIPLE OF INFORMATION FEEDBACK AND INFORMATION CONTROL.

In a modern society, as production, science, and technology develop, the volume of information rises sharply. There are many information communication channels and large volumes of information both inside and outside an enterprise. In order to promptly and correctly disseminate information, reduction of information transmission links to the minimum is required; information channels must be as uniform as possible. If a non-doubling system is implemented, there is one party leader and one management leader in an enterprise.

External information such as major policies, mandatory planned targets, and the documents that need to be transmitted to certain levels of cadres must be sent to two people. Internal information such as the production situation, the work attitude of staff and workers, and the conflicts between various sections must also be reported to two people. The information must be grasped by both the factory director and the party secretary, otherwise, it will be impossible for them to do their work. When they have received the information, they have to consult each other before they can respond to the information. As a result, the enterprise's response to information is delayed and the work volume of the upper and lower levels of organizations inside and outside the enterprise will thus be increased. When the factory director and party secretary hold different views, it is difficult for the enterprise to respond to the information or to raise its work efficiency. The doubling system not only reduces information links and channels, but also enables the factory director to make decisions in light of the information in his hands and thus meet the demands of modern production.

4) THE DOUBLING SYSTEM CONFORMS TO THE ORGANIZATIONAL PRINCIPLE OF CENTRALIZED COMMAND

Centralized command is a basic organizational principle. All the people in a certain post are responsible to a certain person at the upper level, and each person at the upper level only manages those directly under him. He should not bypass the intermediate levels in exerting his command, direct those at the same level as himself, or exert mixed command. As under the non-doubling system, the relationship between the factory director and the party secretary is not one between a leader and his subordinate, but is a relationship between two people at the same level. Neither of them holds responsibility for the other nor directs the other. As a result, in fact, there are two heads in one enterprise. This is an abnormal situation. It is apt to cause contradictions between the factory director and party secretary and even tension in their relationship, thus hindering work in the enterprise. Therefore, under a non-doubling system, whether the factory director responsibility system can be satisfactorily implemented, whether a production command and administration and management system with the factory director as its head can be established, and whether the system can play a powerful role after it is established is determined to a great extent by the relationship between the factory director and party secretary, and by whether the party secretary can take the initiative in giving away his power to the factory director. Therefore, many factory directors (managers) have demanded that there should be guarantees in our system to ensure the implementation of the factory director responsibility system. The implementation of the doubling system can provide a guarantee as a system for the implementation of the factory director responsibility system.

2. The Doubling System Is Conducive to Strengthening Party Building and Carrying Out Ideological and Political Work

Party secretaries in quite a few enterprises find it hard to do ideological and political work in combination with economic work. They have no way of solving the problem of separation between political and economic work. In their work, quite a few party secretaries have found that if they do not combine economic means with administrative means, it is difficult for their ideological and political work to achieve the expected results. However, the factory directors in many enterprises also find that if they do not do ideological and political work and if they rely only on bonus incentive and administrative means, it is very difficult for them to satisfactorily direct production. This proves that the practice of the factory director and party secretary each being assigned separate responsibility is not conducive to production nor to the satisfactory conduct of the work of party building and ideological and political work. Only by combining ideological and political work with economic and administrative means can our enterprises score satisfactory achievements in all spheres. The doubling system enables the factory director to perform both administrative and party leadership functions.

This is conducive to strengthening the all-round leadership of the party as well as to carrying out ideological and political work.

As production, science, and technology develop, the proportion of mental labor in material production grows. However, it is difficult to apply quantitative means to supervise mental labor. This requires that we pay attention to giving play to staff and worker initiative; attach even greater importance to human factors in our management and switch from management centered around "materials" to management centered around "people." In particular, ours are socialist enterprises, which should guarantee the staff and workers' positions as masters and which should carry out democratic management. In order to meet these requirements, a factory director should not only be an expert in production management, but also in doing ideological work among "people." The doubling system is precisely suited to the requirements of the present situation and the development of our enterprise management. As the factor director is concurrently the party secretary, objectively he is compelled to learn the skill of grasping the construction of both material and spiritual civilization. Grasping the "construction of the two civilizations" is an important characteristic and task for our socialist enterprises.

Some comrades worry that when the doubling system is implemented, the factory director will regard the key as the grasping of production command and administration and management, and focus his energies on activities of production and operation. They wonder whether this will weaken the party's leadership and ideological and political work. This is an unjustified worry, first because a full-time deputy party secretary is appointed to perform the function of helping the factory director grasp party building and ideological and political work. This provides an organizational guarantee that political work will not be weakened. Second, because the factory director doubles as the party secretary, he shoulders major responsibility for the quality of the work of party building and ideological and political work. Therefore, he must vigorously support the deputy secretary in doing his work. Third and most important, the factory director should implement the party's line, principles and policies. This itself is a major task in strengthening party leadership. The quality of an enterprise's political work has a direct bearing on its production efficiency. When the factory director doubles as the party secretary, he can on the one hand use his powers of office as the factory director to comprehensively apply administrative, economic, and educational means and thus help carry out ideological and political work. On the other hand, he can use the advantages of his familiarity with staff and worker work attitudes, work achievements and ideological, educational and technical quality in the process of production and operation. This provides convenient conditions for the organizational and ideological construction of the party and thus encourages effective and satisfactory work for the party. On the contrary, the non-doubling system may cause the factory director to overrely on other people and may make him think that ideological and political work is the party secretary's job and not his business. He may even refuse to conscientiously support the political activities of the party organization, with the excuse of being busy with production management. The party secretary, on the other hand, is not provided with the necessary administrative means. Therefore, he has to consult with the factory director and obtain the director's consent and support whenever he wants to implement a major activity. This is detrimental, not only to strengthening and improving the party's leadership, but also to the enterprise's ideological and political work.

3. The Doubling System is Conducive to Division of Responsibility and Power

There is a difficult problem to solve in the implementation of the non-doubling system. It is the problem of how to define the responsibility and power of the party secretary. In some articles and documents, the power and responsibility of the factory director is very clearly defined, but the responsibility and power of the party secretary is either not mentioned or is very unclear.

Some articles have indeed mentioned the responsibility of the party committee, but they only talk about requirements in general and fail to specifically define the actual power of the party committee. The problem here is that the party committee has no power but has to shoulder some responsibility. This runs counter to the principle of matching power with responsibility and is, therefore, unreasonable. Only when we have clearly defined the scope of the party secretary's power and responsibility can the party committee actually shoulder its responsibility. However, if the party secretary's power is stipulated, this will inevitably cause him to take some power away from the factory director. This will negate the factory director's position as the representative of the legal person of the enterprise, the position as fully responsible person. From this we can see that when the non-doubling system is implemented, it is impossible to clearly divide the responsibility and power between the factory director and party secretary, or to straighten out the relations between responsibility, power, and legality. However, the doubling system is precisely able to solve this difficult problem. Therefore, the doubling system is a leadership system that is both reasonable and legal.

Judging from historical experience, when we implemented the factory director responsibility system under the leadership of the party committee, we also repeatedly stressed the factory director's role in exerting administrative command, and the necessity of granting the factory director the power to lead the enterprise's production and operational activities. But why was it so difficult to grant him that power? Why was it so difficult to change the practice whereby the party committee took on everything? One of the major causes was that the factory director had some misgivings in exercising his power of office. These misgivings were particularly great when his management work involved members of the party committee. As a result, he discussed problems that he ought to have decided on his own, with the party secretary, and then had the party committee discuss them. This hindered him in performing his functions. Only by implementing the doubling system can we avoid these misgivings in our system.

4. It Is Easy To Popularize and Implement the Doubling System

For a long time, the "system of party secretary assuming all-round responsibility" was in fact implemented in our enterprises. The party organization has played a great role in enterprise management and had a certain degree of prestige among staff and workers. In addition, as the party held a lofty position in the hearts of the masses of staff and workers, party cadres had much higher prestige than non-party cadres (such as administrative cadres). This love for the party should by no means be harmed by our work. On the contrary, we should develop our work in line with this love. The factory director who doubles as party secretary in the doubling system obviously enjoys a higher prestige than a factory director who does not. Therefore, the doubling system is more acceptable for staff and workers. It enables the factory director to have prestige indispensable to his exercise of unified leadership and direction of the enterprise, thus ensuring the smooth implementation of the factory director responsibility system.

On the other hand, there is the problem of understanding. For a long time, we have made propaganda of the "centralized leadership of the party committee," "party secretary being the head," and "the party secretary being the number one leader." This has caused staff and workers to simply regard obeying the party director's directions as obeying party directions. Now, they are suddenly required to obey the direction and command of the factory director. It is difficult for them to adapt themselves to the change. After the factory director has assigned them tasks, many comrades will go and ask the party secretary. They report to the party secretary what they should report to the factory director and go to him with problems that must be solved by the factory director. This embarrases the party secretary and makes it impossible for the factory director to vigorously exercise his command. In some enterprises where experiments are being made to implement the factory director responsibility system, people not dare even talk about the factory director responsibility system in the presence of the party secretary.

It takes time to solve this misunderstanding. It takes time not only for the staff and workers to heighten their understanding, but also for the party secretary to adapt himself to the change; adopt a correct attitude toward his organizational position; chart a new path for his party building work and his ideological and political work; consciously and enthusiastically delegate authority; and conscientiously support the factory director's work.

If we neglect this problem, disregard the objective situation, and implement the non-doubling system in a uniform manner, it will be difficult for us to attain our goal in implementing the factory director responsibility system. In this sphere, both China and the Soviet Union have gained experience and learned lessons. In 1918, in his article entitled "Current Tasks for the Soviet State Power," Lenin advanced the idea of implementing the system of "one director assuming all-round responsibility," but it was not implemented in an overall manner until 1934. It took 16 years filled with twists and turns to do that. Beginning in 1953, our country implemented the system of "one director assuming all-round responsibility" in some enterprises. An investigation in 1955 showed that the number of enterprises in which the system was properly implemented was very small. One of the important causes for this was the problem related to thought and understanding. At that time, many factory directors feared violating the principle of the collective leadership of the party and feared that they would be accused of denying the party's leadership. Therefore, they did not dare to handle problems bravely and wanted party committees to discuss everything. However, the party committees also dared not violate the principle of the system and dare not exercise their leadership bravely. As a result, both parties had misgivings, and their work was impeded. The implementation of the system failed to achieve the expected results. Therefore, when we implement the factory responsibility system, we should refer to these experiences and lessons and should not only persist in carrying out the reform bravely, but also pay attention to proceeding from reality. The doubling system reflects these two requirements precisely and is therefore easily acceptable by people; thus it can be smoothly implemented.

To review, the doubling system definitely has advantages that the non-doubling system does not. Our management practice has also proven that the doubling system is indeed feasible. For example, the doubling system was implemented and is being implemented in Baiyunshan medicine factory in Guangzhou, Liaoyang heavy machinery plant in Liaoning, and the China no 2 automobile plant and has proven to have high leadership efficiency, vigorous command, and relatively satisfactory enterprise economic results. Precisely because of this, an increasingly large number of factory directors (managers) are calling for the implementation of the doubling system and thus thoroughly implement a factory director responsibility system in the proper sense. This requires that some comrades overcome their long-standing "leftist" views. These comrades do not have full confidence in factory directors and fear that when the directors have great power, they will abuse their power and act arbitrarily. They think that the directors only know how to direct production and operation and that political work in the enterprises should be assigned to party secretaries. These "leftist" views are detrimental to the implementation of the factory director responsibility system.

5. Several Problems Needing To Be Probed

1) IS THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE DOUBLING SYSTEM IN CONFLICT WITH THE DIVISION OF LABOR BETWEEN THE PARTY AND MANAGEMENT?

We think it is not. The division of labor between party and management is mainly aimed at solving the problem of substituting the functions of the party for those of the management in the field of macroeconomy and the superstructure. It is questionable whether it is correct to separate party functions from management functions in an enterprise as an economic cell.

We hold that even if there is division of labor between party and management in an enterprise, the extent of the division of labor should be different. As far as an enterprise is concerned, we want primarily to put an end to the previous practice of the party committee taking on everything and no one being responsible for the actual work. The major characteristics of the doubling system remain those of the factory director responsibility system. The party committee is not allowed to interfere in production and administration work. Here, the factory director, who doubles as the party secretary, does not work as the party secretary but as the factory director. Therefore, there will not be the problem of substituting the functions of the party for those of management. Some comrades understand the division between the party and the management as party cadres not concurrently serving as administrative cadres. This does not conform to national conditions in our country and is in fact hard to achieve. The doubling system, however, not only embodies the principle of division of labor between the party and government, but also pays attention to cooperation between the party and the management. Of course, in order to enable our party committee to have greater energy in satisfactorily grasping party building and ideological and political work among the staff and workers, we think that the deputy party secretary should not take any concurrent post; we should do our best to ensure that other members of the party committee also do not take concurrent administrative posts.

2) PROBLEMS RELATED TO THE QUALITY OF CANDIDATES FOR FACTORY DIRECTORS

In implementing the doubling system, the quality requirements for factory directors are higher. Factory directors should not only know business and management, but should also be able to do ideological and political work. Some comrades worry that it is hard to get candidates for such factory directors. However, if the non-doubling system is implemented, we should select a party secretary able to do ideological and political work and able to take the initiative in giving away power and coordinating with the factory director in doing the work well; and a factory director capable of being on good terms with the party secretary and able to effectively direct the activities of production and operation. This is not easy either. Here, we should not fail to see that through years of enterprise consolidation, profound changes have taken place in the leading groups of our enterprises and a larger number of factory directors (managers) have continued to emerge with sharp political sense and the ability to effectively organize and direct the activities of production and operation in their enterprises. These people will be entirely able to shoulder the heavy responsibilities of factory directors who double as party secretaries.

3) WHAT IF THE FACTORY DIRECTOR IS NOT A PARTY MEMBER?

Obviously, the doubling system cannot be implemented in an enterprise where the factory director is not a party member, nor can it be implemented in Chinese and foreign joint capital enterprise. In these enterprises, we should implement other forms of factory director responsibility. This is a limitation of the doubling system.

The above analysis shows that there is, to a certain extent, limitation in any kind of leadership system, The problem is which leadership system has relatively fewer limitations and relatively greater advantages. From the above discussion, we see that the doubling system has more advantages than other leadership systems,

We uphold the implementation of the doubling system, but we do not exclude the possibility of implementing other forms of the factory direct responsibility system. The enterprise leadership system is determined by diverse factors, such as scale of the enterprise, competence of the management, economic results, ownership of the means of production, and external economic management system of the enterprise.

We should implement diverse forms of the factory director responsibility system and should not seek uniformity. For example, in some small enterprises, we can implement the factory responsibility system without a full-time party secretary (including the deputy party secretary). In some enterprises where experiments of the non-doubling system are being carried out with relatively good economic results, we can continue to implement the non-doubling system. However, in most of our enterprises, it is entirely feasible to implement the doubling system.

LIAOWANG VIEWS PRODUCTION OF CIVILIAN AIRPLANES

HK170950 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 pp 11-13

[Article by Zhang Chunting: "He Wenzhi, Vice Minister of Aviation Industry, on China Starting Production of Planes for Civilian Use"]

[Text] At the beginning of December 1985, something occurred to which people perhaps failed to pay enough attention: Party and state leaders Li Peng, Hu Qili, Yao Yilin, and others took a flight on a China-made civilian airplane around the airport at the capital and then held an on-the-spot office meeting of the State Council on civilian aviation work. On the surface, this seemed a common thing, but in fact it marked a turning point in China's aviation industry. In their speeches at the meeting, the three leaders called on the ministries and commissions concerned to unite as one, strive with one heart and one mind, start from actual domestic needs, introduce advanced technology from abroad, and gradually establish China's own civilian aviation industry and produce China's civilian airplanes at home.

For China's aviation industry as a whole, the establishment of this principle marks the transition from a uniform composition of military products to a mixed composition of military and civilian products. On the other hand, for civilian products of China's aviation industry it marked the beginning of a tremendous development of production of civilian airplanes in China and the gradual realization of the policy of domestically producing all airplanes that China needs.

When He Wenzhi, vice minister of aviation industry, who had just returned from a visit to the United States, read the report about the above information, he became very excited and thought that he shouldered heavy responsibility.

From Repairing to Manufacturing Airplanes

Reviewing the history of the development of China's aviation industry, He Wenzhi, 55, said that China's airplane manufacturing industry started by repairing airplanes. That was in the period of the war to resist U.S. aggression and aid Korea when the old generation of the builders of China's aviation industry gradually expanded the manufacture of airplane parts and developed the manufacture of whole planes while fulfilling airplane maintenance tasks for the war. In a short period of 3 years, the first China-made trainer took off. Five years later, China successfully developed its first jet fighter and supersonic fighter. Such a great pace of development was rare in the history of the development of aviation in the world.

Since He Wenzhi graduated from the Aviation Institute of Qinghua University in the 1950's, he has always taken part in designing and manufacturing airplanes. He was first chief of the technology section of the quality control department, then the director of the department, and later head of the general inspection group and of the new airplane trial flight group.

He stressed that the modern airplane industry is a knowledge- and technology-intensive industry. As China's aviation industry was established and grew, relevant scientific and technological research also developed. Over the past 30 years, China's aviation industry sector has successfively set up its aviation science and technology research institutes and a large number of specialized design and research institutes to carry out diverse research work. It has also vigorously introduced advanced technology from abroad. As a result, there have been increasingly more new scientific research achievements and new planes developed by us. We have produced hundreds and thousands of military airplanes of various kinds, including fighers, bombers, attack planes, reconnaissance planes, trainers, multi-purpose planes, and pilotless planes. This has created certain conditions for Chinese troops to renew their equipment and increase their technological reserves. In this period, although China's aviation industry has gone through quite a few twists and turns, including those caused by the interference of the erroneous lines at home and the economic and technological blockade abroad, the production of Chinese military planes developed in spite of this, and we have mainly realized the goal of producing airplanes on our own.

Why did the production of Chinese military airplanes develop so quickly? He Wenzhi holds that our relatively great scientific and technological strength is an important reason, but so is scientific management. He says that China's aviation industry has paid relatively great attention to scientific management, which focuses on the implementation of systems engineering management in the entire process of the research, design, and manufacture of various types of airplanes. In 1981, the Ministry of Aviation Industry established its systems engineering office, and He Wenzhi doubled as director of the office.

In the process of developing a new type of high-altitude and high-speed airplane, He Wenzhi concurrently worked as the general director of this systems engineering project. He led all the staff and workers in applying the program evaluation and review technique (PERT). In April 1981, they began to carry out a "three-point argumentation" concerning technology, economics, and speed of progress, and decided to spend 3 years and 3 months to develop the plane. Throughout the process of design and production, they strictly implemented the general designer technological responsibility system, the administrative director responsibility system, the contract economic responsibility system, and the quality inspection responsibility system, and thus carried out "four-point management," formed a centralized work network, and established an integrated scientific management system. In carrying out any project and process, all the people in all subsystems and departments had to ensure that the entire project was carried out strictly according to the schedule without any delay. As a result, they fulfilled the task of developing this new plane 18 days ahead of schedule.

Chinese Leaders' Policy Decision: Develop Chinese-made Civilian Planes

Science, technology, and scientific management are very important in developing the aviation industry, but the making of strategic policy decisions is even more important. He Wenzhi holds that one of the important reasons why China's civilian airplane manufacturing industry was backward for a long time is the guiding thought of "being always ready to fight wars." He said that during the over 30 years since the founding of the People's Republic, military airplanes have accounted for over 95 percent of the total output of airplanes in the whole country, while civilian airplanes accounted for less than 5 percent. From the point of the state management system, the development of civilian planes has never been taken into the country's communications and transport development plans.

During the past 20 to 30 years, China has produced a small number of civilian airplanes, including the small mutli-purpose "Yun 5" and "Yun 10" planes, which have played a certain role in the construction of our national economy, but in view of the major trend of the development of the whole country, this has fallen far short of the demand.

Over the past few years, as international and domestic historical conditions have changed, so has China's strategic thought. In October 1981, Chairman Deng Xiaoping put forth the idea: "We should consider producing on our own the airplanes for our domestic airlines." Two months later, he again stressed: In the future, we should use China-made airplanes for our domestic airlines. Since then, conscientiously developing China-made planes for civilian use has been regarded as a principle and a state policy. Later, Premier Zhao Ziyang further put forth the idea that for a fairly long time, we should first refrain from developing large passenger planes, but should focus on developing specialized airplanes and airplanes for branch domestic airlines. Small airplanes should be made by China itself, and it is entirely possible for China to produce airplanes for its branch domestic airlines. By so doing, we will develop our aviation industry. In short, we should proceed from reality. General Secretary Hu Yaobang has also pointed out: We must vigorously grasp the work of researching, developing, producing, and using China-made aircraft, and strive to make a breakthrough in the 1980's.

The Emergence of a Satisfactory Trend in the Production of Civilian Planes

He Wenzhi said with joy that as long as there is a correct principle and as long as all the people at the upper and lower levels make joint efforts with one heart and one mind, we will be able to make relatively quick progress in all tasks.

Over the short period of 4 years or so, on the basis of the original foundation of our aviation industry, there has already been an unprecedented satisfactory trend in China's civilian airplane manufacturing industry. Our medium-size "Yun-8" transport planes are playing their role in our cargo freight. We have also successfully developed and put into operation the "Yun-8" sea patrol airplanes and "Yun-8" Black Hawk carriers. We have also successfully researched and developed China-made helicopters. In addition, we have developed ultralight airplanes such as Mifeng-2, Mifeng-3, Qingting-W5, and Qingting-W6 airplanes. They have been particularly well accepted among the peasant customers who have already become rich. We have already begun small batch production of "Yun-7" medium- and short-range branch-line transport airplanes. By the end of 1984, 16 of them were produced and delivered to scientific research and civil aviation units and to our troops. Some of them have already flown over 1,000 hours. Through appraisal, this type of airplane has been proved to meet or exceed all the design technological targets and to have satisfactory functions that can be adapted to various kinds of complicated geographical and weather conditions. Through the joint venture between the Xian Airplane Company and the Hong Kong Aircraft Engineering Company Limited, the navigational aid, telecommunications, weather radar, and other equipment of the "Yun-7" airplane have been improved. This has further improved this airplane's functions. From 20 November to 5 December 1985, the newly-improved "Yun-7-type 100" airplane flew from Luliang in Shaanxi to Beijing, then to Shanghai, then back to Beijing, and then to Xian, Lanzou, Jiuquan, and Urumqi. It flew for a total of 22 hours; the appraisal showed that the functions of the improved equipment were stable, the readings of the instruments were accurate, and the radar signals were clear and of satisfactory strength.

He Wenzhi himself is a helicopter specialist. For a time, he was director of Chinese Helicopter Design and Research Institute at Jingdezhen, Jiangxi. He appeared particularly happy when he talked about how Premier Zhao Ziyang showed concern for and supported the work of developing new China-made helicopters. He said that because of a lack of funds, the relevant departments for a time decided to put off the work of developing the new "Zhi-8" helicopter.

Premier Zhao personally took care of the matter, encouraged the Ministry of Aviation Industry, and told the ministry not to stop making progress, but to continue to grasp the work. Later, Premier Zhao went to the factory that developed and produced the plane to inspect and guide the work. On 1 December 1985, this new multi-purpose helicopter successfully made its first flight at Jingdezhen, Jiangxi.

Ensure Flight Safety With Their Own Lives

Over the past few years, serious flight accidents have continued to occur in many technologically advanced countries in the world. Therefore, people have some doubt about the flight safety of China-made planes. This is understandable. However, He Wenzhi holds that this worry is unjustified.

He said that "safety, comfort, and economy" are the common requirements raised by central leaders on China-made civilian airplanes, and they all put "safety" first. This is the minimum requirement, but is also a very exacting requirement. Of course, this conforms to the most important desire of the passengers. Without safety, all other requirements are meaningless. However, he can tell people that Chinese aviation workers always ensure flight safety with their lives. Then he explained his view with his personal experience.

In 1957, China succeeded in trial production of its first multi-purpose transport plane, the "Yun-5" plane. He Wenzhi was the head of the trial flight group for that plane and was in charge of the work to ensure its quality. Before the trial flight, a CAAC trial flight pilot was greaty worried. He said to He Wenzhi that it was no use to talk about the fine quality of the plane and that He had to take the trial flight together with the pilot. So He took the trial flight together with him. The result of the trial flight proved that the plane truly functioned well.

In He Wenzhi's office there are models of various types of airplanes. When he talked, he pointed to the model of the "Yun-5" plane and said: Even today, I can still say that this airplane is very safe! In front of the wings of this plane, there is a kind of folded wing. If the plane falls, the folded wings will open automatically and cause the airplane to glide. This will prevent freefall.

He Wenzhi then said that in August 1980, he was appointed vice minsiter of the aviation ministry, but before he went to Beijing to take the post, he went from Jiangxi directly to Shanghai and was assigned as head of the trial flight group for the "Yun-10" plane. For 1 month, he worked inspecting the plane together with Liu Zengmin, deputy chief of the flight bureau, and other specialists in many fields and engineers. Finally, it was he who signed the telegram to Beijing to say that perfect safety was ensured.

In 1982, a trial flight of single-engine takeoff and landing was to be carried out for the "Yun-7" airplane; in other words, a trial flight of the plane was carried out with one of its two engines idle. Of course, there would be some risk. This time, He Wenzhi was once more head of the trial flight group. After doing much preparatory work, he took the trial flight together with the engineers and the trial flight crew. The flight was successful the first time.

He Wenzhi said that, of course, there are diverse scientific grounds for us to have the courage to ensure the flight safety with our lives. The key issue is the quality of the planes. We must conduct overall quality control over our civilian planes to ensure their high quality, high reliability, and easy maintenance. After China-made airplanes are delivered to the customers, we organize highly trained service teams and send special technical service teams to customers to help them train crews, master pilot skills, ensure the supply of spare parts for maintenance, and guarantee flight safety.

Broad Prospects for the Development of the Civil Airplane Industry

As our national economy continues to develop and people's living standards continue to improve, the demand of various state and local departments and various sectors for airplanes for civilian use rises greatly and sharply and urgently need to be satisfied. Supply fails to meet the demand in China's aviation industry and the situation spurs us on. He Wenzhi said that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, the target for our aviation industry is to turn our aviation industry into an industry with coordinated development of military and civil products and satisfactory economic results, and to double the 1980 gross output value by 1990. In this period, we must regard the development of airplanes for civilian use as of the same importance as the development of military airplanes and create a new situation as soon as possible. In regard to helicopters, we should further nationalize the production of the medium-size "Zhi-9" helicopters which are now jointly produced by China and France and gradually begin mass production of them. In the future we should develop helicopters similar to the "Black Hawk" and "Super Puma," and small and ultralight helicopters. At the same time, by introducing technology from abroad and strengthening international cooperation, we will focus on developing and producing new branch-line passenger airplanes and specialized airplanes, further improve our "Yun-7" and "Yun-12" passenger airplanes, and cooperate with the U.S. McDonnell-Douglas Corporation in assembling large trunk airliners (MD-82). As for the airplanes for which designs have been finalized, we should quickly organize mass production, gradually put them into operation in our domestic airlines, and strive to deliver for use over 200 civilian airplanes of various kinds in 5 years. In the future, China's aviation industry will surely achieve stable, coordinated, and sustained development and make greater contributions to the development of our defense and national economic construction.

GU MU URGES SYSTEMATIC STUDY OF CONFUCIANISM

OW141020 Beijing XINHUA in English 0845 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese scholars should study Confucianism systematically and determine what elements of it remain worthwhile, a senior government official writes in an article to be published next month. "Confucianism had a great influence" on the culture and ideology of China's feudal society, elements of which survive today, said Gu Mu, a state councillor and honorary president of the Chinese Confucius Foundation. Gu called Confucius (551 B.C.-479 B.C.) "a great thinker, statesman and educator in China's history and a giant in the cultural history of the world."

Gu's article is the foreword of the first issue of CONFUCIAN STUDIES, an academic quarterly sponsored by the Chinese Confucius Foundation. The quarterly is edited by Xin Guanjie, a professor at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, and will be published by the Qi Lu Press in Shandong Province, where Confucius was born. Gu, himself a native of of Shandong, said the "quarterly will neither blindly praise Confucius and China's traditional culture nor take a nihilist attitude towards them. Instead, it will take them as objects of scientific, profound and systematic study."

As scholars evaluate Confucianism, he said, "there are bound to be controversies. But these can be satisfactorily resolved only through academic debate." He wrote that although the quarterly recommends Marxist methods of analysis, it does not rule out other methods, provided that they promote Confucian studies.

The quarterly will concentrate on articles about Confucius, Confucianism and China's traditional culuture. It aims at summarizing and carrying on the valuable traditions of China's ancient culture.

Overseas researchers of Confucianism are welcome to contribute to the quarterly, according to Gu. Articles by noted Confucian scholars both at home and abroad will be carried in the first issue of the quarterly, available March 25.

LI PENG, ZHAO WEICHEN AT NATIONAL PORTS MEETING

OW172343 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1424 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Dalian, 17 Feb (XINHUA) -- The central tasks of port work for this year are to tighten macroeconomic control over foreign trade shipments, improve overall handling efficiency, and step up construction of ports, said Zhao Weichen, deputy head of the State Council Leading Group in Charge of Sea, Land, and Air Ports and vice minister in charge of the State Economic Commission, at a national meeting on port work, which opened in Dalian today. In a work report on behalf of the leading group, he said: Great achievements were made in improving sea, land, and air ports last year, with the best records in transporting foreign trade goods. The total transport volume of import and export commodities increased by 23.5 percent over 1984. At the same time, port inspection departments did tremendous work in serving the opening up policy and ensuring smooth transportation of goods; initial successes were also achieved in reforming the ocean shipping management system; and the state opened a number of ports according to plan.

Zhao Weichen said: In order to meet the needs of steady growth in the national economy this year, it is necessary to carry out further reform in port work and pay attention to work in the following fields. Tighten macroeconomic control over foreign trade shipments: It is necessary to coordinate the planning, placing, or accepting of orders, and transport of major export and import commodities, and impose fixed quotas on the shipment of a number of major export and import goods. It is also necessary to intensify supervision over transport plans. Monthly transport plans should be balanced first by the ministries of communications, railways, and economic relations and trade with foreign countries, and then uniformly transmitted to lower levels for implementation. It is necessary to adopt protective measures to fully utilize Chinese-built freighters in ocean shipping.

Improve overall handling efficiency: It is necessary to pay keen attention to the work of carrying out reforms and tapping potential, and gradually introduce a "contract system fixing wages on the basis of the cargo tonnage handled" to the ports. It is also necessary to increase the capacity of road transport and use diversified means of loading and unloading cargoes using lighters in order to mobilize all social forces to ensure smooth transport of goods. It is simultaneously necessary to do a good job in building ports, railways, and warehouses. Step up construction of ports: It is necessary to further strengthen leadership over port work, pay close attention to the building of spiritual civilization, maintain good order at ports, improve port supervisory organs, and clearly define the scope of their functions.

Li Peng, vice premier of the State Council, attended today. The meeting will close on 19 February. During the session, over 300 people from various quarters will discuss and map out the 1986 plan for foreign trade shipments, according to the foreign trade export and import plan formulated by the state.

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR ON URBAN CENTRAL HEATING

OW190458 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0925 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 18 Feb (XINHUA) -- Transmitting a report prepared by the Ministry of Urban and Rural Construction and Environmental Protection [MURCEP] and the State Planning Commission [SPC] on improving the management of central heating in urban housing, the State Council recently issued a circular to all regions and departments.

Central heating facilities are part of the infrastructure of modern cities. In restructuring the urban economic system, all localities must promote urban central heating by intensifying the organizational leadership and administration and constantly exploring new experiences.

The report transmitted by the State Council said: Central heating developed in the nation's cities after liberation. Following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the work in this area had been further promoted, as the state has subsidized construction of a number of central heating projects with energy conservation funds. Not only has this conserved energy and improved the environment, it has also promoted industrial production and provided the masses with the needed service. On the whole, however, development of central heating in cities is still relatively slow in China. Most urbanites still keep warm with separate small boilers or stoves. This is mainly because of lack of clear-cut policies, precarious budgets, mismanagement in some heating supply companies, and irrational prices for heating. To keep up with urban modernization and improve the people's living standards, the MURCEP and the SPC think the following actions are necessary:

There should be clear-cut policies for developing central heating systems in cities. More heat resources should be developed in a way appropriate to local conditions, and advanced technology should be adopted so that the use of heat is economical. According to the heating needs for industry and daily living, electricity generation should be integrated with heat production, central heating boiler rooms should be constructed, and exhaust heat from industrial production and geothermal energy should be fully utilized. These projects should be carried out systematically according to plan under the guidance of general urban planning. Whenever technically and economically feasible all new housing, public facilities, and factories should have central heating systems instead of separate heat supply boiler rooms.

Improve the central heating management in cities. Heat supply facilities in cities should be placed under the administration of a department concerned under the MURCEP. A city in need of a great deal of heat for daily use may set up a heat supply company to take charge of the construction and adminstration of heat supply and central heating boiler rooms. All types of heat supply boiler rooms built by various units should be designed by planning departments, and examined and approved by departments in charge of environmental protection, management of heat supply, labor services, and coal supply. People's governments in various cities should strengthen their leadership over central heating supply and coordinate operations in all quarters. Facilities generating steam for industrial use may be managed by the enterprises themselves, by the power departments, or by the local authorities. In joining heat supply networks, thermal power plants administered by various departments should sign contracts with consumers, and both suppliers and consumers should include income and expenditure in their budgets.

Capital needed in building central heating systems in cities should be raised through various channels. To promote central heating in cities, construction of heat supply plants and networks should be carried out simultaneously in a coordinated manner. The capital for central heating systems in cities may be raised through these channels: 1) The local authorities themselves; 2) from the users; 3) allocating part of the urban preservation and construction taxes to the building of heat supply networks in cities; and 4) according to the situation, subsidizing construction of heat supply projects with state funds reserved for energy conservation.

Preferential and rational pricing policies should be adopted for construction of cities' central heating systems, which are public facilities having good social effects. Preferential policies are necessary because, as enterprises providing a needed service, heat suppliers in cities make very little profit.

Legislation for the building of central heating systems in cities should be stepped up, and management of those systems should be improved. To keep up with the development of central heating systems in cities, regulations governing the systems' standards, technical requirements, and management should be formulated at an early date. Heat suppliers should operate under a system of contracted responsibilities, carry out independent accounting, and hold themselves responsible for profit or loss. Business management must be improved to cut energy consumption, guard against leakage and other waste, and lower costs.

CIRCULAR CALLS FOR VIDEOTAPE, CASSETTE CONTROL

OW181339 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0809 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 18 Feb (XINHUA) -- The Ministry of Radio, Cinema, and Television; the Ministry of Commerce; and the State Administration for Industry and Commerce recently issued a joint circular, calling for control over cassette and videotape markets. It also called for resolutely cracking down on and ending illegal recordings and cassette and videotape sales. To strengthen control over cassette and videotape markets, the circular made a clear stipulation: Cassettes and videotape circulation and sales should be conducted through publishing units approved by the state.

The circular pointed out: Before obtaining a business license from local administration for industry and commerce, units and individuals wanting to operate video rentals must seek prior approval from local radio and television departments. They are also required to register with the local public security department. The circular called on departments concerned in all localities to proceed with control work on videotape and cassette markets after the 1986 Spring Festival.

MEETING ON IMPORT, EXPORT INSPECTION IN JINAN

SK190333 Jinan Shandong Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] The national conference of directors of import and export commodities inspection bureaus opened in the Nanjiao Guesthouse of Jinan on 18 February. Present at the conference were more than 100 representatives from 33 import and export commodities inspection bureaus throughout the country. Ma Shizhong, vice governor of the Shandong Provincial Government, extended greetings to the conference.

The conference is being held to discuss measures to cope with the situation in which our country should produce more export commodities and create more foreign exchange to promote a rapid development of foreign trade during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. During the conference, representatives will exchange their experiences in inspecting import and export commodities, discuss and formulate plans for developing the work of inspecting import and export commodities during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, and arrange the work for 1986. The main subjects for discussion at the conference are to further straighten out the guiding ideology, to enhance the means for inspecting import and export commodities, to strive for promoting the development of foreign trade, and to make contributions to increasing foreign exchange earnings and enlivening the national economy.

The convocation of this conference in Jinan gives the Shandong Provincial import and export commodities inspection department a good opportunity to emulate other places throughout the country and will lend great impetus to Shandong's import and export commodities inspection work.

EFFORT TO TRAIN MORE AUDITORS LAUNCHED

HK150556 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 15 Feb 86 p 1

[By Zhu Ling]

[Text] A five-year effort is beginning this year to speed up the training of auditors to supervise China's fast-developing economy. It involves three major areas:

-- Establishing a nation-wide professional education system for auditors incorporating technical schools, colleges and special training centres set up by the State Audit Administration;

-- Training some 30,000 new auditors at either college or high-school level;

-- Giving all present auditors additional training in accounting, economic law, computer science and management techniques.

Liang Genhua, director of the Education and Personnel Department of the State Audit Administration, explained that the administration's present staff of 28,000 nation-wide were too few to handle the enormous workload. There are now around 2 million enterprises or other units in China whose books should be audited regularly and the administration has checked only about three per cent of them since it was established in 1983. "This year will see the start of a massive programme," Liang said. "But 'a 1,000-li journey starts with the first step' as the old Chinese saying goes."

For 1986, the office has set the following priorities: Establishing six auditor-training centres; building up an audio-visual education programme, including a recording studio; compiling and publishing auditing textbooks· building up a force of good teachers and running several crash courses by foreign auditing experts.

Liang said that the auditor-training centres would be in Hebei, Fujian, Jiangxi, Henan, Guangxi and Sichuan provinces. The administration hopes to train more than 20,000 people as auditors through a series of around 400 television classes. This programme will be broadcast to more than 50 percent of the country.

Also this year, seven textbooks, including An Introduction to Auditing, will be complied. Other topics under consideration are economic efficiency, finances, industry, commerce, foreign trade, and administrative procedures. Teaching programmes are being drafted for universities and technical schools, Liang said. So far, 29 institutions of higher learning and eight technical schools have set up auditing departments. In addition, some 750 auditing teachers will be trained this year to conduct television courses as well as university and technical school programmes.

Experts from Sweden and Canada are to run training courses in China this year and a number of Chinese auditors will study in Australia.

Since 1983, the State Audit Administration has uncovered many cases of accounting errors, fraud, inefficient management, serious violation of economic and financial laws, and waste. The administration's role is of growing importance now that businesses have more autonomy, Liang said. Some problems have risen, mostly fraud and the exploitation of loopholes for personal gain.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN INSPECTS POOR COUNTIES

OW190528 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 4 Feb 86 p 1

[Excerpt] Recently, Comrades Xiang Nan and Wen Xiushan led responsible comrades of some provincial departments to inspect the poor counties of Zherong and Shouning. They discussed with the local cadres how to find a better way to accelerate commodity production and overcome poverty in these counties.

The leading provincial comrades and Lu Juyong, secretary of Ningde prefectural party committee, arrived in Zherong and then Shouning County from Fuding County on 1 February. Through efforts by cadres and masses in Zherong and Shouning Counties, their efforts by cadres and masses in Zherong and Shouning Counties, their production greatly developed in 1985. Industrial development in the two counties has been particularly remarkable, thanks to the introduction of investment from abroad and establishment of lateral ties at home. After visiting factories and rabbit farms and hearing briefings by the leading county comrades on their measures and future tasks in overcoming poverty, the leading provincial comrades happily lauded the two counties' correct guiding ideology. They said: In order to change the poor counties' outlook, agriculture must be further developed. More efforts must be exerted in developing grain production, forestry, rabbit and fish farming, as well as other agricultural undertakings. However, prosperity can only be achieved by promoting industry and commerce in addition to developing agriculture. We must make use of the plentiful mountain resources in the poor counties to develop agriculture, industry, and commerce. Ideologically, we must allow industry to play a dominant role.

How can the poor counties develop industry? The leading provincial comrades said: We must not follow the old path, but take a new approach in developing industry. The rural areas must develop household industry, and the cities must develop neighborhood industry.

FUJIAN'S XIANG NAN ADDRESSES TEACHERS FORUM

OW180815 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 6 Feb 86 p 1

[Excerpts] Spring was overflowing inside the auditorium while winter rain came pattering down outside. Leaders of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government extended season's greetings to teachers; the teachers offered suggestions on ways to promote education and raise the quality of instruction in our province. Laughter frequently broke out in the auditorium. This was the lively scene at the forum sponsored by the provincial higher education department yesterday to extend Spring Festival greetings to teachers.

Early yesterday morning, Xiang Nan, Zhang Yumin, Chen Mingyi, Zhang Gexin, Wang Zhixing, and other responsible comrades as well as leaders of the provincial higher education departmrnt arrived at the auditorium of the Zhuanjialou reception center of Fujian Teachers University to extend festival greetings to the teachers assembled there and had a warm informal discussion with them. Present at the forum were teachers, representatives of political work personnel, and responsible persons of institutes of higher learning and secondary vocational schools in Fuzhou City.

Comrade Xiang Nan made a speech on the subject of "upholding reform and improving quality." He said: In recent years, especially last year, our province's educational work has developed rapidly and the achievements have been great. We must thank the teachers and other school personnel for this. You have overcome many difficulties and have done a great deal of work. We must rely on improving economic results to rejuvenate Fujian; to improve economic results we need technical progress.

Technical progress requires training of personnel, and this in turn requires that we earnestly promote education. Currently, we should pay special attention to carrying out the reform of the educational system well and should do better in integrating the running of universities with economic construction. We should gradually make school logistics work more community-oriented. Further efforts should be made to integrate instruction with scientific research.

JIANGSU COMMENTARY URGES CONFIDENCE IN REFORM

OW161253 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Station commentary: "Carry Forward the Spirit of the Foolish Old Man To Promote Reform in an All-round Way"]

[Text] This year, which marks the beginning of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, will be one in which all economic structural reforms will develop in depth.

Our province made new strides last year in restructuring the economy. The strides were bigger, results better, and problems fewer than we expected. The lifting of price control for farm and sideline products gave impetus to the readjustment in the structure of agricultural production and the development of commodity economy in rural areas. A fairly good result was achieved also in the reform of wages for government offices and institutions. A great deal of work was done and considerable achievements were also made last year in strengthening and perfecting macroeconomic control and eliminating unstable factors in the economy. Remarkable improvement was made toward changing the phenomenon in which total social demand exceeded total social supply. Economic life has been gradually normalized.

However, we must also realize that some weak links still exist in our economic work. Unstable factors in economic life still exist. Total social demand still exceeds total social supply and this situation is likely to worsen if we lower our guard even slightly. Under these circumstances, we must unify our thinking, persist in the reform, and persevere in pushing forward, maintaining and developing the current excellent situation.

In order to carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man and promote the reform in an all-round way, it is necessary to first firmly believe in the reform. It was reform that enabled us to make tremendous achievements in the past. It will have to be reform again on which we must rely to solve new problems in the economy. We must never waver in our determination and belief to carry out reforms no matter what new difficulties and problems may arise in the course of our drive for reforms and opening up to the outside world, not even when we suffer temporary setbacks.

In order to carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man and promote reform in an all-round way, it is necessary to persist in digging up the mountain every day without fail. As the mountain must be dug shovel by shovel, the reform must be carried out in stages in a systematic way. We cannot complete a thousand li long journey without taking the first step. We must never expect overnight success if we are to attain the goal for our reforms. We were able to fairly successfully carry out the reform of the price and wage systems last year. Generally speaking, the strides we made in these two reforms were considerable. The emphasis of this year's reforms should be placed on consolidating, digesting, complementing, and perfecting the reform measures to gradually turn the various reform measures into complete systems. We must act in accordance with the arrangement made by the party Central Committee to actively and prudently solve the salient problems in reform at present, conduct serious investigation and study, and carry out exploration and experimentation in selected places while making good preparations for next year's reforms. We must push forward the reforms step by step in a down-to-earth manner.

In order to carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man and promote reforms in an all-round way, it is also necessary for the whole party, leading cadres at all levels in particular, to always remain in close contact with the masses. Recently, some serious problems occurred in the party and government offices of our country. Problems such as these must be eliminated with firm resolve because they discredit reform, undermine the relationship between the party and the people, and seriously interfere with reform. In addition, we must further strengthen ideological and political work and effectively promote education in the situation and the policies. We should clearly explain to the people the tremendous achievements we have made and the difficulties and problems we now face and tell them in no uncertain terms about the utmost efforts being made by the party and government to inspire their fighting spirit and confidence.

The spring of the Year of the Tiger is full of vigor and vitality. Let us continue to carry forward the spirit of the foolish old man, fight in unity for a splendid future, and strive to win a still greater victory in the all-round restructuring of the socialist economy.

JIANGSU RADIO EMPHASIZES IMPROVING CONDUCT

OW150649 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Station commentary: "Improvement of Party Style Should Begin With Leading Cadres"]

[Text] The 12th CPC National Congress called for bringing about a fundamental change for the better in party style and in the standards of social conduct within 5 years. It has been 3 years and 4 months since the congress was convened. In the past 3 years or so, remarkable improvement has been made in party style and in the standards of social conduct of this province.

However, we should also be aware that in last few years, quite a few organizations have in fact been hesitant to improve party style and the standards of social conduct. They are all talk and no action, and they demand more from lower levels than they do from themselves. The cadres and the masses have a lot of complaints about them.

Early this year, the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee called on the party members and the cadres of central party, government and Army organizations to set good examples in fundamentally improving the conduct of the party and the society. The provincial party committee has also pointed out clearly and assuredly that as far as the province is concerned, the improvement of the party style should begin with the provincial organs. Therefore, we must display the spirit of the foolish old man who removed the mountains, step up the building of spiritual civilization, and strive to fundamentally improve party style and the standards of social conduct.

The improvement of party style should begin with the leading organs and the leading cadres. If the leading cadres are upright and honest, set good examples for the masses to follow, and lead the masses in undertaking the four modernizations with one heart and one mind, the masses will happily support them, and will work hard together to accomplish one miracle after another.

The leading body of the (Chenguang) machinery plant displays a good work style. Their good work style has encouraged good style within the plant as a whole. Since the 12th CPC National Congress, the plant has scored great successes in building socialist material and spiritual civilization. Over the past 2 years, a number of good and honest cadres have emerged in this province.

At a recent meeting of cadres of central organs, Comrade Hu Yaobang called on the central organs to set good examples for the whole country to follow. He said that whenever a problem arises, we should first try to discover its causes among the leading organs and the leading cadres. Many masses say that there are high hopes for success in fundamentally improving the party style and the standards of social conduct, because the central, provincial and city organs and the leading cadres have been asked to take the lead in making such improvements.

In order to improve party style, the leading cadres should do more solid work, talk less, and make improvements one at a time. One of the reasons for our failure to rapidly improve party style and the standard of social conduct in the past was too much empty talk and too few actual deeds. We must thoroughly correct this mistake. The leading cadres must perform actual deeds, do what they have promised, and correct mistakes while making promises.

In order to improve party style and the standards of social conduct, we should proceed from handling specific cases and be determined to deal with some persons who engage in irregularities and violate law and discipline, particularly the cases involving leading cadres. We must investigate and handle important and major cases in accordance with discipline and law, regardless of who is involved.

Only those who sternly deal with criminals can stop unhealthy tendencies, encourage healthy trends, and make the party members and cadres understand the harmful effects of unhealthy tendencies, raising their awareness of the need to combat unhealthy tendencies conscientiously. The party style and the standards of social conduct surely can be fundamentally improved at an early date if we are determined to overcome all resistance, perform actual deeds, and resolutely work hard for several years.

HK150221 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Excerpts] The provincial government held a telephone conference on the evening of 14 February which demanded that all prefectures and cities take effective steps to get a good grasp of current industrial and agricultural production without missing the season.

Vice Governor Qin Kecai said: From now on, while continually improving economic results, we must ensure an 8 percent increase in industry and strive for 10 percent. This is a suitable growth rate. We must fulfill at least 24 percent of the year's plan in the first quarter and 48 percent of the year's plan by the end of June, while striving for over 50 percent fulfillment. The departments, prefectures and cities must therefore resolutely eliminate slackness and fear of difficulties, strive for the initiative without waiting around or relying on others, and get a good and early grasp of this work.

We must take steps to solve as far as possible the problems of power and raw materials supply. In the existing circumstances, we must arrange work in order of priority and ensure the key points. The electric power departments must step up planning arrangements and control work, and ensure a full and steady supply. Material supply departments must do everything possible to do their work well. The provincial departments concerned must solve as far as possible the current problem of capital for industrial production.

Regarding current agricultural production in the province, Vice Governor Hu Tingji called on the province to urgently mobilize and rapidly consolidate an upsurge of spring production centered on tending the wheat crop. We are now at the crucial moment of spring farming. The government at all levels must organize the masses as early as possible to plunge into tending the wheat crop. Areas in western and northern Henan where the drought is serious must hurry to fight drought, irrigate the wheat, fertilize the crop, and act to preserve soil moisture.

In order to support the effort to fight drought and irrigate the wheat crop, the provincial government has decided that 200,000 kilowatts of electricity will be allocated to rural areas of northern and western Henan from 15 February to 15 March. The prefectures and cities concerned must make arrangements as early as possible to make maximum use of this power and ensure that it is used for fighting drought and irrigating the wheat.

FAKE ALUMINUM INGOTS CASE CRACKED IN HEBEI

OW171222 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0858 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Excerpts] Shijiazhuang, 17 Feb (XINHUA) -- Hebei Province recently handled the economic crimes committed by Anxin and Qingyuan Counties which produced and sold fake aluminum ingots. The criminal responsibilities of 14 major culprits, who have been put behind bars, will be investigated and affixed according to law. The principal party and government leaders of these two counties have either been dismissed or given serious disciplinary warnings within the party for having neglected their duties.

It has been confirmed that from September 1984 through April 1985, a total of 1,424 metric tons of fake aluminum ingots were produced by 552 family-sized smelteries in 7 townships and 25 villages in these 2 counties. It has also been confirmed that, during the same period, 957 metric tons of fake aluminum ingots were sold through 29 trade companies and traders engaged in selling fake aluminum ingots.

Although the two counties' party and government leaders were aware of the illicit business long time ago, they took no action to stop it. Consequently, the illicit business quickly spread in the two counties. Brazenly emboldening lawless elements, Duan Hanging, secretary of the Qingyuan County CPC Committee, even went so far as to visit Wang Yufu, manager of the Yongxing Trade Company, to "comfort" him after his company was implicated in trading fake aluminum ingots last year. Liu Jinzhang, secretary of the Zangcun District party committee, and others also worked in collusion with lawless people, using each other in seeking personal gains. The party branch of Donglao Village in Anxin County's Shenjiapi Township even directly supported the villagers in producing bogus aluminum ingots. As a result, 220 of the village's 255 families engaged in producing, bogus aluminum ingots. The two counties' administrations of industry and commerce have also seriously neglected their duties. Some administrators have even colluded with lawless elements in bending the law for the benefit of their relatives and friends.

HEILONGJIANG LEADERS HELP STATE FARMS SOLVE PROBLEMS

SK190105 Harbin Heilongjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] In order to achieve overall prosperity in the economy among the state farms throughout the province, the principal leading personnel of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government recently went deep into the reclamation area to conduct official duties there and dealt with a large number of major and important problems on the spot.

Through the more than 30 years of development and construction, our province's reclamation area has turned into a large economic zone with the main system of public ownership and a certain material and technical foundation. Since 1984, the area has conducted reforms in economic systems by making a breakthrough in establishing family-based farms of staff members and workers and vigorously developed a diversified economy while developing grain production, resulting in full vitality. Meanwhile, along with the deepening development of reforms, the area has incurred some problems needing urgent solutions, some of which have not been dealt with for a long time because of the blurring of responsibility and demarcation lines, as well as the fact that the professional departments have disputed over trifles.

After hearing the briefing given by the leading personnel of the State Farms Bureau, the principal leading personnel of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government openly presented the problems and held a direct discussion with the bureau personnel on dealing with the problems. As for those problems that deserve to be dealt with or can be solved, they made appropriate decisions on the spot. For example, regarding the dispute having to do with the jurisdiction of several farms and enterprises, which was put forward by the local authorities, they immediately made a decision on the spot after weighing the pros and cons in line with the interest of developing the commodity economy. They also made a decision on leaving the provincial State Farms Bureau and the State Farms Administrative Bureau unchanged, because the family-based farms of staff members and workers have just been opened, and much work is required to stabilize their development, to improve their systems, and to upgrade their production standard. They also decided to achieve new development in simplifying administration and delegating power to the family-based farms and in increasing the self-determination power among them. They have worked out measures in line with the policy of dealing with leftover problems from the past to make job arrangements for retired armymen and officers, and educated youths settling in the countryside.

In 1985, the reclamation area incurred serious natural disasters, and a large number of agricultural and animal husbandry farms found their harvest and incomes reduced. All of this has caused a large shortage of production funds this year and has become a major issue of concern to the masses throughout the area, from upper to lower levels. Therefore, the leading personnel of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial people's government immediately made a decision on giving support to the production of major commodities, reducing the intermediate links of exporting commodities as much as possible in order to accelerate the pace of funds circulation, giving a helping hand to the area to tap the latent potentiality in terms of inner funds, and making reasonable arrangements for loan releases. All of these measures have had an effect in overcoming difficulties involving funds. As for some problems that must be dealt with or cannot be solved by the provincial authorities, they also immediately made a decision on having the departments concerned ask their higher authorities for instructions. As a result, all questions put forward by the reclamation area have been discussed or disposed of on the spot.

[Text] On the evening of 18 February, leading comrades of the province and Harbin City, including Sun Weiben, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Chen Yunlin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, watched an eight-scene drama entitled "Cui Jinying Brings a Lawsuit," newly prepared by the Harbin Drama Theater. The whole drama depicts a situation in which a minority discipline inspection cadre of our party and an honest forest guard, in order to protect the forest resources of the country, staged an acute struggle against some party-member cadres and criminals who ignored the party's discipline and the state law. It eulogizes the righteous and unyielding fighting spirit of the Communist Party members represented by a female inspector (Hong Yilian) and a forest guard.

CRIMES COMMITTED BY SENIOR CADRES' SONS REPORTED

HK181146 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 18 Feb 86 p 7

["Special article" by special correspondent Yao Hsin-pao: "How the Crimes Were Committed -- Trial Brought Before the Shanghai Court"]

[Text] A major suit of hooliganism involving the sons of senior cadres in Shanghai was officially filed with the Shanghai Municipal Intermediate People's Court on 15 October 1985. The case, identified as "Chen Xiaomeng, Hu Xiaoyang, Ge Ziwen, Chen Binglang, Chen Danguang, and Kang Yefei jointly committing rape and hooliganism," was filed by the sub-branch of the Shanghai Municipal People's Procuratorate based on accusations by the victims, confessions by the accomplices, and testimonies of the witnesses.

Crimes of Raping Women Using Violence and Coercive Means

Chen Xiaomeng, a principal in the crime, was identified in the indictment as using violence and coercive means to rape four women (violating two by several men in turn, raping one, and attempting to rape one) and using indecent means to rape 13 women and to molest 5 others. He was charged with rape and hooliganism.

Hu Xiaoyang, another principal in the crime, was identified in the indictment as using violence and other means to rape four women (violating two by several men in turn, raping one, and attempting to rape one) and using indecent means to rape 12 women and to molest 10 others. He was also charged with rape and hooliganism.

A Detainee Reports and Exposes the Offense to the Authorities

The clue to the major case of hooliganism, which went on for 3 years, was found by the public security department here in a letter of accusation by a detainee. The letter of accusation confirmed that a young saleswoman surnamed Zhang told the detainee that a female youth had been gang-raped by several men. Basing their investigation on this clue, the personnel from the Shanghai's Luwan District Public Security Subbureau handling the case immediately found the plump and graceful girl who had been raped. From her account of the rape, which had occurred 2 years before, an important criminal called Ge Ziwen, who had taken part in the rape, was summoned for interrogation.

Raping Women by Holding Dances

The arrest of Ge Ziwen, the son of a cadre from a Shanghai perfumery, clarified the truth of the case. He not only confessed to the interrogators the crimes of raping other women, but also gave the names of Chen Xiaomeng, Chen Binglang and his brother, and Hu Xiaoyang, who had played important roles in this rape and hooliganism. Taking advantage of their superior situations, the members of the gang often gathered women on the pretext of holding family dances.

Chen Xiaomeng, a principal in the case, was arrested on 30 November 1984. In his 50,000-character statement entitled "My Personal, Hand-written Confession," he confessed that long before he joined in the indecent activities of the gang, he had had a "previous criminal record." In his "confession" he admitted to having molested many girls in his neighborhood and the daughters of his relatives from the end of 1972 to the summer of 1973. In its indictment, the sub-branch of the Shanghai Municipal People's Procuratorate held that the six defendants who had committed serious crimes and gravely endangered public security should be strictly punished.

["Special Dispatch From Beijing": "China International Trust and Investment Corporation Resells Vehicles for Profit"]

[Text] The industrial and commercial administrative bureau of Jianghan District, Wuhan City, and the industrial and commercial administrative bureau of Shiyan City are now handling a case in which the China International Trust and Investment Corporation [CITIC] resold vehicles at a higher price for profit in violation of the state's relevant policies and regulations.

According to the industrial and commercial administrative department of Hubei Provincial Government, CITIC and the No 2 automobile plant signed an agreement in early 1985 by which CITIC provided $2 million of foreign exchange for the factory to import a production line, the factory supplied the investment corporation with 248 "Tongfeng 140" trucks at a price of 23,000 yuan per vehicle.

Between May and September 1985, 111 trucks were resold for 42,800 yuan to nine units in six provinces, including the Guangzhou City mechanical and electrical industrial supply and marketing corporation and the material supply bureau of Chaozhou City, Guangdong Province. The investment corporation made a total profit of 2.31 million yuan from these transactions.

After this case was revealed, the industrial and commercial administrative bureau of Jianghan District, Wuhan City, decided that the sales contract should be suspended, the automobile plant must stop the sale of the remaining 115 "Tongfeng 140" trucks to the investment corporation, and all illegal profits are to be confiscated and turned over to the state treasury. Another 22 vehicles were confiscated by the industrial and commercial administrative bureau of Shiyan City, which demanded that CITIC refund the money to the buyer units. However, CITIC has so far refused to give the refund and return the vehicles to the automobile plant, and rejects the decision made by the industrial and commercial administrative department. At present, the industrial and commercial administrative bureau of Shiyan City continues handling this case.

CHEN YUN ACTS ON CASE INVOLVING SCIENCE ACADEMY

[Dispatch by a special correspondent: "Beijing Exposes Scandal of Senior Cadres Engaging in Auto Transactions"]

[Text] Shanghai, 15 Feb -- Following the determination of the central authorities to further rectify unhealthy tendencies, another automobile case has been exposed and dealt with. It was reported here that last year the Chinese Academy of Sciences used a huge amount of foreign exchange to buy a number of deluxe cars from abroad. After these cars were delivered, senior cadres with power and influence began to ask the Academy of Sciences for new cars, and they discarded their imported Crown Cars after obtaining new cars. Contradictions and problems arose as a result of contention for new cars, and some people reported this problem to the CPC Central Committee Political Bureau. Hearing this, Chen Yun was very angry and wrote a document ordering those who had obtained new cars from the Academy of Sciences to return the cars in a given time. The instruction remarked that those cadres were not allowed to substitute new cars for their old cars by compensating for the price difference and that this case of exchanging cars should be criticized and those involved should be punished according to party discipline.

It has said that various localities had cultivated the habit of importing deluxe cars and that going in for extravagance had become a new trend among bureaucrats. Contradictions also arose following the contention for new cars. The purpose of the CPC Central Committee's document was to halt this unhealthy tendency.

XU JIATUN ON PRESS FREEDOM, TALKS WITH PORTUGAL

HK140301 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 14 Feb 86 p 3

[Text] China's top representative in Hong Kong said yesterday that comments by visiting Beijing official Lu Ping last month on press freedom were Mr Lu's personal views. The representative, Mr Xu Jiatun, director of XINHUA News Agency in Hong Kong, was speaking at the start of a Lunar New Year visit to Macao.

Mr Lu, the Secretary, General of China's Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office, had said freedom of the press could not be allowed to infringe on China's sovereignty. His comments have been interpreted as an indication that press freedom would be restricted after 1997. On being pressed on the question yesterday, Mr Xu said aspects of freedom of the press will be expounded in sections of the Basic Law. He refused, however, to give his own personal comments on how much press freedom would be allowed after 1997.

On being greeted by community leaders in Macao yesterday, Mr Xu said the coming year will be an important one for the territory. He pointed out that China and Portugal will start negotiations soon over Macao's future.

China will have to wait, Mr Xu said, for a new Portuguese Government to be formed following the elections, but the change will not affect the forthcoming negotiations. Mr Xu said he expects China and Portugal to reach satisfactory solution on Macao's future, given the friendly relationship between the two countries and the good precedent set by the negotiations on Hong Kong.

He said Sino-Portuguese negotiations should proceed harmoniously in line with the principle of "Macao people ruling Macao." He said the stormy Sino-British negotiations over Hong Kong would not occur in Macao. China would take good care of the interest of Macao compatriots and Portuguese, Macao-born or otherwise, he said.

HONG KONG OFFICIAL ON NEW DRUG SMUGGLING ROUTES

HK130827 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 13 Feb 86 p 8

[Text] Drug traffickers, relying on supplies from the "Golden Triangle," are turning to more elaborate smuggling routes in a bid to evade detection. The warning came yesterday from the Assistant Commissioner of Customs (Investigations) Mr K. S. Tong, who said the increasing use of circuitous routes to smuggle drugs into Hong Kong had emerged as one of the more worrying trends of last year. Mr Tong said there were disquieting signs that this tactic, though not altogether new, was becoming more popular with drug syndicates.

The bulk of the opiate drugs that feed Hong Kong's addicts originate from the Golden Triangle -- a mountainous region where the borders of Thailand, Laos and Burma meet. But instead of shipping the drugs directly from the producing countries traffickers are switching to longer, more circuitous routes and transhipping their illicit cargoes through non-producing countries, such as Japan, Taiwan, Korea and China. By masking the origin of the shipment, the traffickers hope to throw customs officers off their trial. The same ploy is being used by traffickers trying to smuggle cannabis into Hong Kong from the Philippines, Mr Tong said.

He said that in December, 126 kg of cannabis, with an estimated street value of $7 million, was discovered on a ship that had sailed from the Philippines via Taiwan, which is a non-producing country.

The drug, the biggest seizure of cannabis in Hong Kong, was found in the cavities and cathode ray tubes of used video game machines in a container. Last month, customs officers found 20 kg of cannabis, valued at $1 million, hidden in furniture from the Philippines that had been transshipped through Tokyo, another non-producing country, to the Kwai Chung container terminal.

"We are very concerned about this method of smuggling which makes detection an even more difficult job," said Mr Tong. "Tens of thousands of ships come to Hong Kong every year, and it is impossible for us to search every single one of them, particularly those that do not come from suspect ports."

In response to this latest drug-smuggling tactic, customs officers have stepped up intelligence-gathering within the region. They are also inspecting more shipments from such countries as Japan, Taiwan, Korea and China and are checking manifests more closely.

Mr Tong described 1985 as "a year of steady yields" in the battle against illicit drugs. Customs officers seized 315 kg of drugs with street value of $43 million last year. Total drug seizures for the year by both the customs service and the police amounted to 621 kg. Seizures of drugs by the Customs and Excise Department rose by six per cent last year compared with 1984 seizures. A total of 315 kg of drugs comprising 90 kg of heroin base, 48 kg of heroin, 33 kg of opium and 144 kg of cannabis and cannabis resin were confiscated. Mr Tong said that the favourite method of smuggling drugs into Hong Kong continued to the sea route because of Hong Kong's easy accessibility by sea.

CONFIDENCE DECLINES IN POLITICAL FUTURE

HK180457 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 18 Feb 86 p 1

[Text] Hong Kong people's confidence in the political future of the territory has declined since last summer, a survey commissioned by the SCM POST has revealed. However, the majority of people -- 78 percent of those interviewed -- are still confident about the overall future of Hong Kong. The survey, conducted by Survey Research Hong Kong Ltd, set out to ascertain the political and economic opinions of local people. As part of the SCM POST'S efforts to assess local feelings at this crucial time in the territory's history, the survey will be updated from time to time.

One thousand people from all sectors of society were quizzed about their views at separate times last January, May, September and November and again last month. The findings show the political confidence index has been on the wane since May. And the percentage of people who were "very confident about the future of the territory" dropped from 23 percent a year ago to 13 percent last month. Those who were "not confident" rose from 13 to 22 percent during the same period.

The survey team said: "The political confidence of Hong Kong people is sensitive to the public discussion about how Hong Kong will be governed in the post-1977 era." The survey revealed that Hong Kong people's confidence in the economic future of the territory fell significantly between May and the end of last year, but recovered slightly last month. Sixty-seven percent of those interviewed last-month considered the present local economic situation to be "average." Those who held optimistic views on the economy dropped from 20 percent in September and November to 16 percent last month.

The percentage of pessimistic individuals remained at 17 percent on the last two occasions the survey team sought opinions, in November and last month. Those who held pessimistic views were mainly in the lower income bracket, with household earnings of less than $5,000 a month. The SCM POST will publish full details of the survey in forthcoming issues.

LIAOWANG ON RELATIONS, EFFORTS TO REJOIN GATT

HK180733 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 pp 28-29

[Article by Yu Jiafu: "China's Relations With GATT"]

[Text] There has been a new development in the relations between GATT and China. In January this year, Arthur Dunkel, director general of GATT, and (Roselle), counselor of the legal affairs department, visited China at the invitation of Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade. They exchanged views with senior Chinese leaders on China's status in GATT.

The General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade provisionally went into effect in 1948. GATT now has 90 officially contracting parties. It is a multilateral agreement on international trade. In fact, it is also the biggest multilateral institution in the field of international trade. In May 1948, the then KMT government represented China in jointing GATT, and becoming one of the contracting parties. After the founding of the PRC, the Taiwan authorities illegally withdrew from GATT, in March 1950. In January 1965, they illegally applied for, and were granted, the status of observer participating in the general assembly of the contracting parties of GATT. In October 1971, China's legal seat in the United Nations was restored. In November of the same year, GATT deprived Taiwan of its observer status.

In recent years, China has increased its contacts with GATT. China has four times had a nonvoting delegate attend the annual general assembly. China also participated in the international textile trade agreement (MFA), which was reached under the auspices of GATT, and became a member of the textile committee under GATT. China's trade volume with members of GATT accounted for more than 85 percent of the total volume of its foreign trade. GATT, the IMF, and the World Bank have become the three main pillars of the capitalist economy. At present, more than 85 percent of world trade is carried on among contracting parties of GATT.

However, for historical reasons, China's relations with GATT have been suspended for a long time. Many contracting parties of GATT do not yet sufficiently understand China's position in demanding the restoration of its membership. Therefore, it is necessary for China to strengthen its contacts with the GATT Secretariat in order to exchange views through bilateral or multilateral consultation.

Before Director General Dunkel's visit to China, his legal advisor, (Linton), and councillor of the Department of Economic Reasearch and Analysis, (Vold), came to China to discuss with the Chinese side some legal matters and other problems involved in China's resumption of its membership. They visited Guangzhou, Shenzhen, and Xian.

Dunkel said that the prupose of his visit was to brief China on the situation of GATT, and to pass on the views of the contracting parties on China's intention to resume its membership in the organization. During his stay in China, he held several talks with leaders of the Chinese ministries and commissions concerned to exchange views.

On 10 January, Zhao Ziyang, State Council premier, met with Director General Dunkel at the Ziguangge in Zhongnanhai, and talked with him for 40 minutes. First of all, Zhao Ziyang thanked Mr Dunkel and the secretariat of GATT for their efforts to restore China's status as a contracting party. Zhao Ziyang said: China's policy of opening up to the outside world is advancing in depth. This is an irreversible trend. China hopes to return to GATT as early as possible. This conforms to the needs of China's policy of opening up to the outside world.

Zhao Ziyang added: If China restores its membership in the GATT, it will further expand its trade contacts with members of the organization. Judging from the development trend of China's foreign trade, China needs not only to expand exports, but also to increase imports. China is a big market. To develop its economic construction, China needs to import many things. However, without exports it will be devoid of means of payment.

Zhao Ziyang also told the director general that with the progress of China's economic structural reform, the differences between China and most of the member states of GATT in certain aspects such as foreign trade system, prices, and exchange rate will be narrowed. He hoped that member states of GATT would have a better understanding of China, and pay attention to such developmental trends.

After the talks, Dunkel stated that Premier Zhao's meeting with him showed that the Chinese Government attaches importance to the development of relations between China and GATT. Premier Zhao's remarks had left a very deep impression on him so that he understood China's position on resuming its membership in GATT, and its determination to implement the policy of opening up firmly and for a long period. Dunkel stressed that he would continue to strive to restore China's membership in GATT.

Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian also met Director General Dunkel. Wu said that he appreciated the step taken by GATT in 1971 to terminate the participation of the Taiwan authorities in the general assembly of contracting parties, with "observer status" in accordance with the UN resolutions on restoring China's legitimate seat in the organization. As one of the earliest contracting parties, China hopes to resume its seat in GATT. He stated that China has always promoted its economic and trade contacts with various countries on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. After the restoration of its membership in GATT, China will develop its trade relations with member states of the organization in accordance with this principle.

During his stay in Beijing, Dunkel also met responsible persons of the State Economic Commission, the State Planning Commission, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, and the General Administration of Customs. He also talked with figures in Chinese economic circles to gain an understanding of China's economic structural reform.

Li Ke, representative of the minister of foreign economic relations and trade, briefed Dunkel on China's economic structural reform, foreign trade system, and foreign trade policy, and answered questions on the special economic zones raised by the guest. Li Ke said: While opening up to the outside world, China is not only actively developing bilateral economic and trade relations, but also actively participating in multilateral economic and trade activities. For example, China participates in the MFA. Li Ke pointed out: The restoration of China's membership in GATT is needed not only by China itself, but also by member states of GATT.

Dunkel stated that, through several discussions with the departments concerned in China, he understands that the Chinese economic system is unique. There is no precedent in this regard. He would report on his China trip and the economic situation of the country to member states of GATT. In the meantime, he also hoped that trade policy experts from China and GATT would further increase their contacts.

During his stay in China, Dunkel gave a detailed report on the basic principles and activities of GATT. At a symposium organized by the Institute of World Economy and Politics under the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, Dunkel gave a report emphasizing GATT's principles of nondiscrimination, mutual benefit, free trade, and proper competition. He stressed that the aim of GATT is to reduce or abolish tariff and other trade barriers through the implementation of unconditional and nondiscriminatory most-favored-nation treatment to promote freedom of trade and mutually beneficial, multilateral competition in trade.

Director General Dunkel's visit will promote mutual understanding between the GATT and its contracting parties and China. There is no doubt that this will be beneficial to the efforts of the GATT to play a more active role in world economic affairs.

ADELMAN PREDICTS PROGRESS IN INF TALKS

OW190240 Beijing XINHUA in English 0227 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 18 (XINHUA) -- The United States and the Soviet Union are most likely to make some progress in the area of intermediate-range nuclear forces (INF) in their arms control talks, U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Director Kenneth Adelman told the Philadelphia World Affairs Council today.

He predicted this for several reasons, he said. First, for a while now the INF issue has been "out of the limelight and there is sometimes a reverse correlation between the glare of publicity and the seriousness of Soviet negotiators," said Adelman. Second, he added, there are only a few types of weapons systems primarily involved -- the Soviet SS-20s, the U.S. Pershing IIs and ground-launched cruise missiles. And finally, he said, the Soviets have made suggestions in this direction.

He said the door to agreements "is creaking open" and "it is up to the Soviets to walk through." He added that "there are concrete things we can accomplish in arms control, if the Soviets are willing to buckle down to the business of bargaining." Adelman also cited some "key problems" in arms control.

The first problem, he said, is to separate propaganda from real negotiations. He blamed the Soviet Union by saying that "it would be nice to have a cease-fire on the Soviet propaganda front and more engagement on the negotiating front." The second problem, he said, is "convincing the Soviets that lopsided positions will not get them anywhere and should be dropped." He added that in the present negotiations, the Soviets "continue to count as 'strategic' a number of intermediate-range systems on our side, while excluding comparable systems on theirs." That is "just not acceptable" to the United States, he said. In addition, he went on, the Soviets continue to link cuts in offensive strategic weapons to a complete ban on SDI, the "star wars" program. Such preconditions for an agreement "are clearly unreasonable," he stressed, adding that "they too impede progress" and "must be dropped for the sake of real arms control."

The third problem, he said, is that of verification and compliance. On Gorbachev's new arms control proposal made on January 15, Adelman said, "There is a bit of movement in the current Gorbachev proposal -- movement worth picking up to see whether the Soviets are sincerely interested in moving forward in arms control." However, he added, it "still contains unacceptable elements" and the proposal "did not change previous Soviet positions in strategic or defense and space areas." He said the United States has been carefully studying the proposal, but "it is yet to be seen if the Soviets will follow up in serious negotiations."

HUANG HUA DEPARTS FOR INTERACTION COUNCIL MEETING

2-MONTH SURVEY OF WESTERN PACIFIC ENDS

OW191610 Beijing XINHUA in English 1454 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese oceanographers said today their recent findings about the western Pacific Ocean provide new insights into fishing resources and the interaction of weather and water.

Participating in a joint Sino-U.S. survey of the western Pacific over the past two months, the scientists on board Xiangyanghong No. 14 did research at 251 observation spots on marine physics, chemistry, biology, meteorology and sea currents and the water temperature and salt content of sea water. The survey was completed Tuesday, according to China's State Bureau of Oceanography. The Chinese research ship, which altogether sailed 14,700 nautical miles in the Pacific, is now returning to China through the Balintang Channel north of the Philippines. The ship is scheduled to reach Guangzhou in South China February 24.

Chinese oceanographer Wang Zhongshan told XINHUA that most of the ship's observation projects were being conducted by the Chinese scientists for the first time during the voyage, including obtaining soil samples 4,500 meters deep. He said the new data will be analyzed within two months and exchanged with the U.S. side. U.S. oceanographer Robert Millard said the survey marked the first U.S. study of the western Pacific. He said the voyage showed there existed "vast prospects for cooperation in marine research" between the United States and China. The Chinese ship left Guangzhou for the western Pacific December 12, 1985. The trip is the first of eight of its kind planned for the four-year Sino-U.S. joint survey.

U.S.-ASIA INSTITUTE CONFERENCE ON TRADE OPENS

OW200254 Beijing XINHUA in English 0240 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 19 (XINHUA) -- The U.S.-Asia Institute today began its 1986 national conference on trade, technology and security. The two-day conference, sponsored by the non-profit institute in cooperation with the U.S. Department of State, and the U.S. Information Agency, is to focus on "Vision of the Future: The Next Decade in U.S.-Asia Trade." U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz made a brief opening statement to welcome senior officials from the People's Republic of China, Japan, the Philippines, Indonesia, Singapore, Thailand and other Asian areas along with their counterparts from the United States.

This morning's session discussed "trade policies and common interests in the Pacific" and how the economic development strategies of Pacific nations affect their trade policies. Dr S.C. Pu, Chinese representative to the conference who is advisor to the Academy of Social Sciences of China, gave his views. Admiral William Crowe, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff of the United States, is scheduled to address the conference luncheon on "The Security Underpinnings of U.S.-Asia Economic Relations." U.S. Senator Richard Lugar, who had just returned from the Philippines, will discuss "Legislative Perspectives on the Impact of Trade Frictions on U.S.-Asia Relations". U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for East Asian and Pacific Affairs Paul Wolfowitz, who is ambassador designate to Indonesia, will talk on "The Political Dimensions of U.S.-Asia Trade."

Admiral Crowe Speaks

OW200728 Beijing XINHUA in English 0716 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 19 (XINHUA) -- The United States must maintain its military superiority in the Pacific to counter Soviet influence there, a top U.S. military man said today.

U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Admiral William Crowe told the U.S.-Asia Institute conference which opened today that "If the Soviet union were one day to achieve a decided superiority in the Pacific, the very foundations of our Asian foreign policy would be threatened -- not to mention the consequences in the event of hostilities." He added it is imperative to support the Reagan administration's long-term defense programs. "Otherwise," he said, "we are simply going to be outstripped by the Soviets." He warned that to ease U.S. military momentum in the region now "would be a grave -- and perhaps this time irretrievable -- mistake."

He admitted that in his view, U.S. deterrent policy in the region has worked well, adding that "if it is to continue to do so, we must match the growing Soviet build-up with a consistent and rational defense policy geared for the long run, instead of one marked by the peaks and valleys which have characterized so much of our peacetime history." Crowe said he is optimistic about the future of the Asian and Pacific region. However, he said there are clouds on the horizon.

On U.S.-China relations, Crowe said Americans now regard China as "a friendly, non-aligned country with which we enjoy a normal diplomatic relationship, a productive dialogue on a host of political issues, an expanding trade." He said that "a secure and successfully modernizing China can be a force for peace and stability in East Asia and the world." Chinese Ambassador Han Xu attended today's U.S.-Asia Institute conference, which will close tomorrow.

RENMIN RIBAO ON AFTERMATH OF SHUTTLE EXPLOSION

HK190701 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 6

["Roundup" by Fang Min and Zhang Dezhen: "After the Explosion of the U.S. Space Shuttle"]

[Excerpts] The explosion of the U.S. space shuttle "Challenger" has greatly shocked the U.S. Government and public and made a great impact abroad. After the explosion, NASA sent many airplanes and ships to search for wreckage of the space shuttle in the hope of finding the cause of the explosion. President Reagan also ordered the establishment of a commission in charge of the investigation. This accident has not only directly impacted on and disrupted the ambitious U.S. spaceflight project, but will also have an inestimable political, economic, and military influence on the country.

At the moment, the U.S. Government is very cautious in commenting on the cause of the explosion of "Challenger," while the opinions of specialists and the mass media are varied.

It is reported that the Pentagon has been using space shuttles all along to conduct basic experiments relating to the Strategic Defense Initiative, and the Soviet Union is very concerned about whether this accident would hamper the U.S. process for implementing this project. Recently, when talking about the crash of the U.S. space shuttle, TASS even remarked that this tragedy had shown that U.S. space technology was unreliable and the Strategic Defense Initiative was in itself an extremely dangerous idea. KYODO NEWS SERVICE pointed out: If the Strategic Defense Initiative has something inherently wrong, then the position of the Reagan administration, which has always taken the project as an ace in its hands, will be weakened in the negotiations, and this will in turn have a profound military and diplomatic influence on the United States. However, a U.S. undersecretary of defense said: Although the crash of the space shuttle may postpone the "star wars" experiment, it will have no long-term effect on the program.

The long-term influence of the crash of "Challenger" on the United States and its psychological effect on the public are more notable. Some psychologists hold that this event has inflicted a deep mental wound on the United States since the space shuttle is a symbol of the country. Some foreign news agencies even thought that the tragedy of "Challenger" would remain the most profound mental scar that the whole nation has suffered since the assassination of President Kennedy. According to many space science analysts, the explosion of the space shuttle will pose again the knotty problem of the long-term prospects for the manned space flight program, and the old dispute may be raised again in the United States between some scientists who maintain that the country should concentrate on development of unmanned space probes, and members of NASA who hold that the emphasis should be put on manned flight. This dispute will, in turn, affect to a certain extent the debate on and appropriations for the space exploration program in Congress. However, the latest public opinion poll conducted by U.S. NEWS AND WORLD REPORT showed that about two-thirds of Americans believed that spaceflight should be continued and they would "pay the price" for the exploration of space.

Moreover, the "Challenger" event has also had an impact on other countries, particularlyon the space scheme being run by Western European countries. Some big projects, part of Japan's space exploration program, are supposed to be carried out by U.S. space shuttles. The Soviet Union is also developing its own space shuttle on the U.S. model. All these plans have now been affected to some degree.

RENMIN RIBAO ON IMPACT OF OIL PRICE DECLINE

HK130817 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 12 Feb 86 p 6

["Newsletter from America" by RENMIN RIBAO reporter Jing Xianfa: "The Impact of the Decline in World Oil Prices on the United States"]

[Text] Washington, 10 Feb -- World crude oil prices have dropped sharply from $28 a barrel at the end of last year to around $17 at present. The steepness of the drop and its extent have produced a great impact on economic life in the United States.

The current oil price drop has advantages and disadvantages for the United States. In recent years, annual U.S. crude oil imports have stood at 1.21 billion barrels, or one-fourth of total domestic crude consumption. According to an estimate by experts, the current decline in the prices of oil imports will make for a great reduction in production costs in the manufacturing industry. The civil air transportation industry will save one-fifth in fuel costs, with profits doubled. The auto industry, one of the three pillars of the U.S. economy, will also increase output, because of improved sales of large cars. The tourist industry at home will thrive.

But the drop in oil import prices has dealt a severe blow to some other U.S. industries. At present, the domestic oil industry bears the brunt. Since the U.S. oil industry hit its peak in 1981, it has in the past few years been on the decline. There now remain only 1,670 wells still in production throughout the country, a decrease by nearly two-thirds compared with 5 years ago. Since the beginning of this year, the average income of six large oil companies in the front rank has dropped 30 percent. Not long ago, the Houston Worldwide Maritime Corporation, with the largest deepwater well drilling fleet in the country, filed for bankruptcy, unable to pay its debts of $1.1 billion.

Also hit are many commercial banks in the "energy belt." Of the 130-plus commercial banks that closed in the country last year, as many as one-fourth collapsed because of involvement with the oil industry. An expert in banking predicts that 1986 will be "a year of doom" for the "energy belt" and banks having to do with oil.

The sudden drop in oil prices and setback caused to the domestic oil industry have brought about wide fluctuations in the U.S. money market. On 20 January this year, when oil prices dropped below $20 a barrel for the first time, the Dow Jones industrial average on the New York Stock Exchange dropped 27 points in 2 days, to near the historical record of 1500 set last December. Then there was again a sudden rush for cheap oil stocks in large blocks, causing the Dow Jones industrial average to pass the unprecedented high of 1600 in half a month.

The decline in the prices of oil imports has also become an important topic of talk in current U.S. political life. The U.S. Administration and well-known experts in economic circles are studying how to take advantage of the current trend toward an oil price drop on the international market. Congressmen are basically divided into two schools of thought on this. One school holds that it is at present too good an opportunity to let go. The administration should move quickly to increase taxes on imported oil. An increase of $5 in import taxes on a barrel of crude oil means a yield of $40 billion in 5 years, thus helping greatly to reduce the deficit.

Those congressmen opposed feel the imposition of additional import taxes on oil would naturally lead to increased production costs in the country's manufacturing and transportation industries, aggravate U.S. trade relations with oil-exporting countries, reduce the competitiveness of U.S. oil on the international market, and probably bring about a new rise in the U.S. dollar exchange rate, the upward pressure on which has just been relieved. As things now stand, congressmen from various "energy belt" states keenly advocate an increase in taxation, while those from the northeastern states, where the manufacturing industry plays a dominant role and the residents chiefly rely on fuel oil for heat, oppose an increase in the oil import tax.

President Reagan has another view on this problem. Because he has in recent years persistently opposed an increase in taxes, and is especially unlikely to go back on his word before the Democrats with a mid-term congressional election approaching, the President has up to now been unwilling to use an increase in the oil import tax to help balance the budget. He has only promised to give the matter of a tax increase "consideration in light of the whole tax reform plan." Analysts here hold that an increase in the oil import tax provides a rare opportunity to increase government revenues and reduce a swelling deficit. President Reagan is only biding his time where the problem of how to increase taxes and how to categorize such an increase is concerned.

RESPONSE TO EC TRADE REPRISAL POSSIBLE

OW190854 Beijing XINHUA in English 0754 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 18 (XINHUA) — The U.S. trade representative's office said that e European Community (EC) trade reprisal was "irresponsible" and noted the U.S. Administration may take "steps" in response to the EC reprisal, the U.S. JOURNAL OF COMMERCE reported today.

An EC spokesman said on January 28 that from February 1986 to November 1989, the community will cut its imports of U.S. fertilizer by 23 percent a year, beef suet by 20 percent and art paper by 8 percent. The EC action is in reprisal for a U.S. import quota announced in late December on European Community semi-finished steel. According to the report, a U.S. official said the administration stands by the U.S. trade representative's earlier statement that called the EC counteraction a "setback" to U.S.-EC trade relations and a "violation" of U.S.-EC steel trade accords.

NEW 'MIR' SPACE STATION LAUNCHED INTO ORBIT

OW200724 Beijing XINHUA in English 0713 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 20 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union launched today a "third generation" space station, the official news agency TASS reported. The new Mir (Peace) space station will join the Salyut-7 space station which has been in orbit around the earth since April 1982, and will be manned in a later stage.

The station is equipped with "a novel docking arrangement consisting of six dock-up units," TASS said. The new station was described by general Aleksey Leonov, deputy head of the training center for Soviet cosmonauts, as "a third-generation space laboratory." He said previous Salyut stations had become too small for the kind of "large-scale production activities in outer space."

SOVIET ECONOMIST URGES FLEXIBLE PRICE POLICY

OW162108 Beijing XINHUA in English 1906 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 16 (XINHUA) -- A Soviet economist has criticized low food prices and housing rents in their country, and called for a flexible price policy. In an article carried in the monthly ECONOMICS AND ORGANIZATION OF INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION in its first issue of 1986, Dr. D.M. Kazaktvich proposed immediate rises in the prices for food and housing rents. State subsidies for the two items should be cancelled so as to be used to increase wages or to help big families, he wrote.

The retail prices of bread, flour and sugar have remained unchanged for 30 years, and the prices of meat and milk are the same as 23 years ago. It is said that meat prices equal only half or one-third of the production cost at present. The government has to spend about 20 billion roubles (about 26 billion U.S. dollars) annually. Meanwhile, housing rents in the Soviet Union, which remained at the level of decades ago, are not enough even to cover one third of the cost for maintenance and management. The state subsidies for housing rents run at six billion roubles (about 7.8 billion U.S. dollars) a year.

Dr. Kazaktvich said that this price system had given rise to various defects. For instance, as bread is cheap, many people and even some state farms buy bread to feed domestic animals and poultry and then sell meat for high prices at free markets so as to make money for themselves. In addition, as workers' monthly wages have risen by 118 percent since 1962 while food prices remain low, a big proportion of their income was spent on high-grade goods, such as fashion clothes, shoes and furniture. As a result, the supply of these goods fell short of demand and they have become more and more expensive, beyond the reach of the low wage earners.

According to a draft plan for economic development for 1986-1990 and through the year 2000, the Soviet Union intends to improve the retail price system. This serves as a hint that Moscow may probably turn to a more flexible price system for food and housing rents.

[Report: "Sixteen Democrats Arrested in South Korea"]

[Text] After the South Korean democrats Kim Tai-chung and Kim Yong-sam were put under house arrest and later arrested, another 16 democrats were arrested on 14 February. These 16 democrats were arrested when they broke through the police cordon to see Kim Tai-chung, who was then under house arrest.

Since 12 February, about 1,000 antiriot police have surrounded Kim Tae-chung's residence. Kim could only view the outside through a window. Kim Tae-chung and Kim Yong-sam were put under house arrest and later arrested after they attended the "10-million-signature movement" demanding a direct presidential election on 12 February. Although the police had threatened that all those participating in the movement would be sentenced to 7 years' imprisonment, the democrats still insisted on carrying out the movement and demanded that the present electoral system, which is beneficial to Chon Tu-hwan, be changed.

RENMIN RIBAO CITES DPRK ON U.S. EXERCISES

HK200129 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 15 Feb 86 p 6

["Special dispatch" by correspondents Liu Zhengxue and Feng Zhiyuan: "The DPRK Calls for a Halt to the U.S.-South Korean Military Exercises"]

[Text] Pyongyang, 14 February -- Yesterday Kim Hwan, member of the Political Bureau of the KWP and secretary of the party Central Secretariat, stated here that to eliminate the danger of a war and safeguard peace on the Korean peninsula and to develop the hard-won North-South dialogue, the KWP and the DPRK Government have made all sincere efforts.

Kim Hwan once again accused the United States and the South Korean authorities of conducting joint military exercises, bringing an ever growing tension to the peninsula. He declared that the 11th Plenary Session of the 6th KWP Central Committee held from 5 to 8 February had concentrated on the discussion of some major issues concerning the state's peaceful construction.

He pointed out: This has fully demonstrated the correct stand taken by the KWP and Korean Government of really hoping for an easing of the tense situation and creating a favorable atmosphere for talks.

Kim Hwan said: Korea is an integral whole. The Korean people long to live in harmony in the land of a united country. Therefore, the United States should squarely face this aspiration and will of the Korean nation, halt its military exercises, and withdraw its troops and nuclear weapons from South Korea lock, stock, and barrel.

CGDK LEADERS REAFFIRM SIHANOUK'S POSITION

OW130845 Beijing XINHUA in English 0825 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic Kampuchea side has reassured that Samdech Norodom Sihanouk is the president of Democratic Kampuchea and will remain in the position even after an eventual Vietnamese military pullout.

According to Radio Democratic Kampuchea today, Khieu Samphan, vice chairman of Democratic Kampuchea and chairman of the Democratic Kampuchea side, and Son Sen, vice chairman of the Democratic Kampuchea side, signed a statement yesterday which reiterated the Democratic Kampuchea side's position on the role of Samdech Norodom Sihanouk and his National United Front for an Independent, Neutral, Peaceful and Cooperative Kampuchea (Nufinpcc), formed in March 1981. The statement stressed that the Democratic Kampuchea side has taken the Nufinpcc as a political force within a great united nation working for national defense and reconstruction. It will continue to do so in the future, the statement added.

CGDK RADIO STRESSES COALITION GOVERNMENT UNITY

OW191047 Beijing XINHUA in English 0848 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 19 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic Kampuchea side, one of the three forces forming the anti-Vietnamese Coalition Government, announced today that it will do nothing to harm the national unity in the present and future struggle against the Vietnamese occupation.

Radio Democratic Kampuchea said in an article broadcast today that the national unity of the Kampuchean people has frustrated Vietnam's seven-year-old war of genocide and annexation against Kampuchea. The tripartite Coalition Government is better coordinated and has foiled many times Hanoi's ploys to sow discord among the three forces fighting the Vietnamese troops since it was founded in 1982, the radio said. The national unity is still essential to the country's integrity and survival, it added.

REPORTERS VISIT CAMBODIAN REFUGEE CAMP

HK170520 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 17 Feb 86 p 4

[By Zhang Zesun and Yang Yi]

[Text] Bangkok -- Rows upon rows of rickety bamboo huts, each housing four to five families, stand by the dusty road. Sun-baked, haggard men and women and skinny children meet the eye everywhere. There is no sewage, no plumping, no electricity. "These people exist on minimum subsistence," a Thai Foreign Ministry official told a group of Beijing-based foreign diplomats, two journalists from CHINA DAILY and one from the ECONOMIST, who visited Thailand from January 28 to February 6.

This is Nong Chan Camp at Site II of Ta Phaya District of Prachin Buri Province along the Thai-Kampuchean border. Here are crowded 146,000 Kampucheans who have fled the fighting in their own country. Thirty percent of the refugees are less than 5 years old, either born in the camp or during their parents' trek to Thailand. Everywhere are men, women and children on crutches. They have stepped on land mines planted by the Vietnamese in the border area. "About 1.2 percent in Site II have lost their legs, quite a high percentage," said John Moore, a representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

The refugees' condition is made all the more wretched by the possibility that they will have no move again if fighting erupts. Though there are now only two Vietnamese divisions and one Heng Samrin division deployed on the border, other Vietnamese divisions in the rear can quickly move to the Thai-Kampuchean border, according to the Thai military.

Many of the refugees have moved seven times in three years, according to Moore. Try to imagine, Moore said, if seven times in three years you had to pick up your babies, old women and all your belongings and get moving. It is a political disaster caused by men, not a natural disaster caused by nature, Moore said.

According to Thai officials, there are about 230,000 Kampucheans inside Thailand at present. Thailand, one official said, cannot push them out to be killed or become victims of Vietnamese aggression. In addition to humanitarian reasons, Thailand has accepted these people as an obligation it owes to the world's community and, together with UNHCR and other international organizations, has tried to provide them with shelter, food, sanitation and education, the official said.

The root cause of the Kampuchean refugee problem is the invasion of the country by Vietnam, a Thai Foreign Ministry spokesman said. Even though the Vietnamese have said that they welcome negotiations for their repatriation, these people are still on the border. "We all want to return to Kampuchea, but we don't want to live under Vietnamese rule," said Ponn Yoyomy, who fled Phnom Penh in 1979 when the Vietnamese first invaded. She is now president of Khmer Women's Association in Site II.

"The Vietnamese say that details of repatriation can be decided later. But the point is that we have these people here now. I don't think they'll return to Kampuchea under the present circumstances. We have to create conditions inside Kampuchea so that these people would be willing to be repatriated," the Thai Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

The withdrawal of all Vietnamese troops and the right of self-determination of the Kampuchean people are basic to resolving the Kampuchean issue, including the refugee problem, he said. This is a basic position of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN).

Vietnam has agreed to withdraw, but not till 1990. "Why 1990? Why not tomorrow?" the spokesman said. By 1990, the Vietnamese hope to consolidate the Heng Samrin regime that they have installed in Phnom Penh, he said. In fact, Vietnam hopes to Vietnamize Kampuchea by them, the spokesman said. "This is what we see behind Vietnam's proposed withdrawal by 1990."

Vietnam has also agreed to self-determination by the Kampuchean people, he said. But that only means that they insist the Kampuchean people have already chosen Heng Samrin as their legitimate representative.

Thailand, on the other hand, considers that the Heng Samrin regime was installed by the Vietnamese, not freely chosen by the Khmer people, the spokesman said. "We believe that self-determination means the people should have the opportunity to exercise their rights with international supervision assuring that they can do so freely."

Turning to the need for international help, the spokesman said that if the world's nations abide by the principles of the UN Charter, they will condemn aggression against a small sovereign state and make Vietnam aware that it cannot have its way in the region. This is also the basic position of ASEAN, he observed.

Thailand has no animosity against Vietnam but is looking for peaceful co-operation in the region and a political settlement of the Kampuchea issue, Thai Deputy Prime Minister and Foreign Minister Sitthi Sawetsila said at a meeting with Beijing-based diplomats. "We have enough problems and we don't want to create any new ones," he said.

SIHANOUK ARMY COMMANDER ON CAMBODIAN DEVELOPMENTS

OW191616 Beijing XINHUA in English 1458 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Hong Kong, February 19 (XINHUA) -- Prince Norodom Rannarit, supreme commander of the Sihanoukian Nationalist Army (ANS), said in Kuala Lumpur today that he was hoping for a joint committee to coordinate military plans of the forces of the factions in the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

A report of the Malaysian news agency BERNAMA said that Rannarit arrived in Kuala Lumpur yesterday representing his father Samdech Norodom Sihanouk, president of Democratic Kampuchea. Rannarit told a press conference in Kuala Lumpur today that the ground forces of the tripartite coalition had already cemented their cooperation in a situation where their survival was uppermost in their minds. Rannarit denied that there had been any clashes between the forces of Democratic Kampuchea and the ANS, adding that in late January the two forces cooperated in an attack on a Vietnamese military base.

As for the Vietnamese in Kampuchea, Rannarit said they are only in control of main towns and certain key military positions. The Heng Samrin forces have refused to let Vietnamese military advisers be in their company and more and more of them have defected to the resistance, he added. He also disclosed that the resistance forces enjoyed support from among high-ranking officials of the Heng Samrin regime.

A team of U.S. technical experts arrived in Vientiane recently. They have discussed with their Lao counterparts details about the second joint excavation. The remains of 13 missing Americans were found late last year in the first joint undertaking at another plane crash site.

PHILIPPINE BISHOPS CONDEMN ELECTION FRAUD

OW141312 Beijing XINHUA in English 1303 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 14 (XINHUA) -- The Catholic Bishops' Conference of the Philippines (CBCP) today made a strong-worded statement condemning the "unparalleled" fraudulence and irregularities in the February 7 presidential elections. The statement was issued at a packed press conference after two days' discussions by the Catholic group.

The statement listed the irregularities and fraud including systematic disenfranchisement of voters, widespread and massive vote-buying, deliberate tampering with the election returns, intimidation, harrassment, terrorism and murder. The CBCP emphasized that "according to moral principles, a government that assumes or retains power through fraudulent means has no moral basis. For such an access to power is tantamount to a forcible seizure and cannot command the allegiance of the citizenry." It said the CBCP advocates non-violent struggle for justice -- active resistance of evil by peaceful means to right the wrongs. CBCP called on the people to come together and act together to ensure the truth to prevail and the will of the people to be fully respected.

This is the first official statement issued by the influential bishops' group after the February 7 elections. The CBCP position may have notable impact on the current political situation of the country, observers here said.

RADIO BEIJING REPORTS MARCOS' CBS INTERVIEW

HK190355 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] In an interview with the Columbia Broadcasting System of the United States on 16 February, Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos said that he will seek renegotiation of U.S. use of military bases if the American Government cancels aid to his country. He claimed that the United States owes the Philippines some $70 million for its use of the Clark and Subic Bay bases, the largest military installations outside the United States, thus there is urgent need for renegotiation over the bases.

Meanwhile, President Marcos met with President Reagan's special envoy Philip Habab to discuss post-election problems. Sources said that Habab will make a report to Reagan after his return to the United States in order for the United States to formulate policy options towards the Philippines.

Habib also met with opposition leader Corazon Aquino and her running mate Salvador Laurel. Habib arrived in Manila on 15 February, shortly before the Batasan Pambansa proclaimed the winners of the recent elections.

MARCOS RAPS FOREIGN INTERVENTION IN PHILIPPINES

[Text] Manila, February 19 (XINHUA) -- President Ferdinand Marcos has shown irritation at apparent foreign intervention in the Philippine internal affairs, according to a report of the PHILIPPINE NEWS AGENCY. In his talks with newsmen at the presidential palace here today, Marcos said he had authorized Acting Foreign Minister Pacifico Castro to clarify with other governments the position of the Philippines on foreign observers.

"We will encourage observers to come and see what is happening inside our country but we take a strong stand against intervention in the internal affairs of our people," he said. "There is a limit in allowing even friends and allies to degrade and demean institutions like the National Assembly and the presidency of the Philippines," he added. Marcos said the activities of the National Assembly, the power of the assembly to proclaim the president, as well as variuos policies of the government in relation to enforcement of the laws and in the maintenance of peace and order are all internal affairs of the Philippines.

XINHUA 'FEATURE' ON BULGARIAN WORKERS IN USSR

OW151050 Beijing XINHUA in English 0904 GMT 15 Feb 86

["Feature: Bulgarian At Work in Soviet Forests -- (by Sun Weixi and Wang Jinbai)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Sofia, February 15 (XINHUA) -- For ordinary Bulgarians, the temptation is not small: a monthly salary of 800 rubles (about 1,000 U.S. dollars) plus considerable bonuses and a few hundred leva (one lev equals one dollar) paid at home. For this one has only to go to the Soviet Union and cut trees.

In the past 17 years since Bulgaria agreed to help the labor-short Soviet Union develop its timber industry, more than 70,000 Bulgarian workers have been to that forest-rich country, mainly to Komi, an autonomous Soviet republic, about 1,000 kilometers northeast of Moscow. The felling of Soviet forests by Bulgarians also has proved beneficial for the Bulgarian Government as it has already obtained millions of cubic meters of timber from its partner. In 1984 alone, Komi timber met 57.4 percent of Bulgaria's total needs. To facilitate the joint efforts, the two governments have launched a joint venture -- a lumber corporation in Komi in addition to three modern villages for lumberjacks, which are dotted with department stores, schools, nurseries, cinemas and coffee shops for the 12,000 Bulgarians currently working in the region.

Komi, an administrative division of the Soviet Union in the Russian Republic, has an area of 415,900 square kilometers covered by tundra in the north and coniferous forests in the south. The region's harsh subarctic climate restricts agriculture, its economic activity is limited to mining and forest industries. A major labor-shortage has precluded the Soviet Union from tapping the region's natural resources on a large scale.

To attract more workers to Komi, their monthly salaries have, in recent years, been raised from 200 rubles (about 250 dollars) up to 800 plus a bonus system and extra pay at home. Some of the migrant workers can earn as much as 1,000 rubles (about 1,200 dollars), a real incentive for Bulgarians who at home would earn an average monthly income of 202 dollars, according to 1983 statistics. Bulgarian lumber workers may spend their money in the Soviet Union to buy cars and other consumer goods not available in Bulgaria. The Soviet Union has allotted the Bulgarians some 22,600 square kilometers of forest with an estimated volume of 226 million cubic meters of timber. At the present speed of development, the cutting may well last 50 years.

'ROUND-UP' ASSESSES HUNGARIAN TRADE FOR 1981-85

OW151324 Beijing XINHUA in English 1307 GMT 15 Feb 86

["Round-up: Favorable Balance Attained for Hungary's Trade -- (by Zhou Dongyao and Li Shuhua)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Budapest, February 15 (XINHUA) -- Hungary, whose economy relies heavily on foreign trade, recorded a surplus in its trade with both the Eastern bloc and other trading partners from 1981 to 1985 though this was achieved at the expense of national income and industrial production which might impede a faster economic growth.

As a country which yields more than half of its national income by way of trade, Hungary suffered a massive trade deficit with countries outside the Eastern bloc which ran as high as 50 billion forints (about one billion U.S. dollars) during the 1976-1980 period. Huge foreign debts were incurred, accumulating to billions of U.S. dollars, as oil prices soared, raw materials became more expensive and the country had to import more from the West than to export. To reverse this adverse situation, which was a major task set for the Sixth Five-Year Plan period (1981-1985), Hungary adopted drastic measures, including setting ceilings on imports, increasing exports, enhancing the competitiveness of its products and seeking new markets.

According to figures published by the country's statistics office earlier this month, compared with 1980, exports in 1985 rose by 27 percent while imports increased by six percent. Hungary has enjoyed a foreign trade surplus in all the years beginning 1982, and in the following year, it began to pay its debts. By the end of 1985, it ran a trade surplus of 255 million rubles with Eastern bloc countries and 2.2 billion U.S. dollars with other countries, achieving a significant improvement in its foreign trade. All this has earned Hungary growing credibility, making it possible to have its short-term credit at a high interest rate rescheduled to a long-term credit at a lower interest rate.

The country's industrial sector has played its due part in balancing the foreign trade by restructuring production, improving management and dividing big enterprises into smaller ones so as to make them more efficient. As a result, higher productivity has been gained with per capita output value in 1985 registering an 18 percent increase over 1980.

Hungary's agriculture, which has long enjoyed the best performance record among the Eastern bloc countries, has also contributed to the improvement in the country's foreign trade balance. The total value of production in 1981-1985 chalked up a 12 percent rise over the previous five years and now a quarter of the country's farm produce are for export.

However, Hungary has paid dearly for these accomplishments. During the 1981-1985 period, its citizens were asked to settle for their existing living standards and domestic consumption declined. Investments were lower than five years ago, including those for upgrading badly-needed technologies and scientific research. Consequently, the country's national income was up seven percent from 1980 while the plan had envisaged a 14 to 17 percent growth and industrial output went up only by 12 percent, falling short of the planned target of a 19 to 22 percent increase.

The policy of setting import quotas and restricting domestic development to boost trade only serves as stopgap measures and will cause continued lagging in technology and further impair the competitiveness of products. Hungarian economists are fully aware of the situation. The current (Seventh) Five-Year Plan (1986-1990) gives priority to attaining better economic results which will be the best way to obtaining a bigger trade surplus and a faster economic development. Nevertheless, analysts here believe that correct policies and the people's response remain the key to achieving Hungary's goals though the international economic situation has become more favorable for the country than in the mid and late 1970s.

MURPHY CITED ON U.S. POSITION ON PALESTINIANS

OW191901 Beijing XINHUA in English 1850 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Cairo, February 19 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Middle East Affairs Richard Murphy made it clear today that the U.S. will not recognize the Palestinian people's right to self-determination before the PLO recognized the U.N. Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, which implies recognition of Israel.

He was quoted by the QATAR NEWS AGENCY as saying in a telephone interview that if Washington acquiesced in the PLO leaders' demand for recognizing the right of Palestinian people to self-determination, it would be tantamount to U.S. agreement to an independent Palestinian state. Such an option was not acceptable to Washington which seeks Palestinian self-rule on the West Bank and Gaza Strip in a confederation with Jordan, he said. Washington still insists that the PLO should recognize U.N. Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, renounce violence and accept the principle of negotiating with Israel, he said.

PLO Chairman Yasir 'Arafat has repeatedly declared in his recent talks with Jordanian leaders in Amman and Egyptian leaders in Cairo that the PLO cannot recognize the U.N. resolutions which implies recognition of Israel's right to exist unless the U.S. recognize the Palestinian people's right to self-determination.

U.S.-LIBYAN ENCOUNTERS OFF COAST REPORTED

The sources said that the Libyan fighter planes did not show any hostility towards U.S. planes so far.
The Libyan warplanes and naval units started their military exercises off Libyan coast with live ammunitions after the U.S. announced its aircraft carriers, the Coral Sea and the Saratoga, would carry out flight operation off the Libyan coast. The area where the Libyan and U.S. military exercises are made simultaneously is within the Tripoli flight information region outside the Gulf of Sidra. Radio Tripoli reported the military exercises of the two countries in separate stories and made no mention of the encounters of the warplanes of the two sides.

CANADA RELAXES CONTROLS ON EXPORTS TO PRC

OW151056 Beijing XINHUA in English 0911 GMT 15 Feb 86

[Text] Ottawa, February 14 (XINHUA) -- External Affairs Secretary Joe Clark announced today that Canada had joined with its NATO allies and Japan in relaxing export controls on certain strategic goods to the People's Republic of China. These controls, based on the export and import permits act, are aimed at civilian strategic equipment and other high technology goods. Since 1979, the Paris-based coordinating committee, whose mandate is to coordinate the export control programs of its members as they relate to strategic and military goods, has followed a policy of increasing its favourable consideration of requests for exports of strategic goods to China. Recently there has been a dramatic increase in China permit applications.

Clark noted that many of the priority areas in China's development strategy coincide with strong capabilities in Canadian industry, particularly in such fields as agriculture, forestry, hydro, natural resources development and telecommunications. This initiative to ease export controls to China complements the renewal of the trade agreement between Canada and China announced on July 16, 1985 by International Trade Minister James Kelleher. Following consultations with China in Beijing last December, Canada now approves exports of certain types of machine tools, semi-conductors, test equipment, lasers, computers and telephone exchanges, totalling more than twenty categories of strategic goods.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTATOR ON EVENTS IN HAITI

HK200339 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 20 Feb 86 p 4

[Article by CHINA DAILY Commentator: "Haiti's Events"]

[Text] Recent dramatic developments in the Caribbean island country of Haiti have drawn of social justice and progress is relieved by the fall of the Duvalier regime and the transition now under way in Haiti.

Haiti was the first black nation in the world to win independence. Yet, after 28 years of the harsh and corrupt rule of the Duvaliers -- father and son -- Haiti is the poorest country in the Western Hemisphere, with a sharp and wide gap between the haves and have-nots.

The per capita annual income of more than 80 percent of the population is $100, while fewer than one percent rake in about half the total national income. Nine out of every 10 persons are illiterate. More than 100 out of every 1,000 children die before their first birthday. Three-fourths of the labour force are unemployed or partly employed.

At the top of the ladder, the Duvalier family and their cronies lived in incredibly luxurious and profligate life. Their corruption was so far-reaching that they even appropriated Haiti's international credits to line their own pockets. Great have been the grievances of those in what and long has the whole country been in a state of ferment.

In the face of public discontent and protest, the Duvaliers consistently resorted to terror to muzzle the people. Their most notorious tool was the shadowy and ubiquitous Tontons Macoutes secret police force that unscrupulously used beatings, torture and murder to throw fear into the people and keep them under control. But terror is a double-edged sword. If it intimidates the people it antagonizes them too. When they can no longer contain their wrath, those who wield the weapon of terror must pay the price. Last summer's national referendum to confirm the life-time presidency of Duvalier was a fraud and a farce that further angered the people. It led to demonstrations in the northwestern coastal city of Gonaives. Brutal killings by the police only poured oil on the fire and in no time angry protest swept the nation. Workers went on strike, businessmen closed their stores and students suspended classes. The people, rising to assert their basic rights, soon brought Duvalier to bay. He had no choice but to pack up and flee the country that he had tyrannized for 15 years.

It is worth mentioning that Duvalier is having a hard time to find a country that will grant him asylum. This shows how the people in the world detest a dictator like him.

The Duvalier era is over for the Haitians. A military-civilian national council has been formed to take the reins of government temporarily. In the first week after its establishment, it announced that it had freed all political prisoners and would disband the Tontons Macoutes and dissolve the Duvalier rigged 1984 parliament. As an interim leadership, the council also pledged to hold elections and turn over power to an elected government.

Haitians hail the end of the Duvalier dynasty as the country's second independence. It is legitimate for them to demand that the nation be ruled by new, honest, competent and patriotic people. And it follows that they want their liberation to be total and definitive.

XINHUA ASSESSES PRESIDENT REAGAN"S GRENADA VISIT

OW191655 Beijing XINHUA in English 1635 GMT 19 Feb 86

["Background: Reagan's Visit Amid Growing U.S. Interest in Caribbean" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] St Georges, Grenada, February 19 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan will arrive here tomorrow for a four-hour visit. High on the agenda is his scheduled meeting with nine Caribbean Community (Caricom) leaders to discuss regional, economic and security matters. The trip is the first ever by an American president to Grenada and Reagan's second to the Caribbean. He toured Jamaica and Barbados in 1982, two years after he assumed the U.S. presidency.

Reagan's visit comes 28 months after the U.S.-led invasion of Grenada in October 1983 which toppled the People's Revolutionary Government of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop. The invasion took place under the pretext that Grenada's Point Salines International Airport, then under construction with Cuban aid, would be used as a military airport by Cuba and the Soviet Union.

The U.S. invasion resulted in a year-long interim administration backed by U.S. and Caribbean "peace-keeping forces" until Herbert Blaize's new National Party came to power after the December 1984 general elections. Most of the remaining U.S. military personnel were withdrawn in mid-1985 and all foreign troops pulled out of Grenada last September.

On Thursday President Reagan will attend a ceremony here in memory of 19 U.S. soldiers killed during the invasion. The invasion was regarded as a "military triumph" by the Reagan administration which has since strengthened its influence in the Caribbean, while bearing in mind the region's strategic and economic importance. U.S. officials acknowledge the fact that two-thirds of U.S. oil imports and many other strategic minerals shipped to the United States pass through the Panama Canal, the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico. U.S. Gulf ports and Caribbean shipping lanes handle almost half of U.S. foreign trade shipping tonnage.

Before the invasion of Grenada, the U.S. had a small program of military assistance geared to Caribbean island nations. After the invasion, it implemented an extensive military training and aid program in the eastern Caribbean, accompanied by the transfer of arms and equipment including submachine guns, telecommunications systems and deepwater coast guard vessels, according to a U.S. research institution. U.S. diplomats put U.S. military assistance to the eastern Caribbean for the past two years at about 35 million U.S. dollars, and U.S. aid to Grenada has totalled 72 million dollars since the invasion. However, countries in the region have called for more U.S. economic commitment and less military involvement in the Caribbean.

The English-speaking Caribbean, hard hit by sluggish world demand for its sugar, bauxite and other products, has been experiencing severe economic difficulties. St. Kitts and Nevis' Prime Minister Kennedy Simmonds has said the Grenada meeting with Reagan should focus on economic and trade issues. The exclusion of Caribbean textiles from the duty-free import list of the U.S.-sponsored Caribbean Basin Initiative and the cut in quotas of Caribbean sugar exports to the United States are typical complaints from the region. Some political analysts see Reagan's visit as a merely symbolic gesture to show continuing U.S. interest in the region, others predict that he will bring news of a slight easing of U.S. protectionist measures in a move to reduce the region's economic dissatisfaction.

REFORM PROSPECTS FOR YEAR OF TIGER EXAMINED

HK190509 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 5, 3 Feb 86 p 4

[Commentator's article: "Outlook For the Year of the Tiger"]

[Text] The year 1986, the first year of China's Seventh 5-Year Plan, happens to be "the Year of the Tiger" according to Chinese lunar calender. It is said that a tiger is full of vigor; therefore, it is indeed a good omen.

The following are lines from Zhang Lei, a poet of the Song Dynasty: "White grass bends low when the fierce north wind blows. Is a tiger not going to move quickly when it stares!" These lines give a vivid description of the vigor and ferocity of a tiger. It is to some extent like the image of today's China, which is focusing on one goal and accumulating strength to carry out the struggle.

By focusing on one goal, we mean that millions of Chinese people are striving for the four modernizations with one heart and one mind and are determined to make their country and nation rank among the advanced countries of the world. By accumulating strength to carry out the struggle, we mean that in a short period of 7 years, our country has already made vigorous and quick progress, but the great latent energy in our nation is far from being entirely released. Precisely because of this, China, which is still poor and backward in many spheres, is regarded in the contemporary world as a country with great vitality, hope, and boundless prospects. Many politicians, economists, scientists, and even military scientists are assessing with their respective yardsticks, which sometimes conflict with one another, and forecasting the probable features of China and China's influence on the development of world history 10 or 20 years from now.

In the Year of the Tiger, when China reviews its past development, it sees that it has forged ahead at a steady, quick pace and when it forecasts the future, it will continue to forge ahead at a vigorous, quick pace.

We can forecast that in 1986, China will achieve clear and sustained progress in two spheres. In other words, it will score magnificent achievements in both economic structural reform and the construction of socialist spiritual civilization. The CPC Central Committee has already set the task that, in carrying out the economic structural reform in the new year, we should make great efforts to consolidate, digest, replenish, and improve the reform measures we have already taken. If we say that in the past 2 years, China took "a brave step" in carrying out its reform, then now it is taking a steady and deepening step. Some people have misunderstood and think that "we will mark time this year." No, that is not true. Digesting, improving, and replenishing also means forging ahead. Some people say that this year, we can "relax for a while." No, we cannot. There is a great deal of painstaking and arduous work to do in straightening various relations and giving play to the due economic results of our reform measures. Moreover, we should accumulate strength, make prudent investigations, and prepare for the next step of reform. Some people are excessively suspicious and ask: Do we stop the reform because of the emergence of some problems? Over the past few years, China's industry, agriculture, and economy have developed vigorously, its national strength has grown, and its people are full of heroism and courage. All this indisputably proves that the CPC Central Committee's policy decisions on the reform are correct, the reform measures are appropriate, and the results of the reform are substantial. We should proceed with our reform steadfastly with firm confidence, and we should continue to perfect and develop the reform in the process of our work. Except for the reform, there is no other way for us to reinvigorate China. Problems and shortcomings will always emerge, but we need only to correct them and improve, replenish, and perfect our reform. Now, the reform we are carrying out is like a tree that has luxurious branches, leaves, and thousands of young buds. It needs care such as pruning, application of fertilizer and pesticide, loosening of soil, and prevention of diseases.

We should never neglect these aspects of our work. If we do the work well, we will create a situation of great achievement and prosperity!

While grasping the reform and construction, we should also grasp the construction of our socialist spiritual civilization. Simultaneously grasping and pushing forward the socialist material and spiritual civilizations is a strategic principle that the CPC Central Committee has already clearly adopted. It is a major issue vital to the prosperity and success of socialism. The CPC Central Committee has decided that in 1986, in the sphere of the construction of our socialist spiritual civilization, we should grasp four aspects of our work. They are: To grasp education in the situation and our policies, to grasp the rectification of party style, to grasp correcting the guiding thought in our ideological, cultural, and theoretical circles, and to grasp government and legal work. As Comrade Hu Yaobang said well: Under the circumstances of having a correct line, a definite blueprint, and a series of fine conditions, a vital issue is that we should continue to inspire the revolutionary spirit of the vast nummer of party members and cadres and the millions of masses of people.

In January 1986, the CPC Central Committee Secretariat held a meeting of the cadres of the committee organs and called on all party members and cadres in the organs to set examples in putting party style right for the whole country. This is a meeting of great significance, and it sounded the bugle for the march in building socialist spiritual civilization in 1986. The spirit of the speeches of central leaders at that meeting have roused a strong response from all party members and the people of all nationalities throughout our country. The work of putting party style right in the central organs has been carried out soundly according to the arrangements of the CPC Central Committee. We can expect that the change in the central organs' work style will certainly affect the whole party and country and the entire Chinese nation.

The Year of the Tiger has already begun. The vast land of China is filled with vitality and there is a vigorous trend of development and progress. The deepening of the economic structural reform will continue to remove fetters and obstacles to the development of our productive forces. The construction of spiritual civilization will clear away rotten and backward things and rouse the Chinese nation's revolutionary spirit. Once we have removed the fetters of the old system and thoughts, the tremendous latent energy in our people will break through all difficulties and barriers with the momentum of an avalanche and raise even higher the new situation of socialist construction we have already created.

We can expect such prospects. However, we must make arduous and sustained efforts. If we unite as one in carrying out the struggle soundly and persist in doing so, we will bring about a magnificent future.

XINHUA COMMENTATOR ENCOURAGES INCREASED SAVINGS

OW191305 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0151 GMT 19 Feb 86

[XINHUA Commentator's article: "It Is Necessary To Greatly Increase Saving Deposits"]

[Text] Beijing, 19 Feb (XINHUA) -- Vigorously increasing savings deposits and expanding sources for credit funds is an important task for the Seventh 5-Year Plan period. As far as this year's situation is concerned, that general demand has outstripped general supply in our economy remains a contradiction meriting our full attention. To increase savings deposits and readjust supply and demand is of particular significance in offsetting this contradiction. Pondering this year's reforms, Comrade Zhao Ziyang recently called for efforts to increase deposits and expand sources for funds.

It is quite possible that many of our comrades do not realize that savings deposits greatly affect production and construction. It is reported that new deposits in China reached 40.7 billion yuan during 1985. This figure is equivalent to 25 percent of China's total amount of investment in fixed assets in state-owned units in 1985. From this we see that the amount of savings deposits will play an important role in developing China's economy during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Increasing savings deposits is a goal of the masses. People in China are enthusiastic about saving money. As of the end of 1985, China's per capita saving was over 160 yuan. By saving money, people spend money more reasonably and live more comfortably. At the same time, savings deposits turn some money in the hands of the people into accumulated funds. On the one hand, this will reduce the pressure exerted by people's purchasing power on the market and help the withdrawal of currency from circulation. On the other hand, it will solve the problem of insufficient state funds for production and construction. Meanwhile, the results in the development of production will, in turn, increase the income of the people. Increased savings will benefit the country and the people.

Right now, the total sum of urban and rural savings deposits amounted to over 160 billion yuan. However, the potential in increasing these deposits remains great. According to statistics, the average annual income of China's workers registered a net increase of 209 yuan during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. From now on, the income of the masses will continue to rise in the course of developing production. All of this indicates that urban and rural people's capabilities to save more money will continue to increase, and China's savings deposits will continue to rise.

Improving services of various banks is an important move in increasing savings deposits. For example, various measures to attract more deposits, such as increasing the number of tellers, designing different types of accounts, setting up savings agencies, and simplifying the procedure of making deposits have been listed as important items on the daily agenda of various banks. It is our hope that banks will be able to keep pace with the developing situation as soon as possible, and make new contributions to providing more funds for the development of the socialist modernization program.

PLA PARTY STYLE TO BE EXAMINED, RECTIFIED

HK181000 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 6-7, 10 Feb 86 p 7

[Article by Gai Yuman and Xiong Zhengyan: "Responsible Official of the Discipline Inspection Commission Under the Central Military Commission Talks About Rectification of Party Style"]

[Text] The Central Military Commission has decided that the Army should take the lead in party rectification and strive to realize a basic turn for the better in the Army's party style. Will the plan of the Central Military Commission come true? How are the PLA units to take action? We visited the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission with these questions.

Guo Linxiang, secretary of the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission, and deputy secretaries of the commission Zhang Boxiang and Yan Jinsheng told these reporters that the central authorities have issued the call to rectify party style. After repeated study, the Central Military Commission holds that the Army has the foundation and conditions to realize this important task proposed by the Central Committee. Yang Shangkun, vice chairman of the Central Military Commission, expressed the determination of the Army to the whole party and whole country at the conference for cadres of central level organs called by the CPC Secretariat.

According to Guo Xianglin, in any undertaking it is first necessary to have confidence. In a battle, it is impossible to win without confidence. Likewise, we must be confident of achieving a basic change in the Army's party style. In recent years, through the joint efforts of party committees, political departments, and discipline inspection commissions at various levels of the Army, the Army's party style has markedly changed for the better. This has provided a definite boost for fulfilling all tasks on the part of the Army, in the war of defense against Vietnam and in streamlining and reorganization in particular. Those units taking part in the war of defense against Vietnam have obeyed orders, fought heroically, and boosted the power and prestige of the Army and the nation. The Army structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization work which began in 1985 have been smooth despite the fact that they involve a wide scope and are complex and arduous. We should say that the Army's party style has been tested in the practice of war and in streamlining and reorganization, and its general condition is good.

The responsible persons of the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission briefed the reporters on many examples of the Army rectification of party style in the streamlining and reorganization.

In the course of streamlining and reorganization, some units were to be demobilized, others merged, and still others streamlined by a large margin. The cadres and soldiers have conscientiously responded to the party's call, subjected themselves to the whole situation of national economic construction, and correctly dealt with their own personal problems. They have been demobilized, merged, or demoted as the situation required, showing a high political consciousness and a very strong party spirit. The first stage of reorganization is now complete. A large number of leading cadres have left their posts and willingly become "enlightened personalities," warmly supporting the work of the new leading bodies. It is very difficult to imagine a reorganization on such a wide scope without good party spirit.

Here is an example of an army unit belonging to those units to be demobilized: Even before the work of demobilization was unfolded, the members of the army party committee set up rules among themselves: No favors would be done for those who might ask; no business involving unhealthy tendencies should be conducted; and no one should go against principle by playing the part of the "kindhearted man." Not only did they have a correct attitude toward their own future, but they also held fast to their posts in their best spiritual state and continued to do a first-rate job. Following their example, none of the cadres of the Army organs left their posts without sanction before they were transferred, demobilized, or retired, or while waiting for a work appointment. The army units maintained their steadfastness even when some units were to be demobilized, and the work went smoothly. Had it not been for an established good party style, could they have behaved so well at a crucial moment? Some shortcomings are unavoidable when the Army is undergoing structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization on such a broad scale. But the question is how to deal with those shortcomings that have already emerged. The leadership of the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission holds that this is also a severe test for party style.

The party committee of a provincial military command did a rush job in promoting a number of cadres before streamlining and reorganization. Later, the problem was laid bare; however, the leadership of the provincial military command did not make any efforts to correct the malpractice. They proposed that the party committee make an examination but not withdraw the promotion orders which had already been issued. The party committee and discipline inspection commission of the military region did not tolerate these unhealthy tendencies, and they stuck to principles, insisting that the provincial military command withdraw their promotions of 81 cadres which did not conform with the regulations.

Guo Xianglin picked up a telegram just sent to him by the political commissar of the military region concerned. The political commissar in question investigated and researched grass-roots units recently and discovered one of the units had secretly divided up public funds. The political commissar solemnly investigated and handled the case, and rapidly had all the divided funds recollected, and the responsibility of the leading cadres concerned was determined.

Reviewing practices over the past year, the leadership of the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission holds that it is difficult but at the same time not difficult to realize a basic turn for the better in party style. It is difficult because problems in party style do exist, and in some places and some units the problems are rather serious and there is a certain resistance over their solution. There are two reasons for saying it was not difficult: First, the leading organs and leading cadres should take the lead; and second, party committees, political organs, and discipline inspection commissions at all levels should work with concerted efforts and be bold in grasping problems and genuinely assuming responsibility. So long as these two points are accomplished, good results will be scored in rectifying party style. The Army's practice in grasping party style in the course of streamlining and reorganization has fully proven this.

On the question of how to realize a basic turn for the better in the Army's party style, Guo Xianglin, secretary of the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission, and deputy secretaries Zhang Boxiang and Yan Jinsheng said it is necessary for us to see that the army's party style is good on the whole; however, existing problems should not be neglected. Based on the planning of the Central Committee, the Central Military Commission has decided to earnestly study and implement the spirit of the joint circular of the General Office of the CPC Central Committee and the General Office of the State Council, and to solve the serious unhealthy tendencies in six ways as pointed out in the circular in a down-to-earth way, regarding these as a breakthrough for realizing a basic turn for the better in the army's party style. As soon as the National Conference of Party Delegates concluded, the party committee of the General Political Department and the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission jointly held a meeting to study and to make plans for the work of rectifying the party style of leading organs of Army units stationed in Beijing. The Army should take the lead in rectifying party style, especially the three PLA General Departments and the leading organs of various major units stationed in Beijing. The present situation is that the whole Army is looking to Beijing, while Beijing is looking to the three General Departments.

The secretaries of the Discipline Inspection Commission under the Central Military Commission say that the Army has always had a fine tradition of fearing no difficulties and being unwilling to lag behind. So long as they have made up their minds, they are sure to achieve their goal. The Army is comparatively content and unified and has a strong sense of organization and discipline. It has superior conditions for rectifying party spirit. In order to strive for the realization of a basic turn for the better in the Army's party style in 1986, it is imperative for us to do our work meticulously in depth based on the principle of "first, persistence; second, perseverence" and the spirit of "less empty talk, but more practical work." At present, the three General Departments, leading organs, and leading cadres of various major units are taking action. They are making strict comparisons and examinations based on the joint circular of the General Offices of the Central Committee and the State Council. They will handle whatever cases are uncovered based on the principle that everybody is equal before party discipline, and those cases will be investigated no matter what the level of organization and no matter the level of the cadre involved, without sparing anyone's sensibilities. The determination of the Central Military Commission will certainly become the pattern in the whole Army.

ZHAO ZIYANG, HU QILI, TIAN JIYUN INSPECT HAINAN

OW192332 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0904 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Guangzhou, 19 Feb (XINHUA) -- During a recent inspection tour of Hainan Dao, Comrades Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun called on local cadres and people to revitalize their spirit in persistently carrying out the policies of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the economy, and make good use of this treasure island's resources to do a solid job of development and construction in Hainan Dao.

From 5 through 14 February, Comrades Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun visited two cites and eight counties in Hainan Dao, inspecting local factories, farms, air and sea ports, nature reserves, tourist facilities, and areas inhabited by minority nationalities. They also visited with PLA units stationed on the island and with ordinary families, and discussed, together with the cadres and people, principles and policies for the development of the island, and solved problems on the spot.

Noting prosperity in the cities and towns they had visited, comrades Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, and Tian Jiyun pointed out with delight that, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was convened, especially since it made the decision to adopt special policies and flexible measures in Hainan Dao, construction has advanced by leaps and bounds throughout the island. Remarkable achievements have been made in construction in the island, and the people's livelihood has also been markedly improved. Facts have proven that the policies of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the economy have enabled the island to bring into full play its unique superiority, thus speeding the pace of construction. They also pointed out that the incident of reselling motor vehicles for profit in Hainan Dao in 1984 has, to a certain extent, affected smooth construction in the island and created a number of problems. However, as long as island leaders at all levels earnestly analyze the experience and correctly draw a lesson from the incident, they will be able to "make a fall into the pit turn into a gain in the wit" and transform a negative factor into a positive, thereby enabling development and construction in Hainan Dao to advance along a healthy road in the course of continuing the policies of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the economy. It would be groundless and erroneous to doubt the correctness of the policies and lose confidence in the development of the island because of the motor vehicle resale incident. Leaders and cadres at all levels in Hainan Dao should revitalize their spirit, and persistently carry out the policies of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the economy, and reforming in order to do a better and more solid job.

Touching on the principles of development and construction in Hainan Dao, Zhao Ziyang and the other comrades pointed out: It is necessary to proceed from the actual situation on the island and bring into full play its advantages, making the best possible use of favorable conditions and avoiding the unfavorable in order to speed the pace of development. It is necessary to formulate strategy and principles for developing Hainan Dao on the basis of its two special characteristics: that it is an island and conveniently located for establishing contacts with foreign countries, and that it has a tropical climate and rich products and resources. The policies of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the economy, which have created favorable conditions for making the most of the island's advantages, will be continued and will not change. In formulating principles for production, it is necessary to attach importance to, and concentrate on, the growing and processing of tropical crops, as well as livestock breeding, agriculture, tourism, and, in places where conditions permit, mining. Stressing the importance of promoting tourism, Zhao Ziyang and other comrades said: Promoting tourism should not be regarded as merely building hotels and cultural and recreational facilities, but as developing a major industry and carrying out a construction project which can spur the development of other industries and stimulate economic prosperity. The island enjoys great potential for developing tourism, which should be tapped in an active and orderly manner. It should be built into a tropical tourist delight.

Zhao Ziyang and other comrades also pointed out: In order to speed development and construction in Hainan Dao, the island should "introduce investment from abroad and establish lateral ties at home," and, at the same time, "go all out to earn foreign exchange." These two aspects are interrelated because, only by earning more foreign exchange can the island import technology and introduce investment and qualified personnel from abroad. Only by combining these two aspects can a comprehensive policy be formulated.

In addition to continuing to open up to the outside world and promoting economic and technological exchanges with foreign countries, Hainan Dao should increase economic cooperation in various forms with inland areas of China. It should make good use of its advantages and special policies in attracting funds and technical personnel from all localities and departments in the country to take part in development and construction in the island. To this end, it is necessary to formulate a set of policies, open the door, relax restrictions, and give preferential treatment to encourage all trades, professions, and units from the inland areas to invest or start all kinds of undertakings in the island.

There are more than 90 state farms, with nearly 500,000 staff and workers, in Hainan Dao. They produce one third of the island's total industrial and agricultural output value. During the inspection tour, Zhao Ziyang and the other comrades repeatedly pointed out that these state farms should be considered important forces in building and developing the island. They urged the staff and workers to bring their talents into full play and take part in various island construction projects.

These state farms should also be invigorated. First, they should be given greater decision-making powers in management, operations, and production, and should become dynamic economic entities with an independent accounting system, responsible for their own profit or loss. Second, to harness the enthusiasm of the large numbers of staff and workers in production and management, it is necessary to encourage establishment of family farms working under big farms. Third, it is necessary to encourage the diversified economy and promote comprehensive development. Fourth, it is necessary to expand farm operations by developing economic cooperation in various forms with other localities and units. In short, it is necessary to further untie the rope binding farm development so that they can be invigorated and contribute more to island construction. Farm reform should be made in accordance with these guidelines.

Showing keen concern for the training of talented personnel, Zhao Ziyang and other comrades emphatically pointed out that the most serious factor affecting construction on the island is the shortage of specialized personnel. While attracting capable personnel to work there, it is also necessary to establish various kinds of secondary, specialized technical schools for training large numbers of qualified personnel and relieving the shortage.

In view of the fact that Hainan Dao is an island inhabited by many nationalities, Zhao Ziyang pointed out the necessity of paying close attention to regional autonomy for minority nationalities and fully respect the right of all fratenal nationalities to be their own masters. At the same time, it is also necessary to strengthen the unified leadership of the party committee and the government of the Hainan Dao Administrative District in making concerted efforts and mapping out overall arrangements and rational planning in order to tap the great potential in the motherland's treasure island and stimulate vigorous economic growth in the whole island. Comrade Hu Qili expressed his earnest hope that cadres at all levels on the island will foster an overall point of view, make relentless efforts in building the two civilizations, show concern for the people's livelihood, and go forward with their mental burdens discarded, so as to march lightly to open up a new situation in Hainan.

COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITE REACHES PERMANENT ORBIT

OW200922 Beijing XINHUA in English 0909 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 20 (XINHUA) -- China's second telecommunications and broadcasting satellite was placed accurately in an orbit above the Earth's equator today as planned. The satellite, which was launched on February 1, was placed in its permanent orbit above the equator at 103 degrees east longitude by ground station at 17:00 hours today. Instruments and other equipment aboard the satellite are all working normally and are expected to be put into actual use soon. The satellite and its "Long March" No. 3 carrier rocket were both developed in China. This is the second time China has launched an Earth synchronous satellite. The first was launched on April 8, 1984.

Central Organs Congratulations

OW201203 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0915 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Feb (XINHUA) -- The CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission today cabled a greeting message on the successful positioning of China's second communications and broadcasting satellite for practical use. Following is the full text of the message:

Comrades having taken part in research and manufacture, launching, tracking and control, application, and safety of the communications and broadcasting satellite and carrier rocket:

The communications and broadcasting satellite we launched at the beginning of 1986 has been successfully positioned and is functioning normally. This shows that China has fully mastered the technology of manufacturing, launching, tracking, and controlling the carrier rocket; that its satellite communications have moved from the experimental stage to the applications state; and that we have made new advances in space and electronics technologies. This achievement will significantly speed our country's socialist modernization drive and help further develop its space technology. It heartens Chinese people of all nationalities tremendously.

That the communications satellite has been put into actual use is the result of your self-reliant and painstaking research and hard work and the energetic cooperation of the people of the whole country. The CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission hereby extend warm congratulations and cordial regards to you. It is our hope that you will carefully review your experience, show greater vitality, work in unity, and strive for greater achievements to make new contributions toward developing China's communications and broadcasting undertakings and space technologies.

NIE RONGZHEN REVIEWS ASTRONAUTIC ACCOMPLISHMENTS

HK190533 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Feb 86 p 3

[Article by Nie Rongzhen: "Preface to 'China's Contemporary Astronautics Undertakings'"]

[Text] The publication of the book "China's Contemporary Astronautics Undertakings" is an event worth congratulating!

China's astronautics undertakings have substantially developed over the past 30 years. The industrious, brave, and creative Chinese people have built up, on the basis of their own efforts and strength, an advanced astronautics industry measuring up to world levels in an economically and technologically backward country. This is the pride of our Chinese nation!

Our practice over the past 30 years has shown that the policy decision on developing our country's independent astronautics industry made by the party's central leadership and by Comrades Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai was correct and showed foresight. Many leading comrades of the party central leadership, the State Council, the Central Military Commission, and all relevant departments have actively supported the development of our astronautics industry and have made outstanding contributions to it. I am glad that I had the fortune of overseeing the preparatory work for the establishment of the astronautics department and of leading this department. I share deep feelings with comrades working on the astronautics front. This work experience on the astronautics front has been unforgettable.

Reviewing the past 30 years, our astronautics industry developed rather smoothly in the first 10 years. Although we encountered various difficulties and external obstructions in this initial period, the firm determination and the correct policies of the party central leadership fully aroused the initiative of all parties concerned, and a rather complete engineering system for the astronautics industry was established within a short time. We started the independent development of various models of astronautical vehicles and equipment and laid a solid foundation for wide-scale further development. However, the second 10 years were the disastrous 10 years of the "Cultural Revolution." Like things in other fields, the astronautics industry was seriously disrupted during this period and suffered major losses. Because we had laid a good foundation for this industry in the first 10 years, with the joint efforts of comrades on the astronautics front we could still advance the astronautics industry under unfavorable conditions. In the third 10 years, under the guidance of the party's correct line for the new historical period, our astronautics industry developed vigorously and scored remarkable achievements known to the whole world. It thus made major contributions to the national economic and national defense construction and to the development of science and technology in our country.

The development of our astronautics industry represents a victory for our party's principle of independence and self-reliance. In a technologically backward and economically weak country such as ours, people must have iron determination and a hardworking spirit in order to develop and master the advanced technology of the astronautics field, and the leadership must fully trust and rely on the wisdom and strength of the people. In the 1960's, we developed astronautical technology under conditions of external blockade and pressure, and we never vacillated or abandoned our efforts. We consistently maintained our national self-respect and self-confidence, persevered in independent research, and scored accepted achievements. At present, our external relations are much better than in those years. We should carry forward the policy of opening up to the outside world and should learn more from advanced foreign technologies and expertise so as to build up our own strength and offset our shortcomings. However, at all times we must rely on our own strength and efforts. The introduction of advanced foreign technology is a means for building our capacity for self-reliance.

The successful experience in developing our astronautics industry can be summarized into these points: concentrating strength, giving priority to the key links, shortening the "battlefront," and making breakthroughs on crucial points. In the initial period, our country's scientific and technological strength was still rather weak and the astronautical technology remained as a gap needing to be filled. In order to accumulate technological strength, the astronautics department gathered a number of outstanding scientists in our country. In the course of developing and testing astronautical vehicles and equipment, we also trained a large number of talented people and competent experts.

Thus, the contingent of astronautical personnel began to grow in both research and production fields. They maintain the fine tradition of hard work and have a good command of advanced technology. The party's training and education enable them to fully display their dedication and resourcefulness. This is the main guarantee for the vigorous development of our astronautics industry. Facts show this astronautics contingent has a high ability in resolving technical problems. From commanders to soldiers, all of them have been thoroughly tempered and have gained rich experience. They have solid foundation of expertise and are good at tackling difficult technical problems. They gave great potential for climbing new technological peaks.

Another successful experience in developing astronautical technology under the specific conditions of our country was to organize nationwide cooperation and to pool the wisdom of all parties concerned to tackle technological issues. This also represents the superiority of the socialist system in our country. Astronautical technology is related to many industrial and technological fields. The strength of the astronautics industry is not sufficient to deal with all technological problems. Forces in the five major fields in the whole country have been mobilized to cooperate in developing astronautical technology. Over the past 30 years, various national defense research institutes, industrial ministries, the Chinese Academy of Sciences, institutions of higher education, and local research units have all made important contributions to the development of our astronautics undertakings. At the same time, the development of astronautical technology has promoted the development of basic industries and has paved the way for the establishment and development of many new production and scientific branches.

In order to develop astronautical technology, we not only need a firm determination to catch up to advanced world levels, but also need a down-to-earth and scientific attitude and need to respect the objective regularity of things. Comrades on the astronautics front realize the large-scale, complicated, comprehensive, and exploratory characteristics of astronautical technology. They continuously review experience, learn from advanced methods in other countries, and have succeeded in establishing and developing a scientific management system and a set of methods suited to conditions in our country. These effective methods are valuable experience. We still need to further improve and develop these methods.

The achievements and experience of our astronautics industry over the past 30 years should now be taken as the new starting point for our future work. It is hoped that comrades on the astronautics front will continue to make efforts and further enhance their work. Our astronautics industry should be oriented to the world and to future development. We should pay close attention to new trends in technology at home and abroad, should learn from the new technologies and experiences of other countries, should bring our own strong points and advantages into better play and make continuous advances, and should make greater contributions to the building to socialism with Chinese characteristics.

The party leadership and the state have always attached importance to the development of our astronautics industry; the people of the whole country and the whole Army have always been concerned with and always supported the astronautics industry. Now, the book "China's Contemporary Astronautics Undertakings" carries the historical fact about the development of the astronautics industry in our country, and for the first time detailed accounts of China's astronautics industry are presented to readers at home and abroad. I hope that this book will help readers learn more about China's astronautics industry and gain some useful ideas.

MINISTER URGES EFFORTS FOR BUMPER WHEAT CROP

OW190516 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0838 GMT 18 Feb 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Xiao Junxi and XINHUA reporter Zhou Yichang]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 18 Feb (XINHUA) -- A total of 370 million mu of wheat fields in China have passed the winter safely. On 17 February, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry, and Fishery invited some of the wheat specialists in the major wheat-producing provinces of Hebei, Shandong, and Henan, and from Beijing to jointly analyze wheat growth and study measures for management of wheat fields in order to gather a good harvest this year.

As wheat is one of China's major grain crops, a bumper wheat harvest is of vital significance in gathering a large grain harvest in 1986. The wheat acreage in China this winter has only increased slightly. In general, the wheat crop is growing fairly well because of better sowing conditions in major wheat-producing areas in northern China. However, because of constant rain in the middle and lower reaches of Huai He and Chang Jiang last autumn, wheat sowing has been delayed, and consequently wheat in some areas is not growing very well. Furthermore, the supervision and management of wheat fields in some areas has not been properly handled. Some local leaders have taken heed of this situation and adopted corresponding measures to deal with the problem.

After an inspection tour of rural areas in Hebei Province, He Kang, minister of agriculture, animal husbandry, and fishery, attended the meeting. Minister He said: Now, it is imperative that we strengthen leadership, seriously implement the many valuable proposals presented by the specialists, and mobilize the peasant masses to action. We must lose no time in stepping up our work in this respect. The agricultural departments at various levels must earnestly strengthen management leadership in the wheat fields. At the same time, they must promote lateral ties between the various departments of water conservation, power, petroleum, finance, supply and marketing, grain, weather, and banking. They must take the initiative in soliciting support from these departments, and make an all-out effort to gather a bumper summer grain harvest as a means of laying the foundation for higher grain output for the whole year.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTER ON ADMINISTRATIVE REFORM

OW200631 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0858 GMT 19 Feb 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Zhang Guorong and XINHUA reporter Li Anding]

[Text] Beijing, 19 Feb (XINHUA) -- According to the Ministry of Communications, the general requirement for the ministry's administrative reform during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period is to enliven communications and transportation services by improving management and overall control on the basis of achieving "changes in two areas."

Addressing the national communications conference, Minister of Communications Qian Yongchang said today that communications departments must gradually strengthen their management of the whole trade instead of paying attention primarily to their affiliated enterprises, and they should carry out indirect control instead of direct control over the enterprises' actual operations. He said: Communications departments must oversee the operation of the whole trade, exercise control over all types of highway and waterborne transportation services, as well as over those units which provide transportation services so that the functions of government departments can be brought into full play.

To strengthen control over the whole trade, government communications departments at all levels must attend to implementing the relevant policies, planning construction projects, and coordinating, balancing, and supervising the operation of all departments. They should delegate more power to various enterprises and reduce administrative intervention so that the enterprises will have greater vitality and produce greater economic returns.

Qian Yongchang said: The development of communications and transportation services should follow the principle of "licensing more companies to operate, and raising funds in various areas" so as to arouse the enthusiasm of all quarters, providing all forms of communications and transportation services. We should treat all types of transportation forces equally. In overall planning and division of the work, we should help them do what they can do best, so that their business can grow more successfully. While we must continue to relax our policies to enliven the operation, we must strengthen and improve overall control of the communications trade, organize the communications market well, and properly coordinate the various passenger and cargo transportation services so that joint operations and thorough transport services can be rationally divided. Passenger transport services should be provided according to regular schedules in accordance with travelers' needs. Seaports and terminals, as well as their maintenance and information departments, should be open to all professions and trades in society, and we should regard providing good services as improved management.

JUSTICE MINISTER ON POPULARIZING LEGAL KNOWLEDGE

OW190215 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1327 GMT 18 Feb 86

[By reporter Sun Yong]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 18 Feb (XINHUA) -- This year's work in popularizing legal knowledge should be combined with economic structural reform and with efforts to improve party style and bring about a fundamental improvement in general social conduct, said Minister of Justice Zou Yu at a meeting to report on popularization of legal knowledge in selected unity, which ended today.

This is the first year of popularizing legal knowledge among all Chinese citizens. At present, more than half of the provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal leading cadres have taken the lead in studying laws, and a number of departments and units have achieved marked results in integrating the study of laws in everyday work. However, progress in popularizing legal knowledge has been uneven across the country. A national meeting to report on the popularization of legal knowledge in selected units opened on 16 February. During the meeting, responsible comrades from 15 units throughout the country exchanged experience in popularizing legal knowledge.

In his summing-up speech Minister Zou Yu said: When combining the popularization of legal knowledge with economic structural reform, we should study laws and use legal means to manage the economy and to promote the development of socialist commodity economy; in combining it with the effort to improve party style, we should examine the compliance with law and discipline and take action to resolve problems existing in enforcement and compliance with laws; and in combining it with the effort to bring about a change for the better in general social conduct, we should regard popularization of legal knowledge as an important aspect of the work of coordinating all quarters to improve public order, and should mobilize the masses to combat law violations.

Zou Yu stressed: In integrating the popularization of legal knowledge with everyday work, leaders should play an exemplary role in studying and using laws, checking whether their policy decisions conform with legal requirements and correcting any policy decision that fails to meet the requirements.

In order to achieve practical results and enhance understanding in the course of studying laws, a department or unit may conduct a preliminary survey of how things are handled according to the laws before holding study sessions on laws. By studying laws, ordinary people should learn how to use laws to protect their legitimate rights and interests and to correctly perform their duties as citizens. Judicial organs should also step up coordination with other departments and help them solve problems in legal affairs.

Vice Minister of Justice Cai Cheng presided over the meeting. A responsible comrade from the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee also spoke at the meeting.

RAILWAYS MINISTER CALLS FOR INCREASED CAPACITY

OW190213 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1132 GMT 18 Feb 86

[By reporter Li Anding]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Feb (XINHUA) — In order to invigorate railway work as a whole during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, all railway departments should strive for an upswing in two fields centering on an increase in transport capacity.

Speaking at a national conference on railway work today, Minister of Railways Ding Guangen said: The current problems in railway work are all caused by seriously insufficient transport capacity, impeding the development of the national economy. With this reality in mind, we should work hard to bring about an upswing in two fields centering on an increase in transport capacity. First, in order to increase transport capacity and meet the basic needs of railway transport, it is necessary to concentrate manpower, material, and financial resources on carrying out technological transformation on the 16,000 km trunk railways in the northeastern and coastal regions. To fundamentally improve the service of these railways, we will focus attention on laying multiple-track railways, increasing the length of electrified railways, using computers in operations and management, and building and expanding 10 passenger and 7 key marshalling stations. Second, it is necessary to vigorously implement technological transformation in the locomotive industry and greatly increase its capability to produce more locomotives and improve product quality. We should upgrade locomotives, using mainly electric and diesel locomotives. By the 1990's, we should be completely self-sufficient in locomotives. The production capacity of freight trains will be increased by at least 70 percent and passenger trains by 120 percent.

Ding Guangen said: While striving for improvement in these two fields, we should also go all out to improve party style and railway transport style so that the people will feel at ease and be satisfied with their railways.

INDUSTRY, COMMERCE BANK OUTLINES 1986 TASKS

OW180213 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0930 GMT 17 Feb 86

[By reporter Chen Naijin]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Feb (XINHUA) — The Industrial and Commercial Bank of China has outlined three tasks for this year. They are: Vigorously increasing deposits and self-sufficiency in credit funds, ensuring that loans are rationally used for supporting economic development, and earnestly improving service to speed the transfer of funds.

The Industrial and Commercial Bank of China handles industrial and commercial loans in cities and savings deposits in cities and towns. Speaking at a meeting of heads of all branches in the country today, bank president Zhang Xiao said that the three tasks have been outlined in accordance with State Council's instructions.

From now on, the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China will gradually shift its work to relying mainly on savings deposits and smooth circulation of funds to increase funds for loans. Zhang Xiao said: This is not only an important aspect in reforming the banking system but also a basic requirement for specialized banks in doing away with the practice of "eating from the big pot of the central bank" and enabling them to manage their own work. She called on the 400,000 staff and workers of industrial and commercial banks across the country to foster the idea of self-management and conscientiously strive to realize the shift in the work in order to bring into full play the role of banks in regulating and redistributing funds for economic construction.

According to reliable sources, in order to increase funds, the Industrial and Commercial Bank of China will try everything within its capabilities to increase savings deposits by city and town residents, enterprises, and individuals. Measures will be taken to resolve difficulties in depositing and withdrawing money; to increase the variety of accounts, expand the scope of service, and improve service by setting up such attractive savings accounts as specialized ones for tourism, housing, and high-grade durable consumer goods according to the actual situation in each locality; to sell certificates of deposit and experiment as agents for disbursing wages and pensions and collecting house rents and water, electricity, and gas fees in areas and units where conditions permit; and to continue to do a good job in issuing monetary bonds to private sectors in order to absorb as many funds as possible from among the masses of people.

In order to ensure funds for normal production and circulation this year, industrial and commercial loans will be issued according to the principle of reviewing the application case by case and selecting the ones with better qualifications on the premise of continuing to strengthen macroeconomic control and in line with the spirit of improving the supply to invigorate the economy. When a contradiction arises between loans for circulating funds and for investment on fixed assets because of a shortage of funds, priority will be given to loans for circulating funds. Circulating funds will be used mainly to support the following areas: Enabling industrial and commercial enterprises to purchase primary agricultural and subsidiary products according to purchase contracts; production and purchase of readily marketable consumer goods for daily use that are in great demand and can withdraw currency from circulation in the market, especially famous brand quality goods in short supply; competitive export commodities that can earn a great deal of foreign exchange as well as useful and marketable import commodities; and products included in state key production plans.

Loans for investment on fixed assets should be issued strictly to those that have already been approved by the state. It is necessary to control the general scale as well as pay attention to readjusting investment structure. Loans this year will mainly be used for supporting projects already under construction and contracts on importing technologies that have already been signed.

In order to cope with the needs of planned development in the commodity economy, especially development of lateral economic cooperation between different localities and departments, industrial and commercial banks in all localities will improve their service to speed the transfer of funds. They will adopt various methods, such as use of checks and transfer of funds by mail or bank notes, in settling accounts with customers, especially self-employed industrialists and businessmen and specialized households. In areas where conditions permit, the banks will issue traveler's checks on an experimental basis for personnel of enterprises or individuals on trips for procurement or other purposes.

The banks will also develop, on an experimental basis, the business of cashing or paying interest on bank notes in some large and medium-sized cities, as well as speeding the transfer of funds between localities and the settlement of bank notes in the same city in order to reduce the amount of funds tied up in the course of transfer or settlement, speeding circulation of funds, and conserving the use of cash. Joint economic enterprises that support lateral economic cooperation between localities and departments, and with status as legal persons and a joint charter, may open accounts at the Industrial and Commercial Bank and apply for loans for circulating funds and technological transformation in accordance with the regulations.

BANK OF CHINA TO SUPPORT DOMESTIC CONSTRUCTION

OW180127 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0922 GMT 17 Feb 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Ji Honggeng and XINHUA reporter Chen Naijin]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Feb (XINHUA) -- This year the Bank of China will make great efforts to raise capital in foreign exchange to support economic construction at home. The Bank of China is the only state-designated foreign exchange bank in the country. Its total assets in 1985 exceeded 200 billion RMB. Speaking today at a meeting of heads of the bank's branches in the country, Wang Deyan, president of the Bank of China, said the bank will intensify its survey of the international banking and capital market and the trend of interest rates and will choose the right moment to raise capital in foreign exchange with favorable terms in various ways and through various channels.

It has been learned that foreign exchange loans this year will primarily be extended to energy and communications development projects, as well as to medium-sized and small enterprises' short-term technical transformation projects that can promote exports and earn foreign exchange. If financially feasible, funds will also be spent on supporting foreign contracts, tourism, and the development of Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperative enterprises, and enterprises operated by foreign businessmen. Loans for undertaking foreign contracts will primarily be those for supporting the export of labor services. Being a developing country, China is unable to provide large amounts of capital for undertaking foreign projects. Within the scope of the credit plan, we should accept more projects that pay cash, and reduce or reject projects that pay on a deferred payment basis, even when the payments are guaranteed. Credits for Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperative enterprises, and enterprises operated by foreign businessmen should primarily be extended to technologically intensive projects, which are of a productive nature, and which can earn foreign exchange -- projects that can help the balance of foreign exchange.

Circulating funds in RMB must also be spent primarily on key projects, such as procurement of export commodities produced under the state plan, intermediate or long-term loans for supporting machinery export, and loans for supporting Sino-foreign joint ventures, cooperative enterprises, and enterprises operated by foreign businessmen.

The Bank of China stressed that using international commerical loans is a project requiring effective policies and technical skills. Applications for credit must be seriously examined, managed, and supervised so that our credits are in line with the nation's economic development, so that they can produce relatively good economic results, and so that the principal can be repaid with interest on time.

BANK OFFERS RURAL FOREIGN CURRENCY LOANS

HK140156 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 14 Feb 86 p 2

[Text] To meet the demands of the expanding rural economy, the Agricultural Bank of China is offering foreign currency loans to help export-oriented projects in rural areas, according to the newspaper INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS. The bank is also endeavouring to attract foreign funds and loans to promote such projects.

China's coastal areas have developed dramatically in recent years. An upsurge in the exploitation and use of natural resources has swept these areas. Many products being manufactured in these areas are expected to earn foreign exchange for the state. Foreign currency loans are now badly needed by such enterprises for the introduction of advanced technology and equipment. Rural businesses need foreign currency not only for importing equipment, but also for buying raw materials that are in short supply on domestic markets.

In order to meet the increasing demand for foreign currency, the Agricultural Bank of China established a special office last year to increase overseas borrowing and link up business with foreign counterparts. The bank's branches in Shenzhen, Zhuhai, Foshan and Xiamen have started dealing in foreign exchange. New services offered by the bank's branches include individual and businesses' foreign currency savings deposits, and foreign currency loans to rural industries. According to the newspaper, the bank has signed contracts for loans of $75 million with foreign financial organizations since 1985. The loans, from the World Bank and the International Fund for Agricultural Development, have been granted to agricultural projects in Guangxi, Zhuang Autonomous Region, and the provinces of Hubei and Fujian. The bank has also borrowed funds from foreign commercial banks. A $2 million loan from the North Europe Investment Bank has been offered to state-run farms in Hebei Province to develop milk processing.

Another loan has been signed recently between the Agricultural Bank of China and Citibank of America. The loan is expected to go to Jiangsu and Guangdong Provinces to improve technology in rural businesses and fish-raising. Rural banks in special economic zones will gradually start offering all services provided by other specialized banks, with the approval of the People's Bank of China and the State Foreign Exchange Administration.

LIAOWANG CITES SUCCESSES IN POPULATION CONTROL

HK190517 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 6-7, 10 Feb 86 p 38

[Article by Guo Tong: "China Makes Headway in Its Population Policy"]

[Text] In April 1985, cooperating with the International Statistical Society and adopting methods from the "World Fertility Survey," China's State Statistical Bureau carried out the first stage of a fertility sample survey in Hebei, Shaanxi, and Shanghai. Judging from the initial figures from the survey, China has had success with its population policy.

1. High Marriage Rate, Low Divorce and Widowhood Rate, Stable Marital Status

The survey figures show that in Hebei, Shaanxi, and Shanghai, as in many other areas in China, the marriage rate is high and the divorce rate is low. Most women marry before age 35. Very few remain single for life. In Hebei, all women of child-bearing age have married before 35. In Shaanxi and Shanghai, the percentages of unmarried women over 35 are respectively 0.3 and 1.7, of which the percentage of those who will soon pass their child-bearing ages is about 0.2.

The percentages of those divorced or separated are very low in these provinces and the municipality. This percentage is 0.1 in Hebei, 0.3 in Shaanxi, and 0.4 in Shanghai. The main reason for the break-up of a marriage is the death of the spouse. However, with the gradual improvement of medical and health work and the people's livelihood in China, the people's lifespan is likely to be prolonged. Thus, the widowhood rate is also comparatively low. In the 45-49 age group, the percentages of those whose spouse has died (and who have not remarried) are respectively 3.8 in Shanghai, 4.2 in Hebei, and 7.1 in Shaanxi.

2. The Development From Early Marriage and Childbirth to Late Marriage and Childbirth

Over the past 30 years, the percentage of Chinese women who marry early has fallen markedly. In Shanghai, the percentage of women who marry before age 20 has been reduced from 42.2 to 1.2. In Hebei and Shaanxi, this percentage has been reduced respectively from 59.2 to 13.8 and from 79.7 to 19.3. Most women have delayed their marriages. Over the past 30 years this delay has been respectively 4.4 years in Shanghai and Shaanxi and 3.4 years in Hebei. In 1984, the average age for first marriages was 26 in Shanghai and 21.9 in Hebei and Shaanxi.

Over the past 30 years or so, the age at which Chinese women bear their first child has also been delayed. In the 1950's, some 51 percent of women in Hebei gave birth to their first babies under age 22; this percentage for Shaanxi and Shanghai was respectively 67.6 and 43.8. According to the current survey, in the 25-29 age group of women of childbearing age, the percentage of those who had their first babies before the age of 22 is respectively 13.7, 23.3, and 2 for Hebei, Shaanxi, and Shanghai. This percentage is now much smaller.

3. The Number of Children Born Has Been Reduced Every Year

The survey of a group of women of childbearing age shows that the average number of children born is respectively 2.45, 2.8, and 1.54 for Hebei, Shaanxi, and Shanghai. Judging from the childbearing situation and the general trend of development in the past 10 years from 1975 to 1984, the general birth rate has been dropping in both Shaanxi and Hebei Province, with the former faster than the latter. In Shanghai, the general birth rate has been maintained at the replacement level, but has grown a little bit.

Infant Mortality Is Comparatively Low

The survey of the infant mortality rate for babies under age 1 in the two provinces and the municipality from 1980 to 1983 shows that the mortality rate in Shanghai is the lowest, only 19.3 percent, and those for Hebei and Shaanxi are respectively 34.1 and 34.3 percent.

5. Knowledge About and Measures for Contraception Have Been Popularized

Judging from the survey figures, knowledge about contraception has been most widely disseminated in Shanghai. On the average, every married woman (who had a spouse during the survey) knows seven methods of contraception. In Hebei, each knows 5.6 methods, while in Shaanxi, each knows 5.2 methods. Over the past 30 years or so, each married woman in Shanghai has used 1.6 methods of contraception, and each married woman in Hebei and Shaanxi has used respectively 1.3 and 1.1 methods. At present, about 70 to 80 percent of married women have adopted contraceptive measures. This reflects our achievements in family planning. In Shanghai, 82.8 percent of married women have adopted contraceptive measures, and this percentage for Hebei and Shaanxi is respectively 75.6 and 69.

MIGRANTS REPORTEDLY POSE PROBLEMS FOR CITIES

HK150602 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 15 Feb 86 p 3

[Text] As more an more surplus rural workers moved into China's cities for temporary jobs, they have upset the urban social order because many criminals have migrated with them. According to statistics reported by CHINA LAW JOURNAL, more than 3.21 million temporary residents have moved into China's top 10 cities -- Beijing, Tianjin, Shanghai, Guangzhou, Wuhan, Shenyang, Changchun, Harbin, Nanjing and Xian -- in recent years. This figure accounts for 10.2 per cent of the total population of these cities. The influx of temporary residents has occurred mainly in the past two years following the state policies of allowing rural workers to move into urban areas to start new businesses or find jobs in commerce, service trades and housing construction.

In Shanghai, for example, this "temporary" population was estimated at about 1.1 million by the end of 1985, two and half times more than in 1983. And a survey in Qianmen area of Beijing showed that 75 per cent of temporary residents had lived for more than half a year in the city.

Most of China's temporary urban residents were migratory labourers, many of them working on construction teams, the paper said. But although their business activities have greatly promoted urban economies and helped provide an additional supply of labour, the paper added, they have also created many new urban problems. Chief among these is the maintenance of urban public security because of inadequate control over residence registration. In Henan Province, a sample survey has found that 11 out of every thousand temporary residents in the province had criminal records.

The paper said many of these offenders entered the cities along with job seekers because of the lack of regulations requiring the employing units to assume responsibility for the temporary labourers. Another reason for the higher crime rate among temporary residents, officials note, is that many hotels and guest houses take in lodgers without requiring them to obtain temporary resident permits so long as the lodgers pay them rents.

All these loopholes have provided criminals with the opportunity to take shelter in cities without being easily detected spotted by police. In Beijing, for instance, 15 workers on a 50-member construction team employed on a hospital project have been caught pilfering, while in Shanghai, several private houses along Daning Street were found to be used as criminal hideouts where more than 1,500 kilogrammes of stolen copper and aluminum plates were found.

In an editor's note, CHINA LAW JOURNAL called on authorities to map out more stringent regulations governing urban temporary residence. The newspaper also suggested a substantial increase in residence management police force to cope with the heavy workload of registering the growing number of non-permanent urban residents.

DENG LIQUN SPEAKS AT JOB TRAINING CONFERENCE

OW200429 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1535 GMT 19 Feb 86

[By reporter Zhao Wei]

[Text] The national worker's in-service education management committee and the All-China Federation of Trade Unions cosponsored a news briefing in Beijing today to commend 800 outstanding in-service training teachers from various parts of the country. The meeting lasted 33 minutes.

Deng Liqun and Hao Jianxiu, members of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, and State Councillor Zhang Jingfu attended the meeting to congratulate the teachers and express their best wishes to all other teachers working hard in providing on-the-job training for workers. Speaking at the meeting, Deng Liqun said: On-the-job training of workers is an important way of developing intellectual resources and training competent personnel, as well as a reliable means of guaranteeing sustained economic growth.

China's on-the-job training program for workers has achieved significant success in the 5 years since the party Central Committee and the State Council made the decision of intensifying on-the-job training for workers. To date, over 80 percent of the nation's 120 million or so workers have been retrained. The target set by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council -- namely by the end of 1985, the principal leaders of all enterprises and institutions should have been retrained, young and middle-aged workers should have made up their missed lessons in the political, ideological, educational and technical fields, and workers' technical level should have improved by one or two grades -- has been basically attained.

Deng Liqun pointed out: The accomplishment of our Sixth 5-Year Plan and the successful development of restructuring the urban economic system are inseparable from the mammoth on-the-job training of workers over the past several years. This success should be attributed to the hard work and contributions of teachers engaged in workers' on-the-job training. As such, they deserve the party's commendation and the people's respect.

Deng Liqun continued: To build China into a modern socialist country we must have a large contingent of ethical and educated workers with lofty ideals and a sense of discipline. While working hard to improve their teaching professions, all comrades engaged in workers' on-the-job training should promote socialist ethics and train more qualified personnel needed in our socialist modernization drive. Deng Liqun urged the entire society to care for the workers' teachers, cherish them, support their work, and help them solve their problems.

Commended at the meeting were 800 outstanding "gardeners" engaged in workers' on-the-job training in the nation's 29 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions. Most of them were not present at the meeting, however, Except for Beijing, which sent 50 representatives, all other provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions sent only one representative each. Although they arrived in Beijing only a few days ago, all of them have already purchased return tickets and are ready to leave today or tomorrow. The national worker's in-service education management committee and the All-China Federation of Trade Unions have given each of them a medal, a certificate, and an honor album listing their good works. Deng Liqun hailed the efficiency of the short and small-sized meeting. He said: Today we have set a precedent and done something new. This meeting, which is held in the form of a news briefing, is just as good as other commendation meetings, but without the setback of being overburdened by too much work. This good idea should be popularized. I hope other fronts and departments will follow the same path, or develop an even better way, to commend their outstanding personnel and units.

In his speech, Zhang Jingfu said that on-the-job training of workers is a fundamental and important long-range project with far-reaching results. He expressed his respect for the teachers who have distinguished themselves in providing workers with on-the-job training.

Zeng Delin, He Dongchang, Yuan Baohua, Chen Bingquan, and other leading comrades of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, the State Education Commission, the national worker's in-service education management committee, and the All-China Federation of Trade Unions attended today's meeting.

'MASSIVE' PROJECT PLANNED TO DEAL WITH HUANGPU POLLUTION

[By staff reporter Su Zhen]

[Text] Shanghai -- A massive project to tackle pollution of the Huangpu River entered its final planning stages at a high-level conference in Shanghai this week. An appraisal panel announced that the huge research project, based on a massive body of data, was both scientific and practical. The massive project was put on the list of the State's top scientific research projects during the Sixth-Five-Year Plan (1980-1985). The environment protection project, with research funds of 5 million yuan from the central government, covers research on the assimilation capacity of Dianshan Lake, the water resources of the Huangpu, a feasibility study on tapping water upstream for human consumption and a report on the effects of that water on public health.

According to Chen Xingchu, director of the urban construction department of the city committee of science and technology, two key projects are already underway.

One billion yuan is being spent on piping much cleaner water from upstream into the city for domestic use through 69.9 kilometres of new canals and pipes, which are expected to be finished by 1987.

Another project -- cleaning up the pollution downstream -- has also been accepted by the State Planning Committee. With a budget of 1.5 billion yuan, ($540 million), the project aims to divert waste from the Huangpu and Suzhou rivers into purification plants and eventual discharge into the Yangtze River Estuary. Work on the project is expected to begin later this year. The first step is to intercept and clean waste water flowing into the Suzhou River by 1992 and then extend the project to the Huangpu River by 1996.

The Australian government has been giving technical assistance through its Australian Development Assistance Bureau. Between 1982 and 1983, the Australians offered 4.78 million Australian dollars ($4.2 million) in aid. The Huangpu River project has also caught attention of the World Bank, which sent a delegation late last year to study the project. The World Bank has since agreed to contribute $100 million to the project.

To prevent the Huangpu River from getting worse, the Shanghai government has passed laws curbing the amount of waste discharged by factories along the river and its tributaries. All factories now have to obtain a special license before they are allowed to discharge waste into the river, and are charged for their discharges. Factories dumping excessive amounts of waste will be fined.

The pollution problem of the Huangpu River has been critical for a long time. The average daily flow of waste water is about 4.90 million tons, of which more than half is directly discharged into the river. The Suzhou River, its tributary, is murky and stinks almost all year. Letters of complaint have been piling up on the desks of city leaders, and many state leaders have also called for urgent measures to tackle the problem.

GUANGDONG ISSUES SPECIAL ACCOUNTING REGULATIONS

HK190919 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1350 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Guangzhou, 14 Feb (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The Guangdong Provincial People's Government today promulgates accounting management regulations governing foreign-related enterprises in Guangdong Province's special economic zones. The regulations were approved by the 17th Session of the Standing Committee of the 6th Guangdong Provincial People's Congress on 25 December 1985.

The regulations govern special economic zones' Sino-foreign capitalized enterprises, Sino-foreign cooperatively run enterprises, foreign-capitalized enterprises, and Sino-foreign limited-liability companies (hereinafter called foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones).

The regulations point out that foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones should follow the accounting system of the Ministry of Finance in drawing up their own accounting regulations. These enterprises should submit their accounting regulations to the urban financial and taxation bureaus in the zones. The accounting work of foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones should be managed by the urban financial bureaus in the zones. Foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones should establish their acccounting offices in the zones, staff these offices with accountants, and carry out independent accounting.

The regulations stipulate that foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones should hire chief accountants. Small enterprises can have their accountants appointed by their boards of directors, and these accountants will exercise the functions and powers of chief accountants. Chief accountants will assist general managers in exercising leadership over enterprises' financial and accounting work. The board of directors is responsible for recruiting candidates to fill the posts of chief accountant.

There is no need for small foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones to hire auditors. Auditors are responsible for checking enterprises' revenues and expenditures, account books, receipts, and account statements. Auditors will be hired by the board of directors.

The regulations provide that foreign-related enterprises in special economic zones must subject their accounts to supervision and examination by the urban financial bureaus and taxation organs in the zones. They should provide the necessary account vouchers, account books, and other account details for the financial bureau and taxation organs, and must not hold back their account details or make false accounts. The enterprises concerned are responsible for paying the fees for checking accounts.

Either side of Sino-foreign cooperatively run enterprises or Sino-foreign capitalized enterprises is entitled to check enterprises' account books, and the fees for checking will be borne by the side which checks the accounts. If necessary, problems discovered in the course of examination should be submitted to the enterprises concerned for study and settlement.

The regulations point out that the urban financial bureaus in special economic zones have the right to order foreign-related enterprises which have violated the stipulations in the regulations to correct their mistakes within the prescribed time.

The financial bureaus can impose a fine of between 100 and 1,000 yuan on the enterprises which have violated the regulations, and if the enterprises fail to correct their mistakes within the stated time, the urban industrial and commercial administrative bureaus in special economic zones have the right to order them to stop business.

Any managerial personnel, accountants, or other persons making false accounts or destroying account vouchers and account books will be given administrative punishments by the foreign-related enterprises concerned. Serious cases will be dealt with by taxation organs, which will order the perpetrator to compensate for the economic losses incurred and to pay a fine not exceeding 10,000 yuan. Criminal cases will be dealt with by judicial departments.

The regulations also govern the accounting management work of enterprises run in special economic zones by individuals or economic organizations of Overseas Chinese, Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, and Taiwan compatriots.

The regulations will come into force on 1 March 1986.

GUANGDONG ACTS TO SOLVE TRAFFIC PROBLEMS

HK180830 Beijing CHINA DAILY in English 18 Feb 86 p 3

[Text] Guangzhou -- A major road construction programme has made significant progress in helping ease the crowded traffic conditions in Guangzhou, the biggest city in the southern part of China, and further improvements lie ahead. In recent years, automobiles and bicycles have increased by 20 percent annually, and today there are 180,000 cars and 1.52 million bicycles, Shi Anhai, deputy mayor of Guangzhou told CHINA DAILY. Last year, the city began a three-year programme aimed at solving the problem of traffic jams, and to date it has made notable progress. Shi said that among other things the city invested 97.9 million yuan last year in completing the construction of the new Guangzhou Bridge, 988 metres long and 24 metres wide, the third one across the Pearl River. Besides, he said, five major roads were paved or expanded last year, all of them 50 to 80 metres wide and a total of 15 kilometres in length.

"There is a traffic relaxation at present," Shi said, "but traffic jams still exist at some of the crossroads, especially during rush hours. So, we shall redouble our efforts to further improve the city's traffic." In the next two years, Shi said, with about 400 million yuan from the provincial and municipal governments as well as from the city's enterprises and institutions, the city will complete the fourth Pearl River bridge, a giant suspension span. A four-kilometre-long upper road will be soon built above Remin Road from the Pearl River to the railway station. Construction of a passenger tunnel at the crossroads in Qiyi Road and a fourlane underwater tunnel from Huangsha to Fancun will also start this year. Before the Sixth National sports meet in Guangzhou in 1987, the city will probably complete a 40-kilometre-long expressway around the metropolitan area, linking with highways to Foshan, Shenzhen and Zhuhai. The expressway will carry about 80,000 automobiles a day, the deputy mayor said.

HENAN TO IMPLEMENT SPARK PLAN FOR RURAL AREAS

HK190143 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] The provincial CPC Committee and government have concentrated powers, finance, and brains to promote the implementation of the spark plan in the province as soon as possible. The provincial CPC Committee and government have decided that Vice Governor Qin Kecai and responsible comrades of the provincial science and technology commission, rural economic commission, and finance and civil affairs departments should be responsible for leading the implementation of this plan. Arrangements for spending the 100 million yuan allocated to the plan have been made.

The provincial CPC Committee and government have formally set three targets for the spark plan: During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the province and the prefectures, cities, and counties should propose about 200 advanced sample projects each year which are worth popularizing; some 50 whole sets of advanced technology and equipment suited to the needs of rural areas and township enterprises should be developed each year. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, centering on the spark plan and in accordance with the needs of rural areas and township enterprises, the province and the prefectures and counties should hold short training courses for 500,000 to 600,000 people, to instruct in one or two fields of applied technology.

PEASANT INCOMES SOAR IN HUNAN PROVINCE

OW131733 Beijing XINHUA in English 1522 GMT 13 Feb 86

[Text] Changsha, February 13 (XINHUA) -- The average annual income of peasants in Hunan Province last year soared 20 percent over 1984, despite a long dry spell in the major rice-producing region, according to the provincial agricultural bureau today. The figure is now more than 410 yuan per person in the countryside, compared to the national average of about 400 yuan.

Due to a dry spell of more than 100 days in early summer and reduction of growing area, the province's grain output decreased by one million tons from 1984 to 24.5 million tons. But thanks to the development of cash crops, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline occupation and fisheries, the agricultural output value still went up by 12 percent from 1984 to reach 19 billion yuan. Meanwhile, the output value of 450,000 rural factories soared 47 percent to reach 9.5 billion yuan. Now 7.3 million peasants, or one-third of the province's total, are engaged in industry and service trades, the bureau reported.

SICHUAN'S YANG RUDAI VIEWS CURRENT SITUATION

HK190257 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Excerpts] On 17 February the Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee invited responsible persons of the provincial CPPCC, democratic parties, and mass organizations, together with well-known nonparty figures, to a forum to report on the situation in economic work and in improving party style in the province and on arrangements for this year's work, and to listen to their views.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Yang Rudai spoke on the province's achievements in various fields last year, the work arrangements for 1986, and the correction of party style. He said: Last year the province's total industrial and agricultural output value rose by 12.1 percent. Financial revenue rose by a record 1.23 billion yuan. The four excessive things in economic work were basically brought under control. Second-stage party rectification has been completed. Notable success has been gained in correcting new unhealthy trends.

In our work this year, the province must continue to implement the spirit of the National Conference of Party Delegates, and while grasping economic work well, devote more effort to building socialist spiritual civilization. We should concentrate on enhancing the exemplary role of the provincial organs in correcting party style, strengthen and improve ideological and political work on all fronts, and seriously launch grassroots party rectification in the rural areas.

He said: The experiences of history show that, no matter what the problem is, so long as the CPC Central Committee grasps it, the whole party will rapidly grasp it also, and the greatest problems and difficulties can be surmounted. We should be full of confidence in correcting party style. The view that it is hard to bring about a turn for the better in party style is out of line with reality. Viewing things in a truth-seeking way, although there are many probelms in party style, and some of them are very serious, the main current of party style is good and is developing in a good direction.

Yang Rudai said: Viewing the province as a whole, the unhealthy trends of party and government organs and cadres running businesses and enterprises, randomly issuing bonuses, subsidies, and clothing, arbitrarily hiking wages, showing and duplicating pornographic videotapes, randomly printing vulgar tabloids, and selling automobiles, steel, and so on for profit have been either basically curbed or greatly reduced. Since the second half of last year, we have devoted great efforts to investigating and dealing with major and important criminal cases. Half of the cases dealt with by party and discipline inspection committees at and above county level have been submitted to the courts. Regarding the practices of buying important cars, going on trips abroad, reception work, spending public funds on tourist trips, making money by improper means, and using powers to run businesses and so on, mentioned in the urgent central circular on correcting new unhealthy trends, the provincial CPC committee and government have carried out serious comparison and examination, taken stock of the problems, and put forward ways of solving them.

However, the provincial CPC committee holds that there are still many problems in party style in the provincial organs and in the province as a whole, and some of them are rather serious. The main manifestations are as follows:

1. Some cadres lack drive and a strong sense of responsibility. They lord it over everyone and are divorced from the masses. They fail to investigate and study the new problems in reform, and ignore and fail to take action against malpractices and in major and important criminal cases. When something crops up, they pass the buck among each other.

2. There is conspicuous political liberalism in some units and among some comrades. They fail to undertake serious study or investigation but instead make irresponsible comments and even believe and pass on slander and gossip.

3. Some unhealthy trends have not yet been curbed, and some already curbed crop up again the moment there is a little relaxation.

Comrade Yang Rudai said: In accordance with the intentions of the central authorities, and in connection with Sichuan reality, the provincial CPC committee recently decided after serious discussion to grasp the following work in correcting party style this year:

1. Concentrate forces to curb malpractices. First, in the first half of the year, we must curb the six unhealthy trends mentioned in the urgent central circular. Methods already proposed for correcting things must be implemented properly. The provincial organs must set an example.

2. Continue to get a good grasp of investigating and dealing with major and important criminal cases. Resolute blows must be dealt at speculation, swindling, smuggling and peddling contraband, and bribery, corruption, and embezzlement.

3. Strictly straighten out discipline. In order to curb the unhealthy trends and strive for a fundamental turn for the better in party style, it is essential to be resolved to straighten out party discipline. We must also straighten out discipline in personnel affairs, economic and financial matters, foreign affairs, keeping secrets, and in propaganda.

4. Seriously grasp education in a party spirit. Bad party style arises from weak party spirit. At present we must pay particular attention to correcting individualism, bureaucratism, and liberalism within the party.

The key to getting a good grasp of these four things lies in the whole party working to improve party style. The party committees at all levels and the party organizations on all fronts and in all departments must seriously tackle this job. The principal leading comrades must personally grasp it.

I hope the comrades outside the party will criticize problems in our work and party style, and exercise supervision. They should expose serious problems.

Xie Shijie, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, conveyed the spirit of Central Document No 1 of this year and introduced the rural economic situation last year and the arrangements for rural work this year.

WU JINGHUA ATTENDS XIZANG PRAYER CEREMONY

OW171717 Beijing XINHUA in English 1650 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Lhasa, February 17 (XINHUA) -- A thousand lamps illuminated the Qoikang monastery as they did nearly 600 years ago when the traditional Tibetan prayer ceremony began here today for the first time in 20 years.

More than 1,000 lamas from lamaseries and temples throughout Tibet gathered at the festival decorated monastery early this morning and began to pray under the leadership of Buimi Qambalocha, vice-president of the Tibetan branch of the Chinese Buddhist Association. Buimi holds the scholarly rank of first class gehsi, the highest in lamaism.

At noon, Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, honorary president of the association and vice-chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, China's legislature, spoke to the more than 10,000 Buddhists assembled for the event. He said resumption of the prayer ceremony after its official suspension at the start of the "Cultural Revolution" in 1966 "shows the commitment of the Communist Party toward minority nationalities and the Tibetan region." For their part, Bainqen told the Buddhists they should "contribute to national unity and the economic development of your hometowns."

The ceremony will last ten days and will include jo'nga-qoiba, the traditional lamp festival, along with oral examinations to test the qualifications of candidates applying for gehsi, the Buddhist doctorate in theology. The prayer ceremony, first performed in 1409, was initiated by Zong Kaba, founder of the yellow sect of lamaism, to revitalize Tibetan Buddhism and promote religious discipline. More than 10,000 lamas of various lamaist sects and hundreds of thousands of followers flocked to Lhasa for the ceremony, which was performed annually until 1966.

Since 1979, when the Chinese Communist Party's policy on religious freedom began to be more strictly enforced, religious activities have returned to normal ceremony, prayer ceremonies have since 1979 flourished in individual lamaseries and temples.

Among those present at today's ceremony were Tibet regional party secretary Wu Jinghua, wearing traditional Tibetan clothes, and Pagbalha Geleg Namgyai, vice-chairman of the regional People's Congress Standing Committee, and other local government leaders. Also participating were lamaist followers from Qinghai, Sichuan, Gansu and other places in China as well as some Tibetans who came from abroad for the ceremony.

LAMAS RETURN FROM INDIA FOR XIZANG CEREMONY

OW191919 Beijing XINHUA in English 1912 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Lhasa, February 19 (XINHUA) -- Ten lamas, who left their Tibetan homes in 1959 for India, have returned here to visit their relatives and attend the Buddhist prayer ceremony now going on at the Qoikang temple.

One of them, 50-year-old Qamba Toinzhub, said the centuries-old ceremony -- performed this year for the first time since 1966 -- is "being done just as the canons say it should." The lama said he was surprised to see Wu Jinghua, secretary of the Tibet Autonomous Regional Party Committee, participate in the ceremony. "I never expected him to come, to present a khata (a ceremonial silk scarf) to the Bainqen Lama and to give donations," he said. A lama who once lived at the Gandain monastery said he was particularly pleased to see young lamas at the ceremony. "This shows that Buddhism in Tibet will continue," he said.

The lamas said they plan to attend the Tibetan lamp festival and other activities bef re returning to India.

GANSU CIRCULAR LISTS ABUSES BY LANZHOU CADRES

HK190645 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Recently the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission transmitted to other areas the Lanzhou Discipline Inspection Commission circular on the leading cadres of Lanzhou City tap water company, who abused their authority and continued to make mistakes during party rectification.

The circular of Lanzhou City Discipline Inspection Commission said: In 1984, (Li Yuquan) and (Li Qinglu), party secretary and manager of the city tap water company; as well as other comrades, flaunted the banner of reforms while misappropriating more than 798,000 yuan of public funds. They arbitrarily gave over 270 yuan in bonuses, payments in kind, and garments to each worker on average; and more than 1,000 yuan to each of the company's nine leaders on average. Both (Li Yuquan) and (Li Qinglu) took more than 1,300 yuan each, or more than five times that taken by a worker. In addition, they cheated the workers and gave 17,750 yuan of red-packet money to 75 cadres at and above the section level. They misappropriated over 5,800 yuan of public funds for entertaining and giving gifts to guests. But the most serious mistake is that they covered up their mistakes and cheated the party organization while the organization at the upper level was examining vouchers.

The circular pointed out: Such problems developed when the city was carrying out party rectification. Thus, it is a case in which the leaders knowingly violated discipline. In order to correct party and administrative discipline, and to ensure smooth progress in economic structural reform, the city CPC Committee has decided to remove (Li Yuquan) and (Li Qinglu) from their offices of party secretary and CPC Committee members of the Lanzhou City tap water company and to suggest the administration remove (Li Qinglu) from the office of manager of the company. Those three comrades, including deputy party secretary (Zhang Zhishou), who took part in the activities were given disciplinary warnings. The provincial CPC Committee also proposed corresponding suggestions on the bonuses and garments arbitrarily given by the leaders.

When transmitting this circular, the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission solemnly pointed out: Despite repeated injunctions of the central authorities on banning the practice of arbitrarily giving bonuses and payments in kind, the leadership of the Lanzhou City tap water company paid no attention to this and continued to commit mistakes. This has once again shown that in order to check unhealthy tendencies, we must uphold the principle of acting resolutely and unremittingly. Whoever violates party discipline or state laws must be dealt with seriously. Everyone is equal before discipline. The circular urged all party members and cadres, particularly leading cadres, to draw lesson from this case. They must at all times handle matters in accordance with party policies and observe party discipline.

PAPER VIEWS U.S. INFLUENCE IN PHILIPPINES

OW190259 Taipei CNA in English 0240 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 18 (CNA) -- A leading newspaper in the Republic of China said Tuesday that the increased political unrest and crises in the Philippines have created many abnormal phenomena, including U.S. intervention in the Philippines" internal affairs. The UNITED DAILY NEWS, inan editorial Monday, said the U.S. cannot help but get involved in the Philippines political disputes because of its role as a leader of the free world and its strategic interest in the island nation. It is an undeniable fact that both the American people and the U.S. Covernment have applied certain pressures on the Philippines related to that nation's internal affairs, but it is very doubtful if such pressure has produced the anticipated effects, the paper said.

The editorial said that basically, the motive for the U.S. intervention is to prevent non-communist nations from being communized and to make sure that the process of democracy will continue in those nations. But unfortunately, the U.S. seems to have been neglectful of communist influence, which is the most serious threat to the process of democracy, the paper said. Indulging in its appeasement policy, the U.S. so far has not come up with any effective measures to counter communist expansion, but instead it has often criticized the internal affairs of its allies, thus drawing strong protests from the people there, it said.

The editorial pointed out that economic development and democratic politics are the most effective means to deal with communism and to ensure stability. The U.S. will only create more political unrest in friendly nations if it simply requests its allies to carry out democracy while failing to provide a solid base for their economic development and to indtroduce effective strategies to deal with communist insurgencies, the paper said.

CHINA POST ON PHILIPPINES ELECTION CONTROVERSY

OW200510 Taipei CHINA POST in English 17 Feb 86 p 4

[Editorial: "Implications of the Philippine Election"]

[Text] The Philippine National Assembly on Saturday proclaimed Ferdinand E. Marcos President of the Philippines for another six years, amid widespread charges that the vote was influenced by fraud. The controversial presidential election may trigger still greater unrest in a country already plagued by turmoil. How the Philippine situation will evolve is anybody's guess, but we hope that it will head toward stability.

The Feb. 7 election was accompanied by much violence and bloodshed. Marcos' challenger -- Corazon Aquino -- displayed much strength and enjoyed obviously popular appeal. This is why Marcos almost failed to succeed, although in the end he emerged with a 1.5 million vote majority over Mrs. Aquino.

Whatever the post-election situation may be in the Philippines, the elction has brought to a climax the political rift and confrontation between President Marcos' government and the opposition. And the situation may deteriorate further if mass demonstrations are staged in protest of the alleged election frauds. Many moderate Filipinos may become radical.

A surge in violence and chaos in the Philippines would give the Communists in the country an excellent opportunity to spread revolution and even to seize power. That would certainly be unfortunate for the free world in general and neighboring countries and the United States in particular.

In the interest of peace in Asia and the rest of the world, the Marcos government should be prodded into reform. And President Marcos himself should act rationally by ccoperating with the United States in improving the political and economic situations in his own country.

The present state of affairs of the Philippines has important implications for the Republic of China on Taiwan. Here, we are much better off. We have a stable political situation and a dynamic economy. And the ROC government is devoted to national development and committed to democracy. Everyone here should value the progress and stability that we have today. While democracy must be promoted further, the goal should be pursued peacefully and patiently. Otherwise, we could easily lose all that we enjoy.

[Report from Macao: "Sino-Portuguese Talks To Begin This Year; Xu Jiatun on Policy Toward Macao"]

[Text] Xu Jiatun, director of the Hong Kong branch of the XINHUA, said yesterday that the talks between the Chinese and Portuguese governments on Macao's future will be carried out this year. When he answered the questions asked by reporters, he said that in the future, China's policy toward Macao will continue to embody the spirit of "Macao people governing Macao." Ge said that, as always, the Chinese Government will consider the actual situation in Macao, take better care of the interests of the compatriots of all strata and circles in Macao, and show concern for the interests of the Portuguese people in Macao.

Director Xu Jiatun went to Macao yesterday to extend Spring Festival greetings to various circles in Macao. At a tea party sponsored by the Macao Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, Macao Laborers General Union, and cultural circles, he said: This year is an important year for Macao. The work concerning the talks on Macao's future will be carried out this year. He pointed out that Macao will enter a new historical stage. Under the guidance of the principle of "one country, two systems," on the basis of the traditional friendship between China and Portugal, and on the basis of the experience of the Sino-British talks which have satisfactorily solved the Hong Kong issue, it is believed that the talks will be carried out smoothly and the Macao issue will be solved better and more correctly.

He said that during the talks, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council will consider Macao compatriots' interests. In a speech, he praised Macao for its previous achievements in its economic and other spheres. He hoped that the people of all circles in Macao will unite as one, promote the development of the talks, and maintain the prosperity and stability of Macao society.

Answering reporter's question on whether the Sino-Portuguese talks will be held next May as is rumored, Director Xu said: "No." He said that the actual date had not yet been decided at present. We have to wait for the results of the presidential election in Portugal. Only then can the Chinese and Portuguese governments discuss the details and date of the talks. However, Director Xu also said that the Portuguese presidential election would not affect Macao's future.

The second round of voting in the Portuguese presidential election will finish on 26 February [as published] At that time a new Portuguese president will be elected.

Accompanied by Deputy Director Zheng Hua and Deputy Secretary General Qiao Zonghuai, director Xu arrived in Macao at 1430 yesterday by boat from Hong Kong. He was welcomed by Ko Chengping, chief manager of the Nam Kwong Trade Company, and Li Yaochi and Wang Wenpin, deputy chief managers of the company, Ma Wanchi of the Macao Chinese General Chamber of Commerce, and others. At 1500 Director Xu and his party went to the Chamber of Commerce, at 1600 to the Federation of Trade Unions, and at 1700 to the Pui Tou Middle School, where he extended Spring Festival greetings to and greeted the arrival of the Year of the Tiger together with over 200 people of the Macao, industrial, commercial, women's, neighborhood, medical, workers, fishermen's, vegetable farmers, hawkers, educational, press, cultural, sports, youths, and students circles. At 2100 Xu Jiatun and his party left Macao for Hong Kong.

MING PAO REPORTS CONTINUED CRACKDOWN ON CRIME

HK190349 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 18 Feb 86 p 5

["Special dispatch from Beijing": "Ministry of Public Security Holds Telephone Conference on Cracking Down Further on Crime"]

[Text] Liu Wen, director of the Criminal Investigation Bureau of the PRC Ministry of Public Security, has said that following the New Year holiday, various serious crimes such as snatching guns, murder, robbery, rape, theft, and so on have taken place successively in every locality, and that these crimes are savage, cruel, and vile and have resulted in serious consequences.

During the telephone conference called by the Ministry of Public Security on 28 January, Liu Wen stressed the current public order situation. He emphatically pointed out that this is a signal which merits attention and that it is imperative to call on the public security organs at all levels to attach great importance to it, to adopt effective measures, and to promptly stop these serious criminal activities.

Liu Wen stressed the four characteristics of the recent serious crimes: First, criminal crimes caused by the intensification of civil disputes are very outstanding. Second, in the cases of theft as well as snatching guns, robbery, murder, and so on, most criminals are driven by money to use every vile means to commit crimes. Third, as personal desires are not satisfied, some people deliberately create disturbances to take their revenge on the society. Therefore, some destructive sabotage and the wounding and killing of innocent people have taken place. Fourth, some cases which were rare in the past and involve savage and cruel criminal means have occurred.

This director of the Criminal Investigation Bureau asked public security organs at all levels to seriously analyze the trend of public order and the tendency in criminal activities and strengthen the measures for investigation, control, and prevention of crimes in light of the outstanding problems and the law in recent criminal cases. Whenever violent criminal activities break out, it is imperative to be quick in responding, investigating, and clearing up the cases. Therefore, it is necessary to organize the investigative forces well and persist in a round-the-clock alert to meet emergencies at all times. It is necessary to take vigorous measures to crack down on recidivists and persist in severely and promptly punishing them according to the law. Meanwhile, it is necessary to choose and energetically propagate some typical cases which are serious but have been uncovered, so as to inspire the people and frighten criminals.

The telephone conference was presided over by Vice-Minister Yu Lei. He pointed out that the increase in serious crimes is a result of many factors. However, as long as preventive work is done well, administrative work is kept up, and loopholes are plugged, serious crimes can be reduced. Public security organs in every locality must adopt effective measures against serious crimes and realistically strengthen investigative work, so as to promptly solve these cases and improve social order.

In coordination with the telephone conference, the Ministry of Public Security has issued an urgent notice demanding that public security organs at all levels and the security departments of railroad, highway, and shipping units strengthen the inspection of passengers' luggage and cargo, so as to remove hidden troubles and to prevent accidental explosions on passenger trains, motor vehicles, and ships, and strengthen the antiviolence security work in factories, mines, enterprises, and public places. The notice points out that following the New Year holiday, there have been many cases of malignant explosions deliberately caused by criminals, resulting in serious losses of lives and property.

TA KUNG PAO CITES IMPROVEMENTS IN PLA WEAPONS

HK190329 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 15 Feb 86 p 3

["Special Feature" by Mu Chi: "New State of Weaponry in China's Three Armed Services"]

[Text] The latest issue of the Japanese magazine MILITARY DIGEST says that China has made progress in its military technology in recent years and has markedly improved its Army's weapons, which now approach the advanced level of Western countries. This was shown in the National Day parade in 1984 and in the international military exhibition in Beijing in January this year. From these events, people can perceive that although China puts military development in a less important position in its "four modernizations" program, China's military technology has still made substantial progress.

Communications Equipment Has Been Improved

Ground Forces: China's infantry has begun to use 5.56-mm automatic rifles, whose performance is close to the American-made M-16.

The communications equipment of the infantry units has been improved. They no longer use signal machines which were apt to be jammed as during the Chinese-Vietnamese war. The present communications equipment has the capacity to resist interference and is secure.

The infantry is equipped with advanced antitank launchers, which have a higher penetrating capacity than the "40 grenade launchers" and can be operated more efficiently under all weather conditions.

The Chinese Army now has motorized infantry units, equipped with armored personnel carriers with a turret and a 90-mm gun, new-type 6-wheeled amphibious armored cars, and the "531-1" tracked armored vehicles. These three new models of fighting vehicles can operate under all weather conditions.

A number of new types of tanks are being produced in large quantities, including the latest models of the type "62" and "59" tanks. They are all equipped with laser rangefinders and rapid calculators so that they have night fighting capability. In addition, China is trying a new type of tank which is similar to the British "Challenger" tank. ("Challengers" are the latest model of tanks in service in the British Army.)

China's anti-aircraft units have been equipped with many new weapon systems, including a short-range anti-aircraft missile similar to Sweden's RBS-70 missile and an anti-aircraft system composed of guns and missiles similar to the Swiss "tianlo-maque" [tian lup-ma que 1131 5012-7802 7158] anti-aircraft system. [as published]

The Capability for Short-Range Deployment

The Air Force: China's Air Force has the capability to make rapid short-range deployments, because it possesses medium-range transport planes and medium-range helicopters, although it still cannot make rapid long-range deployments.

The improved models of "Jian 7" and Qiang 5" fighters have been widely deployed and sold on the overseas market. Egypt and Pakistan are the main buyers of these planes. These two types of planes are equipped with advanced electronics equipment made by Britain. Although they cannot match such sophisticated planes as the F-14 and F-15, they have ordinary combat capability.

Among the various models developed in China, one is well-known to the world because it is being developed with the help of the U.S. Air Force. Some reports say the model is called "Jian 8," but in fact it may be "Jian 10" or "Jian 11."

In the field of air-to-air combat, Chian's fighters are now equipped with the improved model of "Pili [Thunderbolt] 2" short-range missiles, which are said to be similar to the American-made "AIM-9L" missiles. In addition, China has succeeded in developing a new type of radar-guided air-to-air missile. It is said that its appearance is similar to the American "AIM-7" missile.

China Begins To Build Small Aircraft Carriers

The Navy: A new missile-launching frigate has been launched. It is said that this ship is equipped with ship-to-ship missiles similar to the French "Exocet" missile and is equipped with an American-made antimissile gun and an American-made LM-2500 turbine.

The "Jiangdong"-class destroyers have been equipped with "Hongqi 61" surface-to-air missiles which are similar to "Sea Sparrow" missiles. This will effectively build up the Chinese Navy's air defense capability.

Many warships for the Chinese Navy have been equiped with "Haiying 4" surface-to-surface missiles, which are an improved model of the Soviet "Styx" missile, and have turbojet engines and electronic countermeasures equipment.

China is developing a small 20,000-ton aircraft carrier, which may be built by improving on the blueprint of the Australian "Melbourne."

China is also building many nuclear-powered submarines which can carry ballistic missiles. These Chinese submarines are called "Xia"-class in the West, and China is building some "Han"-class attack submarines with nuclear power. Advanced submarine technologies of the U.S. Navy are being used in the building of these new submarines.

Because China holds an increasingly important political, economic, and military position in the Far East China's military development will be conducive to the Far East's stability.

NAVY TO IMPROVE OFFICER-SAILOR RELATIONS

HK181438 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 17 Feb 86 p 5

["Special dispatch from Beijing": "Navy Organizes Drive To Respect Cadres, Cherish Sailors"]

[Text] With regard to the estrangement between officers and sailors in recent years, the Chinese Navy has decided to strengthen the leadership of party committees at various levels, to launch a drive of "respecting cadres and cherishing sailors" for the purpose of making the relationships between officers and sailors closer, and to help officers and sailors solve problems regarding their food, housing, recreational, and sports activities.

The Political Department of the Navy issued a circular on 21 January calling on various naval units to launch a drive to "respect cadres and cherish sailors" in the first quarter of this year. The circular set four requirements:

1. Enhancing the level of understanding about the importance of respecting cadres and cherishing sailors: Party committees at all levels should educate officers and sailors so that they understand the importance of strengthening unity between officers and sailors. This has an important bearing on the combat effectiveness of the Navy. Party committees should help officers understand the relationships between officers and sailors, solve the fundamental problem of how to treat sailors, and remove the mentality that makes officers think "it is difficult to train sailors." Party committees should make it clear that the crux of strengthening relationships between officers and sailors lies with officers and that officers should foster a sense of responsibility for cherishing and training sailors. In addition, party committees should also straighten out some confused ideas among sailors and guide them in correctly handling the relationships between their personal demands and the need to build the Navy and to respect and trust officers.

2. Conscienticusly examining the problems in relationships between officers and sailors: On the basis of improving their understanding, party committees at all levels should fully mobilize officers and sailors to examine problems in their relationships, with an emphasis on whether officers have a correct attitude toward sailors, whether they are rude to sailors, whether they insult and punish sailors at will, or whether they are indulgent of sailors' mistakes; on whether military, political, and economic democracy fully observed, whether sailors' rights are respected, whether there is infringement of sailors' interests; and on whether sailors obey orders and respect their officers or contradict their superiors. It is necessary first to solicit opinions through group discussions and public opinion polls and then to hold party branch enlarged meetings for the purpose of reaching unanimity of understanding, criticism and self-criticism, and working out measures for solving problems.

3. Carrying out various forms of activities: 1) It is necessary to encourage heart-to-heart talks between officers and sailors. Officers should take the initiative in having heart-to-heart talks with sailors, in soliciting opinions from them, and in making self-criticism, so as to clear up feelings of estrangement. 2) Officers should help sailors solve their ideological problems as well as problems in their work, study, and life. In this way, sailors will feel the warmth of their care. 3) It is necessary to carry out the activity of officers and sailors learning from each other, to disseminate the good practice of respecting cadres and cherishing sailors, to formulate pacts concerning respecting cadres and cherishing sailors, and to foster the good habit of respecting cadres and cherishing sailors. 4) It is necessary to perfect the democratic system, to improve and consolidate organizations such as companies revolutionary soldiers committees and economic commissions, and to regularly hold companies mass meetings as well as divisional and regimental sailors congresses, so as to ensure the democratic rights of sailors.

4. Improving leadership style: Divisional and regimental party committees and organs under them should conscientiously rectify the habits of officers suppressing democracy, infringing on the interests of sailors, and punishing sailors at will, and should abolish all "self-formulated policies." It is necessary to conscientiously examine how officers have punished sailors in recent years and to find a solution to this problem. Emphasis should be laid on educating and enlightening officers, and the method of forcing everyone to make self-examination should be discouraged.

JOURNAL CALLS BEIJING CADRE 'STAR OF TOMORROW'

HK190731 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 161, 16 Feb 86 pp 34-35

[Article by Keng Chun: "Zhang Wei -- A Star of Tomorrow in Chinese Politics"]

[Text] Hu Qili Privately Called Zhang Wei To Find Out About the Situation of Beijing University

On "18 September" last year, a campus upheaval took place at Beijing University, a student strike which attracted the extensive attention of the world community and which Hu Yaobang called a "minor earthquake of 4 on the Richter scale." When the sentiments of the students were most disturbed, apart from maintaining connections with the person in charge of the Beijing University authorities every day through a hot line, Hu Qili, secretary of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, especially called a young man from Tianjin to find out about the situation at the university. Two days later, the young man directly reported to Hu Qili on what he had found.

This young man with a broad forehead shrouded in considerable mystery is 31-year-old Zhang Wei, general manager of the General Corporation of the Tianjin Economic and Technological Development Zone.

At the end of the past year, I went to Tianjin and stayed in the "Huanggong (Imperial) Hotel." My room was dozens of meters away from Zhang Wei's office. Hence, I got to know this young "star of tomorrow."

I visited him in his office one night, 4 days before he started his tour of West European countries to give lectures there. He was busy drafting his lecture. The moment he finished a page of his lecture, it was immediately translated into English by a female translator who worked next door to him and a typist promptly worked out its English text and sent it to Zhang Wei's desk. He would give lectures in three European countries in English. Eventually, I saw his work style with my own eyes.

Three days later, I got a copy of Zhang Wei's draft lecture. He dealt with matters about which foreign investors were most concerned in concise language. Zhang Wei is a good orator. He is good at penetrating the psychology and characteristics of the audience and foreign businessmen. At the conclusion of his speech, he wrote: "Before finishing my speech, I have to mention the obvious fact that among the 21 enterprises which have been registered in the Tianjin development zone, U.S. and Japanese capital leads. Entrepreneurs from Britain, France, and the FRG have not yet invested in the zone. I think this state of affairs will not last long. We highly appreciate the creative spirit and high technology of our European friends. I firmly believe that so long as these factors are combined with China's labor force and raw materials, they will surely become a competitive economic force that no bloc can take lightly either in the Chinese market and in the world market."

He Was Once Chairman of the Student Union of Beijing University

Zhang Wei was once a middle school teacher and vice principal and a section head of the education bureau in Wuhan City. In 1977 he was admitted to Beijing University's economics department. During his studies at the university, he distinguished himself by his brilliant organizational ability. He was once chairman of the university's student union. When Chinese university students took part in elections in 1980, he was one of the first 3 of the 27 Beijing University students who entered the contest. Since he made no opportunistic remarks just to win votes, he was praised considerably by school authorities. His graduation thesis was entitled "The Problem of Labor Employment in China." In a public graduation appraisal, he received the highest marks throughout his department.

After graduating from the university, he was assigned to work in the investigation and research office of the Tianjin Municipal Government. He drafted important documents for former Mayor Hu Qili, and the present mayor, Li Ruihuan. He was later transferred to be secretary of the Tianjin CYL Committee. In December 1984, when Tianjin set up its economic and technological development zone, Zhang Wei was appointed deputy director of the zone's administrative committee and concurrently general manager of its general corporation.

In the year since he took charge of the Tianjin development zone, he has completed the work in such fields as making preparations for and working out plans and designs for the establishment of the zone, holding related talks and signing contracts, and organizing the construction of the zone. At present, in the section of the zone where the first-phase construction was undertaken, infrastructural facilities such as roads and water, electricity, and heat supplies have been basically completed and industrial building floorspace totaling 108,000 square meters has been put into operation. Twenty industrial projects are expected to go into operation this year. Important CPC officials, such as Peng Zhen, Wan Li, Li Peng,Hu Qili, and Gu Mu have inspected the Tianjin development zone one after another. They highly praised Zhang Wei for the work he had done.

Zhang Wei knows how to make the proper use of personnel. Through a job-invitation system, he recruited and promoted more than 200 people who had special skills and knowledge and were highly energetic, quick, and efficient in work. Among them, those under 35 comprised 60 percent; working personnel with a university or college education constituted 85 percent; and some 100 people could independently hold trade talks with foreign businessmen using a foreign language freely. This phenomenon can be considered rare in present-day China. Moreover, the important departments of the development zone have been manned with highly capable officials. Zheng Huaan, who studied in the Soviet Union and obtained a doctorate in electronics in the 1950's and studied in the United States and earned a master's degree in systems engineering in the early 1980's, did not have the opportunity at a defense industrial enterprise in Tianjin to give full play to his talent for quite some time in the past. After assuming office in the development zone, Zhang Wei determinedly transferred him to the zone as chief economist through a process of observation and study.

Wang Shuzu, first deputy general manager of the development zone, was formerly general manager of the Tianjin second construction company for the Luan He-Tianjin water diversion project, which had made a name for itself throughout the nation. Ye Disheng, another deputy general manager, is an expert in electronics with high prestige in China. These capable persons are separately in charge of the zone's planning, choice of projects, and construction of infrastructure facilities. It was precisely through the efforts of these intelligent and capable persons that a contract was signed in 4 days in the Tianjin Development Zone on the "container repair plant" project, a project on which the Hong Kong Hop Cheong shipping company and China's Ministry of Communications had failed to reach agreement in 2 years; a contract was signed in the Tianjin Development Zone within 3 days on the project for the 4- to 8-tiered circuit boards produced by the Tiansea company of the United States, a project on which no agreement had been struck in other parts of the country after talks which had lasted for 1 year; and a contract was signed in the zone within 2 days on the project for the plastic mold tools of the Japanese (Munekata) company, a project on which no agreement had been reached after 4 years of trade negotiations.

"Make Things Convenient for the Investors and Let Them Make Profits"

Zhang Wei is not the sort of a man eager for quick success and instant benefits. He held: In doing economic work, we must keep the general goal in sight and handle affairs in an enlightened way. The slogan he raised for the Tianjin Development Zone is, "Make things convenient for the investors and let them gain profits." He set strict demands on all units under the zone's jurisdiction and prohibited them from playing underhanded tricks, such as wantonly forcing water and electricity charges up and arbitrarily collecting foreign exchange earnings.

A Person Capable of Managing State Affairs

Some coastal cities in China "are skinning" the inland provinces. However, Zhang Wei advocated that considerate treatment should be given to the poor inland province and autonomous regions. He maintained: Without the raw materials and support of the Chinese hinterland, the development zone cannot last long. He provided funds to run training courses for Ningxia's cadres engaged in foreign economic relations and trade and personally led delegations to Ningxia, Xinjiang, and Nei Monggol to encourage the latter to set up intensive-processing bases for their raw materials in the Tianjin Development Zone with their output value, profits, and taxes going to related provinces and autonomous regions. His propositions met with objections from some people at a mayor's work meeting. However, Zhang Wei retorted: "In assessing the Tianjin Development Zone, we must see how many regions the zone has brought along rather than exclusively judging whether or not the land mass measuring over 30 square kilometers is prosperous." This idea of Zhang Wei was well received by inland provinces and autonomous regions. A middle-aged high-ranking CPC official said: "Zhang Wei is a person capable of managing state affairs."

A man of resource and astuteness, Zhang Wei has a boldness of vision in doing things. Loans at an annual interest rate of 10.8 percent are used to carry out the construction of infrastructure facilities of the development zone. So careful calculation and strict budgeting should be practiced in every accounting. Land levelling required nearly 2 million cubic meters of earth. Zhang Wei proposed the use of public bidding. The government of Tanggu District wherethe development zone is located proposed to undertake the whole project at a price of 12 yuan for every cubic meter of earth and to use local trucks to remove the earth, asking for a considerable sum in management fees. Otherwise, the development zone trucks would be banned from entering the boundaries of Tanggu District. Zhang Wei refused these seemingly harsh, extortionary terms. After telling the public security bureau director about the matter, Zhang Wei said: "I will charge head-on against those who block the development zone's trucks." Subsequently, at a meeting attended experts and scholars, he raised the matter once again. This promptly aroused the indignation of the meeting participants. Officials from the Tanggu District had to see Zhang Wei late at night to beg for mercy and agreed to the zone's proposal for inviting bidders to undertake the land levelling project. As a result, the land levelling fee for every cubic meter of earth turned out to be 10.7 yuan. This saved funds for the zone and caused the official from the Tanggu District to yield willingly.

Zhang Wei is keen on making friends in all quarters. In his opinion, more friends mean more sources of information and with more information sources, it will be easier to handle business dealings in a flexible way. He maintains close ties with many overseas scholars who frequently provide him with the latest economic information. He regularly invites young and middle-aged economists from higher education institutions in Beijing and of the Academy of Social Sciences to provide the Tianjin Development Zone with consulting services. More often than not, Zhang Wei talks freely and to his heart's content with four young economists at Nankai University, dubbed the "four warrior attendants," asks them to ponder major issues concerning the development zone, providing funds for their studies.

Under Zhang Wei's leadership there is a brain-trust research office headed by a 29-year-old director, an office with a staff of just seven people whose average age is just 30. They are professionals in law, economic management, international banking, systems engineering, Chinese, and journalism. They often provide Zhang Wei with high-quality research materials for making major policy decisions.

Of China's 14 coastal cities designated for development, only Shanghai and Tianjin have the right to approve industrial projects involving investment under U.S. $30 million each. The other cities only have the right to examine and approve projects using U.S.$5 million each in investment.

The central government and the Tianjin municipal government empowered Zhang Wei to approve industrial projects with an investment amounting to no more than U.S. $20 million, to directly send telegrams inviting overseas business firms and people without asking permission from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and to approve visits abroad by zone personnel. On that account, a well-qualified high-ranking official in Chinese politics said to the reporter, "Tianjin's Zhang Wei is a young man who is worthy of closer attention and full of promise."

COAL PREDICTED TO REMAIN MAJOR SOURCE OF ENERGY

HK130839 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST (BUSINESS NEWS Supplement) in English 13 Feb 86 p 5

[By Paul Sham]

[Text] China will still depend on coal as its major source of energy over the next 15 years despite the country's mounting activity in oil and natural gas exploration, a Hong Kong conference was told yesterday. Joint Authors Mao Jianxiong and Liu Caiquan of China's Tsinghua University said in a paper presented to the conference coal will account for not less than 70 percent of the country's primary energy production in that period. The three-day conference on "Pacific rim coal: consumption, production, trade and technology", is sponsored by Pasha Publications of the U.S.

The writers said China's rich coal reserves and rapid increase in production have made the fuel the country's dominant energy source. China plans to double production from the 1980 level of 600 million tons to 1.2 billion tons in the year 2000. By 1984, its proven coal reserves reached 781.5 billion tons, making the country one of the largest coal producers in the world. China has 53,000 coal mines, among which 500 are state-run, 2,500 province owned, and 50,000 collectively or individually run small mines.

Since 1949, the authors said, coal production has accounted for 68.5 per cent of China's primary energy output, and climbed to 73.7 per cent in 1983. Raw coal production totalled 847 million tons last year, second-highest of any country in the world and more than 26 times output in 1949.

The authors said industry is the main user, accounting for 46.6 per cent of total coal consumption. Some 20.3 per cent goes to power generation, 18.1 per cent to domestic use, 10.6 per cent to cooking, and 4.4 per cent to railway locomotives.

In view of the continuing emphasis on coal as the major energy source, efficient use of the fuel and environmental protection will be the major factors affecting its development in the years ahead, they argued. In contrast to an energy utilisation efficiency rate of more than 50 per cent achieved in developed countries, China has so far managed to attain only 27 per cent efficiency. And the thermal efficiency of industrial furnances and kilns as well as domestic stoves stands as low as 20 to 15 per cent.

The uneven distribution of mines in China underlines the need to upgrade China's technology and management in this respect, the writers added. While most mines are concentrated in northern areas, such as Shanxi, Inner Mongolia and Xinjiang, the major consumers are found in industrial area in northeast and southern China. These industrial areas, including Guangdong, Guangxi, Hunan and Jiangxi, have deposits of low-grade coal, such as lignite, oil shale and anthracite which are difficult to burn with conventional equipment. Further development of combustion equipment which can utilise low-grade coal is therefore necessary. So far, more than 2,500 fluidised bed boilers, which burn low-grade coal, are operating in China, but they are being manufactured in growing numbers, with more than 240 units produced in 1984.

FOREIGN MINISTRY SPOKESMAN RESPONDS TO QUESTIONS

Soviet Hijacker To Be Tried

OW210914 Beijing XINHUA in English 0843 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 21 (XINHUA) -- China will exercise jurisdiction over a hijacker of a Soviet civilian aircraft and institute court proceedings against him and bring him to trial.

This was announced by a Foreign Ministry spokesman here today in response to journalists on how China would treat the man who hijacked a Soviet civilian aircraft on December 19, 1985. The spokesman said the forthcoming trial was "in compliance with the Chinese law and the relevant international conventions prohibiting unlawful seizure of aircraft." "The judicial organs of China have, upon investigation and interrogation, found that Mr. Alimuradov Shamil Gadzhi Ogly, the co-pilot of the aircraft, had committed the crime of unlawful seizure of a civilian aircraft. The Chinese Government holds that the above-mentioned crime of the hijacker is not only forbidden by the relevant international conventions but also in violation of the law of China," the spokesman said.

After the Soviet civilian aircraft was hijacked and landed in Chinese territory on 19 December 1985, the Chinese Government, in order to ensure the safety of the aircraft and people on board, took effective and immediate measures by giving all necessary assistance to facilitate a safe and prompt return of the 42 Soviet passengers, crew members and the hijacked aircraft back to the Soviet Union, the spokesman added.

LIAOWANG VIEWS NEW GORBACHEV ARMS PROPOSAL

HK200739 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 6-7, 10 Feb 86 pp 46-47

[Article by Li Qinzhen: "A preliminary Analysis of the New Soviet Disarmament Proposal" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] On the morning of 15 January, just as a White House press officer told reporters that "there will be no great changes in the Soviet position on the disarmament talks before its national party conference," in the Oval Office not far from the press briefing room, Secretary of State George Shultz hurriedly delivered to President Reagan a letter from Gorbachev that had just been received.

The letter contained a new Soviet disarmament proposal. Some 3 hours later, the Soviet news agency TASS made this new proposal public. Gorbachev's new proposal took the world at large by surprise. At the core of the "package plan" was that, "on the precondition that both sides refrain from developing, testing, and deploying offensive space weapons, the United States and the Soviet Union will completely destroy nuclear weapons in the next 15 years."

According to Gorbachev's argument, this plan will be carried out in three stages. The next 5-8 years will be the first stage. Both the Soviet Union and the United States will reduce by half the nuclear weapons that can reach the other side's territory, and the warhead ceiling is to be fixed at 6,000 for each side. Meanwhile, both the United States and the Soviet Union must suspend all nuclear tests and destroy all the medium-range nuclear weapons deployed in Europe. Moreover, the United States should pledge not to supply other countries with more nuclear weapons. Britain and France should also undertake commitments not to expand their nuclear forces. The 5-7 years starting not later than 1990 will be the second stage. Both the United States and the Soviet Union will continue to carry out the 50 percent reduction plans by destroying their medium-range and tactical nuclear weapons. They are not allowed to study or develop nonnuclear weapons and mass destruction. The other nuclear states should also suspend their nuclear tests, freeze their strategic nuclear weapons, destroy their tactical nuclear weapons, and dismantle the nuclear weapons deployed in other countries. The major industrialized countries should join in the agreement on banning offensive space weapons. The 5 years prior to 1999 will be the third stage. All nuclear states in the world should eliminate all nuclear weapons by working out special procedures for destroying, and verifying the destruction of, these weapons.

As far as the contents are concerned, Gorbachev's proposal is a total disarmament plan mixing the old plans with the new, other people's ideas with his original creations, and a persistent stand with tactical changes. Its prominent features are as follows:

IT PUTS FORTH A CLEAR-CUT TIMETABLE. First, the plan puts forth a general timetable, that is, "By the end of 1999 nuclear weapons will have ceased to exist in the world." In the last 15 years of this century the work of freezing, dismantling, destroying, and verifying the destruction of all nuclear weapons, from strategic to tactical ones, will have been completed. Second, in the entire process of reducing and destroying nuclear weapons, it has defined three 5-year stages. In light of the progress, each stage can be lengthened or shortened by 2-3 years. In his new proposal Gorbachev has put forth a clear-cut timetable for disarmament lacking in the previous disarmament proposals of Soviet leaders.

IT INCLUDES ALL FIELDS OF DISARMAMENT. The previous disarmament proposals were usually presented in the form of a single item. Even the so-called disarmament package plan included only a few limited fields. Gorbachev's new proposal, however, includes all major and separate items, such as nuclear weapons of all types, space weapons, chemical weapons, conventional military forces, the new generation of weapons systems, and the problem of verification. A disarmament plan this comprehensive is the first in the history of disarmament.

IT INVOLVES DISARMAMENT BY MANY COUNTRIES. In his new proposal Gorbachev still regards the United States and the Soviet Union as the main targets of disarmament, with the principal aim of reducing U.S. superiority through disarmament and preserving Soviet superiority. Moreover, Gorbachev has also brought other nuclear states and the major industrialized states into the orbit of complete disarmament. On the question of nuclear disarmament, Britain, France, and China are to reduce their nuclear weapons at a later date (starting from the second stage) than the United States and the Soviet Union but, by freezing and reducing their nuclear weapons in the second and third stages, their nuclear weapons will ultimately be destroyed simultaneously with the United States and the Soviet Union.

On the question of reducing conventional weapons, the countries taking part in the "Central European disarmament talks" have been drawn into the disarmament process. On the question of space weapons, the major industrialized states, including Britain, France, the FRG, and Japan, have also been included. In essence, Gorbachev's new proposal tries to mix bilateral with multilateral disarmament and, by having more participants to the disarmament talks, to use multilateral disarmament to play down bilateral disarmament. This tactic represents a new development from the previous attempt to bring Britain and France into the orbit of U.S.-Soviet disputes over medium-range nuclear weapons.

IT TAKES OVER DISARMAMENT SLOGANS OF OTHER COUNTRIES. The contents of Gorbachev's new proposal largely look familiar but they are couched in slightly different terms. It continues to use or takes over disarmament proposals of some other countries and dishes them up in a new form to the advantage of the Soviet Union. First, taking advantage of the idea that "the United States and the Soviet Union should take the lead in reducing nuclear weapons," it proposes that both the United States and the Soviet Union should concentrate on reducing their strategic nuclear weapons and medium-range nuclear weapons in the first stage and announces that the Soviet Union will extend its unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests by 3 months. Second, taking over the slogan of "completely and thoroughly destroying nuclear weapons," it puts forth the objective of eliminating nuclear weapons on earth by the end of this century to enable human society to enter an era without nuclear weapons in the 21st century. Third, taking into account the demand for "separate British and French nuclear forces from the reduction of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe, it proposes that the United States and the Soviet Union should first reduce and destroy their medium-range nuclear weapons deployed in Europe, and that British and French nuclear forces should be frozen in the second stage and destroyed in the third. Fourth, accepting the suggestion on the need to "carry out on-site inspection and verification of the reduction of nuclear weapons and chemical weapons," it proposes the use of technological means and the adoption of international procedures to supervise and verify the restriction and destruction of nuclear weapons, chemical weapons, and other mass destruction weapons on the spot. Fifth, taking advantage of the sentiments of a majority of countries against a U.S.-Soviet arms race in space and their obstruction of the "star wars" program, it takes as a precondition for total disarmament a "ban on the development, testing, and deployment of offensive space weapons" and calls on both parties to reach an agreement on banning the development of space weapons in a vigorous attempt to turn this into a "multilateral agreement which all the major industrialized states have a duty to join."

Such an all-embracing disarmament plan put forth by Gorbachev at the beginning of the International Year of Peace is undoubtedly a new peace gesture. His strategic intentions are chiefly as follows:

TO TAKE THE INITIATIVE IN THE DISARMAMENT TALKS. Gorbachev made this new proposal the day before the fourth round of the U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks started in Geneva. This put the United States off guard, making it impossible for the United States to consider, or to make, counterproposals before the talks. For this season, this round of disarmament talks will be brought into the orbit of specifically studying and discussing this new proposal, as the Soviet Union intended, thus giving it the initiative in talks.

TO WIN THE PROPAGANDA WAR AGAINST THE UNITED STATES. Gorbachev's "high-pitched" plan is a continuation of the propaganda war launched by the Soviet Union before the U.S.-Soviet summit last year. It is the second round in the political offensive the Soviet Union launched with the aim of winning more extensive support from world opinion and projecting the image that the Soviet Union is devoted to disarmament and peace, thus showing that the Soviet Union is superior to the United States in the propaganda war.

TO FURTHER ISOLATE AND ATTACK THE UNITED STATES. Taking over the previous disarmament proposals and slogans of Western countr s, Gorbachev's new proposal caters to the demands of Western Europe with the aim of inducing the countries in the Western alliance to exert pressure on the United States, splitting the West's position on the disarmament issue, and weakening the U.S. possition in the talks.

TO WEAKEN THE TRENDS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF SPACE WEAPONS BY THE UNITED STATES. In its new proposal Gorbachev takes as a precondition for total disarmament a "ban on the development of space weapons" with the aim of forcing the United States to choose between reduction of nuclear weapons and development of space weapons so that the United States, afraid to incur the charge of sabotaging the disarmament talks, may have to give up research into, and development of, space weapons.

Gorbachev's new disarmament proposal has put the United States in a very defensive position. In a statement issued 3 hours after the proposal was put forward, the Reagan administration held that "at first glance some aspects of this proposal are constructive." It expressed a "welcome" for the proposal and said it "will conduct a meticulous study on this together with the allies." However, it also said that "many of its contents are no different from the previous Soviet stands and still cause grave uneasiness" and even "contain traps on numerous issues." Therefore, on the one hand, the Reagan administration has stepped up its studies on the new proposal, and taking advantage of the Geneva disarmament talks, has insisted that the Soviet delegates supply detailed contents in order to ascertain the situation in the Soviet proposal and to find a basis for making a counter proposal; on the other hand, it has upheld its original stand and refused to make any concessions on some crucial issues, such as space weapons, nuclear tests, and the SS-20 missiles deployed in Asia. On the space weapons issue, the day after the new Soviet proposal was put forward, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger categorically indicated: "The Reagan administration is determined to carry out its Strategic Defense Initiative." On the issue of banning nuclear weapons tests, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said: "Testing is of great importance to us. Therefore, it is necessary to conduct tests according to the original plan." On the medium-range missiles issue, Shultz said: "We have always considered this issue on a global basis and not only on a European scale. For this reason, it is necessary to take the Asian region into consideration." Moreover, in the face of the new propaganda war launched by Gorbachev, the Reagan administration is actively considering launching counterpropaganda. In addition to making an issue of the Soviet proposal itself, Weinberger also proposed to "revel more facts about Soviet violations of treaties: in a vigorous attempt to reverse the defensive situation the United States has been in since the propaganda war started.

By and large, Gorbachev's new disarmament proposal is of some positive significance. It can play a certain role in easing East-West relations and promoting U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks. However, it should also be noted that the principled stand advocated in the proposal is far from that of the United States and even runs in the opposite direction on the space weapons issue. The proposal has also complicated matters by involving other nuclear states and the major industrialized states. For this reason, the positive role of Gorbachev's new proposal will be very limited. It will be possible to reach a tentative agreement on some issues that have a relatively sound basis and on which both parties hold a relatively similar stands. However, the possibility of reaching an agreement on some crucial issues is still not distinct in the near future. The key to whether or not human society will enter an "era without nuclear weapons" in the 21st century lies in whether or not the two nuclear superpowers can take the lead in earnestly practicing what they preach.

OW201844 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Guangzhou, February 20 (XINHUA) -- A conference on investment considerations, co-sponsored by the Accounting Society of China and the Hong Kong Society of Accountants, will be help here from February 28 to March 2. Jiang Yueming, an official in charge of the conference, said the 400 participants will represent Australia, Britain, Canada, China, France, Hong Kong, Pakistan and Singapore.

Among others, Robert May, president of the International Federation of Accountants, and John Miller, President of the Confederation of Asian and Pacific Accountants, will attend the conference. They will discuss investment in China and the related laws, taxation, accounting and foreign exchange. The conference will help foreign accountants learn about China's policies on investment and related questions, in light of China's growing economic ties with the outside world.

Jiang said that between 1979 and 1985 China approved 2,300 joint ventures with Chinese and foreign investment, 3,700 cooperative enterprises, 120 enterprises with exclusive foreign investment and 25 offshore oil exploration projects. China has used foreign loans, investment and commodity credit equal to 15.6 billion, 4.6 billion and 1.3 billion U.S. dollars, respectively. Since last year, Jian said, China has tightened its money market, improved macroeconomic control over investment and readjusted some previous related policies. The measures, as pointed out by Chinese leaders, are aimed at better carrying out the policies on opening to the outside world and the current economic reform, according to Jiang.

OFFICIALS CALL FOR CONTINUED AID TO MANILA

OW200939 Beijing XINHUA in English 0848 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 19 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz and Defence Secretary Caspar Weinberger today called for a continuation of U.S. economic and military assistance to the Philippines. They made the remarks amid growing demand in Congress that the United States cut off economic and military assistance to the Philippines because of suspected fraud in its elections. The Philippine National Assembly declared on February 15 that Ferdinand Marcos had won the election against opposition candidate Corazon Aquino.

Testifying before the Senate Budget Committee, Shultz said, "We have on our hands a very delicate and difficult situation and we don't want to jump at it with precipitous action." "Whatever the near-term problems of the Philippines, there is no doubt that the presence of a strong, democratically oriented military is in our best interests," he said. Urging "care and a little patience:, he said President Ronald Reagan's tough statement on the election had sent a strong signal to the Philippines. Reagan has said the election results were tainted by fraud.

Weinberger told another hearing that pending military and economic aid to the Marcos Government included pay for Philippine workers at the U.S. Subic Bay Naval Base and Clark Air Force Base and that a cutoff would hurt them badly. White House officials reportedly said that it was unlikely that President Reagan will make an important decision in his policy towards the Philippines before special envoy Philip Habib winds up his fact-finding mission there and reports back to Reagan.

The U.S. Senate today passed a non-binding resolution condemning the Philippines presidential election as fraudulent and called on President Reagan to personally convey this concern to President Marcos. The resolution, passed by a vote of 85-9, said, "The recent presidential elections in the Philippines were marked by such widespread fraud that they cannot be considered a fair reflection of the will of the people."

The United States has maintained that the two military bases in the Philippines are among the most important U.S. bases in the world, providing a major Pacific way station between the United States, Southeast Asia, the Mediterranean and Indian Oceans. This year the United States is to supply Manila with military aid totalling 54.7 million dollars and economic aid of 181.2 million. The Reagan administration has requested economic aid of 125.6 million dollars and military aid of 102.7 million for the country next year.

STIFFER CURBS HEAT UP TRADE FRICTION WITH EC

OW210743 Beijing XINHUA in English 0636 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 20 (XINHUA) -- Trade friction between the United States and the European Community are heating up again after the U.S. Administration stiffened curbs on semi-finished steel imports from Western Europe. The U.S. trade representative's office announced Wednesday it plans to enforce, "in the most restrictive possible way," a 600,000-ton-a-year ceiling that the U.S. Administration imposed on January 1, after the two sides failed to agree on a "voluntary" export-restraint arrangement.

The latest U.S. action comes on the heels of a European Community decision February 15, to retaliate against Washington's January 1 ceiling by restricting American shipments of fertilizer, coated paper and animal fats to Western Europe.

Deputy U.S. Trade Representative Alan Woods said new American action is "in response to the EC's unjustified, unnecessary and unfriendly retaliation". He also regretted that the EC took this dispute beyond steel into other industry sectors. EC officials contend that the 600,000-ton limit is "unjustified" and said it would cost European community steel producers 48 million U.S. dollars. But the U.S. argues it is in keeping with a trade agreement reached in 1982.

Washington's action is expected to intensify trade friction between the two partners. In addition to steel, the two sides are quarrelling over restrictions on U.S. soybean exports and regulations affecting meat exports. Under the tougher enforcement of the steel limits, the European Community will be restricted to 150,000 tons per quarter. Officials estimated that this U.S. retaliatory action -- which could indirectly affect some finished steel imports as well -- could reduce European steel shipments to the U.S. by as much as 200,000 tons a year from the estimated current 4.9 million tons. By comparison, the European Community restrictions will cut U.S. sales of fertilizer by 23 percent, animal fats by 20 percent and coated paper by eight percent, or about 43 million U.S. dollar in annual U.S. sales.

ANGOLAN REBELS WIN $15 MILLION IN MILITARY AID

OW200910 Beijing XINHUA in English 0647 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 19 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Administration has decided to provide Angolan rebel leader Jonas Savimbi with military aid, according to reports in Washington newspapers. Testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday, Assistant Secretary of State Chester Crocker said, "The decision has been made and the process is in motion" to send weapons to Jonas Savimbi, leader of the Union for Total Independence of Angola (UNITA).

The purpose of the U.S. aid, according to U.S. Administration officials, is to prevent the Angolan Government from achieving "a military solution". Crocker stressed that the administration views the aid as helpful in putting pressure on the Angolan Government to be more forthcoming in negotiations and not as an end itself. The value of the aid is reported to be about 15 million U.S. dollars, and will come out of Central Intelligence Agency funds. The weapons provided for UNITA may include anti-aircraft and anti-tank missiles. Crocker asked for a clear statement from Congress supporting a U.S. commitment to "negotiated resolutions in southern Africa", but warning that the U.S. will not tolerate other countries taking advantage of this policy to pursue their own aggressive ends.

Savimbi came to Washington last month asking for U.S. military aid. During a meeting with Savimbi, U.S. President Ronald Reagan pledged to be "very supportive" in the Angolan guerrilla leader's efforts to topple the Angolan government. The issue of providing aid to Angolan rebels has been debated by the U.S. Administration for several months, with the Central Intelligence Agency and the Pentagon reportedly pushing for a large covert military operation in Angola. However, a number of congressmen have urged President Reagan not to provide aid to UNITA, saying the U.S. involvement would damage relations with governments throughout Africa and undermine fundamental U.S. policy objectives in southern Africa.

USS ENTERPRISE ARRIVES AT PHILIPPINE BASE

OW201705 Beijing XINHUA in English 1512 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Manila, February 20 (XINHUA) -- The USS Enterprise, a nuclear-powered aircraft carrier, arrived at the U.S. Subic Naval Base Monday, a local newspaper BULLETIN TODAY disclosed today. The Enterprise was accompanied by two submarines and 11 escort ships, sources here said. About 30 vessels of the U.S. Seventh Fleet are expected to call on the Subic base this month Philippine Navy sources said Wednesday.

The United States has two major military bases in the Philippines, the Subic Naval Base and the Clark Air Force Base. A U.S. Marine official, who declined to be identified, disclosed that the U.S. military bases in the country have been on red alert since the February 7 presidential election. But local naval officers explained that the presence of the U.S. vessles from the Seventh Fleet in the Philippine territorial waters is routine. Early reports said that since February 11, about 12 warships of the Seventh Fleet had made "brief visits" to the Subic base and that about 17 more are scheduled to pay such visits to the base before the end of the month. Most of these ships will come from Singapore, Guan, and Hong Kong. Residents here said they were surprised by the sudden arrival of the American warships, many of which came before the February 7 election.

NEW SOVIET OFFENSIVE AGAINST AFGHAN REBELS

OW170926 Beijing XINHUA in English 0913 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Text] Islamabad, February 17 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet-Karmal troops started yesterday a major offensive against the strongholds of the mujahidin (holy-war fighters) in the eastern province of Nangarhar near the Pakistan border. Pakistani newspaper THE MUSLIM today quoted reports from Afghanistan as saying that the fighting was so near the Pakistan border that citizens in Peshawar could hear artillery fire for several hours.

It was reported that the new offensive was sparked by the increased mujahidin's activities in the area a few days ago. On February 14, the mujahidin attacked a Soviet Army column there. At least 10 Soviet troops were killed and a number of armored vehicles destroyed. PAKISTAN TIMES reported today that the Afghan mujahidin have shot down two Soviet fighter planes in stiff resistance against a major attack launched by the Soviet-Karmal troops in Farah Province of western Afghanistan last week. Meanwhile, the mujahidin blew up four Soviet tanks and one armored vehicle of a Soviet-Karmal troops' convoy by mines near Zaranj city of Nimruz Province in southwestern Afghanistan. 14 Soviet-Karmal troops were killed and 10 others wounded.

SRI LANKAN TAMILS URGED TO DROP STATE DEMANDS

OW202112 Beijing XINHUA in English 2045 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Colombo, February 20 (XINHUA) -- Addressing the opening ceremony of the sixth session of parliament, today Sri Lankan President Julius Jayewardene urged Tamil Militants to "abandon the demand for the creation of a separate state of Eelam." Jayewardene stressed in his speech that his government "cannot barter away the unity of the country in solving the ethnic problem". The Tamils, who make up [figure indistinct] percent of the population of the country and maintain a majority in the northern and eastern provinces, claim that they have been discriminated against by the Sinhalese majority. The Tamil separatist organizations have long been seeking to set up a separate Tamil state, "Eelam", in the two provinces.

Instead, Jayewardene repeated the government's offer of devolution of authority to create provincial/district councils and invest the chief executive of each council with the powers of a minister within his area of authority. He urged all Tamil militant groups and persons engaged in acts of violence to desist from such action, and close down their training camps at home and abroad. "We cannot compromise with violence. Whatever form of agitation is used to continue a program to attain political goals must be non-violent," he said. "As part of the process of normalization," the president promised, "security operations in the affected areas will be progressively reduced (?until) the emergency lifted."

Two rounds of talks were held between the government and militant Tamil groups in Thimpu, capital of Bhutan, last year in an attempt to reach a solution to the ethnic problem. However, the proposals put forth by the government were rejected by the Tamil groups on the grounds that they "fell far short of the aspiration of the Tamils." The Tamil United Liberation Front (TULF) worked out a proposal last year in response to the government proposals, demanding the merging of the northern and eastern provinces as a "Tamil linguistic state." The government, in its final response to the TULF's proposal, rejected it as "totally unacceptable." The government's observations were despatched to New Delhi on January 30 and published officially in the parliament here today. Indian Foreign Secretary Romesh Bhandari, who has attempted to organize indirect talks between the Sri Lankan Government and the Tamil groups after the failure of the Thimpu talks, has reportedly postponed his visit to Colombo originally scheduled for February.

UK PARLIAMENT DEBATES SDI PLAN PARTICIPATION

OW201351 Beijing XINHUA in English 1319 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] London, February 19 (XINHUA) -- Britain's opposition foreign affairs Denis Healey today compared the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) to a genie, and said it was time to "get the genie back in the bottle."

Opening a debate in parliament on an opposition motion criticizing British support for the U.S. SDI plan, known as the "star wars" program, Healey said "this may be the last chance of stopping the arms race." He described the SDI scheme as "a massive roadblock on the way" to thrashing out an arms control agreement and warned of the great dangers it might bring to world peace. Healey pointed out a contradiction in U.S. policy. U.S. Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger has said that the "star wars" plan, once realized, would give the United States a monopoly similar to that which it held in nuclear weapons in 1945, while President Ronald Reagan has stated that the United States was not seeking military superiority. He criticized the British Government for hatching a "grubby conspiracy" enticing scientists to leave peaceful programs to work on U.S. military projects.

Defense Secretary George Younger defended British participation in the "star wars," saying he saw no reason why missile research should be a stumbling-block to arms control. He urged instead more British companies to seek opportunities to participate in the U.S. program. The motion was defeated by a vote of 272 to 202 in the Conservative-dominated House of Commons. The debate in Parliament was held immediately after U.S. SDI Director Lieutenant General James Abrahamson concluded a three-day visit here in an attempt to enlist British support for the U.S. program.

Local press reports indicated that the U.S. envoy and British Defense Ministry's chief scientific adviser Richard Newman signed a series of instructional documents on the implementation of the Anglo-American memorandum of understanding outlining Britain's participation in the SDI research program. The memorandum was signed last December. So far, there are reportedly some 10 research contracts being negotiated between Britain and the United States.

SFRY LEAGUE OF COMMUNISTS CONDEMNS NATIONALISM

OW190918 Beijing XINHUA in English 0720 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Belgrade, February 18 (XINHUA) -- The Central Committee of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) called for solid unity within the party in exposing the "reactionary nature" of nationalists, the Yugoslav news agency TANJUG reported today.

Dusan Dragosavac, member of the Presidency of the LCY's Central Committee, said that the heightening of the anti-communist and antisocialist activities in Yugoslavia corresponds to particular situations at home and abroad. Addressing a working commission of the LCY's Central Committee, Dragosavac said the unity of the party would be destroyed if the LCY is organized on the basis of nations and state. In carrying out Marxist principles, he said, the party should put down pressure from any kind of group that seeks to emphasize its own interest.

During the two-day meeting which ended today, the Commission stated that local nationalism is a phenomenon of Yugoslavia that features anti-communism and anti-socialism. According to the report, the meeting was to analyze the social and ideological roots of various nationalisms and to discuss ways to fight against them. Another member of the party Presidency, Hamdija Pozderac, said national liberation cannot be realized without class liberation. He claimed that all kinds of nationalism are anti-Yugoslavia.

Talks With Zhao Ziyang

OW210924 Beijing XINHUA in English 0904 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 21 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang today reaffirmed China's willingness to work with other Third World countries in support of "South-South" cooperation. He made these remarks during talks here this morning with Colonel Maayouia Ould Sid Ahmed Taya, chairman of the Military Committee of National Salvation and head of the state of Mauritania.

"Over the long term," Zhao said, "there exists tremendous potential for South-South cooperation. Developing countries must unite and explore ways to coordinate their actions." Such unity on the part of developing nations would "give an impetus to North-South dialogue," promoting an "earnest and realistic approach" between the developed countries and the Third World, he said. At present, he said, there are two inseparable problems facing the world -- "peace and development." "Third World countries must be allowed to develop if world peace is to be maintained," he said. "And if the old international economic order is not changed, it will be impossible to solve the problems of Third World development.

Taya outlined Mauritania's domestic and foreign policies and its economic rejuvenation plan for the years 1985-1988. He said the Mauritanian Government is "working for the promotion of friendly cooperation and unity between the Arab world and African countries." And he endorsed the just struggles of the peoples of Palestine, Namibia and other southern African countries. In addition, he said, his country supports South-South cooperation and the "establishment of a new international economic order." Zhao told Taya China appreciates Mauritania's "policies of peace, neutrality and non-alignment. We congratulate the Mauritanian people on their economic rejuvenation under the leadership of Chairman Taya." He said "China attaches great importance to developing its friendly cooperation with African countries and supports the African people's struggle against imperialism, colonialism, hegemonism, South Africa's racial discrimination and Israel's policy of aggression and expansion."

Zhao said friendly relations and cooperation between China and African countries are "based on a sound footing. China wants to develop these relations based on the principles of mutual support, equality and mutual benefit." According to an official close to the talks, both Zhao and Taya said they were "satisfied with the friendly cooperation" between China and Mauritania since the two countries established diplomatic relations in 1965. They exchanged "hopes for more such cooperation," the official said. Also participating in the talks were Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, Minister of Public Health Cui Yueli and Mauritanian high-ranking officials accompanying Taya.

PLO OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON RELATIONS WITH JORDAN

OW210402 Beijing XINHUA in English 0112 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Tunis, February 20 (XINHUA) -- Faruq Qaddumi, chief of the PLO Political Department today expressed surprise at Jordanian King Husayn's speech yesterday in which he declared that Jordan has decided to end the political coordination with the PLO in the search for peace in the Middle East.

Speaking at the opening ceremony of the Supreme Council of the General Federation of the Palestine Workers, Qaddumi said that the PLO highly values the special relationship between Palestine and Jordan. The PLO executive Committee will make a deep study of King Husayn's speech before making a public announcement on this issue, he added. Since the Jordan-PLO joint agreement was reached last year, he said, the PLO has worked sincerely for its implementation despite all difficulties, as the PLO placed hope in a bright prospect in the relations between Jordan and Palestine.

Qaddumi condemned the U.S. for its obstruction in the process for peace in the Middle East and declared: "We recognize all relevant U.N. resolutions on Palestine. But if the U.S. and Israel ignore our legitimate rights, we can only continue our armed struggle as our response". Qaddumi also appealed for calling an Arab summit meeting to overcome all differences and strengthen the Arab unity.

SONS OF SHANGHAI OFFICIALS EXECUTED, IMPRISONED

HK191424 Beijing ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1016 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Shanghai, 19 Feb (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- This afternoon the Shanghai Municipal Intermediate People's Court called a mass rally to announce the order issued by the Shanghai Municipal Higher People's Court to execute Chen Xiaomeng [7115 1420 5536], Hu Xiaoyang [5170 2556 7122], and Ge Zhiwen [5514 1807 2429], who have been convincted of rape and indecency. They were then escorted to the execution ground and shot.

The other defendants, namely Chen Bingland [7115 0393 6745], Chen Danguang [7115 0030 1639], and Kang Yefei [1660 0048 7236], were sentenced to 20 years imprisonment and deprivation of political rights for 5 years, 5 years imprisonment, and 3 years imprisonment, respectively.

Since 1981, these six criminals have, by pretending to help their victims to get transfers or by pretending to invite them to parties, lured many women to the homes of Chen Xiaomeng, Chen Binglang, and Chen Danguang, where they committed rape and multiple rape and acted indecently toward their victims. In all, they raped 9 women, had illicit sexual relations with 34, and acted indecently toward another 8. These criminals were arrested by Shanghai's municipal public security departments after November 1984. After conducting many investigations and visiting the victims in seven provinces and two cities, the judicial departments have grasped every detail of the case.

On 1 February, the Shanghai Municipal Intermediate Peoples Court delivered its verdicts at the first trial. Chen Xiaomeng, Hu Xiaoyang, and Ge Zhiwen were sentenced to death and deprived of their political rights for the rest of their lives. All six criminals except Kang Yefei refused to accept the verdicts and immediately appealed to the Shanghai Municipal Higher People's Court. After conducting further investigations, the higher people's court rejected their appeal on 17 February and upheld the verdicts arrived at the first trial.

Since the six defendants are children of cadres or even senior cadres, the handling and trial of the case has aroused public concern in Shanghai. The public, however, generally agrees that the court verdicts are just.

Commentator's Article

HK210922 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Feb 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "All Are Equal Before the Law"]

[Text] Six criminals guilty of rape and hooliganism, including Chen Xiaomeng, Hu Xiaoyang and Ge Zhiwen who once ran rampant in Shanghai, have been sentenced to death or imprisonment. This stern punishment by the people's judicial organ gladdens the people. The six are workers, cadres and sons of Shanghai's high-ranking officials. The end of this group of criminals manifests the principle of "all are equal before the law."

Ours is a socialist country under the leadership of the Communist Party. In China, no citizens are allowed the privilege of being above the law. The overwhelming majority of the children of our cadres, including those of senior cadres, are good and law abiding. But there are indeed a few who consider themselves privileged and flout the law and discipline, committing crimes and outrages that make people boil over with anger. They think they have "a strong backing" and are exempt from any questioning. In their view, even the law should bend before them. But they are wrong.

In some places and units where the party work style is not healthy, the law may seem to be weak, allowing some bad people to run amuck. But now the whole party from the Central Committee downward is determined to correct its work style. The dignity of the law is firmly guarded and the principle of "all are equal before the law" carried out. "Good will be rewarded with good, and evil with evil. It is not that nothing is rewarded, but that the time is not ripe; when the time is ripe, everything will be rewarded." Those who attempt to trample on the law, bully the people, and carry out criminal activities that injure the interests of the state and people on account of having "a strong backing" or "behind-the-scenes backers", are bound to reap what they have sown.

As China experienced a long period of feudalism, remnants of the feudal practice of "implicating one's relatives when one commits a crime" may well survive within the Communist Party and influence public opinion. But, after all, the people oppose this, and communist ideas and socialist law do not tolerate it. Everyone should be responsible for his actions. Whoever commits a crime should be punished. There should be no implication of innocent people. Anyone who has committed crimes should not be punished too leniently or too severely only on account of his family background or social position. His family members or parents, if they are indeed involved in the crime, should of course be investigated, and their responsibilities determined. But if they are not involved, no false charges should be imposed upon them. The children of senior cadres should not be looked upon differently only because a few of them have brought disgrace to this group of people. In a word, no implication of any form should be made. All should be based on facts, and the law is the yardstick. That is the way we approach and handle issues in order to correct the party work style and perfect the legal system.

LEADING CADRES URGED TO SET GOOD EXAMPLES

HK201332 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 6 Feb 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "The More Senior the Leading Cadres, the Stricter the Standards They Should Set for Themselves"]

[Text] In bringing about a turn for the better in party work style and social conduct, central organs should set a good example and leading cadres, senior leading cadres in particular, should manage to take the lead. Meanwhile, in handling major and important cases of law and discipline violations, we should have the courage to tackle difficult problems and strictly investigate and handle the cases of law and discipline violations committed by senior cadres and their children, or celebrities. These combined efforts will give impetus to the work of the whole party and state and initiate a fundamental turn for the better in party work style and social conduct.

Our party is a proletarian political party and fighting force with strict discipline working for the communist cause. The party "enforces discipline" among its members and cadres "more strictly than among ordinary people" ("Selected Letters of Mao Zedong," p 110). In our country, laws are enacted under the leadership of the party. Leading cadres, particularly senior leading cadres, should take the lead in abiding by state laws. Generally speaking, because leading cadres have been in the ranks of revolution for quite some time and received more education from the party, they have stronger political consciousnesses. Therefore, they ought to be more willing to abide by the law and observe discipline. They have enormous power in leading the four modernizations program and reforms. The party and the people place high hopes on them. It must be said that most leading cadres have lived up to the expectations of the party and the people.

However, a small number of leading cadres who are corrosively influenced by bourgeois decadent ideology and feudalistic backward ideas have let the party and the people down. Instead of using the power in their hands to work for the interests of the state and the people, they have abused their power for personal gain and encouraged unhealthy tendencies. Some people have even gone so far as to take the road to crime or to abet their children in violating the law and disciplinary codes. Although these violations of the law and discipline have been committed by specific individuals, they have corrupted social values, damaged the party's image, and aroused strong dissatisfaction among the masses of people, thus creating an exceptionally bad impression.

Setting strict demands on leading cadres, in particular senior leading cadres and their children and strictly handling the case of law and discipline violations committed by some of them will boost and not lower the party's prestige, because this indicates that our party is a party which serves the people wholeheartedly and that our government is a clean, honest, upright, and capable one. Therefore, they have the courage to wage a struggle against the corrupt phenomena and the degenerates in its ranks by relying on the masses of people. This will help the people support the party's propositions more convincingly and vigorously work for the four modernizations program and reforms under the leadership of the party with one heart and one mind. This is precisely how our party moves "god" (that is, the masses) by imitating the foolish old man who tried to remove the mountains by "continuously digging each day." This is also precisely whey we have confidence and hope.

USE OF VETO WITHIN PARTY DECISIONS OPPOSED

HK200445 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Feb 86 p 5

[Article by Feng Yue: "The Veto Power Should Not Be Exercised Within the Party"]

[Text] The UN Security Council has an important principle known as the powers unanimity principle, otherwise known as the veto power principle. The approval of any resolution at the Security Council requires the unanimous consent of the five permanent members of the council. A dissenting vote from any one permanent member of the council would veto the resolution.

The merits and demerits of this principle in the Security Council's handling of international affairs will not be discussed here. I would only like to say that there is a similar kind of veto power principle in the political structure of some of our party organizations. For instance, the appointment of a cadre by the party committee, which has the approval of majority of the committee members, could be shelved simply because one individual voiced a different opinion. The punishment of a comrade by the party committee, which was approved by majority of the committee members, could not be carried out because one person disagreed. As for undertaking some matters or solving a problem, as long as one person exercises the veto, then matters will usually be left unattended and problems unresolved. This condition is not new in some units.

The existence of differing opinions within the party is a normal phenomenon. What is to be done with these differing opinions? They should be put forward and fully deliberated in order to obtain a consensus. However, when no consensus can be obtained, then they should be put to a vote and be resolved in accordance to the principle of the minority subordinating itself to the majority. This is our party's democratic centralism. If dissenting opinions are not handled in accordance to the rules of the party's internal life, that is, they are not fully deliberated in meetings nor put to a vote on the proper occasions, and one man's opposition can overrule a decision already approved and in fact pased by a majority of people, then how can one talk of democratic centralism?

"The party committee needs to maintain unity!" The unity of members of the party committee is certainly very important. However, first of all, unity must be based on principles, and not left without principles. Second, the purpose of unity is to promote our cause and to perform our work even better, and not unity for the sake of unity. If, in order to preserve unity in form, attention is not paid to principles nor distinctions made between right or wrong, and anyone can exercise the veto, then nothing will be resolved. Of what value is this kind of unity?

"The opinion of the minority must be respected!" It is necessary to respect the opinions of the minority. When discussing problems, the minority must be allowed to fully express its opinions; when making decisions, it should be allowed to retain its views. However, respect for the minority's opinion should not lead to nullification of democratic centralism. Differing views of a minority or even of individual persons should not stop work. Respect for the minority's opinion should not be used as an excuse to tolerate certain people's exercise of the veto power within the party and thus, overrule a decision approved by the majority.

It should be noted that in some party organizations, the veto is usually exercised by the first or second in command, or by senior influential members. Their position easily leads to a situation where one or two persons make all the decisions. If these comrades do not take care, they could consciously or unconsciously sabotage regulations on normal political life within the party and cause enormous damage to the party's work. We should not forget the lessons of history.

'OPENING UP,' 'OPEN DOOR' DIFFERENCES OUTLINED

HK210309 Beijing GONGREN RIBAO in Chinese 14 Feb 86 p 3

[Article by Wu Cheng: "Opening Up to the Outside World and 'Open Door'"]

[Text] Reading a newspaper, I came across in an article the phrase "open door" [men hu kai fang 7024 2073 7030 2397] being used, instead of opening up to the outside world [dui wai kai fang 1417 1120 7030 2397]. The article said: "Since we opened the door, the international literature market has dazzled us...." I think this is inappropriate wording and that it is likely to cause political and ideological confusion.

We all know that opening up to the outside world is our country's basic state policy. The leaders of our party and state have time and again expounded on the idea that this is not an expedient measure, but a state policy that will be implemented for a long time. This policy on the one hand sums up and draws on the historical lessons from the parochial, arrogant policy of closing the country to international intercourse a policy which caused us to reject advanced foreign science, technology, and management know-how and to lag behind. On the other hand, the policy of opening up is a policy that our country urgently needs to implement in order to realize the four modernizations. Practice in the past few years has eloquently proved that this basic state policy has promoted economic and technological cooperation and scientific and cultural exchanges between China and other countries, has pushed forward the development of our foreign trade and tourism, and has facilitated our country's economic structural reform. It is an entirely correct state policy. Therefore, this state policy is supported and well accepted by the masses of people and foreign friends.

However, this state policy differs in essence from the so-called "open-door" policy that emerged in modern history. We should by no means confuse the two.

A reading of modern history reveals that the so-called "open-door" policy is a policy which the United States upheld in the past in order to threaten China. At the end of the 19th century, the major European powers, such as Britain, France, Germany, Italy, and Russia, and also Japan, had already divided up China into their respective "spheres of influence." The United States, a country situated far away on the other side of the Pacific, came too late and did not get its own "sphere of influence." Therefore, in September 1899 the U.S. Government presented a note to the above-mentioned powers saying that the United States recognized the powers' "spheres of influence" in China, but that it wanted to enjoy all the privilege and interests in all those "spheres of influence," including free trade and low tariffs. The next year, the United States presented another note to those countries, upholding the application of the "open-door" policy to "all areas in China." At that time, in the rush to divide China, the United States was elbowed out by Britain, France, Germany, Japan, and Russia. In essence, it put forth that policy as a means to compete with those powers for "spheres of influence" in China. Its aim was to turn China into its and all those countries' common semicolony which they could trample on at will. In 1922, in the "Nine-Country Accord" signed at a Washington conference, the United States continued to adhere to and to reiterate that policy. It was not until World War II, when the U.S. position of dominating China alone had already taken shape, that it gave up that policy.

From this we can see that the "open-door" policy was a policy of aggression which put the Chinese people in a powerless position and which divided up China's territory and sovereignty among the imperialist powers. The implementation of that policy caused China to sink deeper into the position of a semicolony. However, the policy of opening up to the outside world that we are implementing today is one that we carry out with the initiative in our own hands. It is a policy that our country's government has adopted in accordance with the principle of maintaining independence and taking the initiative in our own hands and the principle of equality and mutual benefit in order to continue to strengthen our economic relations, trade, and technological exchanges with various countries in the world, including developed and developing countries, and in order to vigorously draw in foreign capital and import foreign technology. It is aimed at speeding the progress of our country's socialist modernization. The two policies are diametrically opposed. Therefore, this is not a problem of wording. Moreover, failing to make a distinction between them is apt to lead to a blurring of the line of demarcation between the two kinds of things that are diametrically opposed in nature.

The erroneous wording that has emerged in some newspapers shows that during the new historical period, while implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world, it is necessary to guide people in learning something about modern and contemporary history. By so doing, our understanding will be deepened, and we will be able to correctly implement the party's correct line, principles, and policies that have been formulated since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

JINGJI RIBAO ON ECONOMIC REFORM, MORAL STANDARDS

HK190939 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 pp 1, 2

[Article by Zhang Zhenru: "Reform of the Economic Structure and Social Moral Standards"]

[Text] As a social ideology, morality arises from the economic relations of people involved in production and exchange. Any social ideology would give rise to moral standards compatible with our own level of economic development and economic relations. This is also true in socialist society. Our economic reform and moral standards are unified and complement each other. In our economic reform, the moral standards should embody the following fundamental principles:

The Principle of Working To Get Rich

Wealth was a term no one dared talk about in the past, given the influence of "left" thinking. It seemed that to get rich was to follow the capitalist road and would lead to polarization. Only poverty seemed to be the true feature of the working people and represented socialism. This is not right. The basic aim of the revolution led by the proletariat is to emancipate the masses of working people from oppression, exploitation, and from a life of poverty. Poverty is the last thing that represents socialism. Therefore, we should inform, allow and encourage production workers to get rich, and enable a number of people to get rich first, so that they can lead the way to common prosperity. Affluence is an obligation that should be embodied in socialist moral standards.

The wealth that we advocate is wealth obtained through work. Wealth is the end and work is the means. It represents a principle. Whether or not we get rich through work marks a fundamental difference between the socialist way of getting rich and the capitalist way of getting rich. By getting rich, we do not mean doing so in the way Engels said of capitalist society: "Everyone will naturally become a speculator. This is to say that everyone will try to get something for nothing, sacrifice others' interests for his own, cash in on others' distress, and seize every opportunity to get rich....This type of speculation will reduce history and mankind to a means of satisfying the greed of adventuresome speculators" ("Collected Works of Marx and Engels," Vol 1 p 615). To get rich in the economic activities of socialist enterprises and individual works, we must rely on working hard, on improving matters of management and operation, upgrading technology, and on improving labor productivity. To get rich, we must also proceed from the conditions of our country and the realistic level of productivity, fight amidst hardships and build the country industriously and thriftily. In no way can we be stained with bourgeois ideas and operation styles. Still less can we get involved with profiteering, cheating, the supply of substandard goods, the manufacture of fakes, and the performance of any deed that is harmful to the state and the people, against professional ethics and even in violation of law and discipline.

The Principle of Integrating the Interests of Individuals With Those of the State and the Collective Integrating the interests of individuals and those of the state and the collective is an important principle embodied in socialist moral standards. In socialist society, workers' individual interests are fundamentally at one with the interests of the state and the collective. Socialism cannot leave individual interests alone. It should fully satisfy the interests of workers where possible. Simply emphasizing the interests of the state and the collective without regard to the individual interests of workers can hardly encourage people to work hard for socialism. It can only dampen workers' enthusiasm.

Meanwhile, individual workers must also strive to uphold the interests of the state and the collective. Lenin said: "In the light of fundamental Marxist thinking, socially developed interests surpass proletarian interests; the interests of the whole worker movement surpass those of individual sectors among workers, or at the individual stage of a movement." ("Collected Works of Lenin," Vol 4, p 207) Socialist construction is an undertaking that covers the fundamental interests of every worker. It is where workers' state and collective interests lie and also where workers' fundamental individual interests lie.

Therefore, in socialist economic construction, any economic sector or individual should not, for the sake of the interests of a small group or an individual, throw the interests of the state and the collective to the winds and get involved with things harmful to the interests of the state and collective.

Where the interests of the state and the collective clash with those of a small group or an individual, we should make readjustments on the basis of the principle of doing everything to help the development of social productivity; set the relations straight between the state, the collective and the individual; insist on putting the interests of the state and the collective first; and let the interests of a small group or an individual be consciously subordinated to those of the state and the collective. This Marxist principle has not gone out of date and will never become outdated. We oppose the moral concept that uses respect for individual material interests as an excuse to worship the idea of individual supremacy and egoism.

The Principle of Serving the People

The socialist economy is a planned commodity economy. Under socialist conditions with the energetic development of the production and exchange of commodities, and the introduction of distribution according to work, we should admit that given different material interests, there inevitably exist, to varying degrees, conflicts of economic interests between economic sectors and between individuals. Under socialist conditions, denying these conflicts of economic interests in the present process of carrying out economic reforms and disallowing production workers to strive to obtain more financial income and work remuneration through improving economic results is unrealistic.

As the first stage of communist society, socialist society should recognize appropriate financial rewards obtained by workers on the basis of what they contribute to society. But it cannot advocate the capitalist idea of worshipping money and cannot let the relations of money be the dominant factor guiding people's economic activities, so that money is considered as everything had "everything is oriented toward money." The socialist economic system must be subject to reform. This is a self-improvement in order that the system be guided by fundamental socialist economic laws. While consciously applying the law of value in developing the socialist commodity economy, we must guard against letting the principle of exchange of commodities permeate political, ideological and moral realms. In regard to remuneration for work, we must still uphold the principle of combining spiritual encouragement with material incentives and insist on serving the people and being responsible to the people. Otherwise, the correct direction of socialist economic construction will be thwarted.

The Principle of Mutual Help and Cooperation

Morality regulates the relations between people in line with the economic principles recognized by a given society under different social systems. In our economic reform, we make appropriate readjustments about the relations between people and between departments, in line with the principle of doing everything to arouse people's enthusiasm for production and striving to revitalize the economy. For example, among economic enterprises, to ensure the thorough implementation of the economic responsibility system, measures calling for a system of contracting for production, rational competition among various economic enterprises, and so forth are taken. It should be noted that in socialist society, the relations between the leadership and the led, between management personnel and workers, and between various economic departments in economic enterprises are, fundamentally speaking, relations of mutual help and cooperation. The relationship between our socialist enterprises and workers is not one between the employer and the employed. Enterprise management personnel and producers are on equal footing politically and economically, and are all masters in socialist economic construction. Competition between our enterprises is socialist competition and is absolutely different from rivalry between capitalist enterprises intriguing against each other. Socialist competition does not exclude efforts to learn from each other, mutual support and mutual help among various economic enterprises, on the basis of unity and friendship. Only by properly readjusting relations between people and between economic departments in line with correct principles can our cause of economic construction further thrive.

And only in this way can we strengthen unity and cooperation among socialist production workers.

Moral standards for socialist society are an important part of the effort to build socialist spiritual civilization. They should keep in step with the development of the reform of the socialist economic system. In the process of economic reform, we must not only oppose those stereotyped patterns and "left" concepts and overcome ideological obstacles standing in the way of progress, but also guard against an evil trend toward disregard for socialist moral principles. This is to ensure the healthy development of the economic reform and to obtain fruitful results in building socialist matieral civilization and spiritual civilization.

CHANG JIANG DEVELOPMENT SEEN VITAL TO ECONOMY

HK190947 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 2

[Article by Wang Hui: "Give Play to the Role of the Chang Jiang as a Powerful Economic Link"]

[Text] The Chang Jiang irrigates stretches of fertile farmland along its banks and nurtures the growth and development of the modern Chinese economy. The Chang Jiang valleys covering 1.8 million square km and stretch from the west, which is abundant in natural resources, to the Shanghai economic region, where modern industry is concentrated. In the middle and upper reaches of the Chang Jiang valleys, the pace of development in hydropower and mineral resources along the banks has been stepped up, and the economy of its southwestern areas is rapidly developing. In its middle and lower reaches, a modern economic corridor is developing. Half of the country's cities with a gross annual industrial output value exceeding 10 billion yuan in 1985 are distributed here. However, the Chang Jiang's role as a powerful economic link is far from fully utilized. It is said that the Chang Jiang "should have 100 boats floating on it, but now one finds only a solitary sail drifting along." The shipping volume in the lower reaches of the Chang Jiang is only that of the Grand Canal. This is out of proportion with the Chang Jiang's role and water transportation situation. It is necessary to realize the economic modernization of the Chang Jiang's powerful role as an economic link. To achieve this, we must take a firm grasp of the two key tasks -- structural reform and scientific planning and management.

First, it is necessary to eliminate the restrictions of the system through reform. Because of the restrictions in the administrative relationship between "departments and areas," the economic links between the economies of various localities in the river valleys have been weakened or severed, the flow of commodities has been reduced, and some of the transportation means have been idle. This not only harms the development and expansion of the transportation system of the Chang Jiang. The Chang Jiang transportation system is a complicated one. Several sections include highway and railway transportation along with water transport. The contradictions and malpractices in the system are conspicuous here, and in-depth reform must be carried out to improve circulation and efficiency. At the same time, it is necessary to promote the development of regional and transregional markets, as well as the development of commerce and comprehensive transportation and communication organizations, so that the economy of the river valleys may rely to a greater extent on and make better use of the role of the Chang Jiang as an economic link.

Second, it is necessary to expand therole of the Chang Jiang as an economic link through scientific planning and management. By scientific planning, we mean a good blueprint. We should do our best to take into consideration using water transport on the Chang Jiang in its middle and lower reaches is relatively slow and broad.

The potential is great for a good plan. At the same time, it is required in our scientific planning to harness and use the Chang Jiang in a comprehensive way. It is necessary to improve efficiency in an installation even without changing the technological situation. It is necessary to improve transportation means and infrastructure as quickly as possible and to upgrade transportation capability on the Chang Jiang despite a limitation of funds.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES CONTROL OF CONSUMPTION FUNDS

HK191220 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Feb 86 p 5

[Article by Guo Wenru and Yang Zejun of the State Statistical Bureau: "Consumption Funds Have Increased Too Rapidly, Macroeconomic Control Needs Strengthening"]

[Text] At present, the major problem in our country's economic development are that the total social demand exceeds total social supply and that the consumption funds have increased too rapidly. This is a major factor causing an imbalance between supply and demand.

Our consumption funds can be divided up into two parts according to the form of use, namely, the consumption of people as individuals and the collective consumption of the society. The former accounts for about 90 percent of the total consumption funds, while the latter accounts for about 10 percent. Therefore, the volume of the consumption of the people as individuals is the main factor affecting the increase in consumption funds.

From 1984-1985 Our Consumption Funds Rose Too Quickly

According to our initial calculation, during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the average annual rate of increase in our consumption funds was about 10 percent (calculated at comparative price levels), the same being the case in later contexts, a little more than the annual average rate of increase in our national income in the same period. The consumption of our urban and rural people rose by about 8 percent on average each year, substantially more quickly than any other period since the founding of the PRC. This has brought about a change in the long-standing situation of attaching importance only to production and construction, neglecting people's living standards, and having an excessive rate of accumulation.

If we analyze the Sixth 5-Year Plan period by dividing it into sections, during the first 3 years the consumption funds rose by about 8 percent a year on average, a little more quickly than the national income which rose by 7.6 percent per year in the same period. This resulted from the reduction of the capital construction scale and the readjusment of the proportional relation between consumption and accumulation. During this period, we also paid attention to readjusting our product mix, reduced the growth rate of our heavy industry, speeded up the development of our agricuture and light industry, and thus maintained a basic balance between the production of, and demand for consumer goods.

From 1984-1985, there was a clear change in the situation. On the one hand, the scale of our investment in fixed assets expanded quickly. In 1984, our accumulation rate exceeded 30 percent; in 1985, it was greater than 32 percent. On the other hand, our consumption funds also rose sharply. In 2 years, the consumption funds rose by 13 percent on average each year, not only much more quickly than it did in the first 3 years, but also more quickly than the national income, which rose by 11 percent a year in the same period. During the 2 years, the social labor productivity (the per capita national income of all the laborers in our society calculated at comparable price levels) grew by 8 percent a year on average, but the consumption of the people all over the country rose 11-odd percent a year on average.

From the point of view of the relations between the increase in consumption demand and that in the production of consumer goods, during the 2 years, the gross output value of agriculture and light industry rose by 12 percent a year on average, but the real income of the people rose by about 17 percent a year on average. From the point of view of the relations between supply and demand in the market, the ratio of the rate of increase in the sources of social retail commodities to that in social commodity purchasing power quickly rose to 1 to 1.6. The inability of the supply of consumer goods to meet the demand was relatively serious. This showed from another angle that during those 2 years, the total social demand exceeded the total social supply.

Consequence of the Excessive Increase in Consumption Funds

First, the prices of goods rose in our markets. Over the past 2 years, except for those commodities whose prices were readjusted by the state in a planned manner, the prices of some consumer goods of daily use and some foodstuffs have continued to rise. This was in the main a consequence of the shortage of supply in meeting the demand. Second, the consumption demand that people can afford has exceeded the supply. This will inevitably cause the surplus purchasing power of the people to rise sharply. By the end of 1984, the per capita balance of purchasing power of our people rose to 180 yuan at the end of 1984 from 67 yuan in 1980. After deducting the factor of inflation, the average annual rate of increase was 22 percent. Such a big latent purchasing power will place a relatively great pressure on the balance between supply and demand of commodities in our market in the future. Third, the rate of increase in our consumption funds was greater than that in our production. This will inevitably give rise to a sellers' market in the relations between commodity supply and demand. "The mud on carrots is not removed when carrots are selling well." Some production enterprises failed to pay attention to improving their product quality, increasing the variety of their products, or speeding up the substitution of new generations of products for old ones, but paid attention only to pursuing greater output of products and even produced their products haphazardly. This is not only detrimental to improving the economic results of our enterprises, but has also harmed the interests of our consumers and thus directly hindered the smooth development of the economic structural reform and the coordinated development of the national economy.

Strengthen Macromanagement and Achieve a Balance Between Supply and Demand

Our country is still a developing socialist country. The living standard of our people is still a basic one of having enough food and clothing. We are making efforts to reach a comparatively good living standard by the end of this century. In order to control the consumption funds within an appropriate range of increase, we should pay attention to the following:

First, the rate of increase in the staff and workers wages generally should not be greater than that in our labor productivity. There should be a rational ratio between them. We should perfect our wage funds control, strengthen the supervision of our banks, sort out irrational wage costs, and end the malpractice of competing with one another in paying bonuses in cash or in kind indiscriminately. We should strengthen our guidance and control over collective enterprises and regulate the units that have excessive wage costs through taxation.

Second, we should rationally readjust peasant incomes through our price policies. In the short run, we should adopt the policy of regulation that basically maintains the general level of the purchase prices of agricultural and sideline products, but allows the prices of different kinds of products to rise or fall. We should reduce through taxation the excessive increase in income caused by the decontrol of the prices of some agricultural and sideline products and some rural industrial products, in order to maintain a proper growth rate of our rural consumption funds.

Third, we should strengthen price management in our markets. In particular, we should pay attention to strengthening our management over individual industrialists and traders, prevent the practice of jointly pushing up prices and thus avoid the vicious cycle of price hikes pushing up wages and wage increases in turn pushing up prices.

PROJECTS SUBJECT TO APPROVAL BY CONSULTING ORGAN

HK2J1157 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 1

[Report by Lin Xi: "Important Capital Construction and Technological Transformation Projects To Be Examined by Consulting Organs Before Finalization"]

[Text] In view of the fact that many wrong decisions on capital construction projects have resulted in tremendous losses, all major construction and technological transformation projects to be initiated in the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan period are subject to examination by the China International Engineering Consulting Corporation, and no project is to be finalized solely by executive leaders at any level. This is an important reformatory decision unanimously adopted by the participants at a national conference on planning held recently.

From now on, the main duties of the China International Engineering Consulting Corporation are to screen applications for new projects and initiating technological transformation projects on behalf of the state, and to ensure that all projects shall be introduced on a scientific and reliable basis. In concrete terms, this means that the corporation, on behalf of the State Planning Commission, is to appraise and examine feasibility study reports on large and medium-sized projects and on those technological transformation projects with a value exceeding affixed limits, as well as the designs of large projects. On behalf of the State Economic Commission, it is to appraise some technological transformation projects with a value within a fixed limit. At present, the corporation is making arrangements to step up examination and evaluation of construction projects to be started in 1986 and in the "Seventh 5-Year" Plan period.

Founded in August 1982, the China International Engineering Consulting Corporation has been engaged in construction of the country and has done a great deal of valuable work in the past 3 years. For example, the corporation appraised and examined the feasibility study reports on more than 100 technological transformation projects and some capital construction projects, took part in drawing up the development plans for some open coastal cities and special economic zones and provided them with consulting services, and established relations with more than 30 engineering consulting organizations, banks, and companies abroad. At present, the corporation is composed of 39 subsidiary companies at home, providing professional engineering consulting services related to the fields of water conservation, electric power, coal mining, communications, the chemical industry, iron and steel, nonferrous metal, aeronautics, textiles, and construction. At the disposal of the corporation are 2,000 people, including 3,000 senior engineers with the ability of multi-disciplinary comprehensive evaluation.

In order to improve its service, the corporation is endeavoring to set up committees of specialists and specialized committees for different trades, with the aim of organizing well-trained specialists and scholars. At the same time, the corporation will also recruit foreign specialists to join its consulting business in the hope of becoming a firm providing the state with reliable data needed for correct decision-making.

Commentator's Article

HK201211 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO In Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "An Important Reform in Managing Construction Projects"]

[Text] Our newspaper today carries a report on the China International Engineering Consulting Corporation's involvement in examining and appraising construction projects. The news item reveals that from now on, all major construction projects are subject to appraisal and examination by specialists from the China International Engineering Consulting Corporation on behalf of the State Planning Commission and the State Economic Commission, and that a project will be listed in the state plan based on the overall consideration by the State Planning Commission and the State Economic Commission only after approved by a specialists's group appointed by the corporation, and no project is to be initiated otherwise. This is an important reform of the management of construction projects in China.

Since the founding of the PRC, we have successfully started many projects with reasonable plans, advanced technology, and good comprehensive economic results. These have played an important role in developing the national economy and improving the people's living standard. However, we have also run some investment projects which have brought poor economic results and caused tremendous waste. Among many others, two common problems were the insufficient preparatory work and the status quo of decision-making power held in the hands of administrative leaders alone. The method of appraisal by engineering consulting organizations that we are to practice will undoubtedly play a great role in overcoming these shortcomings and in further introducing the procedure of scientific decision-making regarding construction projects.

Tremendous waste may be caused if we fail to make sufficient preparations and thorough examination of a project and its design before it is started, thus resulting in repeated changes in the design and exceeding the project's budget. Due to the lack of a complete system of design standards, the State Planning Commission and Economic Commission have to shoulder a heavy work load and, in fact, can hardly carry out meticulous examinations of projects. Now that special organizations are appointed to assist the state commissions in charge to take care of the task of project examination, this will help strengthen the preparatory work of a project, enhance the quality of feasibility studies, and ensure that a construction project is run strictly in accordance with objective laws and procedures of capital construction.

Although in the past few years we have improved the decision-making procedure concerning construction projects, thus far we have not yet changed the situation in which decisions are made by administrative leaders alone. As a result, we are likely to pay sole attention to current needs, onesidedly emphasize the interests of our own areas and departments, overlook scientific proof, and thus can hardly make comparisons between different proposals. By practicing the method of appraisal by specialized consulting organizations, we will be able to give full play to the specialities of experts in various fields, pool collective wisdom, distinguish between rights and wrongs, and between superior proposals and inferior ones in light of the findings of thorough investigations and studies, and thus give overall consideration to the necessity and the feasibility of construction projects. This will be highly advantageous to macroeconomic control over the scale of investment in fixed assets and the improvement of social benefits and economic results.

Technological progress is being made every day, there are unprecedentedly abundant resources of information, and production is becoming more and more socialized and modernized. Therefore, in making any decision, it is necessary to depend on and give full play to the functions of brain trusts. A correct decision can only be made based on the integration of administrative power and brain trust organizations.

CHEN MUHUA OUTLINES 1986 TASKS AT BANK MEETING

OW210409 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1220 GMT 20 Feb 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Ji Honggeng and XINHUA reporter Chen Naijin]

[Text] Beijing, 20 Feb (XINHUA) -- At a national meeting today of the branch directors of the People's Bank of China, Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, called for broadening income sources, reducing expenditures, and improving economic efficiency. Financial work is vital to the overall national economy. The people's banks have become one of the major organs for regulating macroeconomics. It is essential to do successful financial work this year, the first year for implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Chen Muhua outlined the following guidelines for this year's banking work:

1. Stepping up and improving overall financial control, dealing with each case on its merits, and avoiding general treatment;

2. Continuing to control the increased demand for funds, improving the supply system, rationalizing lending practices, and giving due support to further economic development;

3. Slowing down the unrestrained growth of demand and promoting moderate growth in order to achieve practical results;

4. Balancing revenue and expenditure of credit and foreign exchange, stabilizing the currency, promoting coordinated economic development, and improving the economic structure.

Specific tasks for this year's banking work are:

1. Increasing savings deposits. It is necessary to moderately increase the number of savings banks and to test the contract system in operating these banks. It is possible to run savings banks in conjunction with large enterprises in downtown districts. Vigorous efforts should be made to attract savings deposits from rural areas, to expedite withdrawal of funds from circulation, and to gradually promote postal savings.

2. Making good use of funds, tapping resources of circulating funds, establishing an order of priorities for financial support, and satisfying the needs of production and currency circulation. In granting loans from the circulating funds, priority should be given to the development of energy, communications, transports, and raw and semi-finished materials. The service trades, the production of readily marketable daily necessities, and the development of export companies and large and medium-sized enterprises will also enjoy priority.

3. Tightening up on loans for fixed assets and consumption funds. It is necessary to tighten up on loans for the development of special economic zones and coastal open cities, to ensure that efforts to develop these areas will not be in vain, but will result in construction, production, and profit. On the other hand, financial support should be given to these areas in earning foreign exchange and developing an export-oriented economy.

4. Improving the financial service and increasing the flow of currency. In order to reduce dealings with large amounts of cash, it is necessary to extend check and bill settlement operations this year. We should also allow city banks to issue certified checks, introduce current deposit checks on a trial basis, promote transfer accounts in rural areas for the procurement of farm and sideline produce, introduce traveler's checks in tourist areas, and experiment with the bank draft system in a small number of cities. Commercial bills will be cashed and discounted on a trial basis in 10 cities this year, so that enterprises can pay up their mutual loan debts.

5. Enhancing the role of the central bank and stepping up financial management. Efforts should be made to consolidate financial institutions and dissolve those establishments currently in violation of relevant regulations. Local governments at all levels must not run local banks, and no individuals are allowed to operate banks or other financial institutions and engage in financial business.

The People's Bank of China should also tighten foreign exchange controls in 1986 to balance revene and expenditure of foreign currency. In addition, it should facilitate the circulation of funds, promote economic relations between various enterprises, expedite financial legislative work, exercise multilayer control, and arouse the enthusiasm of specialized banks and local branches of the central bank.

PEOPLE's BANK OFFICIAL ON BANK CREDIT POLICY

HK210211 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 7 Feb 86 p 1

[Report: "What Changes Are There in the Bank Credit Policy This Year? -- Liu Hongru, Vice President of the People's Bank of China, Made a Statement Yesterday"]

[Text] Is there any difference in the bank credit policy this year compared with last year? This is a matter of interest to people in economic circles. On 6 February the editorial department of this newspaper invited Liu Hongru, vice president of the People's Bank of China, to a forum and asked him to talk about such issues as the bank credit policy for this year. The forum was attended by the directors (managers) of more than 30 large and medium-sized enterprises in the capital.

Question: Will you please discuss the principles and policies on bank credit to be adopted in 1986? What the principal changes compared with 1985?

Answer: The general requirements for banking work in 1986 are as follows: It is necessary not only to tighten but also to improve macrocontrol over finance, to conscientiously implement the policy of dealing with each case on its merits, and to avoid uniformity, not only to continue to bring expanding demand under control but also to improve supply, to issue credit rationally, to support efforts at further invigorating the economy, and to maintain a suitable growth rate on the basis of striving for better economic results; and to strive for a balance between receipts and payments in credit and foreign exchange, to preserve currency stability, and to stimulate the coordinated development of the economy and the rationalization of the economic structure. In order to fulfill these requirements, it is necessary to carry out reform, to improve quality, and to gain new experiences in three aspects, namely rational use of funds, increased saving, and improved service.

In principle, the state credit plan for this year can only be maintained at last year's level. Compared with 1985, it is particularly necessary to improve the credit structure, to regard readjustment of the credit structure as the focus of our work, to ensure meeting of routine capital demand for economic development, and to strive, as far as possible, to use our limited capital in those projects and products that yield better economic results.

It is necessary to give top priority to supporting the development of the energy, transport and communications, and raw and semifinished materials industries; to support the textile and other light industries in manufacturing good-quality consumer goods that are readily marketable; to support those enterprises earning foreign exchange through exports in their production and purchases; to vigorously support large and medium-sized enterprises in invigorating themselves; and to ensure the fulfillment of the purchase targets for budgetary farm and sideline products and for extrabudgetary farm and sideline products which are marketable and are in keeping with state pricing policy. Resolute efforts should be made to tighten credit for those enterprises and construction projects which engage in disorderly production, which are duplicated, and which yield poor economic results.

Question: Will the bank exercise some flexibility while adhering to principles in its credit policy?

Answer: When an enterprise borrows money from a bank, it should meet certain conditions. Bank credit should be repaid when it becomes due. This principle is unchangeable. However, due to myriad changes in economic activities, the bank has a certain flexibility in granting or refusing credit and in deciding on credit amounts. The key to the flexibility lies in dealing with each case on its merits and extending credit to the superior enterprises, with due consideration to the socioeconomic results of different trades, products, and construction projects. For instance, there should be some differences in the amounts, time limits, and interest rates for the credit extended to some trades, products, and projects in light of the needs of the national economy and their ability to repay capital with interest. This flexibility will be somewhat expanded with the development of the planned commodity economy in the future.

Question: How will the bank overcome the phenomenon of "uniformity" in extending credit in its efforts to encourage the development of products needed on the market? Does the bank have any special policies toward enterprises with satisfactory economic results?

Answer: In extending credit, the bank has always encouraged enterprises to turn out readily marketable products needed on the market. In our planned arrangements for this year, we shall stress readjusting the credit structure and increasing the supply of circulating capital; deal with each case on its merits, extend credit to the superior enterprises, and give preferential treatment in both credit amounts and terms of enterprises with satisfactory socioeconomic results; and improve the circulating capital management methods, develop financial ties among enterprises and regions, and support lateral economic combination.

Question: What measures will the bank take to solve the problem of circulating capital?

Answer: The principal measures the bank will adopt are to vigorously increase savings and other kinds of deposits, to recall loans when they become due, and to increase the sources of credit funds. The increased capital should first be used to extend credit to industrial and commercial enterprises and to vigorously help them increase the output of readily marketable commodities and export commodities so as to meet market needs. Due to the limited amount of credit funds, it is impossible to meet all demands. The key question is to thoroughly understand the circulating capital needs of the enterprises and to adopt different policies according to their different socioeconomic results.

Question: Will the bank adopt a free credit policy in an attempt to invigorate the economy?

Answer: Ours is a planned commodity economy. The forms of credit and capital accommodation should still be subject to planned guidance. For this reason, we cannot adopt free credit. Judging from the orientation of the reform of the economic structure, state control over the enterprises will gradually switch from direct into indirect. Moreover, with the development of lateral economic ties among enterprises, the bank should take measures to stimulate capital circulation in a lateral direction. It can invigorate the accommodation of capital among enterprises through different forms of commercial credit and, subject to approval, the application of such means as commercial papers and bonds. In addition to the newly increased credit for technological transformation, the loans recalled should be used as far as possible in the technological transformation of large and medium-sized enterprises.

Question: How will foreign exchange control reflect macroeconomic management? What new measures have been taken to encourage foreign exchange earnings through exports and to restrict the use of foreign exchange through imports?

Answer: in 1986 we should strengthen and improve macroeconomic management over foreign exchange. The focus of our work is to encourage foreign exchange earnings, to speed up collections of foreign exchange, and to control the use of foreign exchange on the merits of each case. At the same time, we shall strengthen unified control over foreign exchange so as to maintain a balance between foreign exchange receipts and payments. In an effort to encourage exports, we should ensure credit supply for the production and purchase of export commodities provided that they are marketable on the international market. It is necessary to improve methods of retaining foreign exchange by enterprises so that enterprises earning foreign exchange can retain their due share. Efforts should be made to ensure the imports of software, advanced technology, crucial equipment, and goods and materials needed for construction and to restrict the imports of high-grade consumer goods and parts for assemblage. When borrowing money from abroad, the local authorities, departments, and enterprises should report to the People's Bank of China for examination and approval. They should also report on the use and repayment of the loans to enable the bank to bring the total amount of foreign loans under control.

Question: Enterprises are now using more and more clearing capital [qing suan zhi jin 3237 4615 6327 6855] and the situation whereby enterprises delay payments to one another and use large amounts of cash is quite serious. Does the bank have any solutions to these problems?

Answer: We shall take measures to improve service and to invigorate circulation. Vigorous efforts should be made to develop the means of credit circulation, to improve the account-settling system to make things convenient for customers, to popularize the settling of accounts within the same city by bills, to cash, discount, or rediscount bills of exchange, to expand the scope of settling accounts by checks and bills, to ensure the cashing of checks in the same city, and to experiment with the use of savings deposit checks and traveler's checks.

LEADERS WATCH SATELLITE-RELAYED TV PROGRAMS

OW202030 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1620 GMT 20 Feb 86

[By reporter Guo Diancheng]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 20 Feb (XINHUA) — A trial use of our communications and broadcasting satellite has shown that it yields better results in relaying television and radio broadcasts than the rented international communications satellite does.

The National Defense Science, Technology, and Industry Commission held an on-the-spot meeting on the trial use of the communications and broadcast satellite at the Beijing satellite ground station tonight. Tian Jiyun, Li Peng, Yang Dezhi, Yu Qiuli, Zhang Aiping, Hong Xuezhi, and responsible persons and experts of the departments concerned under the State Council enthusiastically viewed television programs relayed by China's communications and broadcasting satellite.

In celebration of the successful positioning of our communications satellite, Comrade Chen Yun wrote an inscription: Concentrate our force on the development of China's astronautical undertakings in self-reliance. After the on-the-spot meeting was over, Zhang Aiping wrote an inscription in big characters: "A lucky star shines from high above."

LI PENG ORDERS ACCELERATION OF PORT DEVELOPMENT

OW200545 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1445 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Dalian, 19 Feb (XINHUA) -- At the close of a national conference on port work, Li Peng, vice premier of the State Council, said today: It is imperative to take effective measures to step up our port work in order to ease the serious situation in which goods pile up at ports waiting to be shipped, while ships are docked waiting to be unloaded.

Li Peng pointed out: Marked achievements were made in port work in 1985, which have played a positive role in further opening the country to the outside world and developing industrial and agricultural production. In terms of the rapid growth of the export trade, however, our port work remains a weak link. From now on, we should stress effective measures to increase the handling capacity of various ports, strengthen plans for, and the management of, transporting imports and exports, and raise the level of port management.

In his speech, Li Peng affirmed the experience of experimenting with the delegation of Tianjin port management to Tianjin Municipality, holding that the experiment over the past 18 months was successful. The management of Tianjin port is delegated to Tianjin Municipality, and the port management system is now under dual leadership by both the Ministry of Communications and the municipality, with the latter playing the main role. Since the system was instituted, the port authority has been given greater decision-making power. As a result, the port now has more vitality, the enthusiasm of its workers and staff members has been raised, and its handling capacity has also greatly increased. At the same time, a lot of work has been done in technical transformation and renewal of equipment. The relationship between the port and the municipality has also been further strengthened. Li Peng said: The State Council has decided to delegate the management of the Shanghai and Dalian ports to lower levels this year, and to delegate the management of more ports to lower levels next year. When conditions are ripe, the management of ports will be systematically delegated to localities concerned.

Li Peng said: Our country now has a fleet of oceangoing merchant ships with a total shipping capacity of 17 million metric tons, and the size of the fleet is considerable by world standards. In shipping imports and exports, we must therefore try, in every possible way, to create conditions for making full use of our own ships and bringing their role into full play.

On giving play to the role of small and medium-sized ports, Li Peng called for changing the situation where big ports are very busy, while small and medium-sized ones stand idle. He called on relevant departments to plan the transport of some goods and materials through small and medium-sized ports, provided the flow of such goods and materials is in the correct direction.

At today's conference, the Tianjin port office, the Dalian port management committee, the Shanghai port office, and 18 other advanced ports were awarded certificates of merit for their outstanding achievements.

LI PENG ON IMPORTANCE OF TEACHER TRAINING

HK210223 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 12 Feb 86 p 3

[Report by Gao Xin and Fu Zhanwu: "While Expressing Festival Greetings to Teachers of Beijing Teachers University, Li Peng Stressed That To Carry Out Educational Work Well, We Should, First, of All, Run Teacher-Training Education Effectively"]

[Excerpts] On the morning of 11 February, Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, member of the Secretariat, and vice premier of the State Council, went to Beijing Teachers University to extend festival greetings to teachers, and held a discussion meeting attended by some middle-aged and young teachers.

Li Peng told the teachers: At present, our country is on the whole becoming more and more prosperous every day. Although we are still facing many difficulties, with the deepening of economic structural reform and educational structural reform, and further development of our country's economy, our educational undertaking will surely become more flourishing, and the working and living conditions of teachers will become better and better.

Li Peng repeatedly stressed: To carry out educational work well, we should, first of all, run teacher-training education effectively. As far as the State Education Commission is concerned, it should exert more efforts in teacher-training education.

After the discussion, Li Peng, deputy directors of the State Education Commission He Dongchang and Peng Peiyun, and others went to dormitories of teaching and administrative staff to pay a special visit to several old professors who were over 70.

YUAN BAOHUA, ZHANG JINGFU ADDRESS BUILDING FORUM

OW201439 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0830 GMT 20 Feb 86

[By reporter Ge Daxing]

[Text] Beijing, 20 Feb (XINHUA) -- Yuan Baohua, vice minister of the State Economic Commission, has pointed out: The policy "everybody makes contributions to the building materials industry" has been proven a correct practice in helping develop the building materials industry. This policy should also be applied to other economic departments.

Addressing today's first national work conference of building materials industry circles, Yuan Baohua said: The present situation in China's building materials industry is very good. The longtime acute contradiction between the supply and demand of building materials such as cement, plate glass, and others has begun to be alleviated. The result is inseparable from building materials departments' proposed policy of "everybody makes contributions to the building materials industry," which promotes technological and economic progress in the whole industry.

Yuan Baohua held that the policy of "everybody makes contributions to the building materials industry" is not an expediency, but an important policy that has strategic significance.

The policy enables the mobilization of various forces to accelerate the development of social productive forces, breaking down barriers between regions and departments and broadening interregional and interdepartmental economic cooperation. The policy also encourages competition and promotes technological progress. He said: Some economic departments have begun to break out of the go-it-alone type of operation, resulting in work activism that has never seen before. Practice shows that economic departments should follow the objective law of economic development. Attention should be paid to organizing and promoting production according to the development demands of a particular trade. Economic departments should fire up work enthusiasm for developing the economy to make our undertaking more prosperous.

Yuan Baohua stressed: The building materials industry is one of the basic industries affecting the overall national economy. Since it is an important industry, it should be given development priority. Building materials departments should therefore strengthen management. Special attention should be paid to promoting technological progress. The main emphasis of technological progress should be placed on developing China-made advanced equipment in order to change the backwardness of our technology in building materials industry.

Attending the meeting were leading comrades from regional building materials departments, enterprises, and administration organs of village and town enterprises; experts and scholars from economic and science and technology circles; and responsible persons from the departments and commissions concerned of the State Council. State Councillor Zhang Jingfu addressed today's meeting. He said: You gather here to suggest plans for the development of the building materials industry. This gathering itself is a manifestation of "everybody makes contributions to the building materials industry." He hoped that all would contribute to building materials industry with one heart and one mind, adhere to giving priority to quality, do a good job in multipurpose application, and pay attention to social benefits in order to provide more and better basic materials to revitalize our economy.

AUDIT FINDS EDUCATION FUNDS MISUSED IN PROVINCES

[Text] More than 80 million yuan ($25 million) of state education funds have been squandered by authorities in 12 provinces on noneducational projects, feasting or frauds, the State Audit Agency said in a nationwide circular.

A recent investigation covering 450 provincial and county education departments in Hunan, Shaanxi, Liaoning, Henan, Heilongjiang and seven other provinces discovered that education funds allocated to some 1,700 middle and primary schools had been diverted to other channels and squandered "fraudulently." The total of the misused funds ran to more than 82 million yuan.

More than 32 million yuan ($10 million) of the money had been spent by the provincial or city authorities on building their own offices, residences, and guesthouses or buying cars. Some even used the money as business capital to establish trading firms, the circular said.

In Shaanxi Province, some rural schools had to use old clay-built desks and stools in their classrooms because the money allocated for new furniture had been squandered by the local authorities on "buying cars and doing business." In Henan Province, the education bureaus in Yuanyang, Xinxiang, Fangcheng and Jiaxian counties went so far as to withhold 400,000 yuan ($125,000) allocated as cash subsidies for county school teachers and students and squandered the money of other things, the circular said.

Some provincial agencies were found to have falsified account entries to divert cash for education to other projects. According to the circular, more than 21 million yuan ($6.6 million) had been taken out of funds intended for education by nine provinces, causing serious difficulties in many schools. In Heilongjiang Province, county authorities withheld flood relief funds allocated to local schools and "transferred" the money to other items. As a result, the flood-damaged schools had to cut their teaching hours by half to allow new students into their few undamaged classrooms, the circular said.

A few counties were found to have squandered their education funds on touring and feasting in the name of "making inspections." One county in Henan Province spent more than 10,000 yuan ($3,100) on a five-day "inspection" of local primary schools, during which the 69 officials enjoyed luxurious dinners, drank 250 bottles of liquor and smoked more than 100 cartons of cigarettes -- all on education expenses.

Poor financial management in the provincial education departments had also led to corruption in schools. A Shaanxi county school's deputy headmaster, who was also the school's treasurer and cashier, pocketed 21,000 yuan ($6,600) in eight years without being detected by his superiors, the circular added.

The State Audit Agency is urging provincial authorities to reorganize their management of education funds and correct malpractices, according to GUANGMING DAILY.

JIANGSU GOVERNOR GU XIULIAN ON ECONOMIC GUIDELINES

OW200640 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Excerpts] According to a report by XINHUA RIBAO, on 18 February the Jiangsu Provincial People's Government held a meeting of its staff to transmit the guidelines of the national planning and economic work conference. Comrade Gu Xiulian spoke on three points concerning the implementation of the guidelines of the national conference and doing this year's work well.

1. It is necessary to conscientiously understand the guidelines of the national planning and economic work conference and further clarify the guiding ideology for this year's economic work. The national planning and economic work conference has correctly assessed the current economic situation, and it clearly put forward this year's tasks of economic construction and structural reform. Conscientiously studying the documents of the national conference, understanding its guidelines and making clear the guiding ideology will have a great influence on doing a good job in this year's economic work. Carrying out this year's economic work, we should continue to attach importance to solving the problem of total demand exceeding total supply in society in order to ensure the stable growth of the economy.

2. We should strive to do a good job in this year's planning and economic work in compliance with the guidelines of the national planning and economic conference.

We should further develop the rural economy, promote production of commodities in great demand, expand exports to create more foreign exchange, curtail the scale of fixed investment, increase revenue, stabilize commodity prices in the market, speed up reform and opening to the outside world, develop science, education, culture, public health and other social work, and strengthen the building of spiritual civilization in the economic field in order to have a good start in implementing the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

3. We should unify our understanding, improve our workstyle and perform our tasks in a better way.

Today's XINHUA RIBAO also frontpages an editorial entitled: "Further Making Clear the Guiding Ideology for This Year's Economic Work."

OW191032 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0100 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Excerpts] According to station reporter (Yuan Hui) and correspondent (He Shouxian), the municipal government yesterday held a mobilization meeting to speed up the construction of a new passenger railway station and the lines leading to it. The meeting firmly decided that all the units and residents in the project area be relocated by the first half of this year. The new passenger station is one of Shanghai's largest construction projects since the founding of the country. The project involves three counties and four districts. The project requires the relocation of 243 units and 7,300 residential households.

Mayor Jiang Zemin proposed at the meeting that the units and residents to be relocated should consider the whole situation and carry out dismantling and relocation according to schedule, and that the various districts, counties, and bureaus concerned should cooperate closely and solve well the actual problems of the units and residents concerned.

SHANGHAI: CITY-RURAL TRADE GROWS

OW181046 Beijing XINHUA in English 1031 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Shanghai, February 18 (XINHUA) -- Trade between Shanghai and its neighboring rural counties reached more than five billion yuan last year.

"They need each other," Rui Xingwen, secretary of the Shanghai Municipal Communist Party Committee, wrote in a local newspaper after a recent extensive tour of the rural counties.

Nearly 65 percent of the industrial firms in the 10 counties surrounding Shanghai produce parts for large urban factories.

Altogether the counties -- with a population of five million -- sold two billion yuan in goods and agricultural products to the city while the city -- with seven million people -- sold three (?billion) yuan in manufactured goods to the counties.

The counties' output value is growing at a faster rate than Shanghai's, although they last year generated only a little more than a sixth of the city's total.

Previously rural areas around Shanghai are rapidly industrializing to meet the growing demand for industrial products -- from within China and from abroad.

Last year farming and related enterprises in the 10 counties accounted for only one-fifth of the total output value, with the rest coming from industrial and service enterprises.

Rui said in the last five years more than half of those on the city's outskirts have left farming to work in industry, commerce and service trades. This has made farming more efficient, Rui said, as it has become increasingly done [as received] by households interested in agriculture -- and successful at it.

More than 4,400 such households specialize in farming and related businesses. According to Rui, each farmer in a household specializing in grain produces enough to feed up to 40 people a year, 11 times the figure produced by general farmers, who tend to work with far less equipment and training.

At present, residents of Shanghai's outskirts -- 5,700 square kilometers in all -- annually produce enough grain to feed themselves and the city's population for six months. In addition, two-thirds of the pork, poultry and eggs consumed in Shanghai are produced in the 10 rural counties, which also send the city cotton each year to last four months.

ZHEJIANG COMMENTARY ON IMPORTANCE OF AGRICULTURE

OW210613 Hangzhou Zhenjiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Station commentary: "Unswervingly Implement the Policy of Taking Agriculture as the Foundation"]

[Text] Since the convocation of the 3D Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has always placed agricultural production, the problems of peasants, and rural work in an important position. We can say that the recovery and development of the national economy started in the rural areas, and the reform of the economic structure also started in the rural areas. A series of reform measures have promoted the speedy and all-round development of the rural economy. The agricultural foundation today is much stronger than in the period prior to the convocation of the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. However, we must see that the solution of the food problem does not mean that agricultural production has been completely successful. At present, the foundation of agriculture is still quite weak. China is a big country with 1 billion people, of which 800 million are a rural population. We must never slacken our efforts to grasp agriculture because we have improved the situation in agricultural production.

At present there is an urgent need to reeducate cadres of various departments at all levels to take agriculture as the foundation and further set right the position of agriculture in the national economy. We should create public opinion advocating the importance of agriculture and stressing that farming is honorable. We should ask various departments to correctly estimate economic conditions in the rural areas and the peasants' ability to share their burdens. We should firmly establish the idea of serving the peasants and effectively reduce their burdens. In order to strengthen the agricultural foundation, we must increase our investment in agriculture. The increase of investment depends on many things. The central authorities and the provincial government will increase funds for investment in agriculture and various cities, prefectures, and counties should also increase such investment to the extent possible. However, the accumulation of funds in the rural areas is the most important thing.

The implementation of the policy of industry assisting agriculture is an effective way to adjust the interests of peasants engaged in various kinds of work and stablize the agricultural foundation. In 1985 the total funds from village and town enterprises used to assist agricultural production reached 150 million yuan, and the results were relatively good. In the future, we should persist in and constantly improve the policy of industry assisting agriculture and use surplus funds to promote agriculture. At the same time, it is necessary to insure sufficient farm labor and strengthen capital construction for agricultural production.

The fundamental way out for agriculture is to arm it with modern science and technology. We should strengthen the building of scientific and technical personnel, and stabilize and reinforce the ranks of agricultural technicians and management personnel.

The spark program [xing huo ji hua] is to spark modern science and technology in agriculture and village and town enterprises and let the fire spread far and wide. Units at various level should all formulate appropriate spark programs and implement them in a prompt manner to speed up the technical transformation of various trades in the rural areas and the pace of transforming traditional agriculture into modern agriculture.

ZHEJIANG LEADERS ATTEND COMMENDATION MEETING

OW210505 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] The Zhejiang Provincial Bureau in Charge of Village and Town Enterprises today held a meeting to commend a number of advanced units in developing village and town enterprises.

In 1985 various village and town enterprises in this province consciously accepted the state's centralized control, adhered to the road of integrating scientific research with production work, and actively produced commodities in great demand. It was the best year for developing village and town enterprises during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. The total output value of village and town enterprises in each of the 5 counties exceeded 1 billion yuan and the output value of village and town enterprises in 14 countries doubled that of the previous year. At the same time, the output value of each of the 7 townships reached 100 million yuan .

Those commended at today's meeting included the bureau in charge of village and town enterprises of Shaoxing County, the Hangzhou (Wanxiang) Shoe Plant, the Huangyan Resin Chemical Works, and 44 other units.

Wang Fang, secretary of the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee, and Shen Zulun, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and vice governor of Zhejiang, issued letters of commendation to representatives of the advanced units. Comrade Wang Fang congratulated the units for their achievements last year in developing village and town enterprises. He said: The development of village and town enterprises is an indispensable way of invigorating the rural economy. Various localities should give appropriate guidance according to local conditions, continue to strengthen centralized control, expand lateral coordination, tap latent potential, and raise Zhejiang's village and town enterprises to a new level.

SHENZHEN MAYOR ON SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONE'S FUTURE

OW202020 Beijing XINHUA in English 1943 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Shenzhen, February 20 (XINHUA) -- Mayor Li Hao said here today he is "confident about the future of the Special Economic Zone. At a tea party for Shenzhen and Hong Kong journalists, he said that his confidence rests on the achievements Shenzhen has made, the correct policy, the support by the whole nation and better understanding of economic construction in the Special Economic Zone (SEZ).

Shenzhen, a sleepy border town only five years ago, has become a modern city with a comprehensive economy. It has 900 industrial enterprises which have begun to invade international markets. Moreover, technical and managerial personnel have flocked to the SEZ while financial projects, commerce, tourism and real estate have expanded rapidly.

The development of Shenzhen has attracted attention at home and abroad. This proves the value of the SEZ, the mayor pointed out. He attributed the achievements to the policy of opening to the outside world, which is fixed in China's Constitution.

The State Council held a national meeting on Special Economic Zone work recently, summing up experience and working out policies for the further development of the SEZ, he said.

On the support from other places, the mayor noted that 28 provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities, and a dozen industrial departments under the State Council have set up offices in Shenzhen. Without the support of the whole nation, the construction of Shenzhen would have been "unimaginable", he said. The continuous support from other regions of China provides a "reliable guarantee" for its further progress, according to Li Hao. Industrial departments and enterprises of other parts of China are becoming even more interested in the SEZ, which has a better environment for investment, and import of technology and funds, the said.

The efforts of the past five years, he added, have equipped officials in Shenzhen with experience, and better understanding of construction principles and policies. Since not everything is good, he expressed a welcome for criticism and help from various circles.

The SEZ is bidding to become a city with developed industry and trade, advanced technology and culture, and improved livelihood. He said the future of the SEZ depands on its attractiveness to domestic and foreign investors, its ties with other parts of China and the competitiveness of its products.

Shenzhen, therefore, will shift from large-scale construction to a new phase of consolidation and improvement, he said. The SEZ will control the investment size of fixed assets, focus on construction of energy, transport and telecommunications facilities, and improve management and economic returns.

On the relations between Shenzhen and Hong Kong, he quoted the words of a Chinese legend to compare Hong Kong to a new "silk road" leading to the outside world. He said that Shenzhen and Hong Kong had close relations before the SEZ was set up. "The establishment of the SEZ has facilitated the cooperation and exchanges between the two places."

For example, Hong Kong accounted for 90 percent of the imported funds involved in the 3,967 contracts that Shenzhen signed with overseas businesses between 1980 and 1985. The cooperation in trade, tourism, energy supply, transport and telecommunications is known to all, he said.

A guideline to the relations between Shenzhen and Hong Kong is "support, cooperate and learn from each other for common prosperity", according to the mayor.

As a product of the policy of opening to the outside world and the reform, Shenzhen shall adhere to the policy and carry out the reform on economic management, including bankruptcy of enterprises, issuing stocks, management according to industry, and commerce. He also noted the SEZ is now rectifying the work style of the party, cracking down on corruption, strengthening construction of socialist culture and morality, and improving political and ideological work.

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee held a gathering of provincial organ cadres in the Hunan Military District Hall this morning. It called on the party members and cadres of the party, government, and army organs in the province to seriously implement the spirit of the gathering of central organ cadres and the important speeches and comments of leading central comrades, and to take resolute action to do a good job in correcting party style in the provincial organs and truly ensure that they set an example for the whole province.

Provincial CPC Committee Secretary Mao Zhiyong delivered a speech entitled: "The Provincial Organs Must Set an Example for the Whole Province in Straightening Out Party Style." Xiong Qingquan, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and governor, presided.

In his speech, Comrade Mao Zhiyong first analyzed the current performance of the provincial organs in straightening out party style. He pointed out: To further straighten out party style in the provincial organs, it is essential to make an objective and truth-seeking assessment of the current state of party style. He pointed out: The main current of party style in the provincial organs is good. A good momentum has appeared in correcting party style throughout the organs. However, we must soberly realize that there are also many party style problems in the provincial organs. The problems which are currently reported with greatest vehemence by the masses in the provincial organs are as follows:

1. There has been some growth in extravagance and waste in recent years. This is highlighted by efforts to purchase and exchange cars, make trips abroad under various pretexts, and spend public funds on tourist trips, giving banquets, and presenting gifts.

2. People look for money everywhere and use their powers in pursuit of the private interests of individuals and small cliques. Some units harm the state's interests by evading tax payment and withholding profits that should be paid to the state.

3. A few party and government organs and cadres are still running businesses and enterprises. This problem has not yet been completely solved.

4. Some cadres are seriously bureaucratic and irresponsible in work. Some leading cadres are apathetic in work and fail to go among the masses or into the grassroots to investigate and study. They make their views known as they please and issue decisions at random. Some shirk their duties when problems crop up. Some cadres do not bother about politics in employing people and do not care about the orientation in managing businesses. They spend and allocate large sums of money in an arbitrary way, causing heavy loses to state finances.

5. Some cadres are seriously departmentalist. In dealing with problems or affairs, they simply seek the interests of their own unit or department instead of taking the overall situation into account. Some departments shift their troubles onto each other instead of supporting and cooperating with each other. Some even find all kinds of pretexts for failing to carry out the decisions of higher authority. Some compete with each other in scope of powers, size, grading of organs, and pay and conditions.

6. In organizational and personnel affairs, some stress affections and relationships instead of party spirit and principles. They organize small cliques instead of promoting great unity.

7. Some comrades pursue political liberalism. They do not seriously study the party's principles and policies, but carry out those that suit them and do not carry out those that do not. Some even spread their grumbling. Some deliberately leak party secrets. Some like to listen to and pass on gossip without any concern for its veracity. Some take an attitude of saying nothing about the liberal behavior of some people while knowing perfectly well that it is wrong. They fail to report, criticize, or struggle against violations of law and discipline, but just take a laissez-faire approach.

Comrade Mao Zhiyong also pointed out: The problem concerning a very small number of party-member cadres, including a very few leading leading cadres, have developed to an extremely serious stage, and they have slipped into the mire of violating law and discipline. Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: Why have malpractices in the provincial organs not been effectively curbed, and why have some actually developed? Analyzing the reasons, we find that our leading organs have failed to get a tight grasp of the problems.

As far as the provincial CPC Committee is concerned, in the past we failed to attach sufficient importance to correcting party style or to get a good grasp of this work. We were in fact too soft-handed.

Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: The most important current problem in straightening out party style is action. We must utter less empty talk and do more practical work. We must score notable success in the first half of this year, and review progress in June.

We must get a good grasp of investigating and dealing with criminal cases and strictly enforce party discipline and state law. The provincial systems, departments, and bureaus must seriously arrange the cases that have occurred in them in order of seriousness and organize prompt action to investigate and deal with them. The focus must be on solving problems involving leading groups and leading cadres. We must seriously and strictly investigate and deal with violations of law and discipline among leading groups and leading cadres. The more they are sons of senior cadres, and the more they are senior cadres and well-known figures, the more must we get a good grasp of investigating and handling their cases.

We must straighten out discipline and put systems on a sound basis. We must focus on straightening out discipline in personnel work, financial and economic work, propaganda, foreign affairs, and in keeping secrets.

Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: In the final analysis, bad party style means that the party spirit of some party members is not pure. Hence, in straightening out party style, it is essential to get a good grasp of education in party spirit, which is the fundamental thing. Comrade Mao Zhiyong said: The key to whether the provincial organs can score success in straightening out party style lies in the leadership. The party committees and groups of all departments and units must regard straightening out party style as a prominent task and concentrate more efforts to get a good grasp of it. In order to strengthen leadership over the work of straightening out party style in the provincial organs, the provincial CPC Committee has established a leadership group for this purpose, with an office attached. The provincial systems and the departments and bureaus should assign leading comrades to be specifically responsible for the work.

HK210323 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Excerpts] Cadres of provincial organs who are being transferred to poor and remote areas for strengthening grass-roots work have begun training prior to their departure. Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee urged them to seriously study relevant central documents, to heighten their understanding, to become mentally prepared, and to do more and better work for the poor and remote areas.

Yesterday afternoon, at the provincial CPPCC hall, the provincial CPC Committee held a study report meeting of provincial organ cadres who are going to be transferred to the rural areas. Hu Jintao, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, delivered a report on the study at the meeting.

He said: The provincial CPC Committee's decision to transfer cadres to poor and remote counties for strengthening grass-roots work is an important measure in putting an end to the poor situation in the areas. It is an important step in improving organ work style, and an important way to train and develop cadres and qualified personnel. In the year following their transfer, the cadres should focus their work on the development of productive forces and extricating the poor and remote areas from the poverty-stricken state. They should help the poor by soliciting experiences from the rich. They should uphold the simultaneous building of the two civilizations, as well as attaching great importance to the development of intellectual resources and the training of qualified personnel.

Comrade Hu Jintao put forward several requirements for and expectations of the cadres. He hoped that the cadres would seriously follow party principles and policies and closely integrate them with local conditions. He also hoped they would closely integrate the aspirations of extricating the poor areas from the poverty-stricken state with their solid work.

The meeting was presided over by (Long Zhiyi), Standing Committee member and Organization Department director of the provincial CPC Committee.

He said: Following the announcement of the provincial CPC Committee's resolution to transfer cadres for strengthening grass-roots work in the rural areas, the provincial organs overfulfilled the quota of selecting cadres, including those at department level. The original quota was 500 cadres but now it has been increased to 535 people. They possess better political quality, are younger and better educated. They will be sent in 11 work teams to Beijie, Weining, Nayong, Hezhang, Luodian, Jianhe, Congjiang, Ziyun, Panxian, Wangmo and Yanhe counties.

The report meeting was attended by over 700 people, including Ding Tingmo, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee; responsible people and cadres of various provincial units.

GUIZHOU BANKS REFORM CREDIT MANAGEMENT SYSTEM

HK201241 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] Since the reform of the management system of credit funds, the industrial and commercial banks in our province have seriously strengthened macroeconomic control and enlivened the microeconomy so that they have been able to use limited funds to promote the development of production.

Last year, all industrial and commercial banks throughout the province controlled the total amount of credit within the scale determined by the state and in accordance with the principle that the more a people's bank receives, the more loans it issues. Following this principle, the banks received and lent out some 13 million more yuan of funds, thus vigorously promoting industrial production and expanding commodity circulation in our province.

After the provincial industrial and commercial bank formally set up a system by itself in March last year, it was confronted with a tight situation, with control over the scale of credit, with differences in credit, and with the situation of the serious shortage of enterprises' floating capital. Under the circumstances of relatively big contradictions between the supply and demand of capital, the provincial industrial and commercial bank clearly put forward the demand of flexible regulations and a quick turnover of credit funds. All branches and offices of the industrial and commercial bank throughout the province vigorously organized forces to investigate the situation in production and marketing, economic results, costs for production, and enterprise management in the enterprises which had credit relations with them. They came to understand the situation in production and operations in all enterprises. In accordance with the situation which they came to understand after investigation, they lent funds to those whose situation in production and marketing was good, whose economic results were good, whose costs for production were low, and whose enterprise management was good, ensuring the development of backbone enterprises and the production of the main products.

Last year, industrial and commercial banks at all levels throughout the province issued loans of some 160 million yuan for 200 items of technological transformation. They supported the production of name-brand, superior quality white wine, the metallurgical industry, building materials industry, communications, and machine-building industry, and the production of main products. According to incomplete statistics, last year, as a result of the items of technological transformation throughout the province which were supported by loans, the total amount of the output value increased by 340 million yuan and additional profits and taxes of 120 million yuan were made for the state.

Industrial and commercial banks at all levels throughout the province have also sent forces deep into all enterprises to help them work out plans and tap the potential of their capital so that these enterprises can solve their problems of insufficient floating funds. Beginning at the end of last year, the credit workers of all banks have gone to the enterprises which have connections with them to help them solve the problems of production funds. They have helped these enterprises promote sales of products kept long in stock and collect arrears of money of goods sold. They have also urged the payment of loans irrationally issued. The majority of enterprises have replenished their floating funds by themselves. According to statistics, with the assistance and supervision of industrial and commercial banks at all levels, the amount of credit funds for tapping potential reached 100 million yuan last year, effectively solving the problem of insufficient floating funds in some enterprises.

XIZANG DEVELOPS BORDER TRADE, RESULTS NOTED

HK201145 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 16 Feb 86

[Text] According to XIZANG RIBAO, since the beginning of last year, the Dinggye County CPC Committee and government, while upholding the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, have strengthened management over border trade markets to provide conveniences to border residents and enliven the economy, resulting in an unprecedentedly good situation.

There are two border trade markets -- (Remu) and (Shaer) -- in Dinggye County. In the past, due to the influence of leftist ideas, people in the county did not emancipate their minds on the issue of border trade. At that time, most people were scared and obstructed border trade. The county CPC Committee and People's Government feared that border residents on the foreign side might benefit from border trade, so they exercised strict control over border trade markets and set many rules and regulations. As a result, border residents and merchants on the foreign side dared not come to the Chinese side to do business, thus dampening the enthusiasm of border residents on both sides for doing business.

After a study done last year, the county CPC committee and government realized that this was an ultra-leftist idea. In order to further open up to the outside world and enliven the domestic economy, the county CPC Committee and government threw away all unreasonable rules and regulations and actively supported border residents in doing a small volume of border trade. They also encouraged the masses to boldly exchange products with border residents on the foreign side on an equal basis so as to help supply each other's needs. According to the statistics of the (Shaer) market alone, in 1985, 30 foreign merchants from 18 households came to the market to do business. They brought 4,690 jin of rice, 5,760 jin of maize, 1,500 jin of butter, 86 bolts of sikkim cloth, 1,430 boxes of various dyestuff, and other daily necessities. The total transactions amounted to 300,000 yuan, an all-time high.

YUNNAN BANKS ENSURE FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT

HK210217 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 14 Feb 86

[Text] Under the situation in which the state controlled the level of bank credit, banks in the province last year adopted a series of measures to strengthen macroeconomic controls while enlivening microeconomy, thus basically ensuring the supply of funds urgently needed in economic development and promoting a continuous, steady, and coordinated economic development.

In face of a shortage of credit funds, people's banks and professional banks at all levels in the province last year focused their work on tapping their own potential and regulating funds. They adopted the method of controlling funds while enlivening the economy and achieving good results in enlivening the economy on the basis of controlling the total amount of bank credit. By so doing, they solved the contradiction between supply and demand in credit funds in a relatively good way and attained the target of controlling the amount of money put into circulation and the amount of loans granted to fixed assets investment.

The money put into circulation by the banks in 1985 decreased by 23 percent over 1984, and the excessive growth of consumption funds has been controlled to a certain extent. This ensured a stable financial situation in the province.

In order to expand sources of credit funds, all professional banks, while strengthening macroeconomic controls in the financial field, adopted active measures to absorb more money deposits on the one hand and recoveded due or overdue loans on the other. The province overfulfilled by 87 percent all bank deposit targets for 1985, marking an increase of 24 percent over 1984. About 86 percent of all agricultural loans granted by the province's agricultural banks were recovered in 1985, an increase of 27 percent over 1984. Due to great efforts made by banks at all levels, loans granted by the province's banks in 1985 increased by 41 percent over 1984. This ensured the supply of funds urgently needed in the province's economic construction and met the needs in production and money circulation.

JILIN TELEPHONE CONFERENCE ON PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK200741 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] On 19 February, the party Rectification Guidance Group of the provincial CPC Committee held a telephone conference on the province's township and town party rectification work. Comrade Wang Xianjin delivered a speech. He reviewed achievements made at the previous stage of township and town party rectification work, pointed out existing problems, and worked out plans and made arrangements for the next step of township and town party rectification work. He stressed that it is necessary to proceed from the reality, make corrections in the course of rectification, pay attention to actual results, and continue to improve party rectification work.

In his speech, Comrade Wang Xianjin pointed out: So far, about 40 percent of the province's townships and towns have completed the work of conducting special education on party rectification. The situation has been good in general. However, the tendencies of racing against time and speed, and ignoring education on party spirit still exist in some units.

As for the next step of township and town party rectification work, Comrade Wang Xianjin put forward five demands:

1. After conducting special education on party rectification, we should concentrate a period of time on reviewing party rectification. The focus of the work is to see whether we have thoroughly exposed the major problems of malpractices, whether the party-member cadres have enhanced their awareness of party spirit, whether we have unified our ideology and understanding of the major guidelines of the several Central Documents No 1, and whether we have achieved actual results in conducting rectification and making corrections. Before spring plowing, most units should mainly conduct special education on party rectification and review the past work. After the spring plowing, they should enter the comparison and examination stage of party rectification.

2. We should do a good job in grasping the party rectification and work style consolidation of the units in charge of two fields of work and the various county township enterprises and establishments.

3. We should further strengthen the building of grass-roots leading bodies. After completing the work of making comparison and examination in township and town party rectification, we should give full consideration to universally conducting a public opinion poll among the leading bodies, explaining the situation to cadres and assessing them, and based on this, should do a good job in readjusting the leading bodies.

4. We should make corrections in the course of rectification, conscientiously solve the exposed problems, deal with them according to each respective person and unit, and see to it that each and every major problem has been handled. We should speed the handling of some problems about which the masses are most concerned and have complaints and report the situation in solving the problems to the masses in a timely manner. The already exposed major and appalling cases must be investigated and verified and be strictly handled in line with the party's discipline and state law. The relevant policy issues should be studied conscientiously and dealt with prudently. We should grasp four points in implementing the policy of allowing some party members and peasants to become prosperous ahead of others. Those who have led the people in becoming rich should be commended; those who have taken the lead in becoming rich through hard work should be protected; those who have become rich through illegal means should be guided; and those who have violated law and committed crimes should be handled in line with law.

5. We should use party rectification to promote farming preparations and spring plowing and exercise dual leadership over specific work.

At the end of his speech, Comrade Wang Xianjin touched on the issue of the urban neighborhood party rectification. He called for efforts to carry out neighborhood party rectification by proceeding from the reality and in line with the actual conditions of the neighborhoods, and to grasp and resolve major issues. Those units which have or have not initiated party rectification should, under the unified plans of the city and district CPC Committees, concentrate a certain period of time on investigating and studying the neighborhood party rectification, carrying out experimental work, and based on this, comprehensively unfolding party rectification in the neighborhoods.

TAIWAN AUTHORITIES URGED TO FOLLOW PEOPLE'S WILL

OW201423 Beijing in Mandarin to Taiwan 1500 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Commentary by station commentator (Zhong Ming): "It Is Better To Follow the People's Will"]

[Text] Recently the Taiwan authorities took several steps in conformity with the trend of the times and the will of the people to handle questions concerning the two sides of the strait and their relations. They approved a request from actress Yang Huishan's family to travel to Hong Kong to meet with their relatives from the mainland, relaxed the restriction on traveling to forbidden areas by Taiwan seamen employed from abroad, and allowed certain units to subscribe to newspapers and periodicals published on the mainland. Limited as the authorities' opening measures appear, it should be noted that they are certainly good for the establishment of postal, transport, and trade relations and the shortening of the distance between the two sides of the strait. They should be described as a certain extent of progress.

However, the pity is that the Taiwan authorities' progress in this field is quite unstable, and a relapse of their previous practice has occurred. Not long ago they reiterated the so-called prohibition against Chinese people visiting the mainland. As everyone knows, the two sides of the strait are of the same country, and every Chinese has the right to travel between them. If we say that the abnormal state of separation is a result of national misfortunes in the past and is a matter of regret caused by history that the people have not been allowed to exercise this sacred right for decades, then the two sides of the strait should go all out to cooperate today to provide the people with every convenience and to compensate them as much as possible. On the contrary, however, the Taiwan authorities have made openly intervened by restricting the people from visiting the mainland. The alleged reason for doing so is that they are afraid that the people would mistakenly fall into the united front trap.

As is known to the world, the mainland's united front work is no secret. There is a United Front Work Department in the People's Government. Since the united front work is not a conspiracy, there is no need to set up traps. The basic purpose of this work is to serve the interests of the country and people and to unite all forces that can be united so that they may work together and do their best to fulfill their duties. This was the case in the past. It is still so at present and will continue to be the case in the future. There is nothing to fear in the slightest.

Deeply conscious of the righteous cause, many personages within the Kuomintang have a long experience in cooperating with the Communist Party and are clearly aware of the latter's united front work. To put it bluntly, the authorities' allegation about mistakenly falling into the united front trap indicates their fear that people would return to the mainland.

Why is this fear? In the past the propaganda media on the island described the mainland as a very terrible place, making the people very fearful of the mainland. In recent years, however, because numerous overseas channels have been opened, the compatriots on the island have been able to gradually understand the true situation on the mainland, eliminate much of their misunderstanding, and free themselves to a great extent from previous misgivings. Meanwhile, the lies of some people have also been exploded.

As the saying goes, seeing for oneself is a hundred times better than hearing from others. It is quite reasonable that driven by such a thinking, a lot of Taiwan compatriots, of course, want to visit and tour the mainland so that they can make their own judgment as to the right and wrong. In particular, those compatriots who have relatives, friends, and old acquaintances on the mainland are trying in every conceivable way to seek opportunities to return.

This is also normal and beyond reproach. Facing such circumstances, the authorities should ask themselves this question: Why is it that the more the people are prohibited from visiting the mainland, the more they want to do so? What does this indicate? The answer is quite simple; it is because the people have lost their faith in the authorities. Lacking self-knowledge in this respect, however, the authorities resort to the so-called regulations on exit and entry control for Taiwan area during the period of suppression of communist rebellion in dealing with those who once slipped into the mainland.

What was the result of the efforts ot suppress the communist rebellion over the past decades? The answer is known to all. Both the time and circumstances changed long ago. Not only did the civil war come to an end, but even the state of confrontation with each side shelling the other also became a matter of the past. In January 1979, the People's Government on the mainland proposed that peaceful talks be held between the Kuomintang and the Communist Party so as to work together to fufill the great cause of reunifying the motherland and to end the sad situation. Later, suggestions were adopted from people of all circles and concepts for reunification of the motherland were put forward on numerous occasions.

In dealing with this major issue concerning the future of our country and people, however, the Taiwan suthorities have consistently pursued a policy of no contacts, no talks, and no compromise. Fearing that the people would oppose their stubborn attitude, they have often put out the disgraceful banner to scare the people. This is what they call the suppression of the communist rebellion. Is the influence on the hundreds of millions of our compatriots caused by the past rebellion-suppression efforts not disastrous enough? Shouldn't the resulting human tragedies be put to an end at an early date?

The so-called regulations on exit and entry control for Taiwan area during the period of suppression of communist rebellion used by the Taiwan authorities have long been opposed and spurned by the people of Taiwan. People's representatives of Taiwan have time and again called on the authorities to abolish these regulations.

By reviewing what has happend over the past decades, the Taiwan authorities should understand this principle: The people's will cannot be opposed.

MINISTER SAYS COMBAT CAPABILITIES TO BE ENHANCED

OW201149 Taipei CNA in English 1035 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 20 (CNA) -- Defense Minister Soong Chang-chih said Wednesday that the Republic of China will strive to beef up its offensive-defensive combat capability in order to assure superiority in the Taiwan Straits. Minister Soong told local and foreign military reporters at a Lunar New Year gathering at the Chinese Armed Forces Officer's Club in Taipei that the nation will continue striving for the modernization of weapons and equipment under the policy of building elite forces through thriftiness and hard work in the coming year.

Soong said that the military, under the wise leadership of President Chiang Ching-kuo, have achieved remarkable progress in training, education, combat preparedness, defense science and technology, and the modernization of arms in the past years. "But we are not complacent with our past performance," the minister said. With strong conviction and determination, he stressed, the military will endeavor to meet new challenges in the future.

Soong also pointed out that the Peiping regime has attempted to induce foreign capital and technology to help modernize its economy and military. "The reform, however, can never succeed as long as it sticks to the 'four resistances'" he said.

On the future plan, Soong pledged that the military will undertake extensive training to improve combat capabilities. He also said that the military will join with public and private industrial sectors to develop defense technology and upgrade military equipment and weapons.

CHINA POST SCORES U.S. ARMS SALES TO PRC

OW210641 Taipei CHINA POST in English 18 Feb 86 p 4

[Editorial: "Heritage Foundation's Opposition to U.S. Arms Sales to Peking"]

[Text] The U.S. Heritage Foundation's Asian Study Center in Washington, D.C. has voiced its opposition to U.S. arms sales to Peking through an article by director Martin Lasater, published in the New York City TRIBUNE Feb 4. Lasater said in the article that the proposed U.S. $500 million arms sales would upgrade Peking's F-8 jet fighter to enable it to fight in all types of weather. He pointed out that the proposed deal was made as the Peking regime is distancing itself from the United States strategically while improving its relations with the Soviets.

Furthermore, such arms sales are being opposed by all non-Communist nations in the Asian and Pacific region such as Japan, South Korea, the ASEAN nations and the Republic of China on Taiwan, which has a tremendous stake in this deal as it will vitally threaten the ROC's peace and security. The avionics sale would upset the delicate military balance on the two sides of the Taiwan Strait, which the United States is committed to preserving under the 1979 Taiwan Relations Act (TRA). In view of the Peking regime's often repeated threats to use force to settle the so-called "Taiwan issue," it is a foolhardy move by the United States to sell Peking such advanced weapons and improve its F-8 fighters. Lasater suggested that the U.S. Congress should set some guidelines on the sales of arms to Red China. He said that one such guideline is the principle embodies in the TRA that the ROC should have the weapons needed to protect itself from military attack. He proposed to sell the ROC F-20 jet fighters of F-16 jet fighters like those the United States has just agreed to sell Indonesia.

The above comments deserve our close attention and support. The proposed U.S. arms sales to Peking concern more than just weapons needed for self-defense and include items for offensive operations. The pro-Peking lobby in the United States has persuaded Reagan administration officials to violate the TRA by agreeing to the August 17, 1982, Joint Communique, which contradicts the TRA. It is helping the Chinese Communists to isolate the ROC in the international community by acknowledging the double-talk contained in the Shanghai Communique which the Republic of China has vehemently protested and never recognized.

It is indeed time for the U.S. Congress to hold a hearing on the implementation of the TRA to find out which people are subverting its original purpose of protecting the Republic of China from harm after the U.S. recognition of the Peking regime -- itself an unprecedented betrayal of a U.S. wartime ally and long-standing friend.

As Senator Barry Goldwater has pointed out in his recent report to President Ronald Reagan dated Jan 21, 1986 "there is a disturbing perception which exists in certain foreign countries that the United States is not living up to past promises to support the defense capabilities of its friends." The Arizona Senator also wrote to Secretary of State George Shultz on Jan 22 protesting U.S. military sales to Red China and calling attention to the threat this activity would pose to other nations in the Asian Pacific. He told Secretary Shultz, "Never in our history have we needed a friend as we need Taiwan today." He added that by providing military items to Peking, the United States is alienating South Korea, Japan and most of all, the ROC.

Based on the above considered opinions of Senator Goldwater and the Heritage Foundation's Director Lasater and many others in the U.S. Congress, the Congress should first veto the Reagan administration's proposal of providing arms sales to the Peking regime and second support greater arms sales to the Republic of China on the basis of the TRA.

PRESIDENT'S SON TAKES UP SINGAPORE DUTIES

HK190543 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 19 Feb 86 p 20

[From K.C. Tsang in Singapore]

[Text] Mr Chiang Hsiao-wu, second son of Taiwan's President Chiang Ching-kuo. arrived in Singapore yesterday as Taiwan's deputy trade representative, his first overseas posting. The sudden arrival of Mr Chiang, tipped as heir-apparent to the presidency, has surprised political observers. Sources close to the Foreign Ministry here said they had not been officially informed in advance of Mr Chiang's arrival. But Singapore authorities were told as Mr Chiang's name appeared on the VIP list at Singapore's Changi Airport.

While in Singapore, Mr Chiang, 41, will take over the post held by Mr P.Y. Lu for three years. Mr Lu will be transferred to Saudi Arabia as an economic attache. Singapore maintains no diplomatic ties with either China or Taiwan. But Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew's city state is on good speaking terms with both Beijing and Taipei. Taiwan runs the Trade Mission of the Republic of China in Singapore to handle commerce and visa applications. The posting is expected to last at least one to two years.

Mr Chiang was head of the China Broadcasting Corp. in Taiwan until this relatively insignificant posting. The chief trade representative is Mr Hu Shing, who has served in the current post for two years.

Wearing his usual sunglasses, Mr Chiang arrived at the airport early in the afternoon. "I am happy to have the opportunity to work here and to learn more things," Mr Chiang said. "I like to work to promote the common interests of Singapore and Taiwan." Mr Chiang arrived while China'e state councillor, Mr Gu Mu, was visiting Singapore.

China and Singapore signed an agreement on co-operation in tourism, civil aviation and exhibitions on Monday. According to one Singapore official, the country is maintaining "healthy" trade relations with both Taiwan and the mainland.

There was one suggestion here that Mr Chiang was sent abroad by his father to stop all the speculation about his possible succession to the presidency. But official sources here believe that such a possibility was not strong, as President Chiang himself had on more than two occasions categorically denied the chances of his son succeeding him. "We must understand that Mr Chiang's denial is unprecedented in the working of politics in Taiwan. We can take his words as true, so there is no need for Mr Chiang to be posted overseas to confirm this. After all, he can't be away from home forever," the sources commented. In the views of these officials, exposure seemed to be the major reason for the posting.

PROBLEMS IN JUDGMENTS IN ECONOMIC CASES VIEWED

HK200507 Hong Kong WEN WEI PO in Chinese 17 Feb 86 p 7

["Background news": "Difficulties with Judgments in Economic Criminal Cases in the Interior" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] OVER THE PAST FEW MONTHS, COURT JUDGMENTS ON A LARGE NUMBER OF CASES INVOLVING ECONOMIC DISPUTES IN THE INTERIOR HAVE FAILED TO BE CARRIED OUT IMMEDIATELY. THE REASONS ARE: ... OVER THE PAST FEW MONTHS, THE MAIN PROBLEM ENCOUNTERED BY THE PEOPLE'S COURTS IN THEIR WORK OF JUDGING ECONOMIC CRIMINAL CASES IS THAT THE COURT JUDGMENTS ON A LARGE NUMBER OF CASES INVOLVING ECONOMIC DISPUTES IN THE INTERIOR HAVE FAILED TO BE CARRIED OUT IMMEDIATELY. THE REASONS ARE: ...

Over the past few months, the main problem encountered by the people's courts in their work of judging economic criminal cases is that the court judgments on a large number of cases involving economic disputes in the interior have failed to be carried out immediately. So the relevant departments should pay particular attention to this problem and properly solve it.

SOME ENTERPRISES' MANAGEMENT AND ADMINISTRATION ARE INEFFICIENT AND LOSSES ARE SERIOUS, SO THEY CANNOT PAY THEIR DEBTS.

The Boading City movie machinery factory bought 1,000 motorcycle component parts from the Tianjin City automobile gear factory. The two sides signed the contract in July, 1981. Because the Boading City movie machinery factory blindly bought component parts which have since been kept in stock, it has suffered losses of 180,000 yuan and now owes more than 333,000 yuan to the Tianjin automobile gear factory and cannot pay the debt.

BECAUSE SOME ENTERPRISES HAVE BEEN CLOSED, MERGED, TRANSFERRED OR CONTRACTED BY INDIVIDUALS, THE ACCUSED SIDE HAS A LOT OF REASONS TO REFUSE OR DELAY PAYING ITS DEBTS, SO COURT JUDGMENTS HAVE FAILED TO BE CARRIED OUT IMMEDIATELY.

After being merged into the factory no 3 of the Ministry of Chemical Industry, the Harbin City Taiping pesticide factory still owes an external debt of over 400,000 yuan. However, factory No 3 of the Ministry fo Chemical Industry refuses to pay the debt. So the court judgment on the case concerning the pesticide factory's debt has failed to be carried out immediately.

SOME "COMPANIES" HAVE SPECULATED IN THEIR BUSINESS, SOLD AT A PROFIT WHAT THEY HAVE BOUGHT, AND SQUANDERED, WASTED, EMBEZZLED, OR PRIVATELY DISTRIBUTED THE MONEY. WHEN THEY HAVE DISPUTES, IT IS DIFFICULT FOR THE COURT TO PASS JUDGMENT ON THEIR CASES.

The Ji Dongming Trading Co in central Shijiazhuang City, Hubei Province, has signed contracts with the storage and transport company under Nangong County's goods and materials bureau, and with 12 other units, thus grabbing more than 1.45 million yuan from those units. The company is a briefcase company which is unable to fulfill the contracts. The company has also diverted the money to other purposes. Thus, the 13 units brought a suit against the company. The court managed to recover 245,000 yuan from the company but failed to recover the remaining 1.2 million yuan because the company had been dissolved.

THAT THE INTERESTED PARTIES IGNORE THE LEGAL SYSTEM, DELAY OR REFUSE TO PAY THEIR DEBTS OR TRY TO AVOID THEIR CREDITORS HAS MADE IT DIFFICULT FOR THE COURT TO CARRY OUT ITS JUDGMENTS.

Taikang Trading Co of Huaihua City, Hunan Province, bought steel products from the Qunlian Integrated Trading Co in Wuhan City. When both sides signed the contract at the end of 1984, the Taikang Trading Co paid more than 80,000 yuan in advance to the Qunlian Integrated Trading Co. However, the Qunlian Integrated Co could not supply steel products to the Taikang Trading Co and did not return the money to the Taikang Trading Co. In March of last year, through the mediation of the court, the two sides reached an agreement according to which the Qunlian Integrated Trading Co would pay all the money it owed, including interest to the Taikang Trading Co on 25 April. But later on the Qunlian Integrated Trading Co tried to avoid its creditor, delay the payment, and even gave a bad check to cheat to the court, and openly refused to return the money to the Taikang Trading Co.

THE NONCOOPERATION AND ADMINISTRATIVE INTERFERENCE OF THE RELEVANT DEPARTMENTS HAVE PREVENTED COURT JUDGMENTS FROM BEING CARRIED OUT IMMEDIATELY.

The chemical plant of Hanchuan County, Hubei Province, signed a buying-selling contract with the Datung supply and marketing cooperative of Wucheng County, Shandong Province, in 1963 [date as published]. According to the contract, the Datung supply and marketing cooperative paid 35,000 yuan as a deposit in order to buy 500 tons of chemical fertilizer. After the chemical plant delivered the chemical fertilizer to the supply and marketing cooperative, the supply and marketing cooperative refused to pay the rest of the money because of the poor quality of the chemical fertilizer. So the two sides had a dispute. Through the mediation of the people's court of Wucheng County, the two sides agreed to return the goods and money to each other. But later on, the chemical plant failed to fulfill the agreement. Then, the people's court of Wucheng County, through the people's court of Hanchuan County, issued a notice to the Industrial and Commercial Bank of Hanchuan County, urging the bank to help carry out the court judgment, but the bank ignored the notice. Later, the chemical plant transferred its bank account to the Chengguan office of the Bank of Hanchuan County. With the support of the responsible person of the town government, the director of the Chengguan office of the Bank of Hanchuan county refused to help the court carry out the judgment. The Higher People's Court of Hubei Province intervened, but failed to get the bank to help carry out the court judgment.

PAPER EXAMINES 'FRIENDSHIP DEALS' WITH PRC

HK200957 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST (BUSINESS NEWS Supplement) in English 20 Feb 86 p 2

[Editorial: "Friendship Offers Few Favors"]

[Text] The phrase "friendship deal" reared its head again this week to describe a $250 million fixed-rate certificate of deposit issued by the Bank of Communications. The three-year issue carried a coupon of 8.15 percent, 10 basis points below a comparable and contemporary issue by Australia and New Zealand Bank.

The facts the less attractive pricing of the Bank of Communications still managed to find the underwriting support of 25 banks and secure a 1.26 times over-subscription, and that the Bank of Communications is one of the "sisters" in the Bank of China group, spurred the "friendship" speculation.

The talks took the line that some banks were in the deal not for hardnosed commercial reasons, but to curry favour with the Bank of China group, the importance of which is expected to grow as 1997 approaches. Certain participating banks, in fact, conceded as much. And they also claimed that a similar thing happened when China international Trust and Investment Corp (CITIC) undertook its first $300 million fixed-rate issue here.

It was suggested then that CITIC's pricing was out of line with market trends, and the "friendship" factor helped it succeed. Talk also indentifies CITIC as having attempted to pluck the "friendship" cord on selected local businessmen's heartstrings in its effort to come up with a takeover package for Ka Wah Bank, a burden CITIC apparently does not wish to carry alone. To what degree it has succeeded remains to be seen.

The "friendship" card, of course, has not started to appear in the deck just in the past year or so. Well before came the famous bargain-basement price given by the government to the Bank of China for the prime site for its new building, and a planned project in the New Territories where the treatment for Chinese interests looked unusually favourable.

And China does not reserve the "friendship" approach for Hong Kong alone. More than a few deals have been done related to investments and projects within China itself where foreign firms have agreed to terms they would be reluctant to accept elsewhere in the world, all on the premise that somehow, sometime, somewhere down the road treating China like a charity case today will pay off in big earnings tomorrow.

Agreements are common where repatriating profits is nearly impossible, where valuable technology and capital investment will ultimately all be turned over to Chinese ownership, and where control and returns for China heavily outweigh the actual contribution of the Chinese groups participating. It is true that at least in Hong Kong's case it might be argued there have been some tangible rewards already for the local versions of such "friendship" deals, with China performing some financial favours that may go above and beyond normal commercial practices. China-related interests propped up the Conic electronics empire just in time to prevent its collapse, many play a helpful role in keeping the Tung group afloat, and have been involved in support operations for several banks aside from the current Ka Wah package.

But regardless of who is the giver and who is the receiver of "friendship" terms and deals, it needs to be asked how often anyone really benefits in the long run from such efforts, if one accepts the ultimate economic wisdom is that of the free market. Is China going to learn the hard lessons of capitalism necessary for its modernization programme to succeed if it is treated like a favourite child entitled to special care and feeding? Will many of the foreign businesses investing in China find the transition point where "friendship"-style accommodation to Chinese demands turns into solid financial rewards is always placed just a bit further off, one more dubious project away?

Do China's and Hong Kong's authorities help or hurt the territory by frequently seeking to set up life-support systems for businesses and financial institutions that have been unable to stand the test of the market, and by its rules deserve to die? And does rhetoric about confidence, and a mutual commitment to rugged free enterprise continuing for the next decade and 50 years beyong, square with what increasingly looks like a knee-jerk instinct towards government-orchestrated paternalism in individual cases?

LICENSING CONTROLS OVER 45 IMPORTS IMPLEMENTED

[Dispatch from correspondent: "China Implements Licensing Controls over 45 Imported Commodities"]

[Text] Beijing, 19 Feb -- In order to continue to perfect the import control system, at present, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade has already implemented licensing controls over 45 imported commodities.

The ministry will continue to check the prices of major imported commodities for which import licenses are issued. From the latter half of 1984 to the end of 1985, it saved more than $5.7 million for the state through checking prices.

As some areas and departments earn profits by importing commodities to raise funds for their production and construction, in various areas, taxi companies and high-grade hotels with joint Chinese and foreign captial have been established one after another and a number of cars and household electric appliances have been imported. In developing our trade with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, we have also imported some household electric appliances and automobiles.

In order to put an end to duplicated and blind import and in order to protect the development of production at home, the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade has decided to strengthen its control over imports. One by one it has imposed import licensing controls over seven kinds of production lines (of television sets, radio-cassette recorders, refrigerators, washing machines, air conditioners, motorcycles, and minicars), as well as air conditioner, mobile cranes, electron microscopes, electronic analyzers, open-end spinning machines, roentgenoscopes, and other commodities. Moreover, since 1 January this year, it has imposed import licensing control over steel and pesticides. At present, the number of commodities over which there is import licensing control has risen from 30 to 45.

The ministry will continue to check the prices of major import commodities for which import licenses are necessary. It will check the prices of almost all imported automobiles and television sets and establish a coordination group to check the prices of imported computers. It will also selectively check the prices of other commodities.

ADMISSION TO ASIAN DEVELOPMENT BANK APPROVED

OW221046 Beijing XINHUA in English 1031 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 22 (XINHUA) -- The Asian Development Bank (ABD) decided on February 17 to admit the People's Republic of China to the organization, according to the People's Bank of China today (PBC).

PBC said that the ABD Board of Directors accepted in early January an application from PBC Governor Chen Muhua with a draft solution which was adopted by the ABD Board of Governors who voted by correspondence to give a green light. Under the ABD procedure, the People's Bank of China is undergoing the necessary formalities including purchase of the capital stocks before it becomes a full member of the Manila-based Asian financial body.

BIDS FOR WORLD BANK-FINANCED PROJECTS OPENED

OW211148 Beijing XINHUA in English 1056 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 21 (XINHUA) -- Bids for the supply of construction materials and equipment for a liquefied gas plant, water conservation project and railway development financed by World Bank loans were opened in public recently. This was announced by the international tendering company of the China National Technical Import Corporation here today.

Twenty bids were received for electrification of the Zhengzhou-Wuhan section of the Beijing-Guangzhou railway line from firms in Australia, Austria, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Japan, Yugoslavia and Hong Kong. They were opened at the import building here today. The project is being financed by a World Bank loan of over 200 million U.S. dollars to purchase materials including rolled steel, sleepers and cement, as well as engineering and electrical equipment. Bids for the liquefied gas plant at Zhongyuan oilfield in Henan Province were opened Wednesday. They were from eight companies in the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan and the United States. The plant, a turn-key project, will mainly produce chemical raw materials.

Bids on the water conservancy project in Anhui Province were opened Thursday. They were received from 15 firms in Austria, China, Japan, Singapore, the United States and the Hong Kong region. This project is being financed by a World Bank loan and credits totalling 92 million U.S. dollars for purchasing cement, timber, rolled steel and other materials. An official of the tendering company said evaluation of the bids will start soon and contracts are expected to be awarded before the end of August.

WARSAW PACT MAKES NEW DISARMAMENT PROPOSAL

OW211140 Beijing XINHUA in English 1045 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Vienna, February 21 (XINHUA) -- The Warsaw Pact Thursday surprised NATO delegates here by proposing a new draft treaty on disarmament in central Europe and asked the West to give it reasonable and serious consideration. The draft was made public at a press conference here Thursday by Andre Wieland, chief of the delegation of Poland to the current 38th round of central European troops reduction talks on behalf of the Warsaw Pact countries.

The draft is about the agreement on the initial reduction by the Soviet Union and the United States of ground forces and armaments and on the subsequent no-increase of forces and armaments of the sides and associated measures in central Europe. The proposal is believed to be a development and concretization of the proposal for a first partial agreement in Vienna agreed upon by both sides on February 14 last year and the proposal put forward by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on January 15 this year.

The Warsaw Pact draft includes:

-- A first withdrawal of 11,500 Soviet and 6,500 American troops and military equipment from the central European theater and exchange of information about the troop reduction;

-- All the 11 participants of the talks should not increase their ground and air forces and military equipment in the reduction area after Washington and Moscow reduce their troops;

-- Both sides accepted verification of the withdrawals by permanent monitoring posts and the principle of on-site inspections of military facilities;

-- A consultative commission shall be established and other forms of consultations be used to discuss operative questions involving the implementation of the agreement.

In response, Jan Hein van de Mortel, chief delegate from the Netherlands, said on behalf of the NATO countries that the draft was unrealistic and inadequate and would not lead to a change in the stand of the West toward the Warsaw Pact proposals of December 5 last year. However, the Dutch delegate said that he hoped this was not the last proposal of the Eastern bloc.

According to Friday's FINANCIAL TIMES published in London, NATO officials expressed surprise and disappointment at the initiative, which came only weeks after NATO tabled its own proposals on December 5. "The Western alliance has not had time to explain and clarify those proposals and that the Warsaw Pact draft appears to offer little that is new and much that falls short of Western demands on verification procedures to ensure compliance with an agreement," said the FINANCIAL TIMES. The paper quoted a Soviet official as saying here Thursday that NATO's response was "an effort to downgrade the importance and the substance of what is being suggested."

UK, U.S. TO COOPERATE ON HARRIER-TYPE AIRCRAFT

OW220534 Beijing XINHUA in English 0246 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] London, February 21 (XINHUA) -- Britain and the United States will jointly research a future generation of "advanced short take-off and vertical landing" (Astovl) military aircraft, the FINANCIAL TIMES reported today. A memorandum of understanding to this effect was recently signed between the two countries.

The accord is aimed at developing the technology for a future supersonic military aircraft able to combine all the benefits of advanced fighters (such as the forthcoming EFA -- European Fighter Aircraft) with the short take-off and vertical landing capabilities of the Harrier. However, at present there is no plan to develop a specific supersonic Astovl fighter. Several years of research will be needed to prove the feasibility of the new design.

The prospective aircraft, the paper said, is expected by the mid-to-late-1990s to replace the existing British-designed Harrier jump-jet aircraft. The governments of the two countries will finance the research program which has hitherto been funded by private companies.

AMBASSADOR HAN XU GIVEN ACHIEVEMENT AWARD

OW211130 Beijing XINHUA in English 1108 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 20 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Ambassador to the United States Han Xu was presented the U.S.-Asia Institute 1986 achievement award at the institute's closing session here this afternoon. Ambassadors from some other Asian countries were similarily honoured at today's session. It is the first time that the achievement award was given to ambassadors.

During the two-day session which began yesterday, representatives from the United States and Asian countries focused their discussion on trade, technology and security. Chinese representative Wu Junyang, adviser to the Research Center for Economic, Technical and Social Development of the State Council, briefed the representatives on China's Seventh 5-Year Plan (1986-1990). He described China's open policy and economic reform.

Dr. S.C. Pu, adviser to the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, put forth some thoughts on trade between the U.S. and the Asian developing countries. He said U.S.-Japan trade is extremely important, but U.S. trade with the Asian developing countries is equally important. He urged the United States not to adopt protectionism. "As protectionism acts as a constraint on the potential growth of the Asian countries, U.S. exports to these countries will eventually suffer. These feedback effects are the natural consequence of interdependence," he said. He warned that while the economic gains to the United States brought about by protectionism are extremely doubtful, the political price paid in terms of its relations with the Asian countries is certainly going to be high.

The achievement award is given to distinguished people who have contributed to the understanding and strengthening of friendly ties between the United States and Asia. It has been presented every year since the U.S.-Asia Institute was founded in 1979.

HOUSE COMMITTEE URGES HALT TO PHILIPPINES AID

OW211154 Beijing XINHUA in English 0845 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 20 (XINHUA) -- A U.S. House foreign affairs subcommittee today approved unanimously legislation calling for a halt to direct U.S. military and economic aid to the Philippine Government headed by President Ferdinand Marcos. The legislation, passed by the House Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs, requires that future humanitarian, economic and development assistance funds for the Philippines be distributed through the Roman Catholic Church and other private groups. Military assistance for the Pacific country would be placed in an escrow until the establishment of "a legitimate government... which commands the support of the people of the Philippines," the bill says.

The bill was passed by 9-0 vote over the objections of the Congress Republican leadership and the Reagan administration who wanted the subcommittee to wait until special envoy Philip Habib returns from Manila to report on his investigation. Before the voting, Senate Republican leader Robert Dole warned Congress against rushing to cut off aid to the Philippines as a means of forcing President Marcos out of office. White House Deputy Press Secretary Edward Djerejian told reporters that the administration position is not to take immediate action on the question of U.S. aid to the Philippines because "this aid goes to the very well-being and security of the Filipino people themselves."

After the subcommittee vote, representative Stephen Solarz told reporters that it is important to act quickly to send a signal to the Philippines that (?"we) will not countenance a stolen election." The bill (?will) be taken up by the full House Foreign Affairs Committee after Habib returns.

U.S. EXPRESSES CONCERN ABOUT PHILIPPINE SITUATION

OW230300 Beijing XINHUA in English 0213 GMT 23 Feb 86

["U.S. Administration Endorses Charges of Election Fraud Against Philippine President" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, February 22 (XINHUA) -- The U.S. Government today expressed its support for the statements by two top Philippine military officials that blamed President Ferdinand Marcos for fraud in February election and called on Marcos to resign.

In a written statement approved by President Ronald Reagan, the White House said that Philippine Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and Deputy Armed Forces Chief Fidel Ramos called on Marcos to step down "because his government no longer has a popular mandate." "These statements strongly reinforce our concerns that the recent presidential elections were marred by fraud, perpetrated overwhelmingly by the ruling party, so extreme as to undermine the credibility and the legitimacy of the election and impair the capacity of the Government of the Philippines to cope with a growing insurgency and troubled economy," the White House noted. "Many authoritative voices in the Philippines have been raised in support of non-violence," the White House statement said. "We support these voices and expect them to be respected. We also support the resolution of issues involved by all the people of the Philippines as quickly as possible."

White House Deputy Press Secretary Edward Djerejian told reporters that Reagan, who is spending the weekend at Camp David, approved the statement after a conference call with his National Security Advisor John Poindexter, Secretary of State George Shultz, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan.

Marcos Warned Against Force

OW240306 Beijing XINHUA in English 0250 GMT 24 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 23 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan today warned Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos not to attack the rebelling forces of two top military officials, saying such a move would lead to a halt to U.S. military aid for the Philippines. Philippine Defense Minister Juan Ponce Enrile and acting Armed Forces chief of staff broke with President Marcos Saturday and demanded Marcos resign and give up power to opposition leader Corazon Aquino.

White House Spokesman Larry Speakes said President Reagan warned that the United States "cannot continue our existing military assistance if the government uses that aid against other elements of the Philippine military that enjoy popular backing." "An attempt to resolve this situation by force will surely result in bloodshed and casualties, further polarize Philippine society and cause untold damage to the relationship between our governments," the spokesman added.

Speakes told reporters that Reagan was concerned about Marcos using forces against Philippine citizens and he decided that if Marcos did not call back his military forces, U.S. military aid would be cut off "immediately." Speakes made the announcement to the press after Reagan met with Vice President George Bush, Defense Secretary Casper Weinberger, CIA Director William Casey, White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan, National Security Adviser John Poindexter and Special Envoy Philip Habib, who just returned from the Philippines.

REAGAN RESPONDS TO GORBACHEV ARMS PROPOSAL

OW231913 Beijing XINHUA in English 1832 GMT 23 Feb 86

[Text] Washington, February 23 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan sent a letter Saturday to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, proposing the elimination of U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles in Europe and Asia over the next three years, administration officials said. The letter has not been made available by the White House now. This is the formal response from the United States to the arms control proposal made by Gorbachev on January 15 which called for the elimination of all nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

Reagan in his letter has reportedly rejected the Soviet proposal to freeze British and French medium-range nuclear forces at the existing levels. U.S. officials said Reagan in his letter called Gorbachev's proposal "a good idea", but added that "the fact is, let's get down to brass tacks -- to move from here to there let's start with I.N.F. (intermediate-range nuclear forces)." I.N.F. seemed to be Reagan's focus in his letter. He proposed the elimination of all intermediate-range nuclear forces, or those weapons with a range of about 3,400 miles, in three years' time.

U.S. officials disclosed that Reagan might have offered several options to the Soviet Union to eliminate the intermediate-range forces, which include Soviet SS-20 missiles and U.S. Pershing 2 ballistic missiles and ground-launched cruise missiles. A key option might be to eliminate all U.S. and Soviet medium-range missiles from Europe, limit the Soviet Asian deployment of SS-20 medium-range missiles to Soviet Central Europe [as received] and allow the U.S. to keep an equal number of missiles in the U.S. Under this proposal, medium-range missiles would be reduced to 140 in Europe after one year, with proportional reductions in Asia. The weapons would then be halved in Europe after that, and then drop to zero. The other option would be "straight reductions down" on medium-range forces to zero in three years "on a global basis."

According to U.S. officials, Reagan has sent a "very comprehensive letter" to Gorbachev which included a recommitment by the U.S. to abolish chemical weapons. He also told the Soviet leader that the U.S. is awaiting a detailed response to a U.S. proposal at the strategic arms reduction talks in Geneva last November. Reagan reportedly said in his letter that the U.S. is eager to fulfill its obligation to reduce by 50 percent all Soviet and U.S. strategic forces that can strike the other country. The North Atlantic Treaty Organization says the Soviet Union has 441 SS-20 missiles, including 130 in Europe and 171 in Asia. U.S. totals include 108 Pershing 2 missiles and cruise missiles expected to reach 464. Not all of the cruise missiles have been deployed.

The United States has been on the defensive on arms control since Soviet leader Gorbachev offered his proposal on January 15. The U.S. was first surprised by the proposal, then it studied carefully and called the proposal "positive" and began to consult with its allies for a response. The U.S. proposal contained in Reagan's letter seemed to have considered the concerns of European countries and Japan. Gorbachev's proposal did not cover missiles that are based in the Asian part of the Soviet Union. But Reagan's proposal sought either the elimination or the sharp reduction of these missiles. It seems that Reagan in his letter did not touch the U.S. "star wars" program which the U.S. pledged it will not abandon. The Soviet Union did not raise the issue as a precondition for arms control this time.

SPOKESMAN ON WARSAW PACT MBFR PROPOSALS

OW202045 Beijing XINHUA in English 2004 GMT 20 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 20 (XINHUA) -- A Soviet Government spokesman said today that proposals by socialist countries at the Vienna disarmament conference have narrowed East-West disarmament differences and make it possible for the two sides to reach major arms control agreements.

Speaking at a press conference in Moscow, Foreign Ministry Press Department Chief Vladimir Lomeyko said the proposals, which were tabled today at the conference, include cuts of 11,500 troops by the Soviet Union and 6,500 by the United States, establishment of three or four permanent posts to supervise the cuts, exchange of data on each side's Armed Forces and the setting up of a permanent consultative committee. Lomeyko said Warsaw Pact countries have now agree to the Western countries proposal on verification of arms reduction. He said the Eastern block proposals, particularly on verification, have brought the disarmament positions of both East and West much closer.

TV COMMENTATOR REMARKS ON U.S. ARMS PROPOSAL

OW240254 Beijing XINHUA in English 0237 GMT 24 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 23 (XINHUA) -- A Soviet TV commentator said today U.S. President Ronald Reagan's reported response to the latest Soviet disarmament proposals contained "practically nothing constructive." Soviet television political news analyst Boris Kalyagin, appearing on the program "International Panorama," stressed that it "attests to a lack of seriousness on the part of the Washington admininstration" if "the White House is going to give a response on the eve or even on the day of the opening of the 27th CPSU Congress so that the Soviet side will not have time to react to the American position in the political report to the congress."

This is the first Soviet comment on Washington's counter-proposals put forward by Reagan on February 4 for discussion with U.S.allies.

Kalyagin said that the United States, while in principle agreeing to a 50 percent nuclear weapons cut, did not want to give up the Strategic Defense Initiative "which undermines the very idea of a nuclear arms reduction." He said the proposals appeared to be little more than a return to Reagan's "zero option" for removing missiles from Europe. Kalyagin stressed that more than five weeks had passed without a U.S. official response since the Soviet proposals for the elimination of nuclear weapons by the year 2000.

Western news agencies today reported that Reagan, in a letter to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on Saturday, is calling for elimination of medium-range missiles in Europe as the first step toward an end to the nuclear arms race worldwide. Kalyagin's comment today made no mention of Reagan's letter.

SOVIET MARSHALS ATTACK SDI IN PRESS ARTICLES

OW230346 Beijing XINHUA in English 0251 GMT 23 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 22 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union will respond to U.S. efforts to develop its Strategic Defense Initiative, Soviet Marshal Viktor Kulikov stated today. In an article published today in the government newspaper IZVESTIYA on the eve of the 68th anniversary of the Soviet Army and Navy First Deputy Defence Minister Kulikov said the job of the Soviet Armed Forces is "to give a quick and crushing blow to aggressors" in any type of attack on the Soviet Union.

Kulikov, who is also commander in chief of the Joint Armed Forces of the Warsaw Treaty countries, accused the United States of "seeking military superiority over the Soviet Union by developing a space-based and comprehensive anti-missile defense system." He declared that the Soviet Union will do its best to find a way to answer the Strategic Defense Initiative if the United States goes ahead with the program. Soviet defense minister Marshal Sergey Sokolov also published an article today in the Soviet Communist Party newspaper PRAVDA, stressing that "the Soviet Armed Forces are a reliable stronghold of freedom and independence of their socialist homeland."

TASS CRITICIZES FRENCH INTERFERENCE IN CHAD

OW230801 Beijing XINHUA in English 0631 GMT 23 Feb 86

[Text] Moscow, February 22 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet official news agency TASS today accused France of armed interference in Chad, saying that the move conformed to interests of the United States.

A TASS commentary said France, by sending troops to Chad, is attempting "to play the role of a gendarme who defends the interests of imperialism" in central Africa. The commentary charged that France has aggravated the tense situation in Chad, to the south of Libya, while the United States continued its military provocation at sea north of Libya. Frances's claim that it is trying to prevent Libya from occupying Chad by sending troops to the central African country is "an argument for revival of neocolonialism, TASS said.

France flew 500 soldiers and six jet fighters to Chad last Tuesday to help the government Army against an offensive by rebels, who are allegedly backed by Libya.

Chad was a French colony before it achieved independence in August, 1960.

DPRK URGES IMMEDIATE STOP TO 'TEAM SPIRIT-86'

OW211236 Beijing XINHUA in English 1228 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 21 (XINHUA) - The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) called on the United States and South Korea to stop immediately the ongoing "Team Spirit-86" military exercise to ease the mounting tension on the Korean peninsula. According to the local press, Kang Hui-won, a high-ranking Korean party and government official, said in a public speech that the U.S.-South Korean joint military exercise has aggravated the tension on the Korean peninsula and has suspended the dialogue between the two sides.

Speaking to a mass rally yesterday, Kang called on the Korean people and Army to respond to the recent order of the supreme commander of the Korean People's Army. The order of February 10 put the DPRK military forces on the alert in face of U.S.-South Korean war provocations. Kang also denounced the South Korean authorities for suppressing students and democrats. He appealed to the international community to pay close attention to the situation in Korea and to support the Korean people in their just struggle for the country's peaceful reunification and their efforts to turn the Koran peninsula into a zone free of nuclear weapons.

DPRK DENIES HINDERING SEOUL OLYMPIC GAMES

OW210930 Beijing XINHUA in English 0854 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Pyongyang, February 21 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today dismissed the South Korean charge that the North has taken steps "to hinder the Olympic Games" as a "mere fabrication." MINJU CHOSON, an official daily newspaper, noted in a commentary that the South Korean charge came at the same time as the "10 million-strong signature movement" for constitutional amendment launched by South Korean opposition parties, organizations and students. South Korean "President" Chon Tu-hwan said on February 19 that South Korea should strengthen its "defense system" to cope with the northern threat to the Olympics.

Seoul is attempting to slander the international reputation and influence of the DPRK and ease domestic unrest by accusing the Northern side of jeopardizing the 1988 Olympic Games, the paper said. Pyongyang and Seoul have been discussing since last October in Lausanne, Switzerland, the possibility of co-sponsoring the 1988 Olympiad under the auspices of the International Olympic Committee (IOC), and the two rounds of talks held so far have resulted in some progress. Their next round of talks is scheduled for June.

S. KOREAN AUTHORITIES CRACK DOWN ON OPPOSITION

OW211922 Beijing XINHUA in English 1858 GMT 21 Feb 86

["Round-up: Signature Campaign Oppressed in Seoul -- (by Gao Haorong)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Pyongyang, February 21 (XINHUA) -- The antagonism between the South Korean authorities and the opposition parties and young students heightened in Seoul as authorities intensified their crack down on an opposition "signature campaign" calling for revisions of the existing Constitution. The campaign, which started on February 12 in Seoul, was initiated by the New Korea Democratic Party (NKDP), the Council for Promotion of Democracy and other opposition parties to collect ten million signatures to press for changes in the present Constitution. However, the campaign met with strong persecution by the Seoul regime.

Two days after the campaign started, South Korean Minister of Justice Kim Song-ki accused the campaign of being camouflaged violence against the rule of law and parliamentary democracy and declared that those who participate in it would be severely punished. The prosecutor general's office instructed its local offices on February 11 to punish even ordinary citizens who signed on to the campaign. The Minister of Education Son Chae-suk also denounced the campaign and warned of strict disciplinary actions against students who signed it or joined the protest rallies and demonstrations. Between February 12 to February 20, opposition leader Kim Tae-chung was put under house arrest and threatened with imprisonment if he continued his anti-government activities. Another opposition leader, Kim Yong-sam, was placed under house-arrest three times during the same period and the headquarters of the NKDP were raided twice and documents and publicity materials confiscated. Even now, the headquarters are under heavy guard by more than 300 policemen and people are prohibited from entering it.

Meanwhile, on February 15 scores of anti-government protesters clashed with plainclothes policemen. On Thursday more than 200 NKDP party members, including the party's president Yi Min-u, were put under house arrest, preventing them from attending the plenary session of the party's Central Committee. In another development, police arrested and detained about 120 people who signed or got involved in the campaign. During the night of February 14, 15,000 policemen raided 129 universities and colleges, taking away bundles of printed materials and flags and arresting about 200 young students.

However the violent oppression has backfired and met with even stronger resistance from the opposition parties and young students. The NKDP has stressed that the signature campaign is a peaceful movement and that it reflects people's demand for democracy. After the first raid on its headquarters, the party declared it would continue the struggle, however cruel the oppression and even if all its 600,000 party members were all thrown into prison. While under house arrest, NKDP president Li Min-u strongly criticised the authorities' crackdown and demanded the Seoul regime give up its idea of delaying the discussion on Constitution revision until 1989. Kim Yong-sam has said frequently even before the campaign was launched that he is ready to be put behind bars. He has pledged to pursue the campaign to the end even if he were threatened with imprisonment or death.

JAPAN'S NAKASONE PLANNING TO VISIT U.S. IN MARCH

OW181849 Beijing XINHUA in English 1830 GMT 18 Feb 86

[Text] Tokyo, February 18 (XINHUA) -- Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone is planning to visit the United States on March 21 for talks with American President Ronald Reagan. Shin Kanemaru, secretary-general of the ruling Liberal Democratic Party, who disclosed the plan during a lecture here today, said that the two sides are discussing the visit itinerary through diplomatic channels.

Observers believe that Nakasone will discuss preparations for the May Tokyo summit of seven industrialized countries, Japan's participation in the U.S. proposed "star wars" program, reform of the international monetary system and bilateral trade frictions. Nakasone has said that Japan will decide about its participation in the star wars program only after studying whether it is nuclear in nature. He told a Diet committee today that "the most important point in considering Japan's participation (in the star wars program) is whether it is a nonnuclear system for defence purposes. On the monetary reform, Nakasone said Saturday that Japan now has particular interest in monetary reform following a sharp appreciation of the Japanese yen against the U.S. dollar.

REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF MAURITANIA'S TAYA

Li Xiannian Hosts Banquet

OW211510 Beijing XINHUA in English 1433 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese President Li Xiannian and the visiting Mauritanian head of state, Maayouia Ould Sid Ahmed Taya today agreed to advance Sino-Mauritanian cooperation to a new height. Li said that China attached great importance to the development of the friendly cooperation between the two countries and was confident that this cooperation would grow further thanks to the efforts by both sides. Taya replied that Mauritanian-Chinese cooperation had set an example for the Third World countries. Mauritania would spare no effort in safeguarding the achievements of this cooperation and would take every possible measure to develop and diversify it.

The two leaders were speaking at a banquet here this evening given by the Chinese president in honor of Taya, who is also chairman of the Military Committee of National Salvation of Mauritania, Mme Taya and their party in the Great Hall of the People.

Li Xiannian, who was the first to take the floor, stressed that the friendly relations of cooperation were based on mutual trust, mutual support and treating each other on an equal footing. Such relations, he noted, were developing smoothly. The Chinese president spoke highly of the efforts made by the Mauritanian people in safeguarding their state sovereignty and developing their national economy and culture. He also praised the Mauritanian Government for pursuing a policy of peace, neutrality and non-alignment in international affairs. The important task facing Third World countries after winning national independence, Li said, was to develop their economies and build up themselves so as to improve the living standards of the people and rid underdevelopment at an earlier date. He emphasized that China belonged to the Third World and was willing to further its friendly cooperation with other Third World countries.

Taya said that the international situation had become more and more worrysome, especially for the Third World countries. Although the developing countries strongly demanded a just and more rational new world economic order, he said, no big stride had been taken in this direction. The developing countries were baring the front of the consequences of the world economic crisis. Some of them were also hit by natural disasters, he added. He expressed the belief that the developing countries, with their great economic potentials and human resources, could benefit from strengthening all-round cooperation in developing their economies. "That is why we firmly support every initiative and effort that might promote South-South cooperation," he added.

Speaking of tensions in Africa, Mideast and Asia, Taya said that only by following the five principles of peaceful co-existence could international peace and security be ensured. He spoke highly of China's domestic and foreign policies and its economic achievements, and thanked China for its aid to his country.

Among those present at the banquet were Lin Jiamei, wife of the Chinese president; Zhu Xuefan, vice-chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee; and Wu Xueqian, state councillor and foreign minister. This morning, Mme Taya visited the China Children Center.

Hu Yaobang Meets Taya

OW221316 Beijing XINHUA in English 1242 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, February 22 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang said here today that the Third World countries, as an important force for world peace and economic development, should contribute more to human progress. "Key to making such contributions lies in unity and mutual support of the Third World countries," he added.

Hu made these remarks at a meeting here this afternoon with Colonel Maayouia Ould Sid Ahmed Taya, chairman of the Military Committee of National Salvation and head of state of Mauritania. Hu also expressed the belief that Sino-Mauritanian friendship as well as the unity and cooperation among the Third World countries would continue for a long time to come. He noted that China and Mauritania, as friendly countries, cared for and supported each other. The two countries had fostered a profound friendship since they established diplomatic relations 21 years ago. "We support each other's cause and share basically identical views on many international issues," he said.

Responding, Ould Taya expressed satisfaction with the cooperation between the two countries in various fields. He said that he had a full exchange of views with Chinese leaders on issues of mutual concern during his stay here. Ould Taya also thanked China for its aid to Mauritania's economic construction and briefed Hu on his country's fight against drought and development of production.

Hu said that it was of great importance to boost production and improve the life of the people. Therefore, it was entirely correct for Mauritania to give first priority to improving the living conditions of its people. He wished for steady improvement of the Mauritanian economy. Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, minister of Public Health Cui Yueli, and senior members of Ould Taya's entourage were present at the meeting.

SIERRA LEONEAN PRESIDENT ARRIVES 24 FEBRUARY

[Text] Beijing, February 24 (XINHUA) -- Sierra Leonean President Joseph Saidu Monoh arrives here today for an official visit, which, as analysts said, will further enhance the cooperation between the two countries. China and Sierra Leone established diplomatic relations in July 1971. Since then, political and economic cooperation between the two countries has developed steadily. Former Sierra Leonean President Siaka Stevens visited China three times during his office which ended last November, while Chinese senior officials also visited Sierra Leone. In recent years, political, economic, cultural and sport contacts between the two countries have increased. The Chinese Communist Party and the Sierra Leone's ruling party, the All People's Congress, have set up ties recently.

In economic sectors, China has provided loans totaling 100 million yuan (about 31.35 U.S. dollars) to develop Sierra Leonean economy. As well, 13 China-aid rice-planting technical stations are playing an important role in helping with Sierra Leone's agriculture. China has also helped to build a sugar refinery and is managing a sugar-cane farm. The farm and factory turned out more than 8,000 tons sugar last year, accounting for one-third of the sugar consumed, saving large amounts of foreign exchanges. 30,000-seat Siaka Stevens sport stadium, 26,000 square meters government building and some highway bridges have been built and some other projects are underway with the aid of China. All those assistance is highly praised by Sierra Leonean people.

Last year the two countries signed an economic and technical agreement, under which China will provide technology services and set up joint ventures. The two sides also agreed to explore the possibilities of further cooperation in agriculture, water conservation, fishery, forestry and sugar-refining with the help of Chinese specialist now working in the country.

[Text] Kuwait, February 21 (XINHUA) -- The Saudi Arab Civil Aviation Authority has turned down a request by the Soviet Union for transit permits of five Aeroflot airliners, according to today's AL-WATAN here. No reason for the rejection was given but the report quoted a spokesman of the Aeroflot as saying that the rejection "has been considered as an unfriendly gesture."

According to the Soviet spokesman, two of the five planes are still grounded at the Larnaca Airport, Cyprus, two others at the Bombay Airport, India, and the fifth plane is waiting at Moscow.

He said that the application for the permits was made by the end of January.

CENTRAL DOCUMENT ON 1986 RURAL WORK PLAN ISSUED

OW230600 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0735 GMT 22 Feb 86

["Plan of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council for Rural Work in 1986" -- 1 January 1986]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Feb (XINHUA) -- The New Situation and Tasks

1. Last year, following the adoption of the system of contracted responsibilities with remuneration linked to rural output, China aleo took a major step and achieved remarkable success in reforming the unified and fixed state purchase system for farm produce and in readjusting production structure. The most important indicator of this is the enlivening of the rural economy. Broad masses of peasants show an ever-increasing initiative in applying themselves to production to meet market demands. The lateral ties of the commodity economy have developed. Forestry, animal husbandry, fishery, and processing industry, and service trades, which have long been comparatively less developed, have been substantially upgraded. Our rural areas are advancing on the avenue of diversified operations and coordinated development. Last year, despite a drop in grain and cotton output due to relatively serious natural disasters and the planned shrinkage of grain and cotton acreage, output met market demand. The output of all other crops increased, and total rural ouput and peasant incomes still registered a relatively large increase. Sustained economic growth in rural areas has provided favorable conditions for reform and development of the national economy as a whole. Practice has proven that the principles and policies for rural reform are correct; they must continue to be implemented.

2. The agricultural growth rate of recent years was seldom seen in the past. This is primarily attributable to the fact that all potential forces for originally increasing production have burst onto the scene simultaneously as a result of reform. In the days to come, sustained and steady development of agriculture will hinge on stability and the continuous improvement of our policies, the continuous augmentation of the peasants' initiative, and the continuous improvement of the conditions for agricultural production. We should realize that the present material and technological foundation of agriculture is still fragile; peasant interest in growing grain crops seems to have decreased in some areas; while the old economic system is being replaced by the new in the rural areas, the process is marked by many anomalies; and the regulation of interests between various quarters has become even more complex after urban and rural reforms hve converged. There are many difficult problems confronting us. However, as long as we persist in carrying out the reform that has already started, earnestly implement various party policies, and mobilize all positive factors, we can resolve all the difficult problems no matter how many there are.

The general requirements for rural work in 1986 are: implementing policies, carrying out thorough reforms, improving conditions for agricultural production, organizing preproduction and postproduction services, and promoting a sustained, steady, and coordinated development of the rural economy.

Continue To Place Agriculture in Its Proper Position in the National Economy

3. Development of the national economy with agriculture as the foundation reflects not only economic law but also natural law and must be firmly regarded as a long-range strategic principle. Ours is a big country with a population of 1 billion, of whom 800 million are peasants. In no way should we relax our efforts at agriculture because a better situation has appeared in agriculture.

Nor should we ignore investment in agriculture because capital construction for agriculture requires a long period, and because it takes a long time to receive benefits from such construction. Still less should we deny the importance of agriculture as the foundation because of a gradual decline of the percentage of agriculture in the gross output value of the national economy. In the industrialization process, we, as a developing country, must make every effort to avoid stagnation in the development of agriculture.

Following the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party has persistently upheld the principle of taking agriculture as the foundation and has achieved substantial successes. As the situation continues to develop and change, more effective measures must be adopted so that this principle can be continuously upheld. To maintain a balanced development of industry and agriculture, the state will, beginning with the Seventh 5-Year Plan, appropriately increase investment in agriculture capital construction and agricultural operating expenses and set aside some of the additional receipts from increased income tax and industrial and commercial taxes on village and town enterprises for use in supporting agriculture. The bonus tax collected from village and town enterprises will be put at the disposal of the related township financial department (or manged by the county financial department on behalf of the township if the latter has no financial department) and used for agriculture; it should not be used for any other purpose.

In order to encourage enthusiasm among the peasants for growing grain, the state will constantly improve the method of contractual grain purchase, stabilize the prices of means of production for agriculture, and reduce or remit taxes on small chemical fertilizer plants that have difficulties for the purpose of lowering the prices of chemical fertilizers. In order to enhance the peasants' ability to accumulate funds, it is necessary to keep the peasants' tax burden within reasonable limits and strictly prohibit arbitrary apportionment and unjustified fees. It is necessary to support the peasants in developing a diversified economy, open more avenues for production, and "supplement agriculture with industry." Loans for village and town enterprises should be extended in consideration of trades and purposes. They may be on more liberal terms if they are extended to trades which are encouraged, or to backward regions, for use as circulating funds or for technological transformation. The departments concerned, particularly the departments in charge of overall balancing, should formulate implementation plans based on the aforesaid principles. They should submit the plans to the State Council for approval before they are carried out.

All provinces, autonomous regions, municipalities, and counties should ensure proper use of agricultural funds appropriated by the central authorities and should not divert them to other than their specific purposes. Local governments should do their best to make more agricultural investment with their own financial resources to stop a decreasing trend in agricultural investment. Investment in water conservation projects should be restored as soon as possible to the guaranteed level of 1980.

Maintain Steady Agricultural Growth Through a Scientific Approach and Increasing Investment

4. The Seventh 5-Year Plan calls for a total grain output of 900 billion jin, maintaining an approximate level of 800 jin per capita. This is a new production level, which can be attained only by relying on science, increasing investment, increasing per unit area output, and appropriately stabilizing the total acreage for grain crops.

Efforts must be made to increase land productivity. Chemical fertilizer supply should be increased year after year. At the same time, the tendency to overlook organic fertilizers in recent years should be corrected in order to increase organic matter in soil content.

It is necessary to continue to harness rivers, improve farmland water conservation facilities, repair and renovate existing facilities, and build necessary auxiliary projects for existing facilities. It is necessary to transform land with medium and low yields according to plan. The necessary labor investment system should be instituted, and procedures for cooperating in building mutual-benefit agricultural projects should be further imporved. With some peasants shifting to nonagricultural production, encouragement is given to putting more cropland in the hands of expert farmers and developing special crop-cultivation households of proper size.

In order to support the development of animal husbandry and the aquatic products industry, it is necessary to step up building basic facilities for commodity production, grassland, and facilities for deep-sea fishery; set up fine-seed breeding, fodder, epidemic prevention, product processing, storage, transport, and marketing services; and gradually form relatively concentrated commodity production zones. It is necessary to develop forestry persistently and cultivate fast-growing forests to support the cultivation of slow-growing forests. At present, emphasis should be put on nurturing young forests and building fast-growing and high-yield forests.

In coastal areas, it is necessary to build a number of export bases for new agricultural products, special local products, and small commodities produced by village and town enterprises; develop the production of agricultural products that earn foreign exchange; and take the lead in achieving good quality and high standards for rural products.

All localities, particularly counties, should continue to do a good job in agricultural resources surveys, agricultural regionalization, and social and economic surveys, formulate overall local development plans, and give full play to local favorable conditions to develop the local economy in an all-round way.

This year, departments concerned should formulate regulations on strictly controlling building of nonagricultural projects on cropland; on governing the planning, building, and management of small towns; and on concrete measures for water and soil conservation and for rural environmental protection. This legislation should be submitted to the State Council for approval before it is enforced.

5. Although the state has increased its investment in agriculture, funds for rural construction will still mainly come from the rural areas' own accumulation. We recommend that the cooperative economic organizations in various localities use some of their annual revenue to set up a public accumulation fund and at the same time establish a depreciation system for their fixed assets. We also encourage the masses to invest in building various kinds of production facilities. The People's Bank and the Agricultural Bank of China should formulate different credit loan policies for different areas and industries in order to support the structural reform of industries and the renovation of agricultural technology. The various policies governing credit cooperatives stipulated in the CPC Central Committee Document No 1 of 1985 as well as the various State Council regulations on the structural reform of credit cooperatives should each be implemented. The ratio between a credit cooperative's reserve fund and total deposits should be properly lowered according to local conditions, thus ensuring that more deposits are attracted so that more loans can be made. We must also actively promote various kinds of rural insurance.

6. Science and technology must serve the rural economy, and rural economic development must depend on science and technology. This should be regarded as an important principle.

Currently, we must emphasize the development of new seed strains, new technology, new machinery and implements, and new materials suitable to China's agriculture. We must also promote technical innovations in the various sectors of a diversified economy, continuously raise both the quantity and quality of products, cut production costs, and raise labor productivity.

We must attach great importance to establishing and perfecting such services as agricultural scientific research, education, information, technological popularization, management, and others at all levels. We must make gradual and proper readjustments to the orientation, mission, and layout of the agricultural scientific research organizations; develop the county agricultural technological popularization center to combine the tasks of experiment, demonstration, popularization, and training; and step up the popularization of agricultural technology at the frontline of production. Technological services should primarily be rendered to the peasants at little or no charge.

Under the "spark plan" approved by the central authorities and the State Council and being implemented by the State Science and Technology Commission during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, some 100 types of complete sets of technical equipment suitable for use in village and town enterprises are to be developed and manufactured in large quantities; some 500 village and town enterprises for technical demonstrations will be established; they will be provided with whole sets of technology, management regulations, product designs, and quality control methods; and each year, these enterprises will offer short-term training to a number of educated rural youths and basic-level cadres thus enabling the trainees to master one or two advanced technologies of great use to their respective localities. This should be a good way to promote scientific and technological services. The scientific, technological, education, and economic departments at all levels must closely cooperate to implement this plan and must work out their own plans of a similar nature in order to accelerate various technical innovations in rural areas.

While doing technological research and popularization work, scientific research agencies, colleges,and other schools concerned should pay attention to planning for medium- and long-range research projects and should replenish their scientific reserve forces.

Carry Out Thorough Rural Economic Reform

7. Rural economic reform is still far short of its set goals. Reform involves breaking with old ways and establishing new ways. To perfect the circulation and cooperative systems and readjust the industrial structure, a lot of work remains to be done. If we fail in this work, reform may be interrupted. The various difficulties encountered in reform can only be resolved by forging ahead with reform. There is no future in shrinking from difficulties.

8. Reform in the system of unified state purchase of farm products is tied to the interests of the producers, dealers, consumers, and other sectors. This reform should be carried out in coordination with urban reforms in the future. This year we should concentrate our efforts on policies already in force, keep up the good work, and consolidate and enhance the fruits of reform.

Replacing the unified state purchase of grain with contractual purchase is an important reform in the grain procurement system. It should be gradually perfected. Our determination to carry out reforms should not be swayed by seasonal fluctuations in grain production. To protect and arouse the peasants' enthusiasm for producing and selling grain, the quantity of contractual purchases will be reduced to an appropriate extent, more grain will be purchased at negotiated prices in the market, and peasants who sign contracts will be supplied a fixed quantity of chemical fertilizer on a par and will be given loan priority.

While readjusting the quantity of contractual purchases, special attention should be given to those localities that have tremendous potential for grain production but lack the means to develop production in other areas. In economically developed areas, the quantity of contractual purchases should be kept stable mainly by promoting the development of village and town enterprises so as to supplement agriculture with industry and reasonably compensate peasants for producing and selling grain.

In order to rationally regulate the economic interests of the provinces that ship grain and those that bring in grain, facilitate grain circulation, and enable each province to exploit its own advantages, starting in the 1986 grain year, all provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities will institute a system of responsibility for grain shipment. The method for determining shipment prices and the financial subsidies involved will also be readjusted accordingly. When it becomes necessary to export from or import into a province grain that does not fall within the scope of the responsibility system, localities will negotiate purchase and sales prices.

The Ministry of Commerce and the Ministry of Finance will be instructed to work out, as soon as possible, a plan implementing the two tasks mentioned above, and to submit the plan to the State Council for approval before transmitting it to all localities. Following the aforesaid guidelines, all localities should take local conditions into consideration and do their work in a meticulous and down-to-earth manner.

Large cities should give priority to the production and supply of vegetables and sideline products. Continued efforts should be made to ensure vegetable production in the nearby suburbs and to gradually set up vegetable production bases in the distant suburbs, as well as to designate vegetable supply bases out of town. The nearby suburbs will be the primary source of vegetable supply, the distant suburbs will play a supplementary role, while the out-of-town bases will provide a certain degree of maneuverability. This will ensure an ample vegetable supply. It is necessary to actively establish wholesale markets for vegetables and sideline products to make more farm products available in the cities.

Processing plants that use farm produce as raw materials should try various ways to serve the areas that produce raw materials and should assist the peasants in providing products that meet the plant's requirements. In this way, the processing industry will gradually guide and promote production. Signing contracts will benefit both the peasants and factories, and profits will be shared between them.

Timber produced by collective-run forest zones and animal byproducts turned out by stockbreeding zones should adhere to the open policy, rather than revert to the old way. All localities should provide effective guidance in light of the new situation resulting from the implementation of the open policy, so that the production and circulation of timber and animal byproducts will be guided onto the right track as soon as possible.

The circulation sector should persist in multichannel operations. State-run commercial establishments should accelerate reforms, show greater vigor in their operations, solve the problem of excessive circulation fees, exploit their advantages, master the essential sources of commodities, take an active part in market regulation, and help balance supply and demand.

9. In readjusting agricultural structure, it is necessary to correctly handle the relationship between grain production and a diversified economy. Grain is an important and irreplaceable product vital to state economy and the people's livelihood. Grain production should be guaranteed. On the other hand, grain yields low earnings and peasants need to supplement their income with a diversified economy. Therefore, equal attention should be given to grain production and to a diversified economy. They should closely coordinate with and promote each other.

In the past we devoted our efforts solely to promoting grain production, which failed to bring faster increases in grain output. On the contrary, it resulted in a stagnant rural economy. In recent years, we have encouraged a diversified economy, including growing cash crops, and developing forestry, animal husbandry, fishery, rural industries, building industry, transportation, service trades, and so on. As a result, grain output has increased more rapidly, increasing overall rural economic prosperity.

Under China's current situation, agriculture and rural industry must develop together harmoniously. Neither industry nor agriculture should elbow the other aside. It should be pointed out that if the rural industry is not developed, there will be no outlet for surplus labor, and we will not be able to supplement agriculture with industry. Conversely, if the agricultural sector is unable to increase its supply of food and raw materials, it will be hard for the rural industry to grow. Both of these consequences will have an adverse effect on economic growth and social stability.

Over a period of just a few years, village and town enterprises' output has already exceeded 200 billion yuan, and they have absorbed a labor force of 60 million people. They have thus found an effective way to deal with the problems of limited acreage, oversupply of labor, and capital shortage in the rural areas of our country, and they have established new ties between urban and rural areas. This shows that village and town enterprises have vitality and an important economic and political significance. As such, all central departments and local authorities must support them, draw up rational plans, give them correct guidance, and improve their management so that they continue to develop soundly.

10. The development of rural commodity production calls for socializing production services. Therefore, improving the cooperative system should begin with services. In China's rural areas, the development of commodity economy and the development of productivity are uneven between regions and industries, and the peasants' needs for services are also diverse. Thus, different forms of cooperation and association projects of all sizes and at different levels should be allowed to coexist. By no means should there be arbitrary uniformity; much less should any one form or project be popularized by means of political movement.

A number of services organized on the basis of the nature of products or trades have appeared in recent years, and their experiences should be earnestly reviewed and gradually improved. Various localities may choose several districts where commodity production is concentrated -- especially bases of export commodity production -- districts where production of perishable goods is concentrated, and districts where family-operated industries are concentrated, and provide them good seeds and technical expertise as well as processing, storage, delivery, marketing, and other services. Specialized cooperative organizations should be gradually set up through providing such services.

Regional cooperative economic organizations should continue to improve the two-tier operation system, which combines centralized and decentralized operations. As a long-term party policy, the household-based contract responsibility system must never be changed at will or depart from the masses' needs. However, some localities have failed to take the responsibility of doing those things which cannot be accomplished, or cannot be accomplished efficiently, by individual households, and the masses are not happy about this. We should firmly integrate centralized and decentralized operation and take effective steps to provide satisfactory technical and operational services, as well as the necessary management.

Because of relatively great differences in social and economic conditions in different areas, the combination of centralized and decentralized operation should also be different in substance, form, size, and level. In areas where collective resources are limited, production is relatively uniform, and output is primarily meant for self-sustenance, work should be started from the very basic.

Effective measures should be taken to help rural households solve their problems in production and circulation and increase their cooperative projects gradually. The economically developed areas where collective enterprises are well founded should fully utilize the conditions of centralized operation and centralized distribution to step up agricultural capital construction and technical transformation, and appropriately readjust the size of operation so as to enhance coordinated agricultural, industrial, and commercial development.

The supply and marketing cooperatives shoulder the heavy task of procuring great quantities of agricultural products and supplying means of production and consumer goods. To meet the peasants' needs in developing a commodity economy, these cooperatives must accelerate the pace of reform and become the peasants' business partners. In matters related to financing, tax revenues, credit loans, and personnel, the state gives equal treatment to the supply and marketing cooperative and to the cooperative commercial operations under the collective ownership system, and the state also gives them preferential treatment where needed. In accordance with this principle, the Board of Directors of the All-China Federation of Supply and Marketing Cooperatives must submit a plan for further reform as soon as possible.

11. The socialist public ownership system provides all workers with conditions and opportunities for development, and the state controls the regulation of social income. These facts form a fundamental guarantee for achieving the goal of prosperity for all people and for forestalling polarization. Because of differences in specific conditions among the workers and the various regions, it is inevitable that some people have become affluent sooner or have greater wealth than others. In policy, we must persist in the orientation of bringing prosperity to all, but in practice, we must permit differences in development and let some people and regions become well-off first, because only thus can the society progress. Egalitarianism will not work because it only chokes production and leads to poverty. In our understanding, we must distinguish between socialist development of letting some people become well-off sooner than others and poliarization under the private ownership system.

Individual economies are a necessary complement to the socialist economy. In permitting them to exist and develop in rural areas, we are bound to see differences in the possession of means of production. But if we adopt an appropriate policy and take necessary regulatory action, we can keep these differences within the bounds permitted by society, and these differences will not pose a threat to the socialist foundation. Although we must encourage the various specialized households to become well-off by hard work, we will not tolerate their "becoming rich and influential families."

In short, we must allow some of the people to become well-off first, but at the same time, we must also develop a system of cooperation, regulate income with taxes, help the poor, perfect the legal system, protect people's legal rights and interests, check illegal profit-seeking, and develop productive forces, thus embarking us on a course toward prosperity for all people.

Effectively Help Impoverished Areas Gradually Change Their Faces

12. Great disparities in natural, social, and historical conditions exist in China's rural areas. Freeing the impoverished regions from poverty calls for arduous work and protracted efforts. The leaders at all levels and various departments must enhance their understanding, change their work style, pay close attention to the work in these regions, and include the mission of changing the faces of the impoverished areas as an important task on their daily agenda.

To change the face of the impoverished areas, we must proceed from reality, assess different situations, clarify responsibilities at each level, and deal with the problem by groups of areas. Currently, emphasis must be laid on the most difficult areas where the people still do not have sufficient food and clothing. After carrying out investigations in these areas, we will then formulate plans, allocate funds, and adopt effective measures to speedily provide the local people with sufficient food and clothing so that they can gradually improve their livelihood by tapping local resources and developing production self-reliantly. In areas where conditions are not so difficult, we will mainly implement the policy and guide production with a correct principle, providing necessary support to the development of forestry, animal husbandry, and mining industries and the production of indigenous and special products, thereby enlivening the local economy.

13. Funds allocated by the state to provinces and autonomous regions as aid to impoverished areas must be examined and subjected to the unified control of the provincial or autonomous regional governments, which, in turn, will work out plans, designate specific projects, and organize funds, technology, and professional people to give coordinated support to the impoverished areas.

14. State-run industrial plants and mines in impoverished regions must disperse their production among local village and town enterprises to aid their development. Mountains, forests, pastoral lands, and watery areas, which are beyond the state's means to manage, may be contracted out to the local people for development. The local government may also provide a part of the capital to a joint venture with the local people for the development of these areas. We must encourage developed areas to build enterprises in the impoverished regions. With the exception of some special varieties designated by the State Council, all agricultural, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline, indigenous, and special products produced in the impoverished areas may be freely sold on the market.

15. The State Council and relevant provinces and autonomous regions must set up leading groups in impoverished areas to strengthen leadership. They must make use of all types of channels to train cadres for impoverished areas, and, at the same time, transfer a group of outstanding cadres from the central, provincial, and prefectural level organs and organize volunteers to work in impoverished areas.

Strengthen and Improve Leadership

16. During the past few years, the central authorities have continuously issued a series of important policy documents on rural work. The various localities and departments have earnestly implemented them and have made due contributions to promoting rural reforms. However, on some issues, there exists disunity of thought, incompatibility in work, insufficient support to new things, and a failure to make proper efforts in implementing the central policies. We must overcome this situation. From now on, various localities and departments must safeguard the seriousness of the party's policies and raise their awareness in implementing policies. Under no circumstances should one go his own way on important policy issues. In revising outdated policies that fail to keep pace with the current situation, we must practice democratic centralism. When there is a need to implement policies flexibly, we must report the situation to the higher authorities and request their approval. When we encounter difficulties in the course of implementing a policy, we must conduct investigation and study, make active explorations, and take the initiative in doing things. We must never beat a retreat in the face of difficulties.

17. In carrying out rural reforms and developing the commodity economy, we must combine the efforts of the urban and rural areas, and we must require coordination among many departments. In order to coordinate all our activities, various provinces, autonomous regions; and municipalities under the direct administration of the central government must adopt specific measures to strengthen their guidance over the development of the rural economy in a coordinated manner.

It is necessary to continuously carry out overall reforms in selected points at the county level. We may further carry out our tests in places where conditions permit. After the separation of government administration from commune management, the township government can only lead the economic work in the whole township from the administrative angle. We must respect the decision-making rights of cooperative economic organizations and enterprises, and we must gradually build township finances.

In doing rural economic work, leadership's main task is to serve the grass-roots units and the peasants. Efforts must be made to perform actual deeds, emphasize practical results, never yield to vanity, and oppose boasting and exaggeration. Particular efforts must be made to oppose the unhealthy act of resorting to trickery in dealing with one's superiors. The cadres at all levels should go deep into basic-level units, visit the prominent personages to solicit their views, help the poor become well-to-do, perform some actual deeds in each township and village, ensure that they achieve their goals successfully, and carry out their work well in every household and family.

18. The rural party rectification is being carried out step by step on the basis of the circular of the Commission for Guiding Party Rectification. In the course of party rectification, we must commend those party members who actively lead the masses to achieve common prosperity, protect those party members who become rich by working hard, and seriously deal, on a case-by-case basis, with the few cadres and party members who have made use of their authority to seek private gains and have reaped straggering profits by illegal means. Efforts must be made to strengthen party building in the rural areas through party rectification, bring into full play the role of basic-level party organs as a fighting bastion in developing material and spiritual civilization in the rural areas, carry out ideological and political work regularly, and foster socialist ethics and habits. Some villages are organizationally lax. No one is doing work responsibly. We must adopt measures to correct this situation within a time limit. Village cadres must set up a clear-cut responsibility system and be reasonably paid for their work.

The steady development of the rural economy is of great significance to the entire national economy and of even greater importance to realizing the target of being comfortably well-off before the turn of the century. The central authorities hope that the leadership at all levels and the relevant departments will closely coordinate with one another, work harder than ever before, bring about a rejuvenation of the rural economy, and score an overall victory in carrying out rural reforms.

HU YAOBANG INSPECTS, ENCOURAGES RURAL WORK

OW232018 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0743 GMT 23 Feb 86

[By reporters Feng Jian and Zhang Zhilin]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Feb (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, stressed on 19 February that leading organs and leading cadres at central and provincial levels should regularly go among the masses and visit grass-roots units to conduct investigation, study, and build closer ties between higher and lower levels on one hand and between leading organs and the broad masses on the other.

Doing so strengthens good common practice and generates tremendous spiritual strength. What is more important, it is also conducive to realizing correct leadership, minimizing mistakes in leadership work, upgrading the quality of cadres, and promoting the sound development of cadres, especially younger ones.

He said: Judging from our party's historical experience, we must work hard in two areas if we want cadres to develop healthily. First, cadres must have a good grasp of Marxist theory as well as modern scientific and technological knowledge and administrative and management know-how. Second, cadres must be familiar with the situation in the country and in their respective provinces, and msut work hard for more experience in practical work. In other words, they must climb upward as well delving deep.

Hu Yaobang made these remarks in Nanning on 19 February after he heard reports from three inspection teams formed by central organs on the situation of impoverished areas and on the work of Yunnan, Guangxi, and Guizhou.

From 4 to 16 February, Hu Yaobang toured, by car, high mountain ridges in southwest China and inspected Anshun Prefecture Guizhou; Qujing Prefecture, Yunnan; Baise Prefecture, Guangxi; Beihai City; and Fangcheng Port. He was briefed on the work of these prefectures and of a dozen or so subordinate counties. After arriving in Nanning on 16 February, he spent 2 and 1/2 days attentively listening to the work reports of the three inspection teams, two provinces, and one region.

Hu Yaobang's speech is divided into four parts: 1) two aspects of leadership work that require attention; 2) the situation and prospects of our country's agriculture; 3) views on economic development in Yunnan, Guizhou, and Guangxi; and 4) the question of impoverished areas emerging from poverty and prospering.

Discussing the agricultural situation in our country, he said: All in all, agricultural production in our country has improved each year and developments have exceeded the expectations of many comrades. The major experience in agriculture is that in the 7 years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have taken two big steps: First, we have introduced the multiform system of contracted responsibilities based on the household with remuneration linked to output in agricultural production and given the peasants broad decision-making powers in managing production. This is a very bold step, which rapidly, in just 2 to 3 years, put an end to the long stagnation in our country's agricultural production and enabled most areas in the country to solve problems of food and clothing. We took the second step by adopting, in 1981, the operational policy of "never allowing grain production to fall off while actively developing a diversified economy," reforming the system of assigned or unified purchases of farm produce, readjusting the production structure in rural areas, developing village and town enterprises, and promoting agricultural commodity production. These two steps are important policy decisions in the reform of Chinese agriculture.

Reviewing China's course in developing agriculture, Hu Yaobang said: There are two points to which we must pay full attention. First, we must take the road of achieving common prosperity. Our goal is to achieve common prosperity. However, over a considerably longer period, we should allow some peasants to become well off first and others to become rich later, as if in waves. Second, we should never allow ourselves to take the beaten track of total separation between cities and the countryside and between industry and agriculture. While we carry out diversified management and run town and township enterprises, peasants will still be in the countryside, although they will no longer carry out farming. This ensures a suitable ratio between rural and urban population. As long as we grasp these two points, we will continue to vigorously reform China's agriculture and help China's countryside become rich and will never deviate from the socialist road.

On the basis of his investigations in the past 13 days and the large amount of data compiled by his inspection group in the two provinces and one autonomous region, Hu Yaobang analyzed in detail the prospects of economic developments in Yunnan, Guizhou, and Guangxi. He said: In the past 2 years, economic development has accelerated in Yunnan, Guizhou, and Guangxi. They are doing a good job, and they have further strengthened their confidence in developing the economy. However, if we look at the level of development, they still rank among the backward provinces, municipalities, and regions in the country. To change this situation, they must overcome many difficulties. In short, they must guard against rashness and be full of confidence in quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural output by the turn of the century.

He emphatically pointed out: To win the economic battle of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural output, the two provinces and one autonomous region must study hard to bring their own superiority into full play and to overcome their respective shortcomings, thus fostering their strengths. As for understanding the situation in one's own province and one's own autonomous region, it is a continuous process of deepening one's knowledge. It is impossible to complete this process at one stroke. It must go through a repetitous process of practice, knowledge, more practice and more knowledge. At the same time, this kind of knowledge must be acquired in close connection with the state of affairs in the whole country and the needs of China's overall development. Only by doing so can one fully understand the situation in one's own province and one's own autonomous region. He expressed the hope that in developing their economy, the two provinces and one autonomous region pay attention to their superiority in the following three aspects:

1. The two provinces and one autonomous region have rich mineral resources of various types, including energy resources, ferrous and nonferrous metals, and nonmetal mineral resources. These mineral resources are of great significance in developing China's national economy.

2. Yunnan, Guangxi, and the low-temperature zone of rivers and valleys in southern Guizhou are areas where subtropical economic crops thrive. These are zones where we can vigorously grow sugar-bearing crops, various types of subtropical fruit, many types of medicinal herbs and spices.

3. The two provinces and one autonomous region have vast high and cool mountainous areas and pastures where trees and fodder grass will thrive and a large number of cattle, horses, and sheep can be put out to pasture. The two provinces and one autonomous region must adopt effective measures and implement even more flexible policies to bring their superiority into full play through the following:

Strive to import and develop new technology, open up new industries, and make full use of the rich, local coal resources.

Adopt still more flexible policies and measures in mining by carrying out cooperative mining among state-run, collective, and individual mining enterprises.

Work out plans and strengthen guidance over the study and development of subtropical economic crops, improve technical services with regard to these crops, and provide services before and after the crops have ripened.

In developing township enterprises, we must base ourselves upon local resources and pay attention to helping the masses become well-to-do.

In grain production, we must grow grain crops intensively instead of growing them over large areas.

As for the question of impoverished areas prospering after eliminating poverty, Hu Yaobang said: The central authorities have always been concerned about this question and take it seriously. On 29 September 1984 the CPC Central Committee and State Council issued a circular on helping impoverished areas change their situation as quickly as possible. Now we must vigorously implement it. The most important thing is to select the right targets and concentrate our attention on helping them so that the income of the overwhelming majority of the people in some impoverished areas will actually increase every year. This is the heart of the matter, and we must grasp it. We must guard against flourishes and avoid grandiose projects.

Advanced areas should "lead" and "help" impoverished areas. By "leading" we mean doing a good job in cooperating with impoverished areas and bringing them along toward prosperity; by "helping" we mean passing on technology and management experience. We should call on and select a number of party and government cadres and scientific and technological personnel who have a strong sense of responsibility and aspire to help poor areas rid themselves of poverty to work in poor areas on a voluntary and rotational basis. He said: With the development of our national economy, the state's capacity to help poor areas will increase year after year. However, we must clearly understand that the guiding ideology for helping poor areas should be to strengthen their ability to develop through their own efforts and enhance their own ability to "produce blood." We must help people in the poor areas remove the mental burden imposed on them by generations of poverty by providing them with good examples showing them how to draw on the strength of advanced models, enhance their confidence, and mobilize and bring into play their enthusiasm for developing the economy.

Before hearing the reports of the three inspection teams and the two provinces and one region, Hu Yaobang inspected Beihai City -- the southwesternmost of China's 14 open coastal cities -- 14-16 February. He inspected construction projects well under way in the city, including the construction site of the 10,000-ton class wharf at Beihai Port, the construction site of the port area at Fangcheng Harbor, and the recreational beach being planned. He asked for details on the production and construction situation in Beihai since it was designated an open city in April 1984, commending it by saying that the city's development has been rather smooth.

He said: One of Beihai City's biggest differences from other coastal open cities is that it is the passage to overseas for the hinterland of our great southwest China covering Sichuan, Yunnan, and Guizhou. The capacity of Beihai and Fangcheng harbors will be increased to several million tons in 2 to 3 years. Beihai City should give top priority to serving the harbors well. It is necessary to develop transportation, storage, trade, packaging, processing, and other tertiary industrial facilities by concentrating on the needs of the harbors. This is a major task concerning the economic and social benefits of Guangxi and the southwestern part of our country. If we carry out this work well, it will provide impetus to economic development in the southwest. He also said that Beihai is blessed with special resources superior to those found in other places or provinces. They may be further exploited by introducing investment from abroad and establishing lateral ties at home.

Hu Jintao, secretary of the Guizhou Provincial CPC Committee; Wang Chaowen, governor of Guizhou Province; Pu Chaozhu, secretary of the Tunnan Provincial CPC Committee; He Zhiqiang, governor of Yunnan Province; Chen Huiguang, secretary of the Guangxi Zhuang Autonomous Region; and Wei Chunshu, chairman of the autonomous region, separately accompanied Comrade Hu Yaobang during the inspection tour. They also attended the report meeting in Nanning.

PROBLEMS OF RURAL FINANCE, DEVELOPMENT VIEWED

[Commentator's article: "Improve Macroeconomic Control; Enliven Rural Finance"]

[Text] In 1985, financial departments in rural areas made due contributions to stabilizing the situation of economic reform and supporting economic development in the rural areas by taking an active part in expanding the sources of credit funds, and doing their best to organize and regulate funds in order to basically ensure the monetary needs in the purchase of agricultural and sideline produce and the readjustment of production mix in the rural areas. This was subject to the condition that the scope of credit in the rural areas must be kept under strict control when easing the shortage of credit funds in the rural areas.

However, we should also see that our financial work in rural areas still fails to meet the development needs of the situation, compared with the more and more important position of financial departments in China's economic life and the requirements of the development of commodity economy in the rural areas. One noticeable thing is the lack of harmony between supply and demand of credit funds, and the control over credit has either been too relaxed or too tight over the past 2 years. The loss of control over credit will foster the blind development of economy, while too tight a control will affect the normal progress of production and circulation. The phenomenon of requiring unanimity in everything still exists to a certain degree in credit controls, which has affected the exploitation of the advantages of some regions as well as the appropriate consideration for some areas which are in difficulty. Besides, the phenomenon of lacking in strict control over credit and making loans blindly also exists. These problems should be solved in earnest. Setting up a steady credit mechanism in the rural areas and formulating a credit policy based on different regions and industries will give better play to the role of credit as a lever in the rural economy. It is also an important task facing rural financial departments.

In the new year, rural financial departments should review their experiences and lessons. They should do their best to strengthen and improve macroeconomic control, to organize circulating funds, to expand the sources of funds, to accelerate capital turnover, and to support the continuous readjustment in the production mix in the rural areas and the smooth progress of the transformation of agricultural technology, based on the guiding idea of the Central Committee on economic construction during the Seventh 5-Year Plan and the spirit of the 1986 Central Document No 1. The agricultural bank plays the double functions of macroeconomically controlling the economy and microeconomically enlivening the economy. Starting from a macroeconomic angle of the national economy and the development of rural economy, the agricultural bank should readjust its credit policy based on different regions, conditions, trades and uses, so that control may be strict or otherwise as the case requires, when support or restriction may be carried out based on the actual conditions. China's rural areas are vast, and have a thousand differences in their conditions. We should not require unanimity in everything in all undertakings; the same holds true with credit work. Only when different targets and policies in credit are adopted based on differences in population, natural resources, geographical conditions and economic levels of different regions as well as the principle of dealing with different cases and giving qualified guidance will it be possible for credit work to conform to the actual conditions of rural areas and to accomplish due results.

Enlivening the funds in the rural areas and promoting the development of rural economy requires the concerted efforts of agricultural banks and credit cooperatives in various localities. Administrative measures were usually adopted in the management of rural finance; now many relations should be straightened out through reform.

Before these relations are straightened out, agricultural banks at all levels and grass-roots operational units should bring into play their subjective initiative and unfold their work in a creative way under the guidance of the spirit of the Central Committee and the relevant regulations of the Agricultural Bank. It is necessary to further strengthen management and operation, to gradually realize the systematization and standardization of credit work, and to resolutely correct the phenomenon of failing to follow the regulations and letting cases of violating the regulations go unchecked. The construction of spiritual civilization should be strengthened; and the education and training of workers and staff should be grasped firmly and well, the strengthening and upgrading of those workers in the grass-roots operational stations in particular. Under the premise of strengthening management and operation and tapping their own potentialities, they should gradually improve their own working conditions. We are sure to score greater achievements in the new year as long as we persist in reform and make concerted efforts in unanimity.

FINANCIAL WORK OF TOWNSHIPS, TOWNS ADDRESSED

HK230737 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 17 Feb 86 p 1

[Editorial: "Gradually Establish and Perfect Township and Town Finance"]

[Text] In recent years, the financial work at the level of townships and towns has begun in many areas. Until 1985, there were already 40,000 township and town offices in the whole country, manned by 83,000 financial cadres. The establishment of the work of township and town finance has played a good role in perfecting the building of political power at the grass-roots level, further implementing the rural economic policies of the party, developing the rural economy, and strengthening financial supervision.

To gradually establish and perfect township and town finance is an important task. With the rapid development of the rural economy, the state's various revenues from and expenditures on, rural areas are constantly increasing. The incomes of rural social financial resources and the self-raised capital at township and town level also greatly increased. Under this new condition, only by establishing and perfecting the work of township and town finance can we do well in carrying out the distribution and redistribution of social products within the scope of a whole township, raising, supplying and appropriating funds,and promoting the further development of the rural economy.

However, we should also notice that at present, the burden on peasants in some areas is still rather heavy, and that some localities arbitrarily charge and fine peasants and apportion their funds under a variety of guises. As every peasant has to pay a dozen yuan, or several dozen yuan, the peasants just cannot afford it. By establishing township and town finance under the leadership of township and town CPC committees and governments, in light of relevant principles and policies and the specific conditions of a township, under the supervision of the township and town people's congresses, and according to the supervisions of the budget and other relevant systems and the principle of "appropriately drawing and spending money," we can reasonably raise and concurrently control various funds in the interests of every quarter, increase the use value of funds and lighten the burden of the peasants.

Using industry to subsidize agriculture is an important measure in stabilizing and developing agricultural production, particularly grain production. However, in rural areas the main source of funds from industry in subsidizing agriculture is the income of township and town and village enterprises. By establishing township and town finance, we can employ its function of distributing funds to set aside a part of funds from the income of township and town enterprises.

Thus, in light of the specific measure of using industry to subsidize agriculture, and through the rational appropriation of funds and adoption of various methods, we can support and encourage the development of the planting and breeding industries so as to protect and enhance the enthusiasm of peasants for engaging in agriculture and growing grain.

After implementing rural economic structural reforms, the levying of various taxes, the grants of circulating funds earmarked to support agriculture and the subscription for treasury bills, and so on, rural areas must be geared to the needs of all the peasant households and various economic organizations. As finance work is large in volume and extensive in scope, only by establishing township and town finance can we undertake these heavy tasks, do a solid job and create conditions for further restructuring the financial structure.

To establish and perfect township and town finance, we have to do a lot of work. It is necessary to adequately investigate and study and on the basis of obtaining a good understanding of the situation, to work out an overall plan and implementation measures. It is necessary to set up organizations provided with staff; audit accounts to get a clear understanding of the financial conditions; and divide the scope of revenue and expenditure to clearly define the financial system. Meanwhile, it is also necessary to strive to open new financial resources, actively raise revenues, and rationally arrange expenditures according to the needs of production and institution development.

At present, the work of building township and town finance has been developed in the whole country. Under the leadership of governments at all levels, finance departments at all levels should coordinate with departments concerned to actively carry out and gradually establish and perfect the work of township and town finance and further develop the excellent situation in the rural areas.

JIANGSU PEASANTS REPORTEDLY OVERCOMING POVERTY

HK211002 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 2

[Report by Zhang Shuliang and Tao Yuan: "More Than 4,000 Peasant Household Have Shaken Off Poverty in Wuxi County"]

[Excerpt] Wuxi County in Jiangsu Province is well-known for its highly developed town and township enterprises. However, it has not forgotten the poverty-stricken "pockets" in rich areas and has actively helped a small number of low-income peasant households develop production. As a result, many such households have become well-off rather quickly.

Over the past year or so, along with the rapid development of the rural economy in Wuxi County, the peasants' standard of living has greatly improved. Townships and villages with a per capita income of over 1,000 yuan have emerged group after group. However, in the past year there have also been some peasant households whose incomes were relatively low, and the phenomenon of imbalance persisted. According to an investigation and calculation by a relevant department, there were nearly 8,000 peasant households in this county whose per capita income was lower than 300 yuan, making up about 3 percent of the total number of peasant households. The country leader attached great importance to this. They held that while encouraging and allowing some areas and people to become well-off before the others and acknowledging the differences in income, it is also necessary to adopt positive measures to help a small number of poor households quicken their strides towards affluence so that they may not be poor for too long.

In the work to help poor households, the county adopted a method of state subsidies, collective assistance, and mutual help among the masses in order to collect funds through various channels. In this way it collected funds of 2.15 million yuan. The county's civil affairs, grain, and supply and marketing departments also did what they could to make things easy for this work in financial affairs and material supply as well as in production and sales. In light of their realities, various areas have given play to their superiority in comparatively developed town and township enterprises and have adopted various measures such as giving priority to poor households to work in the town and township enterprises or in initiating social welfare work, in order to help the latter improve production and living conditions. At the same time, they also enthusiastically encourage all kinds of specialized households to encourage poor households and to let the rich help the poor. They have achieved very good results in this regard.

Commentator's Article

HK211034 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 2

[Commentator's article: "Do Not Forget the Poverty-Stricken 'Pockets'"]

[Text] Comparatively speaking, poverty-stricken "pockets" exist everywhere. In the whole nation, there are tens of millions of people whose problems regarding food and clothing have not been completely solved. In all provinces and prefectures, there are comparatively poor counties. In Wuxi County, which can be regarded as the "richest county," there are even thousands of people whose per capita annual income is lower than 300 yuan. Some of them are living in the well-known "100-million-yuan townships" and "10-million-yuan villages." It seems that an imbalance of economic development exists everywhere.

Ours is a large country. It is not strange for some areas with better conditions to become rich before others while some areas with a poorer basis lag behind for the time being. It is also reasonable that in the same area, due to differences in labor force, skill in production, and family background, there are also differences in the incomes of different peasant households. For a long time in the past we did not take a correct attitude toward the law of imbalance in development and tried to even up the economic incomes of all areas and all households, thinking that this would lead to equal prosperity for all. However, no one could get rich in this way and the precious opportunity for economic development was forfeited.

Over the past few years, as a result of implementing the policy of the central authorities on allowing some areas and people to become well-off before others through labor, many able people have become rich, and there has been vigorous development in our economy. The situation is inspiring. However, while acknowledging differences, allowing and encouraging the peasants to get rich before others through labor, and protecting these peasants, we must never forget those proverty-stricken "pockets," no matter how big or small. If these areas and households remain poor for a long time, then the leaders and the leading departments will be held responsible for it.

The poverty-stricken "pockets" can be neglected easily. When people visit the "100-million-yuan townships," they usually visit rich households. Very few people ever visit the poor households. In some mountain areas, since there are no transport facilities, even county leaders rarely go there. This situation should be changed. Since the poverty-stricken "pockets" have comparatively more "difficulties," they need more care and help from the leaders. Some masses of the poverty-stricken "pockets" have complaints about those comrades who only have the rich households in mind and have only visited these households. This is entirely understandable.

The comrades of Wuxi County have not been blindfolded by the "100-million-yuan townships." They have adopted effective measures to help the poor households and achieved great successes in this respect. We should encourage this spirit. If all people, either in rich areas or in poor areas, do not forget but show more concern for the poverty-stricken "pockets" and offer realistic help for them in all respects including funds, materials, information, and technology, we will not have to worry about the situation of the face of the poverty-stricken "pockets" not being changed and the purpose of achieving common prosperity gradually being attained.

SOLUTIONS TO IDEOLOGICAL, SYSTEM PROBLEMS SEEN

HK211007 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 8 Feb 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "It Is Imperative To Solve Ideological Problems as Well as Problems of the System"]

[Text] Recently, the central authorities have issued consecutive notices banning the practice of recklessly sending people abroad; demanding that leading cadres at various levels simplify the reception procedures when going on official visits to other parts of the country or foreign countries, and that cadres be selected, promoted, or appointed strictly according to party principles; banning the practice of traveling to other parts of the country or to foreign countries using public funds; and banning party and government institutions and party and government cadres from doing business and establishing enterprises. All these are guarantees for correcting the party style and straightening out malpractices.

What can we depend on in correcting party style and straightening out malpractices? First, we depend on ideological education. Second, we depend on the law and the system. The two can complement each other. Why do malpractices still prevail after the central authorities have repeatedly called for resisting and straightening out malpractices? There are many reasons for this. Subjectively speaking, there are indeed some people who abandon what is righteous (socialism) when lured by promise of gain, and who are bold enough to recklessly reap personal gain by taking advantage of the reform in spite of repeated injunctions of the central authorities. Objectively speaking, one of the important reasons is that under the present new situation of opening up to the outside world and invigorating the economy, many new situations and new problems have emerged. Because some relevant systems are imperfect, we lack definite and complete regulations which can tell us what we should do, what we should not do, and how we should do what is required of us. As a result, those who carry out malpractices can avail themselves of loopholes in the process of the new replacing the old, whereas those who are determined to resist the malpractices do not know what to follow. When summing up the lessons of the "Great Cultural Revolution," Comrade Deng Xiaoping once pointed out: "The various kinds of mistakes made by us in the past were caused by the ideology and work style of some leaders, but mainly by our imperfect organization and working systems. Sound systems can stop bad people from recklessly doing bad things, whereas imperfect systems can also make good people unable to do good things, and even make them do bad things" ("Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping," p 293). This principle is also applicable to our work of straightening out malpractices.

It is doubtlessly important to straighten out malpractices, to strengthen ideological education among party members and, especially among the leading cadres, to build a strong dam in their ideology resistant to capitalism and feudalism, consciously safeguarding party style and discipline. However, this is not enough. We must also pay great attention to and strengthen the construction of the system, so as to standardize the behavior of party members and leading cadres, make ideological education a success, and achieve marked success in straightening out malpractices by relying on the systems.

So, in order to straighten out malpractices, "it is imperative to solve ideological problems, and problems of the system as well" ("Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping," p 289).

Over the past few years, in order to straighten out malpractices, the CPC Central Committee and the State Council have formulated a number of rules and regulations. Now they have again formulated some regulations, in view of outstanding problems in the work style of the party and government organs, so as to enable us to do things according to the regulations and also the law. At present, we must conscientiously implement rules and regulations formulated by the central authorities. If the rules and regulations, no matter how good and correct they are, are only printed on paper and not implemented in practice, they will not be able to play any role in our actual lives. The practice of overtly implementing but covertly opposing or not fully implementing the various rules and regulations formulated by the central authorities is in itself a kind of malpractice which should be straightened out.

Once the rules and regulations are established, they possess binding force and become the discipline of the party. No party members or government employees, no matter how high their positions or posts, are allowed to violate them. A party has its discipline, a government has its discipline, and a country has its laws. The party and government disciplines are the laws and regulations within the party and the government organs. So if the party members or government employees violate the party disciplinary punishment. If they violate the law of the country, they will be dealt with according to the law. Only by strictly implementing party discipline, government discipline, and the law of the country, and strictly enforcing orders and prohibitions, can we safeguard the dignity of various rules and regulations and enable rules and regulations to be not only printed on paper but also embodied in the actions of every party member and cadre.

Is it true that there is a saying which goes: In straightening out malpractices, "everybody has his own opinions, but nobody has his own methods?" No, it is not true. The CPC has its own ways of overcoming and correcting any of its own mistakes and shortcomings. History has already proven this. Strengthening ideological education and strictly implementing the law and regulations are our method of straightening out malpractices. So long as we continue to straighten out malpractices in our own way and to correct party style, we will surely and fundamentally improve the general mood of society.

FINANCIAL INSPECTION TO BE CONDUCTED ANNUALLY

OW240558 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1203 GMT 23 Feb 86

[By reporter Chen Naijin]

[Text] Beijing, 23 Feb (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, and Tian Jiyun, vice premier of the State Council, pointed out yesterday: Conducting a general tax, financial, and price inspection is not an expedient arrangement but a significant measure to strictly enforce discipline in economic and financial afairs, further improve our party style and the standards of conduct in society, safeguard the interests of the state and people and, and ensure the progress of the reform of our economic structure. The Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee has decided that this general inspection be carried out annually for the next few years.

Leading comrades Hu Qili, Tian Jiyun, Zhang Jingfu, and Wang Bingqian received all members of the State Council's work group for the general tax, financial, and price inspection yesterday morning at Zhongnanhai. Comrades Hu Qili and Tian Jiyun made important remarks on the occasion.

The nationwide general tax, financial, and price inspection, which began in September last year, has been basically completed in most areas with the exception of a few provinces and municipalities. Tian Jiyun said: This inspection was a wide-ranging and large-scale campaign employing a great number of people. The results are remarkable. First, many cases of violation of law and discipline in the economic field have been revealed through the inspection. This contributed greatly to last year's financial results of balanced revenues and expenditures with a little surplus. Second, the inspection was conducted in conjunction with the second-stage party rectification, playing a positive role in bringing about a further turn for the better in our party style and the standards of conduct in society. Third, the general inspection has given the vast numbers of cadres and masses an education, enhancing their consciousness of policies, the legal system, and overall interests, thus assisting the work of building a spiritual civilization.

Tian Jiyun continued: The problems revealed in the general inspection warn us again that in the course of socialist modernization and economic structural reform, we should never pay attention only to material civilization and ignore spiritual civilization, nor should we merely grasp microeconomic decontrol and flexibility and ignore macroeconomic control, nor should we merely let lower levels have more authority, delegating power to them and ignoring the needs for economic supervision, for the legal system, and for strong discipline. We must earnestly carry out the instruction given by the central authorities and Comrade Deng Xiaoping in persistently using two hands to grasp work. This is, we should grasp material civilization with one hand and the legal system with the other. Only thus can we prevent and check all types of activities that violate the law and discipline and guarantee the smooth progress of our economic structural reform and our program of the four modernizations.

Tian Jiyun pointed out: It is imperative to squarely face the problem of violation of law and discipline on the economic field. We should never take them lightly but should resolve them by adopting resolute measures. In doing this, however, we should have a correct analysis and an appropriate assessment. Here two points should be made clear: First, problems revealed through the inspections, no matter how serious, are still isolated issues if we consider the overall excellent situation, and they can be resolved. Second, we should not attribute the phenomenon of violations of law and discipline to the process of reform. It is true that some of our reform measures are imperfect and not well coordinated, and that some units and individuals have taken reform as an opportunity to violate law and discipline on the basis of the interests of their small groups or the personal interests of their own. But we cannot say indiscriminately that these activities in violation of law and discipline and related unhealthy trends have resulted from reform. It is necessary to distinguish strictly between unhealthy trends and the principal aspects of reform. Reform should be carried out with perseverance, while unhealthy trends and activities in violation of law and discipline should be resolutely corrected and checked. The two should supplement and promote each other. This is the only correct attitude that we should have.

Tian Jiyun pointed out that the purpose of the general tax, financial, and price inspection is by no means to increase receipts only, and that the ultimate goal is to check violations of law and discipline and to improve work. As for how to consolidate and develop the results of the general inspection, he set forth the following specific requirements: First, the general inspection campaign on taxation, financial affairs, and prices should be continued in the next few years. Second, special attention should be paid to resolving problems caused by leading organs and leading cadres. When leading organs, leading cadres, or law-enforcement and supervisory departments are found to have violated law and discipline, they should be given lenient treatment. Third, necessary laws, regulations, and rules should be established and made perfect so that there will be something to follow.

The more we do to delegate power to lower levels and to make our measures flexible, the greater the need to strengthen control and supervision. Fourth, the vast numbers of cadres and masses should be educated continuously to enhance their consciousness of the legal system, policies, party style and discipline, the interests of the state, and the overall situation. Fifth, more efforts should be made to build up the cadre ranks of the tax, financial, and price-control departments and to raise the quality of these cadres.

In conclusion, Tian Jiyun stressed: We must see to it that the current general inspection is carried out earnestly in conjunction with the second-stage party rectification and the ongoing work of rectifying party style and the general mood in sciety and of correcting unhealthy trends, and that the inspection is finished successfully just as it was started successfully. All localities and departments where the general inspection has not been completed must make continued efforts to do this work well in accordance with demands set by the State Council. As for those localities and departments where the general inspection has by and large been completed, the leading groups and offices set up for the inspection should not be abolished. They have to make earnest efforts to deal with questions left over from last year's general inspection and do rounding-off work. Even in the future, these groups and offices should not be abolished but should be retained so that they will work in preparation for the next general inspection. Additionally, they may conduct some inspections on special questions from time to time. If it is found that a make-up payment should be made to the state treasury, every effort should be exerted to have the payment made promptly. Those who refuse to make the payment should be dealt with seriously.

Law breakers and discipline violators should be given serious punishment. It is imperative to grasp big and major cases firmly and investigate them resolutely so as to get to the bottom of the cases. In dealing with those units and individuals that have violated law and discipline, it is imperative not to accommodate them in such a way as "I excuse you this time, but will not let you off if you do the same thing again." We should not let them have any advantage.

OVERSEAS CHINESE POLICY TO BE FURTHER ENHANCED

OW240620 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1226 GMT 23 Feb 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Xing Fengbing and XINHUA reporter Yao Datian]

[Text] Hangzhou, 23 Feb (XINHUA) -- All historical cases and problems concerning returned Overseas Chinese and dependents of Overseas Chinese in China will be basically solved in this and next year. This is the task put forward by Liao Hui, director of the Overseas Chinese Affairs Office of the State Council, to Overseas Chinese affairs departments at various levels at the recent national meeting on implementing policies concerning Overseas Chinese affairs.

Liao Hui pointed out: The tasks of implementing the various policies concerning Overseas Chinese affairs are still very arduous. Overseas Chinese affairs departments at various levels must adopt effective measures to carry out the following tasks in a realistic manner this and next year:

It is necessary to totally redress and correct unjust, false, and erroneous cases from before and during the "Cultural Revolution;" it is necessary to speed the implementation of policies toward private houses of Overseas Chinese; it is necessary to further implement the party policies toward intellectuals who are returned Overseas Chinese or dependents of Overseas Chinese; it is necessary to pay attention to seriously handling those cases of attack on and persecution of intellectuals who are returned Overseas Chinese or dependents of Overseas Chinese.

It is necessary to promptly solve difficulties in admitting intellectuals who are returned Overseas Chinese or dependents of Overseas Chinese and have met the basic conditions for the party membership; and it is necessary to continue the proper handling of the problem of returned Overseas Chinese staff members and workers who were discharged from their work in the early 1960's.

According to data provided by the meeting, great progress has been made in recent years in implementing policies concerning Overseas Chinese affairs; it has had positive influence at home and abroad. According to statistics made in the 27 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions, more than 33,000 unjust, false, or erroneous cases concerning returned Overseas Chinese and dependents of Overseas Chinese from the "Cultural Revolution" have been redressed and more than 10,000 historical cases from before the "Cultural Revolution" have also been reviewed. The work of returning the private houses of Overseas Chinese occupied or confiscated during the "Cultural Revolution" has been in the main completed; progress has also been made in solving other historical problems concerning houses of Overseas Chinese. In rural areas, a total area of 6.3 million square meters of houses have been returned to Overseas Chinese for use. In cities, the ownership of a total of 2.5 million square meters of houses have been returned to Overseas Chinese and the right to use a total of 680,000 square meters of houses have also been returned to Overseas Chinese. In recent years, more than 17,700 outstanding returned Overseas Chinese and dependents of Overseas Chinese have been promoted to leading posts at and above county level. The problems of houses, children's schooling, and separation of husband and wife intellectuals who are returned Overseas Chinese or dependents of Overseas Chinese have also been solved in many places.

The meeting held that in order to fulfill the tasks in this and next year, it is imperative to further eradicate the influence of "left" ideology, especially to correct the wrongful prejudice toward "overseas relations," and develop the spirit of solving problems in a concrete manner.

The national meeting on implementing policies concerning Overseas Chinese affairs was held in Ningbo from 20 to 23 February.

CIRCULAR ISSUED ON DUAL PURPOSE PERSONNEL

OW231125 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1220 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] Beijing, 22 Feb (XINHUA) -- The State Council and the Central Military Commission recently issued a circular stressing that successful work in training and utilizing dual-purpose personnel is of vital importance to China's economic and national defense construction and a task which greatly benefits the party, the state, the Army, and the people.

In the circular, which approves and transmits a report on the national on-site experience-exchange meeting jointly sponsored by the Ministry of Civil Affairs and the PLA General Political Department on exploiting and employing demobilized dual-purpose personnel, the State Council and the Central Military Commission point out: The PLA and the local people's governments at various levels have done a great amount of work and achieved remarkable results over the past few years in training and utilizing dual-purpose personnel capable of performing both military and civilian services. Governments at all levels and the leadership at all levels in the Army should proceed from the overall interests, seriously study and plan this work, and make earnest efforts to strengthen leadership over it. All departments concerned should work out specific measures to support this work. The Army and the local governments should work in close coordination and integrate the training of personnel and their employment into an organic whole so that greater contributions will be made to national economic and defense construction.

In the report, the Ministry of Civil Affairs and the PLA General Political Department state: Since July 1984, when the experience of Sihong County, Jiangsu Province, in setting up employment agencies for demobilized dual-purpose servicemen was popularized by the Ministry of Civil Affairs and the PLA General Political Department, most localities in the country have attached importance to this work and soon adopted measures to develop it. According to incomplete statistics compiled by 23 provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities, 1,110 counties and cities (districts) have established service organizations for demobilized dual-purpose personnel. They have recommended the employment of some 60,000 demobilized dual-purpose servicemen in rural areas. The training and employment of dual-purpose personnel have played a positive role in invigorating the rural economy, provided a major source of personnel for rejuvenating and strengthening the contingent of local grass-roots cadres, and promoted the improvement of PLA units, conscription work, and the building of socialist spiritual civilization.

To make the training and employment of demobilized dual-purpose personnel were widespread and have it yield better results, the report calls on localities to pay special attention to the following points:

1) Further unify our understanding of the great significance of training and utilizing dual-purpose personnel. 2) Strengthen departments at all levels in charge of placement work, further establish or strengthen service organizations, and do a good job in the employment of dual-purpose personnel. 3) Bring into full play local strong points in opening up more channels for and enlivening the work of exploiting and employing dual-purpose personnel so that the skills of demobilized dual-purpose servicemen are utilized to the fullest. 4) The Army and the localities should work in close coordination. The Army should attend to the training of dual-purpose personnel as a long-term task of military construction in the new period and do its best to bring about more and better dual-purpose personnel. Local governments at all levels should, while doing a good job in exploiting and utilizing dual-purpose personnel, take the initiative to enhance contacts with the military and adopt effective measures to actively cooperate with the military in training work. 5) Make earnest efforts to strengthen leadership and gradually expand the work of exploiting and utilizing dual-purpose personnel from selected points to the entire area. Governments at all levels should place this work on their agenda, study it regularly, and provide guidance. Localities which have not begun this work should pay close attention to trying out this work at selected points and gradually expand it to a wider areas. Localities which have already begun this work should further expand the range of utilization, increase the utilization results, constantly review experience, contribute new ideas, and see to it that the work is gradually institutionalized and standardized.

FORUM HELD ON GROWTH OF YOUNG INTELLECTUALS

OW240422 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1237 GMT 23 Feb 86

[By reporter Zhao Wei]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Jan (XINHUA) -- "It is necessary to take the road of integrating theory with practice and study, temper ourselves and grow to maturity through practice." This is the conclusion reached unanimously by the participants at the forum on the growth of young intellectuals in the current era.

At yesterday's forum, sponsored by the State Education Commission and the CYL Central Committee, the representatives of lecture groups sent to various localities by central organs talked about the experience gained at the grass-roots level over nearly half a year. This views was shared by representatives of universities in Beijing and young cadres of central and state organs.

Song Defu, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee, spoke highly of the lecture groups comrades. He said: "They have honorably gone to various places and have done a good job." At the forum, many representatives of the lecture groups said that they were greatly moved and made gains during their short 5 months at the grass-roots level. Some members of the lecture groups are young people who started their government work right after graduation from school. Li Kexin, a member of the lecture group to Heilongjiang, said: We have mixed with the students in our daily work and have carried out investigations during the vacation. Through investigation, we have realized that the party's policy has taken root in the hearts of the people; we have seen the vigorous development of the excellent situation.

Yang Haibo, vice minister in charge of the State Education Commission, spoke with excitement at the forum. He said: The practice of the lecture groups has proven that the policies of the party Central Committee are correct. The older generation hopes that the young people will grow to maturity as quickly as possible. He hoped that young people and students would foster communist ideals, maintain close ties with the masses, acquire the viewpoint of serving the people, and be courageous in their practices. Song Defu, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee, hoped that the broad masses of young people would combine theory with practice, refrain from speaking in empty words, and mature through study and practice.

UNHEALTHY ADVERTISEMENTS TO BE CORRECTED

OW240408 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1200 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] Ren Zhonglin, director of the State Administration of Industry and Commerce, told reporters today that departments in charge of industry and commerce in various localities throughout the country are cleaning up and investigating advertising work with special emphasis on correcting the situation of worshipping or having blind faith in foreign things and practicing fraud.

Ren Zhonglin said: Advertising of a slanderous nature, violating policies and laws, and all advertising with reactionary, supersitious, lewd, or repulsive contents will be weeded out. All units handling advertisements on full time or concurrent basis and individual households engaged in designing and producing advertisements will be examined and consolidated. Operating an advertising business without approval by departments in charge of industry and commerce will be banned. It is necessary to take effective measures to correct unhealthy tendencies in advertising work.

He pointed out: At present, some news units and reporters have apportioned expenses in the name of disseminating information for various enterprises and some have collected commissions, demanded extra fees, and accepted feasts and gifts. We must correct all those practices. He asked all units handling advertising work to strictly observe state laws and advertising regulations, establish a sound advertising system, and make advertising and propaganda faithful, scientific, and reliable.

VICE MINISTER STRESSES QUALITY CONTROL

OW240036 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1532 GMT 22 Feb 86

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Dong Huanhao and XINHUA reporter Huang Fengchu]

[Excerpts] Nanjing, 22 Feb (XINHUA) -- Promoting comprehensive quality control is an important and urgent strategic task in our economic work during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

This is what Sheng Shuren, vice minister of the State Economic Commission, pointed out today at the fifth annual meeting of the Chinese quality control commission.

During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, some industrial enterprises in China strengthened overall quality control and remarkably improved the quality of their products. Nearly 2,800 products were rated by the state as good quality products. However, most industrial enterprises were weak in quality control, and poor quality remained a conspicuous problem in their products. In order to comprehensively strengthen quality control, Sheng Shuren emphasized the following:

-- In order to arouse enthusiasm among workers and staff members for improving product quality, all trades and enterprises should carry out reform to link the wages and bonuses of workers and staff members to product quality.

-- Enterprises should set clear and definite quality objectives according to advanced international standards, and design, manufacture, and inspect their products according to quality objectives.

-- It is necessary to improve basic quality control, grass-roots organizations of enterprises and their work, and the basic training of workers and staff members.

-- It is necessary to improve macroeconomic control over the quality of products by gradually enacting laws governing quality control responsibilities, improving the quality appraisal system, actively promoting quality testing work, and firmly doing a good job in encouraging consumers' supervision, consulting, and diagnosis. From now on, the plant director should be held responsible for quality problems. The fifth annual meeting of the Chinese quality control commission was held in Wuxi City, Jiangsu Province, from 18 February to 22 February.

RUI XINGWEN ARTICLE ON SHANGHAI RURAL ECONOMY

OW200334 Shanghai JIEFANG RIBAO in Chinese 13 Feb 86 p 1

[Article by Rui Xingwen: "Shanghai's Rural Economy Being Integrated With the Urban Economy in the Course of Reform"]

[Text] What is the actual situation and what is the trend of development of reform in Shanghai's rural areas? This is a question people in both the urban and rural areas are concerned about. From the investigation and research Comrade Jiang Zemin and I have separately conducted during our recent tour of 10 suburban counties, and from the written materials we have read, we get the strong feeling that: The economic situation in Shanghai's rural areas is good, and so is the situation in reform. The rural economy of Shanghai's suburban areas is being integrated with the urban economy in the course of reform.

Three Foundations for the Integration of the Rural and Urban Economies

There are mainly three foundations for the ongoing integration of Shanghai's rural and urban economies:

First, geographically, the trend toward merger and mutual infiltration between urban and rural areas has become more and more distinct. Some 65 percent of the village and township industries in the suburban areas are subsidiaries of Shanghai's large industrial companies. Fifteen percent of them serve foreign trade and export. Many factories are in fact branches or workshops of the large factories of Shanghai. The village and township industries have bcome inseparable components of Shanghai's industry as a whole. Currently, the factories in the city have set up nearly 500 operations in the suburban areas, employing about 500,000 workers and turning out products worth roughly 12 billion yuan a year. There are also many scientific research institutes, universities, and colleges in the surburban areas. With the expansion and transformation of the city and the planned dispersion of the population, the geographical links between urban and rural areas will certainly become even more distinct.

Second, the interdependent relations between urban and rural areas will become closer and closer as far as markets are concerned. The mutual support between industry and agriculture on the one hand, and between urban and rural areas on the other, finds expression chiefly through the exchange of commodities. At present, much of the farm and sideline produce supplied to Shanghai comes from the suburban areas. Peasants in the suburban areas produce, on less than 5 million mu of cultivated area, about 50 percent of the grain consumed every year by the 12 million people of the city and about one-third of the cotton needed by the city's cotton mills. The peasants produce more than enough edible oil to supply the entire population of the city. They also provide 60 to 70 percent of the hogs, poultry, eggs, and other nonstaple foodstuffs sold every year in the city. Vegetables, fresh milk, and most of the freshwater fish are also supplied by the suburban areas. According to a rough estimate, the total value of commodities exchanged in Shanghai's urban and rural areas was more than 5 billion yuan in 1985, of which farm and sideline produce supplied by the suburban areas to the city was worth about 2 billion yuan, while manufactured goods supplied by the city to the suburban areas were worth about 3 billion yuan. Following the reform of the system of unified and assigned purchases of farm and sideline produce, the relations between production in the suburban areas and Shanghai's markets have become closer and closer. At the same time, it has become more and more necessary for the relations between the urban and rural areas to be linked up by economic contracts.

Third, as far as economic ratios are concerned, the city will become increasingly dependent on the suburban areas if it wants to increase production, increase financial revenues, earn foreign exchange, and achieve quadruplication. The total value of industrial and agricultural output of the surburban areas was 15.7 billion yuan in 1985, or 17.8 percent of the city's total. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, the city achieved a net increase of 26.2 billion yuan in output value, of which the suburban areas were responsible for 8.7 billion yuan, or 33 percent. In 1985, financial revenues of the 10 suburban counties were 2 billion yuan, accounting for 11 percent of the city's total local revenues. This was a remarkable increase over 1980, when they were only 5 percent. In 1985, goods worth 1.6 billion yuan were purchased in the suburban areas for export, accounting for 16 percent of all the export goods purchased by the city. The suburban areas were responsible for half of the net increase of export goods procured by the city during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period. According to a preliminary estimate, the total annual industrial and agricultural output value of the suburban areas will reach 25 billion yuan by 1990, a net increase of 10 billion yuan over 1985 and accounting for about 20 percent of the city's total industrial and agricultural output value. By that time, the financial revenues turned over to the state by the suburban areas and the total amount of export goods procured there will both reach about 3 billion yuan.

All this fully shows that the suburban economy has become an important part of Shanghai's current productive force and an important force for the achievement of quadruplication in Shanghai. In other words, Shanghai's rural economy has been integrated into an organic whole with the urban economy, and the suburban areas have become indispensable for achieving Shanghai's economic prosperity.

Integration of Shanghai's Urban and Rural Economies Is Natural Outcome of Intensified Rural Reform

Then, how has Shanghai's rural economy been integrated with its urban economy? We may say that the peculiar position of Shanghai's countryside determined that such integration was possible, and that the stepped-up rural reform provided a condition for possibility to become reality. Shanghai countryside is very close to the nation's biggest economic center. The Shanghai's countryside's economic development relies on and, in turn, serves Shanghai City. This special feature of the Shanghai countryside clearly distinguishes it from the vast countryside of the whole nation. This means that the Shanghai suburban economy should be closely linked and integrated with the economy of Shanghai City, and that production of all industries in Shanghai's countryside should be more specialized, commodity-oriented, and modern. Such is the requirement which reality imposes on Shanghai's rural economy. The success of the first-step reform and the sound development of the second-step reform in the suburban countryside made it possible for this requirement to be gradually fulfilled. Integration of Shanghai's urban and rural economy is the natural outcome of intensified rural reform.

People can clearly see that first-step reform, with the contract responsibility system linked with output as the main content enforced in Shanghai's countryside, has been markedly fruitful. Following the guidance of the party Central Committee's Document No 1 of 1983 that "family operations based on household contracts are merely one of the cooperative economy levels," and proceeding from the reality of the economically developed areas, all Shanghai's rural counties respected the peasants' wishes and boldly let the masses select the most suitable form of operation for themselves. There was a commonality in all responsibility systems in Shanghai's suburbs; they all did away with slapdash production and an equal share in distribution, and aroused the peasants' enthusiasm for production, thereby once more emancipating productive forces in the countryside.

As rural labor productivity, productivity of cultivated land, and the commodity rate of farm and sideline products were constantly on the rise, a labor force of some 600,000 in Shanghai's suburbs has been separated from farming work in line with the contract system linked with output. This has paved the way for a readjustment in the structure of agricultural production.

Since last spring, second-step reform, with that of the monopoly purchase of farm and sideline products and readjustment of the structure of agricultural production as the main content, has been soundly developing in Shanghai's countryside. Realistic and steady, our reform of the monopoly purchase system has further invigorated the suburban economy. Readjustment of the structure of agricultural production in our suburbs was comparatively fast, thereby prompting the transfer of the countryside labor force. However, this was different from what would have happened in capitalist countries. In those countries, once emancipated from farming, the labor force would have all swarmed into the cities. Such a form of labor force transfer was obviously not suitable for our country's conditions. The population in this big city of Shanghai is already huge. If the European and American way had been followed, we would have faced such serious social problems as an "overloaded city" and a "population explosion." The surplus rural labor force could not swarm into the city and yet it had to find some way out; this logically led to readjustment of the structure of agricultural production, a new problem the second-step rural reform was to solve. Now, we have solved this problem more or less satisfactorily. That is to say that the surplus rural labor force has been assimilated locally. The labor force structure in Shanghai's countryside in 1985 was that 40.6 percent were working with industrial enterprises and 15.6 percent with diversified economic projects, commerce, construction, transport, and service trades. Thus, workers with secondary and tertiary industry accounted for 56.2 percent of the total rural labor force and only 43.8 percent were farming. Of the 1985 total rural economic output value, farm and sideline output value accounted for 20.1 percent, that of town and township enterprises, 79.9 percent, or 8.8 billion yuan. In the past, we would designate a country as industrialized if its total industrial output value was over 51 percent [of its total industrial and agricultural output value]. If the same yardstick could be used now, Shanghai's countryside might be designated as "industrialized countryside."

It is gratifying to see that during the past few years new groups have been formed in the use of manpower, intellectual resources, funds, and means of production in growing crops and breeding animals and fowl; and that large and joint households are beginning to have more land, draft animals, and fowl after the surplus manpower enters secondary and tertiary industries. This is a prototype of Chinese-type family farms, reflecting the emphasis on scale, science, and efficiency in agricultural development in suburban Shanghai. It shows the prospects for promoting specialization, turning out more commodities, and modernizing agriculture in Shangahi.

Right now, more than 4,400 specialized households have emerged in Shanghai's rural areas. All of those specialized households are fairly large in scale. Each household specialized in growing crops contracts for an average 27 mu of arable land. Of these, an average household specialized in growing grain contracts for 30.5 mu, 6.3 times the 4.2 mu of arable land contracts by an ordinary farming household. A specialized household's average investment in production is 9.3 times higher than that of an ordinary farming household. The fixed assets of an average specialized household are 20.1 times higher than those of an ordinary farming household. This type of system will definitely yield fairly good results. First, it will yield high economic results. The average per capita total income in a specialized household is 2.6 times of that of an ordinary farming household.

The per capita pure income in a specialized household is 52 percent higher than an ordinary farming household. It is also higher than an average worker's income in the suburban area. Next, this system will yield high social results. The tax paid by an average specialized household and average person in the household to the state is 6.1 and 6 times higher respectively than those of an ordinary farming household. The collective profits turned over to the state by an average specialized household and an average person in the household are 5.3 times and 5.1 times higher than those of an ordinary farming household. The grain crops produced by a farmer in a farming household each year are enough to feed 3 to 4 persons a year, while the grain crops produced by a farmer in some of the households specialized in growing grain crops are enough to feed 30 to 40 persons a year.

Farming on a large scale will inevitably bring about a scientific approach, hog raising, for example. Originally, hogs were fed three times a day. Right now, hogs in households specialized in hog raising are given a compound feed using mechanized devices, so hog raising is more scientific than before. Growing crops and breeding animals on a large scale will inevitably bring specialization to the entire countryside. At the same time, specialization in production on a large scale is also an important prerequisite in commercializing the farm and sideline products. The emergence of "villages of specialized households" of all kinds in Shanghai's rural areas is a major event of great significance. This tendency toward development is encouraging. From now on, a new kind of integration will take place in the countryside on the basis of specialized households, in the form of cooperative economy. For example, on the surface the villages of specialized households are operated by individual families and households, but they have integrated with each other through the farm and sideline products companies. Therefore, cooperative economy in the future will no longer be like cooperation in the past, in which properties were merged and collective labor was organized. Many new and realistic forms of cooperation will definitely emerge.

In summary, we realize that the new situation in carrying out rural reforms, and the new changes in the setup of production have made Shanghai's rural economy march toward the path of integrating rural economy with urban economy. This is an inevitable development trend. It demands that people use new knowledge and new concepts to analyze and study issues in the countryside. It should be realized that Shanghai's rural economy is no longer the traditional natural economy, but commodity economy on a considerable scale. It is no longer a simple form of economy that involves the agricultural sector, but a form of diversified economy in the rural region. It is different from the ordinary rural economy in the interior of the country, but a type of "suburban economy" that integrates urban economy with rural economy. It is no longer a "closed" economy, but an open one that "introduces investments from abroad and establishes lateral ties at home." Therefore, those comrades doing rural work as well as those doing urban work must understand this new trend under the new situation in the suburban areas, and firmly establish the concept of integrating urban economy with rural economy. If we fail to rejuvenate this concept in time, our ideas will fail to keep pace with the situation; our work will be unrealistic; and it will be impossible for us to correctly handle the relations between workers and peasants and between urban areas and rural areas under the new situation.

Continue To Stand Firm on "Two Footholds" and Devote Great Efforts to the Two Weak Links of Grain and Forage Crops

The strategic priority of developing Shanghai rural economy based on the concept of integrating urban and rural economies requires the supply of a wide variety and adequate amount of high-quality fresh and live nonstaple food products.

For this reason, on behalf of the municipal CPC Committee, I proposed last July at the municipal agricultural science and technology award meeting that agriculture in the suburban areas should "stand firm on two footholds." That is, peasants in the suburban areas should be self-sufficient in food grains; supply of nonstaple foodstuffs to the city should be based mainly on the suburban areas. After standing firm on the two footholds, they can then open up and develop in other areas. The proposal was made because only when the problem of foot grains is solved can the peasants conscientiously engage in the production of nonstaple foodstuffs. Moreover, the production of fresh and live nonstaple foodstuffs, primarily stock farming and fish raising, consumes large amounts of forage crops. Judging from the current situation and development of Shanghai's rural economy, grain and forage crop are indeed weak links. We must give adequate attention to the situation.

Shanghai is one of the major grain consumers of the nation. Its population of 12 million requires about 10 billion jin of food and industrial grain every year. In the past the state has always allocated half of that amount, with the other half supplied by suburban areas. Although grain production in the suburban areas has been affected by the requisition of some farmlands every year as a result of Shanghai's urban development, the countries along the river and the coast like Chongming, Nanhui, Fengxian, and Jinshan still have potential for reclaiming farmland from marshes. All in all, the requirement for the suburban areas to be self-sufficient in food grain is unshakable and entirely possible.

We should understand that self-sufficiency in food grain for suburban peasants itself is a changing concept, because the population in the suburban areas is continuously increasing. It is estimated that by 1990 the rural population will increase to nearly 5 million from the current 4.44 million. At the same time, population in the city proper will also increase. The total population of the entire city is forecast to increase to 13 million from the current 12 million by 2000. Calculated on the basis of the current consumption level, the grain consumption, including grains used for the production of pork, poultry, and eggs, will be about 800 and 900 jin. This does not even include the needs of the floating population. Therefore, the demand for the grain ration in the city proper and forage crops in the suburban areas will also increase correspondingly.

In view of the two weak links, grain and forage crops, in the economic development of the suburban areas which we can ill afford to ignore, we must pay attention to solving the following problems: First, readjust the agricultural structure. In the short run we must closely focus on and submit to the general requirements of "standing firm on the two footholds." In readjusting agricultural structure, suburban areas must uphold the guideline of "stabilizing grain, readjusting cotton, ensuring vegetables, and developing forage crops and economic crops demanded by the market." This guiding ideology is correct. We should see to it that grain production increases while we ensure stability and that the acreage for forage crops is increased in a planned manner. Second, we should adopt a policy to encourage peasants to produce more grain and forage crops. Not long ago, the central rural work conference adopted relevant regulations. Shanghai should also work out some appropriate policies. For example, by self-sufficiency in grain, we mean that the 10 suburban countries should make up the other's deficiency. There should also be appropriate policy for allocating grain so as to mobilize the enthusiasm of Songjiang, Jinshan, and Qingpu Counties for grain production. Moreover, corn is currently procured for 0.12 juan a jin in Shanghai while corn procured at negotiated prices outside the city is 0.23 yuan a jin. Is it possible for the procurement prices in Shanghai to be appropriately raised so as to mobilize the peasants enthusiasm for growing forage crops? Third, the soil of state farms along the river and the coast is very salty. Preferential policy may be adopted to encourage them to grow forage grass. Nearly 300,000 mu of cultivated areas on suburban state farms have great potential for increasing forage crops and growing forage grass. We should further study this question to see, on the basis of respecting science, which policy or technical measures we may adopt to tap the potential of the soil.

In Developing a Comprehensive Rural Economy, We Must Not Slacken Development of Village and Town Enterrpises and Must Unswervingly Implement the Policy of "Subsidizing Agriculture With Industry"

Earlier, the theoretical circle and those doing practical work in China had launched a heated debate on the issue of "prosperity is impossible without industry." Regarding this controversial issue on the direction of development for the rural economy, a correct conclusion has been reached at the recent central rural work conference. After summarizing the view of those present, Premier Zhao decided: "Such views as 'prosperity is impossible without industry,' 'a stable economy is impossible without agriculture,' and 'a vigorous economy is impossible without commerce' are correct." We need to reach a better common understanding on this issue.

Village and town industry in suburban Shanghai is a natural outcome of the integration of the urban and rural economies, and promises high hopes of success. It is also an essential precondition for implementing the policy of "subsidizing agriculture with industry." So we must not weaken, but further develop this industry. In reviewing the history of the development of village and town industry in suburban Shanghai, it is abundantly clear that it relies upon, develops alongside, and serves the large industries in Shanghai Municipality. In the future, large industries in the municipality will still require the service of village and town industry for their further expansion, as well as sharing processing and other ancillary functions. Mutual interdependence between the urban and rural areas has opened up broad prospects for the development of suburban village and town industry. Proceeding from the viewpoint of promoting an integrated and coorcindated development of the urban and rural economies, it is not hard to perceive the need to take seriously, and further enhance, village and town industry.

We must also note that energetic development of suburban village and town industry is an important means to accumulate funds, increase input into agriculture, and invigorate the rural economy. As we all know, agricultural production is also a process of input and output. In the state of a small-scale peasant economy, farm production chiefly relies on the input of human and animal labor, because of its small production scale and its backward production mode. However, following transformation of China's traditional into a modern agriculture and from a natural into a commodity economy, it is increasingly necessary to use mechanical labor. For instance, more investments are necessary for waterworks, transportation, warehouses, energy, chemical fertilizers, farm machinery, science, and technology. Aside from fund accumulations from agriculture, more economic assistance is needed. In view of the numerous tasks undertaken, it is currently impossible for the state to make massive financial input into each sector. Under such circumstances, vigorous development of village and town industry has become an important means to accumulate funds, increase input into agriculture, and invigorate the rural economy. Prior to large-scale development of village and town industry in suburban Shanghai, the annual public accumulation of the commune, the production brigade, and the production team was only 80 million yuan, mainly derived from agriculture. In 1984, however, public accumulation rose to 710 million yuan, among which 660 million yuan was derived from village and town industry. Addressing the central rural work conference, Comrade Zhao Ziyang said: "The peasants would not be able to make so much material input and achieve such high output solely by relying on crop cultivation." He also added: Industrial development "can increase income, support agriculture and grain production, and raise input and output, thereby developing the rural economy." In the past, we have taken the road of developing village and town industry for accumulating funds and input for agriculture. We must, hence, firmly follow this course in future.

Some comrades are afraid that "while industry is developed, agricultural production will decline." As a matter of fact this worry is unnecessary. The recent central rural work conference has put forward the policy of "subsidizing agriculture with industry." "Subsidizing agriculture with industry" indicates very clearly the relationship between developing village and town industry and making a success of agriculture. The conclusion that Comrade Tian Jiyun has arrived at after his inspection of the rural areas of Xiaoshan, Zhejiang, is: "Village and town industry should not be allowed to decline. If it declined, agriculture would also decline." As can be seen, the question is not that agriculture would decline with the development of industry, but rather that failure to develop village and town industry would cause a decline in agriculture. Let us look into the actual situation in the suburbs of Shanghai. From 1981 to 1985, village and town industry in these suburbs paid wages totalling more than 5 billion yuan to commune members engaged in industrial production, accounting for over 50 percent of the suburban peasants' total income. The amount of funds used by village and town industry to support agricultural production and the industrial profit given to farm laborers to "share", totaled 765 million yuan. This was 16 percent of the total profit earned by village and town industry and some 100 million yuan more than the total amount spent by state, municipal, and county financial departments in support of agriculture. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan, agriculture in the suburbs grew at an average rate of 16 percent annually. One of the major reasons for this was that we "subsidized agriculture with industry." To carry on the sustained, steady, and coordinated development of agriculture in the suburbs, we must continue to implement the policy of "subsidizing agriculture with industry."

In accordance with the guidelines of the instructions in the proposal for the Seventh 5-Year Plan that "in the light of the actual needs and their own potential, economically developed rural areas may direct their processing industries to large industry and exports," we should continue to do our best to expand large urban industries, based on the needs of urban-rural economic integration. At the same time, village and town industry in the suburban areas should, in the course of continued development, overcome past shortcomings and pay attention to effecting several changes, namely: 1) Regarding the funds for developing village and town industry, the practice should be changed from relying excessively on bank loans to relying mainly on enterprises' own accumulated funds; 2) the practice in developing production should be changed from attaching importance to "extension" [wai yan 1120 1693] to relaying mainly on "intensive" means; and 3) in operations and management, enterprises should led to tap their internal potential and strive for greater economic results, instead of looking to the higher authorities for power and money.

Further Facilitate the Circulation of Commodities and Promote the Intensive Development of the Second Step of Rural Reform

The circulation of commodities plays the role of a bridge in building the urban-rural economy and achieving economic integration of urban and rural areas. It serves as a link in developing rural production and meeting market demands. Rural areas in suburban Shanghai are now changing the previous practice of selling whatever they produce to market-oriented production. This is a significant indication of the closer economic link and interdependence between our urban and rural areas. In the circulation of commodities, however, there are still certain obstacles unfavorable to the development of the urban-rural economy. This problem has become more striking in the second stage of rural reform. It must be systematically resolved, through the joint efforts of urban and rural areas, by reforming the commercial system.

Then, what should we do to unclog the cnannels between urban and rural areas in order to further facilitate the circulation of commodities?

In the first place, there should be a relatively stable contract system for purchasing agricultural and sideline products. Now, our rural economy is a commodity economy. The demands in urban areas, the change in market conditions, and the market mechanism guided by the state plan have begun to direct the peasants' commodity production. This direction or guidance is effected through the signing of purchase contracts between the state-operated commercial departments and the peasants. As reflected by the peasants, the current purchase contract system has two main drawbacks: First, contracts are not signed on the basis of the characteristics of production. Since they are very rigid and are signed for the purpose of buying "a fixed quantity at a fixed time and a fixed price," they are often hard to fulfill. Second, when there are more supplies, contract terms are often not complied with; when the supplies are scarce, purchases are made forcibly. In the future, contracts for purchase of agricultural and sideline products should be signed for a period of several years and kept relatively stable so that the peasants can arrange their production work in a planned way. Once a purchase contract has been signed, neither party should change it at will; that is, the serious nature of the contract should be maintained. To sum up, it is imperative to link the demands of the urban market with nonstaple food production centers and other agricultural production units in suburban areas through the implementation of an effective contract system.

In addition, it is necessary to adopt the method of integrating urban and rural areas and combining indigenous and foreign resources to strengthen measures for the storage and regulation of non-staple foods, thereby relieving the incongruity between the periodical and seasonal cycles of production and the balance of supply. For agricultural and sideline products purchased under contract, especially for fresh or live products, it is necessary to strive to succeed in setting up direct meetings between production and marketing units, organize smooth circulation, and reduce transferring links. For rural cooperative economic organizations, it is necessary to positively open up circulation channels and carry out multi-level business activities and multi-channel circulation. In these aspects, the many counties on the outskirts each have some good models. This explains that, in enlivening circulation, the outlying areas have much to accomplish. In order to do a still better job in developing the urban and rural economy, it appears that it will be imperative to formulate a policy conducive to unifying the urban and rural areas where further enlivening of circulations is concerned.

Strengthening the Construction of Towns on the Outskirts, Preventing Pollution of the Rural Environment

As far as Shanghai's outskirts are concerned, strengthening the construction of counties and small towns below the county level is an important facet to promote the unification of the urban and rural economy. This is because the densely scattered small towns are rural economic, cultural, and political centers on the outskirts. They are the middle levels which connect the large Shanghai city with rural areas on its outskirts, the bases for major industries to expand themselves to the areas on the outskirts, and the hubs for unifying the urban and rural areas. Therefore, this issue deserves our closest attention.

Shanghai has the largest number of towns in the country. According to statistics, there are a total of 530 large and small towns, including 26 county-controlled towns, 183 townships and farm counties, and 321 village towns. The output value of these counties accounted for approximately two-thirds of the outskirts' total industrial and agricultural output value. In the past few years, the towns on the outskirts of Shanghai have actually developed to a certain extent, and relatively rapid development has especially been made by some economically-developed townships. We should make the best of the situation, sum up our experiences, map out plans, and grasp well the construction of towns on the outskirts.

In my opinion, the strategic target for the development of Shanghai's towns, as proposed by the special-topic town research group of the Shanghai Academy of Social Sciences, is reasonable. This strategic target is to build the towns on the outskirts into new zones, integrating urban and rural areas, and at the same time turn them into microminiaturized cities and improved rural areas. They will be Shanghai's new civilized and affluent socialist outskirts with industrialized rural areas, urbanized society, and an afforested, park-like environment. In the meantime, a mult-component city will be formed in an area of over 6,000 square kilometers with the central city as the main body and towns on the outskirts operating independently and keeping contracts with each other. They should possess solid economic contents, rational economic structure, healthy social conditions, and fine ecological systems. Proceeding from this general target, the first thing is to strengthen the economic construction of these towns, the second is to develop the social facilities of these towns, and the third is to protect the ecological evnironment of these towns. To this end, the municipal people's government has demanded that all counties complete the formulation of village and town construction plans in 1986 and that such work must be firmly carried out. To undertake the construction of towns as a whole, it is necessary to carry out scientific planning and build official business zones, industrial zones, afforested land, cultural centers, and other different zones in accordance with the geographical environments. Construction on the land and underground should be carried out at the same time, and efforts should be made in architecture to combine practical use with beautiful appearance. It is imperative to stress science in formulating construction plans, and efforts should also be made to embody local styles and characteristics.

In the construction of village towns, it is imperative to strictly control unscrupulous occupation of arable land and conscientiously prevent pollution, especially pollution of water resources. No enterprises should be built without pollution treatment facilities. A water pollution treatment facility is mandatory in town construction. Currently, some treatment methods are available which require small investments but produce good results. It is imperative to do a good job in protecting water resources from pollution since it is a major issue that bears on the physical health of the municipality's 12 million people.

All Trades and Professions in the Municipality Should Go All Out To Support Suburban Economic and Cultural Work.

Comrades doing rural work in the suburbs should have the concept of urban-rural economic integration. The same concept should also be upheld by those engaged in urban work. Particularly today, under the new circumstances where urban and rural reforms have merged with each other, the relationship between urban and rural areas is closer than ever, and it is more important for the former to support the latter. When drawing up their policies and plans and considering steps to be taken in their work, all departments in urban areas should uphold the concept of urban and rural economic integration in the interest of the whole. Shanghai has a good tradition of urban areas supporting rural areas. This tradition must be brought into full play.

First, we must continue to cuccessfully support rural areas with science and technology. The central authorities have pointed out in a document: "Science and technology must serve the rural economy, while the development of the rural economy must rely on science and technology. This should be regarded as a principle and given prominence." Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, scientific research units and institutions of higher learning in Shanghai have made headway in "supporting rural areas with science and technology." Our rural cadres have said: "Science and technology personnel are 'gods of wealth' most welcome by the peasants, and they are meritorious people in enlivening the suburban economy."

This comment represents our high evaluation of intelligence used by our science and technology personnel in supporting rural areas. In the new year Shanghai should strive to reach a new level in the work of supporting rural areas with science and technology. More efforts should be devoted to the research and popularization of agricultural science and technology. Emphasis should be placed on developing new crop strains and animal breeds, new technologies, new machines and tools, and new materials so as to continually improve agricultural and sideline production quantitatively and qualitatively. Village and town enterprises should be beefed up using science and technology. Earnest efforts should be made to implement the "spark plan" formulated by the municipal science and technology commission and to provide village and town enterprises with complete technological know-how, managerial procedures, product designs, and methods for quality control so as to improve the competitive edge of village and town enterprises in Shanghai's rural areas.

Second, we should successfully promote cultural, education, and public health work in support of rural areas. The past few years have seen contributions by the cultural, education, and public health fronts of our municipality in support of agriculture. The education front has trained a lot of middle- and high-level technical and managerial personnel for rural areas. Statistics show that some 2,700 backbone technicians have been trained for village and town enterprises in the suburbs by the Shanghai University of Science and Technology, and East China College of Chemical Engineering, and 16 other institutions of higher learning through their properly oriented training programs. Last year some 600 tuition-paying college students, trained by institutions of higher learning at the request of rural areas, graduated and returned to rural areas. In the meantime, a great deal of work in support of rural areas has been done by the medical, public health, and schistosomiasis-prevention fronts. It is hoped that our comrades on the cultural, education, and public fronts will continue to exert themselves and do a still better job in supporting rural areas.

As ours is the largest industrial city in the country, we should also make earnest efforts to support rural areas with industry. Industrial departments should continue their assistance in the development of village and town industry and support the feed industry that is now urgently needed and should be vigorously developed in rural areas. The municipal CPC Committee and people's government have now decided that investment in nonstaple-food production should be focused on the feed industry. Urban industrial departments are requested to make more contributions to the development of this industry. Additionally, it is imperative to resolve to develop the farm machinery industry and successfully solve the "longstanding, big, and difficult problems" in suburban areas of production and supply of farm machines and their parts. Failure to develop the farm machinery industry as quickly as required will adversely affect further changes in the use of farm laborers, readjustment of the rural production structure, and improvement of agricultural labor productivity. Comrades on the urban industrial front should take the peasants' urgent needs as their own urgent needs and make further efforts to develop the farm machinery industry.

It Is Necessary To Give Power to Counties and Boost Counties' Overall Leadership Over Rural Economy

For rural areas, in order to realize the integration of urban-rural economy, the key lies in boosting the counties' overall leadership over the rural economy. Comrade Wan Li said: "Practice in recent years has proven that a county is a combination of urban and rural areas and also a combination of microeconomic and macroeconomic activities. It can play a comprehensive role and is a very important key." His remarks provide practical and significant guidance for us, especially Shanghai's suburban counties. He also said: "We must delegate greater power to the county level in decision making.

If the country lacks power in making decisions, the overall leadership over the economy will be only empty words, so giving full play to local advantages in the spirit of seeking truth from facts will also be empty words. Since we now want to strengthen the work of scientific research, education, transportation, communications, building small towns and that of other fields, the county level should be able to coordinate and solve micro-economic problems in a prompt manner according to the actual situation. This is very important because the county level is the leading organ closest to peasants' production and daily activities. However, some unreasonable regulations in our current system often fetter counties' creative power and their ability to solve problems independently. His sincere words and earnest wishes merit our deep attention.

The imporance of further delegating power to counties in the course of reform has been mentioned by Comrade Wan Li. Now, in Shanghai, our problem is how to implement this guidance.

According to our understanding, various counties generally want to expand their power in five respects, namely the power of land administration, the power to review and approve new enterprises, the power of revenue-sharing, the power to review and approve the reduction of taxes for village and town enterprises, and power to make decisions in foreign trade to a certain extent. Concerning the five powers, I think the crucial one is the financial problem. The country's financial system was implemented in the last year on trial basis. The method is "fixing a basic figure and sharing surplus revenue." The counties support this method. Shall we continue last year's method in 1986? I think we should continue this method. Moreover, we should give appropriate assistance to some counties with relatively weak economic foundations. On this question, a central leading comrade has pointed out: "The 800 million peasants are not only the most active productive force and the source of our wealth, but also a vast market which provides us with an extremely important condition for developing commodity production in urban and rural areas. We must attach importance to developing production and establish a new system of integrating the urban and rural economy in order to give full play to their initiatives. It is wrong to consider them a burden in consumption or as objects for extracting contributions. In this way we will fall into a passive position." We must consider this basic point of view in solving our financial problem.

In addition to financial power, we should delegate all powers to the counties as quickly as possible according to the clearly defined regulations in central documents. For instance, concerning the problem of too many taxes being paid by village and town enterprises in Shanghai's suburban counties, the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee and the Shanghai Municipal People's Government have agreed to adopt the following two measures: One is to stabilize the basic tax burdens of village and town enterprises and the other is to implement the central regulations on tax reduction for village and town enterprises and delegate power to the counties in this regard within certain limits.

Of course, the leading comrades of various counties should properly use their power after the expansion of their decision-making power. They should truly use this greater power for developing production and increasing tax sources. We should establish special funds to support agricultural production and modernization. At the same time, we should give proper guidance to various townships for establishing a sound financial system, pay attention to studying methods of making, saving, and spending money in an appropriate way, accelerate the development of agriculture, side occupation and industrial production in Shanghai's suburban areas, and promote the stable development of Shanghai's rural economy on the road of integrating the urban and rural areas.

YANG XIZONG COMMENTS ON HENAN PLA, MILITIA WORK

HK220343 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 21 Feb 86

[Text] According to HENAN RIBAO, on 19 February leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee Yang Xizong, Liu Zhengwei, He Zhukang, and Zhao Di went to the provincial military district to listen to reports on work and look into the transfer of People's Armed Forces departments and the resettlement of demobilized cadres.

Henan Military District Commander Zhan Jingwu and political Commissar Dong Guoqing delivered reports on behalf of the Standing Committee of the military district CPC Committee on the situation in PLA and militia work in the military district last year and on the main tasks for this year. They focused on reporting on doing a good job of transferring the People's Armed Forces departments and resettling demobilized cadres.

Comrade Yang Xizong said: The transfer of People's Armed Forces to local authorities is a glorious task assigned us by the CPC Central Committee and the Central Military Commission. It is a major affair both for the Army and the local authorities. We must make a success of this work. Local CPC committees and government at all levels must enthusiastically support the effort to make a success of this work, take the initiative to grasp ideological and political work in the course of the transfer, make proper arrangements for resettling surplus and demobilized cadres, and help them solve practical difficulties. In accordance with the central regulations, local departments may not take or occupy, under any pretext, People's Armed Forces department barracks or facilities, or militia training grounds.

The militia should play a leading role in three aspects: 1) in doing a good job in militia and reserve service building; 2) in promoting the building of socialist spiritual civilization in the rural areas; 3) in vigorously developing commodity production and leading the peasants forward to get rich together.

Comrade Yang Xizong stressed in conclusion: The local authorities should vigorously support the PLA in carrying out streamlining and reorganizing, and take the initiative in solving difficulties for the PLA units. We also hope that the PLA comrades will actively take part in building the two civilizations in the localities, further promote PLA and militia work, and work together to create a new situation in work in the province.

HU YAOBANG CONGRATULATES HENAN CITY ON SUCCESS

HK210956 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Text] Comrade Hu Yaobang recently instructed the Secretariat of the General Office of the CPC Central Committee to write a letter to Pingdingshan City congratulating the city on doubling the total industrial and agricultural output value, profits, taxes, and revenue 5 years ahead of schedule, and expressing the hope that the city will make further contributions during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period.

Pingdingshan City is a new industrial city developed after the founding of the PRC. The total industrial and agricultural output value of the city in 1980 was only 1.35 billion yuan. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, in accordance with its local conditions, Pingdingshan City set the target of doubling its industrial and agricultural output value by 1985.

Comrade Hu Yaobang has been very concerned about the construction and development of the city. While inspecting the city in 1984, he gave an important instruction on economic development in the city. In March 1985, Comrade Hu Yaobang wrote a letter encouraging the people of the city to resolutely carry out reform and strive to attain the target of doubling its industrial and agricultural output value at an early date.

Comrade Hu Yaobang's instruction greatly inspired and encouraged the people of Pingdingshan City. They seriously summed up their experiences and proposed the slogan of paying no lip service and doing practical things. They earnestly implemented the ideological line of seeking truth from facts put forth by the CPC Central Committee, and formulated the policy of developing the city's economy in a comprehensive way with stress on energy exploitation. First, they exerted efforts to fulfill priority projects and technological transformation items on or ahead of schedule. Second, they firmly grasped the development of local industry and collective enterprises. Third, they developed lateral economic ties; carried out multi-tier economic and technological cooperation; and actively brought in technology, talented people, funds, and equipment. Fourth, they adhered to the principle of urban areas bringing along rural areas and rural areas supplementing urban areas, in order to encourage urban and rural areas to develop and prosper jointly. They also vigorously strengthened ideological and political work and the building of spiritual civilization, resulting in a marked improvement in public order, general social mood, party style, and the style of cadres.

With the strenuous efforts made by the people of the whole city, the city's industrial and agricultural output value in 1985 was 2.75 billion yuan, its profits and taxes delivered amounted to more than 400 million yuan, and its revenue exceeded 200 million yuan, thus fulfilling the doubling target 5 years ahead of schedule. On 22 January this year, (Duan Songhui), secretary of the Pingdingshan City CPC Committee, wrote a letter to Comrade Hu Yaobang reporting this good news.

After reading the letter, Comrade Hu Yaobang instructed the Secretariat of the Ceneral Office of the CPC Central Committee to write a reply congratulating the people of Pingdingshan City and wishing them success in their future work.

The reply from the General Office of the CPC Central Committee has had a strong impact on the people of Pingdingshan City. They say they have been motivated by the spirit of comrade Hu Yaobang's instruction and will properly carry out all work for 1986 with further efforts, begin fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and fight to fulfill the quadruplification target by 1993.

HENAN RADIO ON SUBSIDIZING AGRICULTURE

HK210557 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 1030 GMT 17 Feb 86

[Station commentator's article: "Really Do Well in Subsidizing Agriculture With Industrial Income"]

[Text] In the practice of subsidizing agriculture with industrial income, we allocate part of the increased profits of local industries, as well as town and township enterprises, to subsidizing the development of the farming, breeding, and vegetable-growing industries in suburban areas. By doing this, we appropriately readjust the economic interests of industrial workers and peasants. Therefore, this is an important and long-term rural policy.

Under the new circumstances, in which the rural commodity economy is vigorously developing and the secondary and tertiary industries are rapidly developing, the tasks of making agriculture stand firm and promoting the peasants' initiative in tilling the land in order to help the farming and breeding industries develop steadily have become the urgent issues yet to be solved by the rural areas in the second stage of reform. But what is the method for solving these issues?

It is impossible for us to increase the profits of agriculture to the level of those of industry and sideline production just by raising the prices of agricultural products. It is also unrealistic for us to increase the profits of agriculture just by making factories suffer heavy losses and by reducing the prices of the means of production for agriculture.

The correct choice can only be the one in which we can strengthen the vitality of agriculture and strive by all means to improve productivity, while at the same time adopting a policy of subsidizing agriculture with industrial income and readjusting the relations between agriculture and rural industries, as well as other trades. We should find a new way for agriculture and industry to promote each other's development and develop in a coordinated way.

Recently, when visiting the province, Premier Zhao Ziyang stressed that, judging from the developmental trend, China must solve the issue of making the rural areas' agriculture and industry promote each other's development.

Over the years, some 5 million of the rural labor force have turned to branches of industry other than agriculture, engaging in industry, sideline production, and tertiary industry. Thereby, they have earned considerable profits. In 1985 alone, the output value of the province's town and township enterprises totaled more than 15.1 billion yuan. This has shown that the practice of subsidizing agriculture with industrial income has not only brought benefits to agriculture but also to town and township enterprises. In the long run, we should focus on the development of production and use the subsidies mainly for improving agricultural production conditions; for popularizing new agricultural technology; for developing services before, during, and after the production process; and for developing intellectual resources.

To subsidize agriculture with industrial income and to promote the rich helping agriculture are the right ways for the rural areas to put agriculture, industry, and sideline production into their proper positions, as well as to develop them in a coordinated way. All localities must act in accordance with their local conditions, and formulate in a down-to-earth manner the specific measures for subsidizing agriculture with industrial income, so as to promote a continuous and steady development of agriculture.

HUBEI RADIO CALLS FOR PROPER GROWTH RATE

HK210928 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Station commentary: "Industrial Production Must Increase in a Proper Way"]

[Excerpts] Although the province's industrial production increased in January, the growth rate was unsatisfactory and the target was not attained. This merits the serious attention of economic departments at all levels. Maintaining a proper growth rate while raising economic efficiency is of great importance to continuous and coordinated economic development, to a good beginning of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, to the attainment of the province's quadruplification target ahead of schedule, and to a steady increase in the province's revenue. The relatively low growth rate of the province's industrial production in January was due to objective factors such as insufficient electricity supply and funds and a shortage of some materials, and to subjective reasons such as our failure to properly handle the relationship between growth rate and economic efficiency.

It must be pointed out that we must continue to avoid the trend of placing undue stress on a high growth rate. However, this does not mean that we should not do our utmost to attain the target, which can be attained through our strenuous efforts. In this respect, all factory managers and enterprise heads must link growth rate with economic efficiency with a view to making more contributions for the people. They must adopt an attitude of seeking truth from facts and refrain from doing everything indiscriminately. Those localities and enterprises which can guarantee the supply of raw materials and energy and whose products are fine and marketable should seek a high growth rate, whereas those enterprises whose products are inferior and unmarketable should avoid seeking a high growth rate.

NINGXIA SECRETARY ON IMPROVING PARTY CONDUCT

HK222140 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 3 Feb 86 p 1

[Report: "CPC Committee of the Autonomous Region Holds Cadre Meeting on Straightening Out Party Style"]

[Excerpts] The Ningxia Autonomous Regional CPC Committee held a meeting of cadres from organizations directly under the region at the Hongqi Theatre in Yinchuan on the afternoon of 30 January. The meeting called on all party members and cadres of the regional party and government offices to set an example for the region in rectifying the work styles of the party and to strive for a fundamental improvement of the party's work style within the year. At the meeting, Li Xuezhi, secretary of the regional CPC Committee, delivered a speech entitled "The Regional Party and Government Organizations Should Learn From the Central Organizations and Set an Example for the Region in Improving Party Conduct." Comrade Li Xuezhi said: On 6 and 9 January, the party Central Committee Secretariat held meetings of cadres from the central party and government organizations, in which Hu Yaobang and other central leading comrades made important speeches. At a recent meeting of the Standing Committee of the party Central Committee Political Bureau, Comrade Deng Xiaoping spoke too on the question of rectifying party work style. He put forward principles, demands, and measures for improvement of party conduct and called on all party members and cadres of the central organizations to set an example for the nation in this respect. The important policy decision and arrangements made by the party Central Committee are very wise and correct and have come at the right time, conforming to the common aspirations of the party, the people, and the Army. This will certainly give a powerful impetus to achieving a fundamental improvement of party conduct, strengthening the building up of the party ideologically and organizationally, achieving a better work style in offices, and gradually developing our economic restructuring in depth. Meanwhile, they are of far-reaching significance and have a positive effect on the successful fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan and building of socialism with Chinese characteristics. Our regional party and government organizations should learn from the central organizations and set an example for the region in the improvement of party conduct.

Comrade Li Xuezhi also said: In terms of their status and role, the regional party and government organizations are the key to rectifying office work style and achieving a fundamental improvement of the party's work style and the social conduct at large. The regional party and government organizations should play an important part in rectifying the party's work style. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the region's party organizations at various levels have done a great deal of work in building up the party ideologically and organizationally. Through party rectification, the party's work style in our region has greatly improved. Party work style in the regional party and government offices is good in the main. However, we must understand that all the unhealthy practices pointed out by the central leading comrades at the cadre meetings of the central organizations also find expression to a certain degree in our region. The appearance of such a situation is mainly because we have failed to pay adequate attention to the building of a culturally and ideologically advanced socialist civilization, and to political and ideological work in the past few years. Some malpractices were initiated in the regional party and government organizations, but we failed to identify some of these malpractices in time, or we discovered some of them but we failed to take effective measures to check them. The regional CPC Committee should seriously examine the matter and correct the mistakes. On behalf of the regional CPC Committee, Comrade Li Xuezhi solemnly declared: All party members, cadres, the masses and friends outside the party ardently hope that serious cases of malfeasance and violations of law and discipline involving members of party organizations at all levels, and even leading cadres at the regional level, will be exposed and criticized, and they are also encouraged to play a supervisory role in the matter.

Comrade Li Xuezhi stressed: Responding to the call of the party Central Committee, our region must go into action immediately and resolutely carry out the principle of "firmness and endurance" in rectifying unhealthy tendencies as required by the party Central Committee. We must not utter empty words but must perform more actual deeds and make earnest efforts to deal with current malpractices. From now on, the regional leading organs, leaders, and cadres must first take the lead in rectifying the party's work style, and then the drive will be carried on from above to below and at all levels. We must achieve marked results in the first half of the year and strive to effect a basic turn for the better in the party work style of the regional party and government offices. To this end, we must stress the following four aspects at present:

1. Conscientiously Study Relevant Documents, Strengthen Ideological Education and Enhance Political Consciousness in Improving Party Conduct

All the regional party and government organizations should organize their party members and cadres to particularly study important speeches by the central leading comrades at meetings attended by cadres from the central party and government offices to study important speeches and instructions by Deng Xiaoping and other leading comrades; to study the various regulations of the party Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Discipline Inspection Commission on checking unhealthy practices; to review the party Constitution and "criteria of party members;" to deeply grasp the importance and urgency of improving party conduct; to make sure of the principles, policies, and methods of improving party conduct, and to have a clear understanding of the importance of setting an example by the regional party and government organization and their responsibilities in improving party conduct.

2. Examine Party Work Style in an Extensive and Profound Way

In the past few years, the party Central Committee and the State Council have issued a number of rules and regulations. In improving party conduct and checking unhealthy practices, we must carry out these rules and regulatons in earnest. At present, we must measure ourselves and correct mistakes exactly in accordance with the six points prescribed in Document No 57 issued by the General Office of the party Central Committee and of the State Council last year.

3. Conscientiously Handle Major and Important Cases and Seriously Deal With Those Who Violate the Law and Discipline and Engage in Unhealthy Activities

In improving party conduct and rectifying unhealthy tendencies, we must dare to tackle tough problems, smash "favoritism through connections" and go into action immediately. Those who ought to be criticized should be criticized, those who ought to be punished should be punished, and those who ought to be dealt with according to law should be dealt with accordingly. In no case should we be softhearted toward them, because to tolerate evil is to abet it. In particular, we should not tolerate the reckless criminal activities of corruption, robbery, speculation, swindling and bribery which are harmful to the interests of the state and the people. Once they are discovered, we must vigorously pursue and fiercely maul them and deal with them according to law. We must get to the bottom of all cases regardless of the rank of the cadres involved.

4. Formulate and Improve Various Rules and Regulations

The meeting was presided over by Comrade Hao Yanzao. During the meeting, he also made known "Some Regulations on Improving Office Work Style" formulated by the regional CPC Committee and people's government.

The meeting was attended by more than 1,000 persons, including leading comrades of the regional party and government organizations, responsible comrades of the departments directly under the region, and of prefectures, cities and counties, and all delegates to the fourth party congress of the departments directly under the region.

BAI JINIAN SPEAKS TO SHAANXI CADRES MEETING

HK210939 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2300 GMT 19 Feb 86

[Excerpts] A report meeting of the provincial organ cadres going to the countryside was held in Xian from 17 to 19 February. At the meeting, the cadres going to the countryside reported their work and exchanged their experiences. Bai Jinian, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, and Mou Lingsheng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, spoke. In his speech, Comrade Bai Jinian said: The cadres going to the countryside have scored initial achievements in a short period of time. Three aspects, at least, must be affirmed:

1. They have done many good things for rural areas. For example, they have done a lot of investigation and study, helped rural areas train grass-roots cadres, readjusted the production structure, strengthened social order, helped some township and town enterprises revive, and so on.

2. The cadres going to the countryside have experienced practical tempering. The vague idea of going to the countryside this time, which the great majority of cadres had, was clarified. They came to further understand the strategic significance of this work.

3. Cadres' going to the countryside provides a good lead in straightening out organs' work style and plays a very good role in pushing work forward. Comrade Bai Jinian emphatically said: In rural work this year, it is necessary to vigorously develop the fruits of reform, to develop the rural commodity economy, and to change the poor and backward outlook. This must be regarded as the focal point of rural work. He demanded: In grasping rural work, it is essential to do well in grasping ideological and political work and to persist in simultaneously grasping the two civilizations. At the same time, it is imperative to do well in grasping party rectification in the rural areas and to further improve the quality of the rural cadres. He hoped that they all would score still better achievements in going to the countryside to stay at the grass roots this year.

Mou Lingsheng, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, also spoke at the meeting: After summing up the previous situation in going to the countryside, he said: Going to the countryside to stay at the grass roots now is completely different from before. In the new situation, there is new guiding ideology, new tasks, and new methods. Only by understanding and grasping these new characteristics can we creatively accomplish the tasks handed over to us by the provincial CPC Committee. Mou Lingsheng put forward this year's tasks to the cadres going to the countryside:

1. They must help the county and township CPC committees do well in training grass-roots cadres, in straightening out the rural grass-roots organizations, and in party rectification in the rural areas.

2. They must continue to help all places do well in readjusting the rural production structure. In accordance with local resources, labor force, technology, and capital, they must take such measures as are suited to local conditions to determine the backbone industry and develop production.

3. They must impart scientific and technological knowledge to rural areas and use science and technology to reform agriculture and to arm the township and town enterprises.

4. They must continue to help the poor and strive to ensure that 20 to 30 percent of the poor households can solve their problems of clothing and food this year. After 3 to 5 years' hard work, we must cause all poor households to basically extricate themselves from a difficult position.

5. It is necessary to do well in investigation and study.

DEFENSE SPOKESMAN VIEWS PLA PILOT DEFECTION

OW220253 Taipei CNA in English 0236 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 21 (CNA) -- A Ministry of Defense spokesman said Friday in a news conference the ministry is closely watching developments surrounding the flight of a Communist Chinese MIG-19 jet fighter to South Korea, saying the incident has again pointed to the doom of the communist regime. Chang Hui-yuan said the Defense Ministry as ordered the military attache in Seoul to contact Korean Government for details of the freedom seeking flight.

The flight, second in seven months' time by a Chinese Communist pilot, Chang said, echoes firmly what he had said in a news conference also held after a similar flight last August, that given opportunity, every communist pilot on the mainland would seek freedom. Hsiao Tien-jun piloted a Soviet developed Ilyushin-28 bomber, crash landing in South Korea last Aug. 24, and later won asylum in the Republic of China. Chang stressed that the people on the mainland, either civilians or the military, have long harbored hatred against the besieged communist regime. Though the communists claimed to have been engaged in an alleged economic reform and "open door" policy, Chang said, the time-bomb has been ticking and will explode at any time.

[Text] Taipei, Feb. 22 (CNA) -- Military Spokesman Chang Hui-yuan said Saturday that the Defense Ministry welcomed the statement by its South Korean counterpart that the Communist Chinese jet pilot who flew into Seoul Friday afternoon wanted to seek freedom "in a third country." According to foreign wire service reports, South Korea's Defense Ministry declared this morning that the defecting Communist Chinese pilot Chen Pao-chung wants "to go to a third country."

Maj. Gen. Chang said that his ministry welcomes the freedom-seeking MIG pilot to come to the Republic of China. Chang noted that the Defense Ministry is watching closely development of the incident. The ministry also has instructed the military attache at the Chinese Embassy in Seoul to give all necessary assistance and support to the freedom-seeking pilot.

TOKYO PRESS REPORTS DEFECTOR TO GO TO TAIWAN

OW221415 Taipei CNA in English 1402 GMT 22 Feb 86

[Text] Tokyo, Feb. 22 (CNA) -- All major Tokyo newspapers Saturday reported in evening editions Lt. Col. Chen Pao-chung will be allowed to go to the Republic of China as soon as the South Korean Government completes its investigation of his defection. TV networks and radio broadcasting stations also made similar reports in their afternoon newscasts. They all used dispatches filed by their own correspondents in Seoul, quoting the Korean Ministry of Defense as announcing in a statement the release of the defector to "a third country" on completion of the necessary investigation. The "third country" in the official statement, all media here said, meant the Republic of China as the past cases of defection indicated.

KOREAN CONSULATE COMMENTS ON DEFECTOR'S STATUS

[Text] The South Korean Consulate-General in Hong Kong may not have a role to play this time in the defection of a Chinese Air Force pilot who defected to South Korea in a MiG-19 fighter. In past incidents of similar nature the consulate here played a major role in the negotiations. Consul Kyung H. Kim told THE STANDARD yesterday that since the case was very clear that the pilot obviously did not want to go back to China, the Korean Government would respect his wishes. News reports yesterday indicated that the pilot is likely to be granted political asylum. China has called on Seoul to return the plane and the pilot, while Taiwan has indicated he is welcome.

Mr Kim said that it would be no problem to return the aircraft to China as requested. "There have been precedents. This has not yet been the decision of our government. But it may be an inference on the basis of the past practices." He said the case was too simple to involve the consulate-general. But he did not say if the Chinese and the Korean governments would deal directly or through Hong Kong. South Korea has diplomatic ties with the island but not China. During the past two events the Chinese negotiations with the Korean Government took place in Hong Kong.

[Dispatch from special correspondent Yang Yung-nian in Chengdu: "Deng Xiaoping Meets Fellow Townsmen in Chengdu"]

[Text] Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping met in Chengdu with representatives from Guangan County who came to see him. Deng was very happy when he was informed of the arrival of his fellow townsmen. He said humorously: Today I have met our local officials at last. Deng Xiaoping shook hands with them and asked their names. He praised them repeatedly, saying: You are educated young people with bright prospects. Then he exhorted them in earnest: You should do a good job in building Guangan. According to a report carried in CHONGGINO RIBAO on 21 February, Luo Guoxing, secretary of the Guangan County CPC Committee, Vice Magistrate Wang Hongjun, and responsible comrades of Nanchong Prefecture went to Chengdu's Jinniu Guesthouse on the fifth day of the Lunar New Year to see Deng Xiaoping and Wang Zhen.

After the meeting, Zhuo Lin warmly received Luo Guoxing, Wang Hongjun, and other comrades. When Zhuo Lin learned that the two local officials were only 33 years old and had a university education, she said gladly: Young people are in the prime of life to build their careers. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has always said that we should entrust young people with important tasks and give them a free hand in their work. Comrade Xiaoping was only 20 or so when he assumed the office of political commissar of the Seventh Red Army. When the fellow townsmen were talking about Deng Xiaoping's former residence, Zhuo Lin passed on Deng Xiaoping's idea to them: Deng Xiaoping said that we communists live to serve the people. Our funds should be used to develop the people's undertakings. Zhuo Lin expressed satisfaction over the plans of the country CPC Committee on planting trees around Deng Xiaoping's former residence.
